

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

<http://www.archive.org/details/academyliteratur53londuoft>

P
L
E
A

5

I

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

---

JANUARY — JUNE,
1898.

---

43498

VOLUME LIII.

PUBLISHING OFFICE: 43, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, W.C.

1898.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY

LONDON:
PRINTED BY ALEXANDER AND SHEPHEARD, LONSDALE BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME LIII.

LITERATURE.

REVIEWS.

|  | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Adamson's (Dr. William) Life of the Rev. James Morison, D.D. .....                                      | 442  |
| Addishaw's (Percy) selection of Poems of the Hon. Boden Noel .....                                      | 193  |
| Adis & Wood's Agricultural Chemistry .....  | 64   |
| Akerman's (William) Rip Van Winkle .....  | 194  |
| Allen's (A. G. V.) Christian Institutions .....   | 228  |
| — (Grant) Historical Guides .....   | 632  |
| Allen & McClure's Two Hundred Years: The History of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge ..... | 574  |
| Ambrose's L'Estoire de la Sainte Guerre Animals, All About .....  | 10   |
| Arch, Joseph: the Story of His Life Told by Himself .....   | 113  |
| Archer's (William) The Theatrical World of 1897 .....   | 308  |
| Architectural Review, The .....   | 468  |
| Armstrong's (Arthur Coles) A Tale from Boccaccio .....  | 194  |
| Astrup's (Eivind) With Peary near the Pole .....  | 493  |
| Atkinson's (A. G. B.) St. Botoiph, Aldgate .....  | 254  |
| Atlay's (J. B.) The Trial of Lord Cockburn before Lord Ellenborough .....                               | 200  |
| Austen's (H. W.) Cicero Pro Plancio .....   | 72   |
| Audubon's (Maria R.) Audubon and His Journals .....   | 361  |
| Austen's (Jane) Northanger Abbey and Persuasion .....   | 148  |
| Babington, Charles Cordale, Memorials, Journal, and Correspondence of .....                             | 172  |
| Ball's (John) The Alpine Guide: The Western Alps .....  | 630  |
| Barrère's (Albert) New Grammatical French Course .....  | 71   |
| Battye's (Aubyn Trevor) A Northern Highway of the Tsar .....  | 574  |
| Beazley's (C. Raymond) John and Sebastian Cabot .....   | 600  |
| Becke's (Louis) Wild Life in Southern Seas .....  | 91   |
| Bell's (Mackenzie) Christina Rossetti .....   | 88   |
| — (Robert Fitzroy) Murray of Broughton's Memorials .....  | 619  |
| Bennett's (E. A.) Journalism for Women .....  | 518  |
| Bent's (Hamley) translation of Prince Henri d'Orleans' From Tonkin to India .....                       | 27   |
| Berenson's (Bernhard) The Central Italian Painters of the Renaissance .....                             | 30   |
| Betham-Edwards's (M.) edition of The Autobiography of Arthur Young .....                                | 167  |
| — Reminiscences .....   | 516  |
| Biert's (L.) Quand j'étais Petit .....  | 70   |
| Bible, A Dictionary of the .....   | 467  |
| — Students, Aids to . By various Authors .....  | 546  |
| Biggs's (C. H. W.) First Principles of Electricity and Magnetism .....                                  | 61   |
| Binyon's (Laurence) Porphyryon: and Other Poems .....   | 410  |
| Bishop's (Mrs.) Korea .....   | 141  |
| Black's Guides to Scotland, Cornwall, Devonshire, Surrey, Brighton, Bournemouth, Mallock, Buxton .....  | 631  |
| Blackburn's (Vernon) The Fringe of an Art .....   | 620  |
| Blanchan's (Neltje) Bird Neighbours .....   | 621  |
| Boas's (Mrs. Frederick) English History for Children .....  | 284  |
| Bodley's (John Edward Courtenay) France .....   | 221  |

REVIEWS—continued.

|   | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Bogg's (Edmund) Two Thousand Miles of Wandering in the Border Country, Lakeland, and Ribblesdale ..... | 254  |
| Boiello's (J.) edition of Biar's Quand j'étais Petit .....   | 70   |
| Bond's (Catherine) Goldfields and Chrysanthemums .....   | 346  |
| — (R. Warwick) Another Sheaf .....   | 390  |
| Boole's (Mary E.) The Mathematical Psychology of Gray and Boole .....                                  | 66   |
| Borland's (Robert) Border Raids and Rivers .....   | 306  |
| Bradshaw's (B.) edition of A Dictionary of Bathing Places .....  | 632  |
| Brandes' (George) William Shakespeare: a Critical Study .....  | 339  |
| Briggs & Bryan's The Tutorial Trigonometry .....   | 64   |
| Browning's (Oscar) Peter the Great .....   | 89   |
| Browning, Elizabeth Barrett, The Poetical Works of .....   | 117  |
| Bryce's (Prof.) Impressions of South Africa .....  | 51   |
| Buehheim's (Dr. C. A.) selection of Heine's Lieder und Gedichte .....                                  | 120  |
| Bucke's (R. M.) edition of Walt Whitman's The Wound-Dresser .....                                      | 542  |
| Bull "Apostolice Curie," A Vindication of .....  | 413  |
| Burns, Robert, and Mrs. Dunlop .....  | 437  |
| Burnside's (H. M.) Drift Weed .....  | 194  |
| Burton's (Sir Richard F.) The Jew, the Gypsy, and et Islam .....                                       | 438  |
| Butcher's (S. H.) Aristotle's Theory of Poetry and Fine Art .....                                      | 120  |
| Butler, William John, Life and Letters of .....  | 9    |
| Butler's (A. J.) translations of Ratzel's History of Mankind .....                                     | 50   |
| Byrne's (Mrs. W. Pitt) Social Hours with Celebrities .....   | 251  |
| Caine's (Rev. Caesar) edition of Sir T. Widdrington's Analeto Eboracensis .....                        | 30   |
| Cameron's (D. A.) Egypt in the Nineteenth Century .....  | 442  |
| Carnac's (Levin) translation of Daudet's The Hope of the Family .....                                  | 675  |
| Carr's (J. A.) The Life Work of Edward White Benson, D.D. .....  | 367  |
| Carruthers's (G. T.) The Ancient Use of Greek Accents .....  | 200  |
| Carter's (A. C. R.) The Year's Music, 1898 .....   | 254  |
| Cassell's Family Lawyer . By a Barrister-at-Law .....  | 392  |
| — Complete Pocket-Guide to Europe .....  | 200  |
| Catsby: a Tragedy .....  | 251  |
| "Century Science" Series .....  | 200  |
| Chapman's (George) translation of The Iliads of Homer .....  | 468  |
| Cheetham's (Canon S.) The Mysteries, Pagan and Christian .....   | 117  |
| Child's (Francis James) edition of English and Scottish Popular Ballads .....                          | 514  |
| Churehill's (Lieut. W. L. Spencer) The Story of the Malakand Field Force .....                         | 344  |
| Clark's (Andrew) edition of "Brief Lives," Set down by John Aubrey .....                                      | 387  |
| — (Rev. A.) Lincoln .....  | 416  |
| Clarke's (H. Butler) The Cid Campeador .....   | 198  |
| Clerical Life, The: a Series of Letters to Ministers .....   | 119  |
| Clifford's (Hugh) Studies in Brown Humanity .....  | 441  |
| Coast Trips of Great Britain, The .....  | 631  |

REVIEWS—continued.

|   | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Cobbett's (J. M.) Ephemera .....   | 193  |
| Coleridge's (Ernest Hartley) edition of The Poetry of Lord Byron .....                                     | 489  |
| Collections and Recollections . By One who has Kept a Diary .....  | 656  |
| Colmore's (G.) Points of View, and Other Poems .....   | 442  |
| Conn's (H. W.) The Story of Germ Life .....  | 65   |
| Corbett's (Julian S.) Drake and the Tudor Navy .....   | 415  |
| Cowper's (H. S.) The Hill of the Graces .....  | 283  |
| Crookall's (Rev. L.) British Guiana .....  | 657  |
| Cundall's (James) Every-Day Book of Natural History: Animals and Plants .....                              | 254  |
| Curry's (Charles E.) Theory of Electricity and Magnetism .....   | 64   |
| Curtis's (Carlton C.) Text-Book of General Botany .....  | 65   |
| Cycling .....  | 345  |
| Dakyn's (H. G.) translation of The Works of Xenophon .....   | 71   |
| Dallas & Porter's edition of The Notebook of Tristram Riston .....   | 30   |
| D'Annunzio's (Gabriele) The Triumph of Death .....   | 141  |
| Darlington's Shilling Guide Books .....  | 633  |
| Darmesteter's (Mme. James) A Mediceval Garland .....   | 53   |
| Daudet's (Alphonse) The Hope of the Family .....   | 675  |
| Davis's (Richard Harding) A Year from a Correspondent's Note-Book .....                                    | 199  |
| Davison's (Dr. W. T.) The Christian Interpretation of Life, and Other Essays .....                         | 600  |
| Deakin's (Rupert) Euclid .....   | 64   |
| Deakner's (Rev. Percy) Religious Pamphlets .....   | 516  |
| Deas's (Lizette) Flower Favourites .....   | 624  |
| Dece's (Lionel) Three Years in Savage Africa .....   | 308  |
| De Julleville's (L. Petit) Histoire de la Langue et de la Littérature Française .....                      | 71   |
| Denton's (Geoffrey) translation of Certain Tragical Discourses of Banello .....                            | 368  |
| De Windt's (Harry) Through the Gold Fields of Alaska to Bering Straits .....                               | 223  |
| Dickens's (Charles) To be Read at Dusk, and Other Stories, etc. .....                                      | 281  |
| Dillmann's (Dr. A.) Genesis Critically and Exegetically Expounded .....                                    | 117  |
| Dobbs's (W. J.) Elementary Geometrical Statics .....   | 64   |
| Dobson's (Austin) William Hogarth .....  | 171  |
| Donne's (W. B.) Euripides .....  | 72   |
| — (B. J. M.) Colloquy and Song .....   | 658  |
| D'Orleans's (Prince Henri) From Tonkin to India by the Sources of the Irrawadi .....                       | 27   |
| Douglas's (Robert Langton) edition of Fenton's translation of Certain Tragical Discourses of Banello ..... | 368  |
| Doyles's (A. Conan) Songs of Action .....  | 653  |
| Drummond's (Prof. Henry) The Ideal Life, and Other Unpublished Addresses .....                             | 114  |
| Duff's (Sir M. Grant) Notes from a Diary .....   | 341  |
| Duffy's (Sir Charles Gavan) My Life in Two Hemispheres .....   | 568  |
| Dunn's (Sara I.) Sunny Memories of an Indian Winter .....  | 282  |
| Edwards's (G. M.) edition of The Anabasis of Xenophon, Book III .....                                      | 72   |
| Ellis's (Havelock) Affirmations .....  | 225  |
| — (William Ashton) translation of Richard Wagner's Prose Works .....                                       | 567  |

REVIEWS—continued.

|   | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Ely Cathedral Handbook .....   | 634  |
| England's (George) edition of The Totonenley Hags .....  | 305  |
| "European Literature, Periods of" .....   | 306  |
| Evans & Fearenside's England Under the Later Hanoverians .....   | 69   |
| Evans's (E. P.) Evolutional Ethics and Animal Psychology .....   | 392  |
| Fairbanks's (Arthur) The First Philosophers of Greece .....  | 573  |
| "Famous Scots" Series .....   | 87   |
| Farrar's (Frederic W.) Allegories .....  | 171  |
| Fergusson's (Robert) Scots Poems .....   | 658  |
| Field's (Annie) edition of Harriet Beecher Stowe's Life and Letters .....                                  | 169  |
| Fincham's (Henry W.) The Artists and Engravers of British and American Book-Plates .....                   | 283  |
| Fiske's (John) Old Virginia and Her Neighbours .....   | 4    |
| Fletcher's (J. S.) The Making of Matthias Fogazzaro's (Antonio) Poetic Scelte .....                        | 570  |
| Forbes's (Archibald) The Life of Napoleon III .....  | 389  |
| Foster's (Vere) edition of The Two Duchesses .....   | 225  |
| Foster & Sherrington's Text-book of Physiology .....   | 65   |
| Fowler's (J. K.) Records of Old Times .....  | 529  |
| Fowler's (J. H.) ATX.-Century Prose .....  | 66   |
| Frankland's Pasteur .....  | 254  |
| Frazier's (J. G.) translation of Pausanias's Description of Greece .....                                   | 363  |
| — (R. W.) Literary History of India .....  | 365  |
| Froude's (James Anthony) Shadows of the Touds .....  | 78   |
| Fuller's (Anna) Pratt Portraits .....  | 30   |
| "Fur, Feather, and Fin Series" .....  | 493  |
| Galton's (Arthur) Two Essays upon Matthew Arnold, &amp;c. .....  | 10   |
| Gane's (Douglas M.) The Building of the Intellect .....  | 69   |
| Garnett's (Richard) History of Italian Literature .....  | 513  |
| Gathorne-Hardy's (Hon. A. E.) The Salmon and New .....   | 493  |
| Genealogical Magazine, The .....   | 658  |
| Gerard's (Frances) Picturesque Dublin, Old and New .....   | 120  |
| Gestorfeld's (Ursula N.) The Breadth of Life .....   | 604  |
| Giffen's (George) With Bat and Ball .....  | 300  |
| Gilbert's (W. S.) The Bab Ballads .....  | 26   |
| Gissing's (George) Charles Dickens .....   | 289  |
| Glover's (Lady) Life of Sir John Hawley Gleave, B.N. .....   | 253  |
| Godkin's (Edwin Lawrence) Unforeseen Tendencies of Democracy .....   | 676  |
| Golschmann's (Léon) The Adventures of a Siberian Cub .....   | 10   |
| Goodwin, Royce, & Putnam's Historic New York .....   | 345  |
| Gordon's (H. Laing) Sir James Y. Simpson .....   | 7    |
| — (Sir Charles Alexander) Recollections of Thirty-nine Years in the Army .....                             | 309  |
| Gore's (Canon Charles) St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians .....   | 516  |
| Gorse's (E.) Milton's Paradise Lost .....  | 70   |
| Graham's (Jean Carlyle) The Child of the Bondswoman, and Other Verses .....                                | 194  |
| Grahame's (R. B. Cunningham) The Canon: an Exposition of the Pagan Mystery perpetrated in the Cabala ..... | 199  |

| REVIEWS—continued.   | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Graves & Lucas's The War of the Wences 253  |      |
| Graves's (Arnold) Prince Patrick: a Fairy Tale ... 519  |      |
| Green's (G. B.) Notes on Greek and Latin Syntax ... 72  |      |
| Gregory's (Lady) edition of Mr. Gregory's Letter-Box ... 366  |      |
| Griffith's (William) Trilogues ... 345  |      |
| Grinling's (Charles H.) History of the Great Northern Railway ... 346                                 |      |
| Grosart's (A. B.) Robert Ferguson ... 87  |      |
| — edition of The Tragical Reign of Selinus ... 228  |      |
| Gross's (Prof. Charles) Bibliography of British Municipal History ... 148                             |      |
| Guide Book Supplement ... 193  |      |
| Gurney's (Alfred) Love's Fruition ... 193   |      |
| Hadden's (J. Cutbert) George Thomson, the Friend of Burns ... 227                                     |      |
| Hall's (F. W.) The Fourth Verriene of Cicero ... 72   |      |
| Halliday's (George) Steam Boilers ... 64  |      |
| Hamerston's (Philip Gilbert) The Quest of Happiness ... 170   |      |
| Hammerton's (J. A.) Rhymes of Ironquill ... 193   |      |
| "Handbook to Christian and Ecclesiastical Rome" ... 54   |      |
| Handbook for Travellers in Scotland ... 629   |      |
| — for Travellers in Surrey ... 629  |      |
| — of Travel Talk ... 629  |      |
| Hannay's (David) The Later Renaissance ... 366  |      |
| Hapgood's (Norman) Literary Statesmen, and Others ... 52, 676   |      |
| Harbutt's (W. M.) Harbutt's Pastic Method, and the Use of Pasticine ... 69                            |      |
| Harcourt's (L. V.) An Eton Bibliography ... 346   |      |
| Harding's (Georgina) translation of D'Annunzio's Triumph of Death ... 141                             |      |
| Hardy & Bacon's The Stump Collector ... 391   |      |
| Harland's (Marion) Some Colonial Homesteads and their Stories ... 468                                 |      |
| Harman's (Edward George) Poems from Horace, Catullus, and Sappho ... 147                              |      |
| Harris's (Mary Dormes) Life in an Old English Town ... 624  |      |
| Harrison's (W. Jerome) Text-book of Geology ... 65  |      |
| Harte's (Bret) Some Later Verses ... 653  |      |
| Harting's (J. E.) Hints on the Management of Hawks, and Practical Falconry ... 368                    |      |
| Hastings's (Dr. James) Dictionary of the Bible ... 467  |      |
| Hauptmann's (Gerhart) Verenskene Glocke ... 400   |      |
| Hay's (Alfred) The Principles of Alternate Current Working ... 64                                     |      |
| — (Admiral Sir John C. Dalrymple) Lines from my Log-Books ... 494                                     |      |
| Hazen's (Charles Downes) Contemporary American Opinion of the French Revolution ... 412               |      |
| Heath's (Francis George) The Fern World ... 346   |      |
| Heawood's (Edward) Geography of Africa ... 66   |      |
| Heekelborn's (Charles William) The Printers of Basle in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries ... 807 |      |
| Henry's (William Ernest) Poems ... 249  |      |
| — & Stevenson's Maccabe ... 343   |      |
| "Heroes of the Nations" ... 198  |      |
| Hogson's (John Crawford) Hezhamshire ... 494  |      |
| Holding's (T. H.) Cycle and Camp ... 680  |      |
| Hommel's (Dr. Fritz) The Ancient Hebrew Tradition ... 806   |      |
| Hopkins's (Tighe) The Dungeons of Paris ... 90  |      |
| Hornor's (Susan) Greek Vases: Historical and Descriptive ... 69                                       |      |
| Housman's (Laurence) Spikenard: a Book of Devotional Love Poems ... 252                               |      |
| Hudson's (W. H.) Birds in London ... 623  |      |
| Hugo's (Victor) Hernani ... 343   |      |
| Human Science Lectures . By various Authors ... 65  |      |
| Hume's (Martin A. S.) Philip II. of Spain ... 28  |      |
| Hutchinson's (J. R.) The Romance of a Regiment ... 678  |      |
| Hutton's (W. H.) Mary Powell and Deborah's Diary ... 10   |      |
| Huymans's (J. K.) La Cathédrale ... 196   |      |
| "International Theological Library" ... 228  |      |
| — "Scientific Series" ... 228  |      |
| Irving's (Laurence) Godofroi and Yolande ... 343  |      |
| — (H. H.) The Life of Judge Jeffreys ... 514  |      |
| Isle of Man and Barrow-in-Furness and Lake-land ... 634   |      |
| James's (Lionel) The Indian Frontier War ... 314  |      |
| Jannaris's (A. N.) Historical Greek Grammar ... 72  |      |
| Jardine's (Alfred) The Angler's Library: Pike and Perch ... 254                                       |      |
| Jebb's (R. C.) edition of Sophocles ... 71  |      |
| Jervis's (W. L.) Thomas Best Jervis ... 316   |      |
| Johnson's (Robert Underwood) Songs of Liberty ... 105   |      |
| — (Clifton) The New England Country and a Book of Country, Clumps, and Sunshine ... 251               |      |
| Johnson's (Rev. James) China and Formosa: a Successful Mission ... 282                                |      |
| — (Dr. John) A Visit to Walt Whitman ... 658  |      |
| Julia, Letters from; or, Lights from the Borderland ... 119   |      |
| Kearton's (Richard) With Nature and a Camera ... 8  |      |

| REVIEWS—continued.   | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Keltie's (J. Scott) The Statesman's Year-Book, 1898 ... 368   |      |
| Kemble's (E. W.) The Blackberries and their Adventures ... 10   |      |
| Kennedy's (Howard Angus) The Story of Canada ... 306  |      |
| Kenyon's (F. G.) edition of The Poems of Bacchylides ... 49   |      |
| Kirke's (Henry) Twenty-five Years in British Guiana ... 657   |      |
| Ladd's (George Trumbull) Outlines of Descriptive Psychology ... 544                                     |      |
| Lang's (Andrew) The Nursery Rhyme-Book ... 9  |      |
| — The Making of Religion ... 651  |      |
| Langbridge's (Rev. Frederick) Sent Back by the Angels ... 195   |      |
| Lawless's (Emily) Traits and Confidences ... 308  |      |
| Leaf's (Walter) Versions from Hylas: an Essay in Persian Metre ... 573                                  |      |
| Lebon's (André) Modern France, 1789-1895 ... 120  |      |
| Le Gallienne's (Richard) The Opium Eater, and Essays by Thomas de Quincey ... 147                       |      |
| Lehmann's (R. C.) Flowing ... 30  |      |
| Lindsay's (W. A.) The Royal Household ... 345   |      |
| Little's (London) Pleasure Guide ... 634  |      |
| Little's (Canon Knox) Our Churches, and Why we Belong to Them ... 9                                     |      |
| Liturgic in Rome, The . By H. M. and M. A. R. T. ... 54   |      |
| London and North-Western Railway, Official Guide to the ... 631   |      |
| Loyd's (Lady Mary) translation of New Letters of Napoleon I. ... 25                                     |      |
| Lucas's (Francis) Sketches of Rural Life ... 10   |      |
| MacDowall's (I. C.) Henry of Guise, and Other Portraits ... 461   |      |
| Mascherano's (John) Library Administration ... 416  |      |
| Macmillan's Elementary Latin-English Dictionary ... 72  |      |
| Masquod's In the Volcanic Eifel: A Holiday Rambler ... 634  |      |
| Manly's (John Matthews) Specimens of the Pre-Shakespearian Drama ... 120                                |      |
| Mann's (William) Mold Drawing ... 66  |      |
| Markham & Cox's The Records of the Borough of Northampton ... 416                                       |      |
| Mason's (Canon Arthur James) Thomas Cranmer ... 415   |      |
| Maspero's (Prof.) The Dawn of Civilisation ... 117  |      |
| Maxwell's (Sir Herbert) The Hon. Sir Charles Murray, K.C.B.: A Memoir ... 515                           |      |
| McCarthy's (Justin) The Story of Gladstone's Life ... 199   |      |
| McClure's (M. L.) translation of Maspero's Dawn of Civilisation ... 117                                 |      |
| McDonnell's (A. C.) XIX-Century Verse ... 66  |      |
| Mead's (W. R.) Selections from Sir Thomas Malory's Morte d'Arthur ... 69                                |      |
| Melven's (W.) The Tulsiman ... 70   |      |
| Merewether's (F. H. S.) A Tour Through the Famine Districts of India ... 491                            |      |
| Midland Railway, Official Guide to the ... 634  |      |
| Mifflin's (Lloyd) At the Gates of Song: Sonnets ... 195   |      |
| Mill's (Dr. H. R.) On the Choice of Geographical Books ... 38   |      |
| Millar's (H. R.) The Diamond Fairy Book ... 608   |      |
| Miller's (Fred.) The Training of a Craftsman ... 69   |      |
| M'Leod's (Addison) A Window in Lincoln's Inn ... 195  |      |
| Montagu's (Rear-Adm. Hon. Victor) A Middy's Recollections ... 572                                       |      |
| Morris's (Hon. Martin) Transatlantic Traits ... 116   |      |
| — (William) The Sundering Flood ... 304   |      |
| Mott's (Edward Spencer) A Mangled Yarn ... 574  |      |
| Moulton's (Dr. R. G.) edition of Ezekiel ... 115  |      |
| Mozley's (John Rickards) A Vision of England, and Other Poems ... 194                                   |      |
| Muir's (John) Carlyle on Burns ... 10   |      |
| — (M. M. Pattison) A Course of Practical Chemistry ... 61   |      |
| — (Henry D.) Poems ... 195  |      |
| Muller's (Prof. F. Max) Auld Lang Syne ... 341  |      |
| Murray's Handbooks ... 629   |      |
| Nesbit's (E.) Songs of Love and Empire ... 281  |      |
| Neumann's (Arthur H.) Elephant Hunting in East Equatorial Africa ... 412                                |      |
| Newdigate-Newdegate's (Lady) The Chaperons of Cherever Manor ... 506                                    |      |
| Nimrod's The Chase, the Road, and the Turf ... 571  |      |
| Noel, Hon. Roden, Select Poems from the Works of ... 193  |      |
| — "Northumberland, A History of" ... 491   |      |
| Norway's (Arthur H.) Highways and Byways in Devon and Cornwall ... 634                                  |      |
| O'Brien's (Henry) The Round Towers of Ireland ... 253   |      |
| O'Donoghue's (D. J.) Life and Writings of James Clarence Mangan ... 142                                 |      |
| Owen's (Jean A.) The Story of Hawaii ... 468  |      |
| Page's (Stephen) John Hunter ... 7  |      |
| Palmer's (Bertha) edition of Stories from the Classic Literature of Many Nations ... 600                |      |
| Parker's (W. N.) translation of Wiedersheim's Elements of the Comparative Anatomy of Vertebrates ... 65 |      |
| — (T. Jeffery) Lessons in Elementary Biology ... 65   |      |
| — (Dr. Joseph) Studies in Texts ... 546   |      |

| REVIEWS—continued.  | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Parker's (Dr. Joseph) Christian Profites in a Pagan Mirror ... 658                           |      |
| Pascoli's (Giovanni) Piemetti ... 570  |      |
| Patrick & Groomie's edition of Chambers's Biographical Dictionary ... 92                     |      |
| Pausanias's Description of Greece ... 353  |      |
| Perry's (John) Applied Mechanics ... 64  |      |
| — (Walter Copeland) The Women of Homer ... 391   |      |
| Peters's (Dr. John Punnett) Nippur ... 465   |      |
| Petrie's (Prof. Flinders) Religion and Coscience in Ancient Egypt ... 251                    |      |
| Phelps's (Elizabeth Stuart) The Story of Jesus Christ ... 117                                |      |
| Phillips's (Stephen) Poems ... 3   |      |
| Pinero's (Arthur Wing) The Princess and the Butterfly ... 343                                |      |
| "Pitt Press Series" ... 70  |      |
| Pollard, Heath, Liddell, & McCormick's edition of Works of Geoffrey Chaucer ... 303          |      |
| Poor's (Agnes Blake) Boston Neighbors in Town and Out ... 600                                |      |
| Power's (D'Arcy) William Harvey ... 7  |      |
| Prothero's (R. E.) edition of The Works of Lord Byron: Letters and Journals ... 541          |      |
| Purey-Cust's (Very Rev. A. P.) Our English Ministers ... 200                                 |      |
| Ralli's (Augustus) The Enchanted River ... 195   |      |
| Ratzel's (Prof. Fr.) The History of Man-kind ... 50  |      |
| Rawlinson's (Canon George) Memoir of Major-General Sir Henry Creswicke Rawlinson ... 411     |      |
| Reading Guot, The Ballad of . By C. S. ... 236   |      |
| Reddaway's (W. F.) The Monroe Doctrine ... 368   |      |
| Rendall's (Dr. Gerald H.) Marcus Aurelius Antoninus to Himself ... 222                       |      |
| Reppeler's (Agnes) Varia ... 119   |      |
| Rey's (Hector) Complete Course of French Composition and Idioms ... 70                       |      |
| Reynolds's (Sydney H.) The Vertebrate Skeleton ... 65  |      |
| — (Joseph William) The Supernatural in Nature ... 117  |      |
| — (Samuel Harvey) Studies on Many Subjects ... 496   |      |
| Rhys's (Ernest) Welsh Ballads ... 309  |      |
| Roberts's (Morley) Strong Men and True ... 51  |      |
| — edition of Sir Thomas Browne's Essays ... 208  |      |
| — (Charles G. D.) History of Canada ... 519  |      |
| Robinson's (Alexander) A Study of the Saviour in the New Light ... 600                       |      |
| Rose's (J. Holland) The Rise of Democracy ... 397  |      |
| Ross-of-Bladensburg's (Lieut.-Col.) The Coldstream Guards in the Crimea ... 284              |      |
| Rotherham's (Angus) The New Guest ... 467  |      |
| Rouse's (W. H. D.) edition of Pylas and Sphakteria, from Thuryrides, Book IV ... 72          |      |
| Rutherford's (John) Dr. W. Noon and his Work for the Blind ... 520                           |      |
| Ryan and Sanders' Under the Red Crescent ... 282   |      |
| Ryland's (F.) Psychology ... 65  |      |
| Sargent's (H. H.) The Campaign of Murengo ... 284  |      |
| Sarmiz's (Gregor) William Shakespeare's Lehnjahre ... 79                                     |      |
| Sayce's (Rev. A. H.) The Early History of the Hebrews ... 595                                |      |
| Schenck's (Dr. Leopold) Schenck's Theory—The Determination of Sex ... 569                    |      |
| — Scotland, The Highlands of, in 1750 ... 392  |      |
| Scott's (Hon. Mrs. Maxwell) The Making of Abbotford ... 30                                   |      |
| Seull's (W. D.) Bad Lady Betty: a Drama in Three Acts ... 120                                |      |
| Seawell's (Molly Elliot) Twelve Naval Captains ... 415                                       |      |
| Sergeant's (Lewis) The Franks ... 520  |      |
| Shaba's (Dr. Brojonath) The Stylography of the English Language ... 414                      |      |
| Sharp's (E. Farquharson) Dictionary of English Authors ... 92                                |      |
| — translation of Victor Hugo's Hernani ... 343   |      |
| Shaw's (Bernard) Plays: Pleasant and Capricious ... 461, 490                                 |      |
| — Sheriffmaker, The Battle of ... 254  |      |
| Shoemaker's (Michael Myers) Islands of the Southern Seas ... 416                             |      |
| Shuckburgh's (Evelyn S.) History of Rome for Beginners ... 69                                |      |
| — Passages from Latin Authors for Translation into English ... 72                            |      |
| Sidgwick's (Henry) Practical Ethics ... 145  |      |
| Simmons's (A. T.) Physiography for Advanced Students ... 65                                  |      |
| Simpson's (M. C. M.) Many Memories of Many People ... 282                                    |      |
| — (James Young) Side Lights on Siberia ... 391   |      |
| Singer & Strang's Etching, Engraving, and the Other Methods of Printing Pictures ... 54      |      |
| Smith's (J. Hamblin) Elementary Treatise on the Metric System of Weights and Measures ... 64 |      |
| Smyth's (H. Warrington) Five Years in Siam ... 572   |      |
| "Social England Series" ... 621   |      |
| "Socialism, What is It?" By "Scotshurn" ... 621   |      |
| Stacpole's (Florence) Handbook of Housekeeping for Small Incomes ... 309                     |      |

| REVIEWS—continued.  | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Stark's Guide-book and History of British Guiana ... 657   |      |
| Starless Crown, The; and Other Poems . By J. L. H. ... 195   |      |
| Statham's (H. Heathcote) Modern Architecture ... 6   |      |
| — (F. Reginald) Paul Kruger and His Times ... 655  |      |
| Stevens's (G. W.) Egypt in 1898 ... 619  |      |
| Steinlen's Des Chats ... 590   |      |
| Step's (Edward) edition of Cundall's Every-Day Book of Natural History ... 251   |      |
| Stevens's (J. A.) Junior Latin Syntax ... 72   |      |
| Stevenson's (W. B.) translation of Dr. Dillmann's Genesis Critically and Exegetically Expounded ... 117                |      |
| — (Robert Louis) Romances ... 168  |      |
| Stokes's (William) William Stokes: His Life and Work ... 543   |      |
| Story's (Alfred Thomas) The Building of the Empire ... 411   |      |
| — "Story of the Nations, The" ... 120, 520  |      |
| — "Story of the Empire Series" ... 396  |      |
| Strachey's (Lady) edition of Memoirs of a Highland Lady ... 310  |      |
| Sturge's (Richard Yates) Song and Thought ... 195  |      |
| Sykes's (Ella C.) Thro' Persia on a Sidlesable Saddle ... 590  |      |
| Symonds & Gordon's The Story of Perugia ... 345, 633   |      |
| Tancock's (C. C.) Story of the Ionic Revolt and Persian War as told by Herodotus ... 72                                |      |
| Tarr's (Ralph S.) First Book of Physical Geography ... 66  |      |
| Tarver's (J. C.) Debatable Outains: Essays on Secondary Education ... 622  |      |
| Taunton's (Rev. Ethelred) The English Black Monks of St. Benedict ... 143  |      |
| Teacher's Bible, The Illustrated ... 70  |      |
| Temple Dramatists ... 628  |      |
| Temple's (Arthur) Our Living Generals ... 290  |      |
| — (Sir Richard) edition of Lady Glover's Life of Sir John H. Glover Thackeray, William Makepeace, The Works of ... 463 |      |
| Thomas's (Rose Haig) Pan: A Collection of Lyrical Poems ... 195  |      |
| Thompson's (Silvanus P.) Light, Visible and Invisible ... 65   |      |
| — (D'Arcy W.) Day-Dreams of a Schoolmaster ... 677   |      |
| Thomson's (John) Through China with a Camera ... 518   |      |
| Thornton's (John) Elementary Practical Physiography ... 65   |      |
| Todd's (George Eyre) edition of The Book of Glasgow Cathedral ... 519  |      |
| Tollmecher's (Hon. Lionel A.) Talks with Mr. Gladstone ... 621   |      |
| Tomlinson's (May) translation of Mme. Darmesteter's Medieval Garland ... 53  |      |
| Tonk's (Prof. T. F.) History of England for the use of Middle Forms in Schools ... 545                                 |      |
| Townsend's (Chas. F.) Chemistry for Photographers ... 64   |      |
| Trotter's (Capt. L. J.) The Life of John Nicholson ... 5   |      |
| Tynan's (Katherine) The Wind in the Trees ... 507  |      |
| Tyndall's (M. C.) Lays and Legends of England ... 191  |      |
| Tyrrill's (R. Y.) edition of The Troades of Euripides ... 72   |      |
| — "University Tutorial Series" ... 61   |      |
| Vandeleur's (Seymour) Campaigning on the Upper Nile and Niger ... 303  |      |
| Van Dyke's (Paul) The Age of the Renaissance: Eras of the Christian Church ... 230                                     |      |
| Vaughan's (Dean) University and Other Sermons ... 680  |      |
| Verity's (A. W.) King Lear ... 70  |      |
| — Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice" ... 148   |      |
| Vicars's (Sir Arthur) Index to the Prerogative Wills of Ireland ... 172  |      |
| — "Victorian Era Series" ... 280  |      |
| Vince's (C. A.) John Bright ... 148  |      |
| Vincent's (Ralph Harry) The Elements of Hypnotism ... 223  |      |
| Vizet's (Mrs.) The Story of Hawaii ... 463   |      |
| Vizetelly's (Alfred) translation of Zola's Paris ... 279   |      |
| Vuilleher's (Gaston) History of Dancing ... 113  |      |
| Waldstein's (Dr. Louis) The Sub-conscious Self, and its Relation to Education and Health ... 116                       |      |
| Wagner's (Richard) Prose Works ... 667   |      |
| — Wales, The Prince of ... 92  |      |
| Walker's (Mary A.) Old Tracks and New Landmarks: Wayside Sketches in Crete, Macedonia, Mytlenae, &amp;c. ... 282       |      |
| Wallace's (William) Robert Burns and Mrs. Dunlop ... 457   |      |
| Wallis's (Graham) Life of Francis Place ... 230  |      |
| Walker's (Augustus D.) Lectures on Physiology ... 61   |      |
| Walter's (W. C. F.) Hints and Helps in Continuous Greek Prose ... 72   |      |
| Ward, Lock & Co.'s Guide Books ... 632   |      |
| Ward's (Adolphus William) Sir Henry Wotton ... 29  |      |
| Warner's (Charles Dudley) The People for Whom Shakespeare Wrote ... 200  |      |
| Warren's (Herbert T.) By Severn Sea ... 193  |      |

REVIEWS—continued.

Warwick's (Countess of) edition of Joseph Arch: the Story of His Life told by Himself ... 113 edition of Progress in Women's Education ... 284
Watson's (Dr. E. W.) Songs of Flying Hours ... 194
Waugh's (Arthur) Legends of the Wheel ... 368
Way's (Arthur S.) The Tragedies of Euripides, in English Verse ... 597
Webb's (W. T.) Selections from Wordsworth (Sidney & Beatrice) Industrial Democracy ... 91
Webster's (Arthur G.) The Theory of Electricity and Magnetism: being Lectures on Mathematical Physics ... 61
Welby's (Capt. M. S.) Through Unknown Tibet ... 679
Welsh Children, Some. By the Author of "Fraternity" ... 391
Went's (Rev. J.) First Latin Exercises ... 72
White, Walter, The Journals of ... 8
White's (Henry A.) Robert E. Lee ... 198
Whitman's (Walt) The Wound-Dresser ... 542
Widdington's (Sir Thomas) Analethia Eboracensis ... 30
Wiedersheim's (Dr. R.) Elements of the Comparative Anatomy of Vertebrates ... 65
Wilberforce's (Canon Basil) Sermons Preached in Westminster Abbey ... 600
Wilkins's (W. H.) edition of Sir R. F. Burton's The Jew, the Gypsy, and el Islam ... 438
Williamson's (Dr. George C.) Portrait Miniatures ... 172
Wills's (Freeman) W. G. Wills, Dramatist and Painter ... 598
Wilson's (Thomas B.) The Handy Guide to Norway ... 634
Wimbolt's (S. E.) Exercises in Latin Accidence ... 72
Women, Famous, Little Journeys to the Homes of ... 145
Woolman, John, The Journal of ... 652
Wright & McLean's The Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius in Syriac ... 546
Wright's (Lewis) The Induction Coil in Practical Work ... 65
Wyckoff's (Walter A.) The Workers ... 492
Wylie's (James Hamilton) History of England under Henry the Fourth ... 468
Wyndham's (George) edition of The Poems of Shakespeare ... 439
Young's (Ernest) The Kingdom of the Yellow Robe ... 254
Zangwill's (Israel) Dreamers of the Ghetto ... 342
Zola's (Emile) Paris ... 279, 330

FICTION.

Allen's (Grant) The Incidental Bishop (Supp., April 30) ... 470
Altsheler's (Joseph A.) A Soldier of Marathon (Supp., April 23) ... 444
Anthologies in Little:
Michael Drayton (Supp., Feb. 19) ... 263
Robert Herrick (Supp., March 5) ... 207
Thomas Campion (Supp., April 16) ... 415
Aphorisms and Epigrams:
Mr. George Meredith (Supp., Jan. 29) ... 123
By R. L. Stevenson (Supp., Jan. 29) ... 124
Schopenhauer (Supp., Feb. 5) ... 152
Harc's Guesses at Truth (Supp., Feb. 12) ... 176
Goethe (Supp., Feb. 26) ... 232
La Bruyere (Supp., March 12) ... 287
William Blake (Supp., April 16) ... 420
Joubert (Supp., April 23) ... 446
Testimony of the Apostles of Egoism (Supp., April 30) ... 472
Atherton's (Gertrude) His Fortunate Grace (Supp., March 26) ... 347
American Wives and English Husbands (Supp., April 9) ... 394
Author, Disappointed, Confession of a (Supp., April 9) ... 395
Barrie, Mr., Two Prefaces by (Supp., June 4) ... 601
Becky Sharp—After (Supp., Jan. 29) ... 124
Benham's (Charles) The Fourth Napoleon: a Romance (Supp., Feb. 19) ... 201
Bennett's (E. A.) A Man from the North (Supp., March 26) ... 348
Benson's (E. F.) The Vintage (Supp., Feb. 26) ... 230
Blundell's (Mrs. Francis) Maine o' the Corner (Supp., Jan. 8) ... 4
Boldrewood's (Roll) Plain Living (Supp., April 2) ... 371
Books of To-day and Books of To-morrow (Supp., Feb. 12) ... 175
Bourne's (George) A Year's Exile (Supp., June 4) ... 602
Braddon's (M. E.) Rough Justice (Supp., March 26) ... 349

FICTION—continued.

Brailsford's (Henry Noel) The Dream of the War-God (Supp., March 12) ... 286
Brooke's (Emma) The Confession of Stephen Whapshare (Supp., Feb. 12) ... 174
Cable, Mr. G. W., in London (Supp., May 7) ... 497
Cameron's (Mrs. Lovett) Devil's Apples (Supp., April 2) ... 371
Child's Guide to Literature, The New (Supp., Feb. 12 and May 14) ... 175, 524
Cobb's (Thomas) Carpet Courtship ... 310
Conrad's (Joseph) The Nigger of the "Narcissus" (Supp., Jan. 1) ... 1
Tales of Unrest (Supp., April 16) ... 417
Cornford's (L. Cope) Sons of Adversity (Supp., June 18) ... 660
Crane's (Stephen) The Open Boat; and Other Stories (Supp., May 14) ... 522
Crawford, Mr. Marion, at Home (Supp., Feb. 26) ... 231
Creswick's (Louis) Love's Usuries (Supp., Jan. 1) ... 2
Crockett's (S. R.) The Standard Bearer (Supp., May 7) ... 496
Crowninshield's (Mrs. Schuyler) Where the Trade-Wind Blows (Supp., May 21) ... 549
Cunningham's (Sir Henry) Novels ... 610
D'Arcy's (Ella) The Bishop's Dilemma (Supp., June 4) ... 603
David Lyall's Love-Story. By the Author of "The Land of the Leal" (Supp., Feb. 19) ... 202
Dawson's (A. J.) Middle Greygness (Supp., Jan. 29) ... 123
God's Foundling (Supp., March 12) ... 286
Dickens's (Mary Angela) Against the Tide (Supp., May 14) ... 523
Dowie's (Minnie Muriel) The Crook of the Bough (Supp., May 28) ... 576
Doyle's (A. Conan) The Tragedy of the "Koroko" (Supp., Feb. 12) ... 173
Drummond's (Hamilton) For the Religion (Supp., March 5) ... 256
Dudenev's (Mrs. Henry E.) A Man with a Nail (Supp., Feb. 19) ... 202
Duncan's (Sara Jeannette) A Voyage of Consolation (Supp., April 9) ... 395
Dziewicki's (Michael Henry) Entombed in Flesh (Supp., March 5) ... 257
"Egerton's (George) Fantasias (Supp., Jan. 8) ... 3
Exercise, Physical, for Writers (Supp., May 21) ... 549
Fiction, The Newest: Supp., Jan. 1, 1: Jan. 8, 3; Jan. 22, 93; Jan. 29, 121; Feb. 5, 149; Feb. 12, 173; Feb. 19, 201; Feb. 26, 229; Mar. 5, 255; Mar. 12, 285; Mar. 19, 309; Mar. 26, 347; Ap. 2, 369; Ap. 9, 393; Ap. 16, 417; Ap. 23, 443; Ap. 30, 469; May 7, 495; May 14, 521; May 21, 547; May 28, 575; June 4, 601; June 11, 625; June 18, 659; June 25, 681.
Fowler's (Ellen Thorneycroft) Concerning Isabel Carnaby (Supp., June 18) ... 661
Francis's (M. E.) Maine o' the Corner (Supp., Jan. 8) ... 4
Fraser's (Mrs. Hugh) A Chapter of Accidents (Supp., April 2) ... 371
Frederic, Harold (Supp., April 2) ... 372
Garland's (Hamlin) Wayside Courtships (Supp., Jan. 29) ... 123
Gissing, Mr. George, at Home (Supp., March 5) ... 258
Gladstone and the "Dream of Gerontius" (Supp., May 14) ... 524
Gordon's (Samuel) In Years of Transition (Supp., Jan. 8) ... 4
Gribble's (Francis) Sunlight and Limelight (Supp., April 2) ... 370
Hardy's (Francis H.) The Mills of God (Supp., Jan. 1) ... 2
Harland's (Henry) Comedies and Errors (Supp., April 16) ... 418
Henniker's (Florence) Sowing the Seed (Supp., May 28) ... 577
Hichens's (Robert) Byways (Supp., Jan. 1) ... 2
The Londoners (Supp., May 21) ... 548
Higginson's (Ella) A Forest Orchid, and Other Stories (Supp., Jan. 1) ... 2
Hooper's (J.) His Grace o' the Guine (Supp., May 14) ... 523
Hope's (Anthony) Simon Dale (Supp., Feb. 26) ... 229
Housman's (Clemence) The Unknown Sea (Supp., June 4) ... 602
Ibsen, A Sketch of (Supp., Mar. 26) ... 349
Jepson's (Edgar) The Keepers of the People (Supp., June 18) ... 660
King's (K. Douglas) The Child Who Will Never Grow Old ... 310
Lie's (Jonas) Niobe (Supp., April 23) ... 444
Locke's (William J.) Derelicts (Supp., Jan. 22) ... 91
Lorimer's (Norma) Josiah's Wife (Supp., April 2) ... 371
"Mainly About Myself" (Supp., April 23) ... 445
Mann's (Mary E.) The Cedar Star (Supp., Feb. 19) ... 202
Masson's (Rosamne) A Departure from Tradition (Supp., April 23) ... 445

FICTION—continued.

Master of Bullantree, The, Preface to (Supp., June 25) ... 683
Maxims, A Sheaf of (Supp., May 14) ... 523
McLennan's (William) Spanish John ... 626
Meredith, Mr., and Fame (Supp., Mar. 12) ... 287
Mitchell's (J. A.) Gloria Victis (Supp., March 26) ... 349
Moore's (George) Evelyn Innes (Supp., June 25) ... 683
Morrow's (W. C.) The Ape, the Idiot, and Other People (Supp., June 4) ... 603
Murphy's (D. Christie) This Little World (Supp., Feb. 12) ... 174
Norris's (W. E.) The Fight for the Crown (Supp., March 5) ... 256
"Number Three" (Supp., May 21) ... 550
Pathos and the Public (Supp., Feb. 12) ... 175
Patton's (James Blythe) Bijli the Dancer (Supp., May 21) ... 548
Payn, James, and His Friends (Supp., April 30) ... 471
Pemberton's (Max) Kronstadt (Supp., May 28) ... 577
Pinkerton's (Thomas) Sun Bees: A Comedy of Nickname Land (Supp., June 18) ... 660
Poets, Some Living (Supp., Feb. 5) ... 151
Dour Maz. By the Author of "The Yellow Aster" (Supp., April 2) ... 370
Fraed's (Mrs. Campbell) The Scourge-Stick (Supp., April 9) ... 395
Publishers, The Old and the New (Supp., May 7) ... 498
Pugh's (Edwin) King Circumstance (Supp., May 7) ... 497
"Really a Melodrama" (Supp., March 26) ... 350
Robertson's (Frances Forbes) The Potentate (Supp., May 7) ... 496
School for Saints, The (Supp., Feb. 5) ... 150
Scully's (William Charles) Between Sun and Sand (Supp., May 14) ... 522
Semicolon, A Plea for the (Supp., Feb. 26) ... 231
Shaw's (Bernard) Plays, Pleasant and Unpleasant (Supp., April 23) ... 445
Sienkiewicz's Quo Vadis (Supp., March 26) ... 350
Sonnets on the Sonnet (Supp., June 25) ... 684
Steuart's (John A.) The Minister of State (Supp., March 26) ... 348
Stockton's (Frank R.) The Great Stone of Sardinia (Supp., Jan. 1) ... 2
The Girl at Cobhurst (Supp., May 28) ... 576
Stockton (Mr. Frank R.) At Home (Supp., April 30) ... 471
Sutcliffe's (Halliwell) A Man of the Moors (Supp., Feb. 12) ... 174
Swift's (Benjamin) The Destroyer (Supp., April 30) ... 470
Thomson's (Basil) The Indiscretions of Lady Aseuth ... 626
Tour, After The (Supp., April 2) ... 371
Verne, M. Jules, At Home (Supp., May 7) ... 498
Waite's (Victor) Cross Trials (Supp., April 23) ... 444
Ward's (Mrs. Humphry) Helbeck of Banisdale (Supp., June 25) ... 681
Warman's (Cy) The Express Messenger, and Other Tales of the Rail (Supp., Jan. 1) ... 2
Watson's (A. E. T.) Racing and Chasing (Supp., Jan. 1) ... 2
Wells's (H. S.) The War of the Worlds (Supp., Jan. 29) ... 121
(David Dwight) Her Ladyship's Elephant (Supp., June 18) ... 661
Whitby's (Beatrice) Sunset (Supp., Jan. 8) ... 4
Whitman, Walt, Chats with (Supp., Feb. 19) ... 201
Wilkins, Miss Mary E., At Home (Supp., March 26) ... 350
Williamson's (Mrs. C. N.) A Woman in Grey ... 626
Wister's (Owen) Lin McLean (Supp., Jan. 8) ... 3
Wood's (Margaret L.) Weeping Ferry, and Other Stories (Supp., Jan. 22) ... 91
Zangwill, Mr. I.: A Sketch and Interview (Supp., April 16) ... 419

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

Atherton's (Gertrude) American Wives and English Husbands ... 129
Benson's (E. F.) The Vintage ... 241
Blackmore's (R. D.) Daniel ... 106
Brandes' (Dr. George) William Shakespeare: a Critical Study ... 381
Brooke's (Emma) The Confession of Stephen Whapshare ... 214
Burnett's (Frances Hodgson) His Grace of Osmond ... 20
Burton's (Sir Richard F.) The Jew, the Gypsy, and el Islam ... 453

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED—con.

Capes's (Bernard) The Lake of Wine ... 695
Coleridge's (E. Hartley) edition of Byron's Poetry ... 645
Conrad's (Joseph) The Nigger of the "Narcissus" ... 163
Crane's (Stephen) The Open Boat, and Other Stories ... 694
D'Annunzio's The Triumph of Death ... 184
De la Pasture's (Mrs. Henry) Deborah of Toth's ... 211
Boyle's (A. Conan) The Tragedy of the Korosko ... 210
Gilbert's (W. S.) The Bab Ballads and Songs ... 135
Harland's (Henry) Comedies and Errors ... 533
Hichens's (Robert) The Londoners: An Absurdity ... 481
Hope's (Anthony) Simon Dale ... 350
Irving's (H. B.) The Life of Judge Jeffreys ... 694
Locke's (William) Derelicts ... 42
Meredith's (George) Lord Ormont and His Ancestry ... 106
Morris's (William) The Sundering Flood ... 429
Phillip's (Stephen) Poems ... 105
Prothero's (Rowland E.) edition of Byron's Letters and Journals ... 645
Rostand's (Edmond) Cyrano de Bergerac ... 405
Sharp's (Evelyn) The Making of a Play ... 269
Shaw's (Bernard) Plays, Pleasant and Unpleasant ... 613
Steel's (Flora Annie) In the Permanent Way, and Other Stories ... 162
Stockton's (Frank) The Great Stone of Sardinia ... 163
Swift's (Benjamin) The Destroyer ... 670
Syrett's (Netta) The Tree of Life ... 241
Watson's (William) The Hope of the World ... 42
Wells's (H. G.) The War of the Worlds ... 334
Weyman's (Stanley) Sherwood ... 334
Whibley's (Charles) Studies in Frankness ... 135
Wilkins's (W. H.) edition of Burton's The Jew, the Gypsy, and el Islam ... 453
Wyndham's (George) edition of The Poems of Shakespeare ... 507
Zangwill's (I.) The Dreamers of the Ghetto ... 405
Zola's (Emile) Paris ... 279

ARTICLES.

Academy Awards to Authors ... 34, 47
Appreciative Mood. In:
Mr. J. G. Frazer ... 376
Mr. Arthur Symons ... 377
Armchair Books:
A Chiel among the F.R.S.'s ... 8
Bards of the Bush:
Henry Lawson ... 424
Edward Dyonson ... 449
A. B. Paterson ... 555
Breitman, The ... 608
Bridges, Mr. Robert, The Poetry of ... 185
Browne, Sir Thomas ... 208
Burne-Jones, Edward ... 687
Burns, Mr. Henley's Essay on ... 48
"Carroll Lewis" at Oxford ... 99
Compton's (Mr. A. G.) Index Expurgatorius ... 661
Copyright Act, The New ... 355
"Crowned Books" The ... 47
Cunningham's (Sir Henry) Novels ... 610
D'Annunzio, Gabriele: a Sketch ... 353
Daudet described by his Son ... 662
Dictionary, A New, and some Omissions ... 665
English, Pure, A Plea for ... 329
Fables, Pure ... 403, 425, 477, 502, 528, 554, 587, 608, 639, 665
Froude, James Anthony, A Forgotten Novel by ... 78
Gladstone, Mr., as Reader and Critic ... 582
Macaulay on ... 578
in Little ... 577
Grandmothers, Tales of Our ... 16
Greece, Love Poems of ... 476
Hamlet and "We Berliners" ... 292
Harrow, Interview with the Head Master of ... 57
Hasty Writers, For ... 661
Henley's (Mr.) Essay on Burns ... 48
Ibsen's Seventieth Birthday ... 352
Idylls of the King, The Evolution of ... 640
India Civil Service, Education for the ... 58, 236
Jew (The), the Gypsy, and the Dreamer ... 699
Kidnapped, The Country of ... 502
Kipling, Mr., The Edinburgh on ... 101
Lark, The Editor of the late ... 607
London of the Writers, The
The New Poetry ... 14
The Poets of the Thames ... 130
The Cockney Sentiment ... 209
Don Juan in London ... 401
Mallock, Mr. W. H., an Open Letter to ... 388
Mare's Nest, A German ... 79
Maupassant and Tolstol ... 189
Memorial, A: and a Moral ... 528

ARTICLES—continued.

Meredith's (Mr.) Ode ... 293
Millais at Burlington House ... 36
Miller (Joseph), Browning, and the Prince Imperial ... 181
"Newdigate," The ... 554
Newspaper English ... 60
Novelists as Poets ... 630
Patria Letters 16, 100, 157, 210, 265, 378, 426, 477, 523, 587, 612, 690
People, The, What they Read:
A Schoolboy ... 50
An Artist ... 156
An Ambassador of Commerce ... 209
A Wife ... 293
An Aunt ... 377
A Constable ... 689
Peter the Great, Mr. Laurence Irving's ... 39
Phillips's (Mr. Stephen) Poems ... 47
Piramoses ... 449
Publishers' Announcements (Spring Supplement)
Association, The ... 313
Publishing, Polyglot ... 529
Reading Gaol, A Ballad of ... 236
Reputations Reconsidered:
Walter Pater ... 13
Lord Tennyson ... 34
Matthew Arnold ... 77
Henry Fielding ... 127
Richard Jefferies ... 129
Jane Austen ... 262
Jonathan Swift ... 423
Royal Literary Fund, The ... 61
School Books, The Trade in ... 59
Self-Conscious, The Recreations of the Shakespeare's Sonnets, The Problem of ... 354
Shakespeare for Amateurs ... 254
Shaw, Mr. Bernard, The Future of Sleep, For Those Who Cannot Snark's Significance, The ... 123
Sonnets on the Sonnet ... 684
Spring Season, The ... 313
Steinlen's Cats ... 537
Stevenson as Humorist ... 667
Stevenson's Fables ... 328
Sudermann, Hermann ... 528
"Sunken Bell, The" ... 410
Tolstol and Maupassant ... 180
Verse, Light: a Plea for its Revival Week, The 17, 30, 80, 103, 132, 158, 183, 211, 237, 266, 294, 332, 355, 378, 403, 426, 450, 478, 503, 530, 559
"Zack" ... 689
Zola's Paris ... 330

ORIGINAL POETRY.

Between the Mountains and the Sea ... 554
To England ... 328

"ACADEMY" PORTRAIT.

Ibsen, Henrik ... 352

OBITUARY.

BearIsler, Aubrey ... 325
Burne-Jones, Sir Edward ... 687
"Carroll, Lewis" ... 98
Gladstone, William Ewart ... 551, 579
Marks, Stacy ... 76
Payn, James ... 373
Tennyson, Mr. Frederick ... 260

CORRESPONDENCE.

Author, Figures of the ... 19, 49, 82, 103
Bacchylides ... 135, 162
Baroos, Mr., of Zimmerman ... 235
Barry Sharp—And After ... 161
Biblical Revisers ... 562
Blind's Mathilde Poetry ... 41
Bookseller, Secondhand, The Bitter Cry of a ... 82, 105
Book-selling Question, The ... 104
Brandes, Dr., and Shakespeare's Sonnets ... 572
Breck, Alan ... 572
Browning Contest among Board School Children ... 481
Burns Superstition, The ... 379 and America ... 613

CORRESPONDENCE—continued.

Butler's (A. J.) translation of Ratzel's History of Maukind ... 162
Camm's (Bede) A Benedictine Martyr in England ... 161
Critics ... 41
Criticism, A Question of ... 333, 357
Dante Rossetti and Choral ... 333
D'Annunzio in English ... 184
Degree, A New ... 481
Dialect ... 357
East-End, The Bookless ... 296
English, Purer, A Plea for ... 358
Falconer's (C. M.) "Lang Catalogue" ... 82
Fergusson, Robert ... 161, 184
"Founder" ... 184, 213
Gissing, Mr. George, at Home ... 334
Gladstone, Mr., as a Critic ... 612, 645
Goethe, A Word about ... 240
Hafiz, Versions from ... 612, 611
"Hamlet" and "Plato's Republic" ... 693
Heine, Heinrich ... 29
Horace, The First Ode of ... 506
Indian Civil Service, Education for the ... 104, 134, 162
"Julius Caesar," Some Remarks upon ... 160, 239, 269
Kidnapped, The Country of ... 561, 612
Lang's (A.) The Making of Religion ... 693
Literature, Why not Schools in? ... 296
"Macchalean Mohr" ... 135
Mallock's (W. H.) Studies of Contemporary Superstition ... 453
Marcus Aurelius ... 331
Mars in Fiction ... 184
"Much Ado about Nothing" ... 693
Newspaper English ... 104, 131, 380
Latin ... 134
Pathos ... 214, 240
Poetry as She is Writ ... 613, 615
Prosody, Oriental ... 670
Publisher's Complaint, A ... 613
Publishers, A Tax on ... 213
R. L. S., A Passage by ... 240, 269
Rousseau, Jean-Jacques ... 404
Schoolboy, A, What he Reads ... 104
Scott, Sir Walter, on Jane Austen ... 183
Shagpat, The Shaving of ... 334
Shakespeare, Was he an Irishman? ... 240
Spelling of the Name of ... 532, 533
Statham (F. Reginald) and President Kruger ... 693
Swan (Mr. Howard) and the Book of Job ... 532
Towers, Round ... 297, 356, 380
Translator and Critic ... 162
"Trewinnot of Guy's" ... 358
Vandalism at Hampstead ... 563, 613
Wagneriana ... 296
Zimmerzet Zong ... 268, 295

THE BOOK MARKET.

America, Popular Books in ... 613
American Prices for English Books ... 427
Book Sales of 1897 ... 37
Trade, State of the ... 159
Books, Ought they to be Cheaper? ... 557
Bookseller, Second-hand, The Bitter Cry of the ... 38
Booksellers On the Question of Cheaper Books ... 558
Bookselling, The Humours of ... 265
Without Booksellers ... 612
Byron, Is he Read now? ... 451
Christmas Trade, The ... 18
"Dante, What has he to do with St. Pancras?" ... 212
Discount Question, The ... 80
East-End, The Bookless ... 238, 266
Eaton's (W. A.) "Popular Poems" ... 212
Gladstone, Mr., How he Ordered Books ... 588
Halfpenny Humour ... 379
Idler, The, The Future of ... 102
Newspapers, The Titles of ... 102
Novellette, Penny ... 503
Novels, Library, Surplus, The Sale of ... 669
Penny Domesticity ... 403
Poetry, Minor, The Sale of ... 131
Publishers, A Tax on ... 182
Publishing Season, A Summer, Why Not? ... 693
Quo Vadis in America ... 159
Reminders ... 101
Reviewer, The Rights of the Sienkiewicz, Columbus ... 692
Stationers' Hall, Ought it to be Abolished? ... 669
Whitechapel Barrows, The ... 355

NOTES AND NEWS.

Academy Awards, The ... 75, 96
Academy, Royal, Election of New Members for the ... 153 of Women Writers, Proposed ... 448
Akerman's (William) Rip Van Winkle, and Other Poems ... 374
America, Newspaper Tattle about Literary Visitors to ... 373
Books selling in ... 398
British Authors in ... 473
Andersen's (Hans Christian) Stories, Dramatic Adaptations of ... 125
"Art, A Record of, in 1898" ... 500
Asquith, Mr., on Criticism ... 501
Austen, Jane, Proposed Memorial to ... 235
Austin's (Alfred) Songs of England ... 259
Poem on America and England ... 373
Authorship, American, Critical Account of ... 500, 581
Balfour, Mr., on Novelists ... 11
Barnes, William, Mr. Lang's Depreciation of ... 234
Bellamy's (Edward) Looking Backward ... 579
Bearsley's Work on the "Morte d'Arthur" ... 475
Binyon, Mr. Laurence, Little Poem by ... 96
Volume of Verse by ... 375
Birrell's (Mr.) Lecture on "Copyright" ... 177
Bookmarker, Sentences printed on a ... 207
Books most popular in the United States ... 32
Booksellers' Dinner, The ... 526
Borrow, George, Dr. Martineau's Recollections of ... 260
Boston Library transformed into a Menagerie ... 32
Browning's, Story of the by Mr. Edgar Fawcett ... 398
Bryce's Impressions of South Africa ... 76
Bryce, Mr., Obituary Dicta of ... 528
Buchanan's (John) Poem on "The Pilgrim Fathers" ... 579
Buchanan's (Robert) Saint Abe and His Seven Wives ... 97
The Rev. Annabel Lee ... 155
Burne-Jones, Sir Edward, Personal Reminiscences of ... 685
Burton, Sir Richard, as a Book Man ... 552
Cable, Mr. G. W., Readings from the Works of ... 526, 551
"Carroll, Lewis," and his Works 95, 205, 261
Proposed Memorial to ... 295
Cassell's The Queen's Empire ... 417
Celtic Renaissance, The ... 581
Chambers's (R. W.) Lorraine ... 295
Achievements Summarised ... 399
Civil List Pensions ... 696
Clark's (C. E.) The Mistakes We Make ... 665
Colvin's (Sidney) Biography of R. L. Stevenson ... 373
Conrad's (Mr.) Nigger of the "Narcissus" ... 289
Cornish Magazine ... 447, 663
Cory's (William) Hints to Elton Musters ... 260
Cutter's (George W.) "Song of Steam" ... 207
Daily Chronicle, Origin of ... 327
Davis, Richard Harding, American Novelist ... 553
Daudet, Alphonse, Biography of ... 326
De Mun, Count Albert ... 325
Di Lorenzo, Tina, the Italian Actress ... 235
Dog in Literature, The ... 290
Dowell's (Stephen) Thoughts and Words ... 154
Doyle's (Mr. Conan) Ballad of "Cremona" ... 11
Ballad on the Motor Car ... 374
Eagle and the Serpent, The ... 687
Editing, A remarkable piece of ... 552
Eitren's (H.) edition of Thackeray's Book of Snobs ... 552
Eliot, George, A Description of ... 352
Finian au Lede, Paper in the Irish Language ... 126
Farrar's (Dean) Quotations in Sermons ... 289, 327
Ferret's Fulham Old and New ... 262
Finance, New Weekly Paper ... 32
Forman's (H. Buxton) Text of Keats's Poems ... 475
Frazer's (J. G.) Pausanias' Description of Greece ... 233
(Mrs. J. G.) Scenes of Child Life in Colloquial French ... 327
"Ginger James": A Cape Barrack-Room Ballad ... 421
Gladstone, Mr., his Death and his Works ... 551
Sonnet to a Rejected Sonnet, by ... 679
Poetical Tributes to ... 595
and Mr. Menken ... 685
Goethe's Quatrain in Sir Charles Murray's Biography ... 527
Golfers' Joys, Sonnet on ... 126
Gould's (F. J.) Tales from the New Testament ... 290
Graf's (Signor) La Danaida ... 326
Graham, Mr. Cunningham, in English Portraits ... 580
Grand, Mme. Sarah, on The Deth Book ... 12
Haggard's (Rider) King Solomon's Mines ... 398

NOTES AND NEWS—continued.

Hallam, Arthur Henry, Mr. Gladstone's Recollections of ... 31
Hanotaux, M., as an Academician ... 375
Harland's (Mr.) Narrative Gifts ... 398
Harte's (Bret) "Her Last Letter" ... 399
Heinemann's (Mr.) Summer Moths ... 206
Henley's (Mr.) "Advertisement" for De Thierry's Imperialism ... 686
Herkomer's (Mr.) Portrait of Herbert Spencer ... 501
Heron-Allen's (Edward) Translation of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam ... 97
Hill, Dr. George Birkbeck, Mr. Percy Fitzgerald's Indictment against ... 421
Holland's (Clive) An Egyptian Coquette ... 418
Home University, New Monthly Magazine ... 97, 261
Horton & Yates's Book of Images ... 525
Housman's (Laurence) The Little Christian Year ... 418
Huysmans, Mr., among the Trappists ... 527
Huxley's Scientific Memoirs ... 553
Hyde, Mr. William, Eulogy of the Work of ... 12
Ibsen, Henrik, Seventieth Birthday of ... 295
Stories of ... 422
Inland Voyage, An, Stevenson's Dedication of ... 607
James, Mr. Henry, in English Portraits ... 580
Jerome, Mr. Jerome K., Christmas Card sent to ... 31
Johnson's (Charles F.) What can I do for Jouday? ... 665
Jordan, Miss, on John Keats ... 553
Kilmarnock "Burns," Sale of the ... 177
Kilpatrick's (James A.) Literary Landmarks of Glasgow ... 326
Kipling's (Mr. Rudyard) Visit to South Africa ... 296
"Recessional" Contribution to the School Budget ... 552
Poem in Praise of Torpedo-Boats ... 579
Kirkcounel Churchyard ... 525
"Kloodike Epitaph," A ... 235
Lamb's (Charles) Letters to Robert Lloyd ... 606
Lang's (Mr. Andrew) English Academy ... 75
Lawmarkert of Edinburgh, "Lady Stair's Close" in ... 638
Leading Artistes, The ... 261
Leatherdale's (G. F.) "A Minor Poet's Testament" ... 235
Le Gallienne, Mr., and the Omar Khayyam Club ... 422
"War Poem" by ... 526
Legras's Dictionnaire de Slang ... 262
Leland, Mr., Works of ... 553, 580
"Lions, Young, Among the" ... 606
Literary Year Book, The ... 261
Literary Agents described by Mr. W. H. Rideing ... 687
Lyall, Sir Alfred, on "Heroic Poetry" ... 153
Marvell's (Andrew) Cottage on Highgate Hill ... 291
Meehan, Father, Reminiscences of ... 97
Meredith's (Mr. George) Seventieth Birthday ... 206
Napoleonic Verse Selected Poems ... 525
Middleton's Spanish Gipsy, Elizabethan Stage Society's Representation of ... 397
Milton, Personal Relic of ... 663
Modern Quarterly of Language and Literature ... 351
Monostich, The ... 12
Moore's (George) Evelyn Innes ... 684
Murray's (David Christie) The Cockney Columbus ... 154
Newdigate, Prize for Poetry ... 605
Nietzsche, Friedrich, Condition of ... 474
Ouida's Views about Minor Biography ... 607
Outlook, The ... 290, 683
Pain's (Mr. Barry) "At Midnight" ... 33
Parables by "T. W. H. C." ... 447
Payn, James, The Works of ... 373
Pearson, Mr. C. Arthur, on Reading in Trains ... 637
Phillips, Mr. Stephen, The Case of ... 421
"Christ in Hades" ... 445
Plagiarism charged against English Authors ... 75
Poster, The: new Monthly Magazine ... 581
Press Incazar News, The ... 684
Publisher's Enterprise, Ingenious ... 553
Punch's "Animal Land" ... 17
Ramsay's (Allan) House in Edinburgh ... 66
Raneh in New Mexico, Verses from a ... 52
Rawnsley's (Canon) Sonnet to Mr. Ruskin ... 17
Reed's (E. T.) "Animal Land" ... 375, 47
Riechepin, M. Jean, at Home ... 68
Ritchie's (Mrs.) Story of Pentennis ... 55
Extracts from her Father's Diary ... 66
Robinson's (Edward) Arlington The Children of the Night ... 65
Rod, M. Edouard, on the Novelist's Art ... 35
Ryan's (W. P.) Literary London ... 32
Rzewuski, M., on Novelists ... 1
School Budget, The, and Mr. Rudyard Kipling ... 53
Scollard, Mr. Clinton, Verses by ... 13

NOTES AND NEWS—continued.

|  | PAGE           |
|--|----------------|
| Scottish Language and Literature, Suggested Lectureship on | 637            |
| Serviss's (Garrett P.) Edison's Conquest of Mars    | 154            |
| Shakespeare and Bacon                                      | 375            |
| Shaw, Mr. Bernard, Seven Plays by                          | 447, 501       |
| Smith's (Ada) Song: "In London Town"                       | 637            |
| Snark's Significance, The                                  | 125, 326       |
| Stevenson's (Robert Louis) Memorial at San Francisco       | 76             |
| Works  | Posthumous 397 |
| Pacific Islands" (Song)                                    | 607            |
| Stevenson as a Fabulist                                    | 374            |
| "Stevenson, the Edinburgh"                                 | 685            |
| Swahili History of Rome                                    | 399            |
| Swan's (Mr. Edward) Version of the Book of Job             | 500            |
| Synon's (Arthur) "Prologue: Before the Theatre"            | 525            |
| Tarver's (J. C.) Debatable Claims                   | 551            |
| Tennyson, Lord, A Story of                                 | 32             |
| 's Indebtedness to Catullus                                | 580            |
| Teutonised English   | 207            |
| Thackeray, A Personal Recollection of                      | 527            |
| Extracts from the Diary of                                 | 663            |

NOTES AND NEWS—continued.

|   | PAGE         |
|---|--------------|
| Touybee's (Mr. Arnold) Road-making Experiment             | 500          |
| Tudor Writers on Husbandrie                        | 352          |
| Twaia, Mark, Letter from                                  | 12           |
| in Pretoria   | 96           |
| and the Firm of C. L. Webster & Co.                       | 259          |
| Unwin's (Mr. Fisher) Library of Literary Histories        | 178          |
| Von Vondel's Lucifer                               | 262          |
| Wallace's (Mr. Edgar) Verses on Mr. Kipling               | 234          |
| War, Effect of, on Publishing and Book-selling            | 499          |
| Walt, A. P., Letters to (new edition)              | 421          |
| Whitman, Walt, A Reminiscence of                          | 178          |
| Whittier's Ballad of "Maud Müller," Parody of             | 474          |
| Who's Who for 1898                                 | 231          |
| Wide World Magazine                                | 475          |
| Wilson & White's When War Breaks Out               | 448          |
| Women Writers' Dinner, The                                | 686          |
| Wright's (Thomas) Hind Head                        | 259          |
| You'd and They'd , for "You'd" and "They'd" | 501          |
| Zola, M., as the Champion of Justice                      | 95, 233, 375 |
| 's Letters to France                                      | 260          |
| to Mr. George Moore                                       | 326          |

ART.

|                                    | PAGE |
|------------------------------------|------|
| Academy Pictures, The Hundred Best | 504  |
| Art, Modern, at Knightsbridge      | 559  |
| French, at the Guildhall           | 644  |
| New Gallery, The                   | 479  |
| Royal Academy, The Sky-line at the | 530  |

DRAMA—continued.

|  | PAGE     |
|--|----------|
| "Heart of Maryland, The," at the Adelphi         | 428      |
| "His Excellency the Governor" at the Court       | 668      |
| "Julius Cæsar" at Her Majesty's                  | 133      |
| "Lord and Lady Algy" at the Comedy               | 480      |
| "Lysiane" at the Lyric                           | 691      |
| "Master, The," at the Globe                      | 480      |
| "Medicine Man, The," at the Lyceum               | 505, 531 |
| "Much Ado about Nothing" at the St. James's      | 238      |
| "My Innocent Boy" at the Royalty                 | 500      |
| "Pélleas et Mélisande" at the Prince of Wales's  | 691      |
| "Peter the Great" at the Lyceum                  | 39       |
| "Runaway Girl, The," at the Gaiety               | 588      |
| "Sea Flower, The," at the Comedy                 | 332      |
| "Stranger in New York, A," at the Duke of York's | 691      |
| "Sue," Miss Annie Russell in                     | 698      |
| "Too Much Johnson" at the Garrick                | 452      |
| "Trelawny of the Wells" at the Court             | 133      |
| "White Knight, The," at Terry's                  | 267      |
| "Antigone," The, at Bradfield                    | 691      |
| "Babes in the Wood" at Drury Lane                | 18       |
| "Bachelor's Romance, A" at the Globe             | 81       |
| "Beauty Stone, The," at the Savoy                | 611      |
| "Belle of New York, The," at the Shaftesbury     | 429      |
| Children's Tales, Selection of, at Terry's       | 18       |
| "Cinderella" at the Garrick                      | 18       |
| "Conquerors, The," at the St. James's            | 452      |
| "Dovecot, The," at the Duke of York's            | 213      |
| "Hamlet" in Berlin                               | 292      |

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1339.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 118, for DECEMBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices. CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, BELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing (illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1,000 Words. Samples and references. Address Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.
(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

ESTABLISHED 1861.
BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

UNIVERSITY of WALES.

MATRICULATION EXAMINATION, 1898.
The UNIVERSITY COURT will shortly APPOINT MATRICULATION EXAMINERS as follows:—
In the subjects of English Language and the History of England and Wales (Two Examiners), Latin (Two Examiners),
Mathematics (Two Examiners),
Greek (One Examiner),
Dynamics (One Examiner),
Welsh (One Examiner),
French (One Examiner),
German (One Examiner),
Chemistry (One Examiner),
Botany (One Examiner).

Particulars will be given by the REGISTRAR of the University, Town Hall Chambers, Newport, Mon., to whom Applications must be sent on or before JANUARY 18th, 1898.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY. THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, AND ARTS.
The NEXT TERM begins TUESDAY, JANUARY 11th.
Prospectus (post free) from the REGISTRAR.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION for FILLING UP VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, and 17th JANUARY next.—For information apply to the Bursar of St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.
For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS OF ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilised world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. (Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X, cars of Messrs. Stedman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

CALIFORNIA.—WANTED, for TWO BOYS, 12 and 14, the Sons of an English Gentleman, a TUTOR. Fishing, Shooting, and Riding.—For further particulars write T, 18, Delamere Terrace, W.

LONDON LIBRARY, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PATRON—H. R. H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.
VICE-PRESIDENTS—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Very Rev. the DEAN of LINDSAY, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., Sir HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B.
TRUSTEES—Right Hon. Sir M. GERT DUFF, Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBERRY.

The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year; Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from 10 to half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 18s.

C. T. HAUBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.
The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.
PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

LONDON,
PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of PERMANENT CARBON (Autotype) REPRODUCTIONS
OF FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

A VISIT IS INVITED TO
THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET,

To INSPECT the Large Series of Examples of REPRODUCTIONS OF WORKS BY THE OLD MASTERS of all Schools, and numerous Specimens of MODERN ART.

ALSO ON VIEW,
A COLLECTION OF AUTOTYPES,
Framed in Specially Designed Moulding, SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
IS OPEN DAILY,
From 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.—ADMISSION FREE.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT
Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)
Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 211, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

THE ONLY LIFE OF THE GREAT CZAR.

Based upon Documents hitherto inaccessible to Historians.

PETER THE GREAT.

By K WALISZEWSKI,
Author of "Catherine II. of Russia."

A New Edition, in 1 vol., with Portrait, price 6s.
Library Edition, in 2 vols., with Portrait, price 28s.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"It is a marvellous story, and it has been told with great spirit by the author, who is able to include in his narrative many anecdotes and much other material that is practically new."

ATHENÆUM.—"Mr. Waliszewski is a complete master of his subject; he is familiar with all the Western and Eastern literature which has been written upon it."

SKETCH.—"A brilliant book. A strange, a terrible story. The historian interprets the man in a way that has never been attempted before, and he has come nearer the truth."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Mr. Waliszewski brings to his task the knowledge of every bit of literature, published and unpublished, which treats of Peter and his time."

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

READY SHORTLY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1897.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 6s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE
English Catalogue for 1897 gives the

FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated Titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages,
whilst the price (5s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literatures of the day."—Athenæum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.....The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

Now ready, cloth 8vo, price 4s.

VARIOUS FRAGMENTS. By HERBERT SPENCER.

Also by the same Author, price 16s. Second Thousand.

PRINCIPLES OF SOCIOLOGY. VOLUME III.

London: WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, W.C.

Just published, cloth, fcap. 8vo. 100 pp., price One Shilling.

THE NEW TESTAMENT for THEISTS. A
Compilation of Selected Passages, freely arranged without Note or Comment, for Practical Religious Use.

London: WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, W.C.

BRITISH FOSSILS.

THE VOLUME of the PALÆONTOGRAPHICAL
SOCIETY for the YEAR 1897, containing CRAG FORAMINI-FERA, Part IV.; CARBONIFEROUS LAMELLIBRANCHIATA, Part II.; CARBONIFEROUS CEPHALOPODA of IRELAND,
Part I.; and DEVONIAN FAUNA of the SOUTH of ENGLAND,
Vol. III., Part II., is NOW READY. The Annual Subscription is One Guinea. Information with regard to the Back Volumes can be obtained of the Secretary, Rev. Prof. WILKINS, 25, Granville Park, Lewisham, London, S.E.

DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS

1. THE BLACK DISC: a Story of the Conquest of Granada. By ALBERT LEE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
With Frontispiece. Second Edition.
"There is so much dash and 'go' in it, that all readers, especially boys, will follow the fortunes of Don Salazar with unflagging interest."—St. James's Budget.

NEW NOVEL BY RUPERT ALEXANDER.
2. THE VICAR of ST. NICHOLAS. By the Author of "Ballyrowan." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"The story is bright and racy."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"The interest of the reader is sustained to the very end."—Dundee Courier.

NEW NOVEL BY MINA SANDEMAN.
3. SIR GASPARD'S AFFINITY. By the Author of "The Worship of Lucifer." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"This novel has a certain indefinable charm about it, and is a capital book."—Weekly Sun.

4. MARIE of LICHTENSTEIN. By Wilhelm
HAUFF. A Tale of Love and War. From the German of WILHELM HAUFF, by R. J. CRAIG. With a Frontispiece.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just out.]

NEW NOVEL BY VIOLET TWEEDALE.
5. WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT A MAN?
By the Author of "And They Two." &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY HAMILTON ORTON.
6. THROUGH ONE MAN'S SIN. Crown
8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just out.]

NEW NOVEL BY ROBERT REES.
7. OWEN TANAT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
[Just out.]

NEW NOVEL BY ERIC WYNDHAM.
8. REVELATION: a Romance By Eric
WYNDHAM. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY ROSE-SOLEY.
9. MANOUPA. By Rose-Soley. Crown
8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just out.]

A STORY FOR GIRLS.
10. NORMA: a School Tale. By Emily N.
BRYANT. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, pictorial cloth, 3s. 6d.
[Just out.]

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO
H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.
11. THE LATEST FRUIT is the RIPEST.
By F. J. GANT, F.R.C.S. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d. [Just out.]

12. PHILLIP'S ADVENTURES in UP-
SIDE-DOWN LAND. By LAURA LUCIE FINLAY. Crown
8vo, pictorial cloth, 1s. 6d.

BY M. P. GUMARAENS.
13. PORTUGUESE RITA. Long 12mo, paper cover, 1s.
"Contains some capital little sketches of life in Portugal."
Dundee Advertiser.

DIGBY, LONG & CO, 18, Boulevard Street, London, E.C.
AUTHORS may send in their MSS., suitable for Volume
Publication, with a view to immediate consideration.

Stevens &amp; Sons' New Law Works.

NOW READY, No. 53 (JANUARY), price 5s.

Subscription for 1898, post free, 12s. 8d.

THE LAW QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Edited by Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., M.A., LL.D.,
Corpus Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford.

Contents.
NOTES: Allen v. Flood—The Rule in Shelley's Case—Legal Cruelty in Divorce—Railway Company's Right to Exclude Unauthorised
Persons from its Stations—Consular Jurisdiction in Japan—Liability of Damant Partners for Partnership Debts—Cyclist Law —Company Cases, &c.

A PROLOGUE to a HISTORY of ENGLISH LAW. By F. W.
Maitland.

THE WAGE of LAW TEACHERS. By C. N. GREGORY.

WILLS in ANCIENT EGYPT. By F. L. GUYOT.

PRESENTMENT DEBTS of RAILWAY RECEIVERS. By C. B.
LABATT.

STATUTORY RULES and ORDERS. By J. DUNDAS WHITE.

THE INDIAN PRESS PROSECUTIONS. By H. C. TRAPNELL.

BOOK REVIEWS.

Just published, royal 12mo, cloth, 6s.

ROBINSON'S EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY

under the WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT, 1897, and the Employers' Liability Act, 1899. By ARTHUR ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Author of "The Law Relating to Income Tax," 1898.

Just published, Third Edition, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

ODGERS' PRINCIPLES of PLEADING,

PRACTICE and PROCEDURE in CIVIL ACTIONS in the HIGH COURT of JUSTICE. Third Edition. By W. BLAKE ODGERS, Esq., Q.C., LL.D., Author of "A Digest of the Law of Libel and Slander." 1897.

"Will be of the utmost value to students."—Literature.

Just published, Second Edition, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

STRAHAN'S LAW of PROPERTY, A

General View of the Law of Property. By J. A. STRAHAN, assisted by J. SINCLAIR BAXTER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.
1897.

"We know of no better book for the class-room and the student who desires a concise and scientific exposition of our law."
Law Times, Dec. 11, 1897.

Second Edition, thoroughly Revised and Enlarged, 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

FREETH'S ACTS RELATING to the NEW

DEATH DUTY, called the ESTATE DUTY. With an Introduction dealing with the other Death Duties, a Digest, copious Notes, and an Appendix, containing the Estate Duty Forms and the Rules regulating Proceedings in England and Ireland in Appeals under the Act. By E. FREETH, Esq., Deputy-Comptroller of Legacy and Succession Duties. 1897.

"The official position of the author renders his opinion on questions of procedure of great value."—Solicitors' Journal.

Catalogue (1898) post free.

STEVENS & SONS, LIMITED,
119 and 120, Chancery Lane, London.

MAGAZINES FOR THE NEW YEAR

PORTRAITS OF CHRIST.

The JANUARY NUMBER of

The Magazine of Art

(Price 1s. 4d.) contains a 16-Page Article by

Sir WYKE BAYLISS, P.R.B.A.,

Dealing with this subject.

The Paper is fully illustrated by reproductions of the representations of Christ dating from the first century down to the work of living artists.

A CHILD'S WISDOM,

By Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, K.C.I.E.,

APPEARS IN

The Quiver

For JANUARY, price 6d.

AMONG THE CONTENTS OF WHICH ARE:

PICTURES for the PEOPLE. By Lord
HERSCHELL, G.C.B.

MY LIFE WORK for the SAILORS.
By AGNES WESTON.

SOME TOYS and their MAKERS. By
M. SPENCER WARREN.

CONTRIBUTIONS from the Bishop of DERRY, Rev. Dr. HUGH MACMILLAN, Rev. Dr.
PRESTON, Mrs. ORMAN COOPER.

COMPLETE STORIES by JANE BARLOW,
ROMA WHITE, R. RAMSAY. &c. &c. &c.

THE MAN EMPRESS,

A Complete Story by MAX PEMBERTON, and

SEE YUP,

A Complete Story by BRET HARTE, appear in

Cassell's Magazine

For JANUARY, price 6d.

SIMPLE SONGS FOR LITTLE FOLKS

(An Album of Songs for Children)

IS PRESENTED WITH

The JANUARY PART (price 6d.) of

Little Folks,

Commencing a NEW VOLUME.

AMONG THE CONTENTS ARE:

RUNNING AWAY to SCHOOL. A New Serial Story. By ASCOTT R. HOPE.

THE OLD FERRY HOUSE. A New Serial Story. By MARY ROWSELL.

STORIES by DAVID KER, MRS. CUTHELL,
S. F. A. CAULFELD, H. WOOD SMITH, S. L.
HEWARD, ANNIE GLEN, and others.

MASTER CHARLIE starts a New Serial Illustrated by Himself; REGINALD RACKSTRAW or, The Hero of the "Rocky Mountains."

THE JUNGLE SCHOOL. New Story
Illustrated by Harry B. Neilson.

And all the usual features which have gained this Magazine so wide a circulation. Also a most attractive scheme of valuable Prizes, including a SPLENDID BICYCLE &c., &c.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, London; and all Booksellers.

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS:                             | PAGE |
|--------------------------------------|------|
| Mr. Stephen Phillips's Poetry ... .. | 3    |
| The Birth of Virginia .. ..          | 4    |
| John Nicholson... ..                 | 5    |
| Architect v. Engineer ... ..         | 6    |
| Masters of Medicine ... ..           | 7    |
| Wild Life and Photography... ..      | 8    |
| Armchair Books ... ..                | 8    |
| BRIEF MENTION ... ..                 | 9    |
| NOTES AND NEWS ... ..                | 11   |
| REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED:            |      |
| II., Walter Pater ... ..             | 13   |
| THE LONDON OF THE WRITERS:           |      |
| IV., The New Poetry ... ..           | 14   |
| PARIS LETTER ... ..                  | 16   |
| TALES OF OUR GRANDMOTHERS ... ..     | 16   |
| THE WEEK .. ..                       | 17   |
| DRAMA ... ..                         | 17   |
| THE BOOK MARKET:                     |      |
| New Books Received ... ..            | 18   |
| CORRESPONDENCE .. ..                 | 19   |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..         | 20   |
| CTION SUPPLEMENT... ..               | 1-2  |

REVIEWS.

MR. STEPHEN PHILLIPS'S POETRY.

Poems. By Stephen Phillips. (John Lane.)

IN 1890 Mr. Stephen Phillips was one of four friends who published at Oxford a slender brown-paper-covered pamphlet of poetry called Primavera. He was not the most undeniable poet of the four. Mr. Laurence Binyon, who also has since made a reputation, showed the more delicate accomplishment; Mr. A. S. Cripps, of whom we are sorry to have heard no more, the mer lyric impulse. But with Christ in Hades, which appeared some years later in Mr. Elkin Mathews's Shilling Garland, Mr. Phillips made a remarkable advance. The poem had qualities—a distinction and an individuality—which lifted it out of the category of minor verse, and attracted somewhat widespread attention. In the present volume Christ in Hades and its accompanying lyrics are reprinted, and to these are added some fifteen new pieces, which include two or three of considerable pretensions.

The next book published by a new writer after he has for the first time made his mark is always a critical one. Was that intoxicating success due only to the glamour of the novelty, or to that transient inspiration which, once at least in life, and generally in youth, comes to so many who have it not in them really to achieve greatness? or was it an index of vital and enduring gifts, of a creative temperament capable of progress, capable of control? Let us say at once that nothing in Mr. Phillips's new work appears to us to reach the level of Christ in Hades. In reading that fine poem, we are struck once again by its completeness and its rare literary qualities. To nobility of fundamental thought it adds an imaginative vision by which that shadowy world, half obscure, half defined, with its tremendous significant figures, is magnificently bodied forth. And the verse, fully in keeping with its subject, has the Virgilian stateliness and the Virgilian simplicity. How grandly it opens!

"Keen as a blinded man, at dawn awake,
Smells in the dark the cold odour of earth;
Eastward he turns his eyes, and over him
A dreadful freshness exquisitely breathes;
The room is brightening, even his own face!
So the excluded ghosts in Hades felt
A waft of early sweet, and heard the rain
Of Spring beginning over them; they all
Stood still, and in each others' faces looked.
And restless grew their queen Persephone;
Who, like a child, dreading to be observed
By awful Dis, threw little glances down Toward them, and understood them with her eyes.
Perpetual dolour had as yet but drooped
The corners of her mouth; and in her hand
She held a bloom that had on earth a name."

Note the precision and the pregnancy of the epithets. "The excluded ghosts": how much it says! And this is Mr. Phillips's manner throughout. Elaboration of epithet he eschews, and will work up to some single phrase or line, clear-cut and holding easily all its ample meaning. Surely a Virgilian trait! Thus in the ultimate line of the poem:

"The vault closed back, woe upon woe, the wheel
Revolved, the stone rebounded; for that time
Hades her interrupted life resumed."

And again, in the fifth line of this simile:

"Just as a widower, that dreaming holds
His dead wife in his arms, not wondering,
So natural it appears; then starting up
With trivial words, or even with a jest,
Realises all the uncoloured dawn
And near his head the young bird in the leaves Stirring."

How should language, without the slightest strain, express more? It has an almost physical effect upon the reader, in the opening of the eyes, and the dilation of the heart.

Mr. Phillips has not as yet quite recaptured the note of Christ in Hades. Nevertheless his new work follows the same ideals, and, if it achieves less, is still profoundly interesting. The drop is, perhaps, chiefly in finish and distinction of style. The poems are nearly all in blank verse or heroic couplets, and the rhythm is often stiff and wooden; the careful distribution of inverted accents and resolved feet fails to give it the required spontaneity. We should think that just at present Mr. Phillips is not much preoccupied with questions of technique; he is more curious about what he has to say than about how he says it; and this in an age of confectionery verse must be imputed to him as a fault on the right side. There are plenty of writers to be careful how they say their nothings. Mr. Phillips's poetry, on the other hand, is primarily a thoughtful poetry. He is a psychologist, interested in nothing more than in the conduct of human souls, especially in the conduct of human souls when they put off the daily mask, and reveal themselves under the stress of some overmastering emotion. Here is a study of such a sudden and momentary revelation:

"FACES AT A FIRE.

"Dazzled with watching how the swift fire fled
Along the dribbling roof, I turned my head;
When lo, upraised beneath the lighted cloud
The illumed unconscious faces of the crowd!
An old grey face in lovely bloom upturned,
The ancient rapture and the dream returned!
A crafty face wondering simply up!
That dying face near the communion cup!
The experienced face, now venturesome and rash,
The scheming eyes hither and thither flash!
That common trivial face made up of needs,
Now pale and recent from triumphal deeds!
The hungry tramp with indolent gloating stare,
The beggar in glory and released from care.
A mother slowly burning with bare breast,
Yet her consuming child close to her prest!
That prosperous citizen in anguish dire,
Beseeching heaven from purgatorial fire!
Wonderful souls by sudden flame betrayed,
I saw; then through the darkness went afraid."

So, for the most part, Mr. Phillips's psychology is less a psychology of processes than of crises, and his verse gathers tragic significance from the fate-fraught momentousness which such crises are wont to hold in life. Such a crisis is the theme, for instance, of what we think the finest of Mr. Phillips's new poems, "Marpessa." The story of Marpessa is the subject of one of the recently recovered Odes of Bacchylides. It is the inversion of the Judgment of Paris. Marpessa, the mortal maiden, must choose between her mortal lover, Idas, and her divine lover, Apollo. Each in turn pleads his cause. Apollo would assume Marpessa into the rhythm of the universe. She shall be associate to the labours of the sun:

"Thou shalt persuade the harvest and bring on
The deeper green; or silently attend
The fiery funeral of foliage old,
Connive with Time serene and the good hours.
Or—for I know thy heart—a dearer toil,
To lure into the air a face long sick,
To gild the brow that from its dead looks up,
To shine on the unforgiven of this world;
With slow sweet surgery restore the brain,
And to dispel shadows and shadowy fear."

Idas can offer no such splendid dowry; but he speaks the language of passionate human romance. Here Mr. Phillips touches his highest point of lyric rapture, in an apostrophe fulfilled, surely, with the very spirit of poetry:

"I love thee then
Not only for thy body packed with sweet
Of all this world, that cup of brimming June,
That jar of violet wine set in the air,
That palest rose sweet in the night of life;
Nor for that stirring bosom all besieged
By drowsing lovers, or thy perilous hair;
Nor for that face that might indeed provoke
Invasion of old cities; no, nor all Thy freshness stealing on me like strange sleep.
Not for this only do I love thee, but Because Infinity upon thee broods;
And thou art full of whispers and of shadows.
Thou meanest what the sea has striven to say
So long, and yearned up the cliffs to tell;

Thou art what all the winds have uttered not,
 What the still night suggesteth to the heart.
 Thy voice is like to music heard ere birth,
 Some spirit lute touched on a spirit sea;
 Thy face remembered is from other worlds,
 It has been died for, though I know not when,
 It has been sung of, though I know not where.
 It has the strangeness of the luring West,
 And of sad sea-horizons; beside thee
 I am aware of other times and lands,
 Of birth far-back, of lives in many stars.
 O beauty lone and like a candle clear
 In this dark country of the world! Thou art
 My woe, my early light, my music dying."

Very beautiful too, full of fine thought and fine feeling, is the long speech in which Marpessa makes her choice, and, a woman, has the wisdom to accept the woman's destiny and miss the divinity's.

Personally, we think "Marpessa" a better poem than either "The Woman with the Dead Soul" or "The Wife." The aloofness of the setting becomes Mr. Phillips's classical manner; whereas the more modern poems, if they gain in poignancy, seem to us to suffer a more than disproportionate loss in breadth and universality. On the other hand, they are perhaps more characteristic of the writer in their tragic, troubled outlook on life. "Marpessa" has the touch of melancholy which seems inevitably to cling about all modern reconstructions of classical myth, but it has not quite that keen sense of pain in human things to which Mr. Phillips shows himself elsewhere so profoundly sensitive. The poetic nature, by the very law of its being, vibrates between the pain of life and the joy of life. Mr. Phillips's nerves are attuned to respond with more unerring certainty to the stimulus of the former. In "The New De Profundis" he gives expression to the pain of that curious state of spiritual numbness or inertia—Acedia the mediæval moralists called it—to which the oppressive conditions of modern civilisation so frequently give birth:

"I am discouraged by the street,
 The pacing of monotonous feet;
 Faces of all emotion purged;
 From nothing unto nothing urged;
 The living men that shadows go,
 A vain procession to and fro.
 The earth an unreal course doth run,
 Haunted by a phantasmal sun."

And a large place is occupied in his verse by the more obvious, more comprehensively human pain of desiderium, of regret for personal loss, for death. Death and the after-death are stimulant to his imagination: he "sends his soul into the invisible, some lesson of that after-life to spell," would give shape and form to dim visions of that phantasmal world. He has indeed the cosmic imagination; witness his dignified lines on Milton, large with something of Milton's own large movement, wherein he conceives the poet is blinded so that he might better see the whole.

"He gave thee back original night, His own
 Tremendous canvas, large and blank and free,
 Where at each thought a star flashed out and sang.
 O blinded with a special lightning, thou
 Hadst once again the virgin Dark!"

In "Beautiful Death" Mr. Phillips deliberately poses the problem of death: would find compensations and "huge amends" in the thought—call it fancy, rather—that the dead, unseen, silently, are working for the living, have become part of all the sweet terrene influences, givers of light and health.

"Thou maiden with the silent speckless ways,
 On plant or creature squandering thy heart;
 Thou in caresses large shalt spend thy life,
 Conspiring with the summer plans of lovers, scent

From evening hedge the walk of boy and girl.

Thou merchant, or thou clerk, hard driven, urged

For ever on bright iron, timed by bells,
 Shalt mellow fruit in the serene noon air,
 With rivulets of birds through fields of light,
 Causing to fall the indolent misty peach.

Then thou, disturbed so oft, shalt make for peace;

Thou who didst injure, heal, and sew, and bless;

Thou who didst mar, shalt make for perfect health;

Thou, so unlucky, fall with fortunate rain."

Well, it is a beautiful idea, but it does not carry conviction. The personal craving will not be drugged by this hope of impersonal immortality, nor will "lose calmly Love's great bliss,

 When the renewed for ever of a kiss
 Sounds through the listless hurricane of hair."

That is Mr. Meredith; but, in truth, Mr. Phillips has answered himself, for what is the aspiration of "Beautiful Death" but the sophistry of "Marpessa," the sophistry which the unspoilt humanity of the maiden is clear-sighted enough to blow away. And in an earlier lyric is another exquisite refutation:

"O thou art put to many uses, sweet!
 Thy blood will urge the rose and surge in Spring;

But yet! . . .

And all the blue of thee will go to the sky,
 And all thy laughter to the rivers run;
 But yet! . . .

Thy tumbling hair will in the West be seen,
 And all thy trembling bosom in the dawn:
 But yet! . . .

Thy briefness in the dewdrop shall be hung,
 And all the frailness of thee on the foam;
 But yet! . . .

Thy soul shall be upon the moonlight spent,
 Thy mystery spread upon the evening mere,
 And yet!"

Mr. Phillips provokes argument, but argument is not criticism, except in so far as it is homage to the sincerity, the justness, the worthiness of the poet's thought. And among all the young poets who are his contemporaries no one is more interesting to us than Mr. Phillips. He has not yet come to his inheritance; but he has that in him which may go very far. He has seriousness of purpose, and the essentially poetic way of looking at things, interpretative sympathy and that fine imaginative insight which can afford to disperse with the surface of things and go straight to the heart of them. We trust that he will take Christ in Hades as his standard, and will be content with nothing which does not at least equal that, alike in individuality of outlook and in the perfect fusion of matter into form which is that indefinable, inimitable, undeniable thing, style.

THE BIRTH OF VIRGINIA.

Old Virginia and Her Neighbours. By John Fiske. (Macmillan & Co.)

To most Englishmen we suspect the name Virginia chiefly suggests tobacco. And they are not so far wrong. Mr. Moncreu Conway, himself a Virginian, has declared that "a true history of tobacco would be the history of English and American liberty." Certainly, it would be the history of Virginia. It was not tobacco, however, but treasure which tempted Sir Humphrey Gilbert and Raleigh to undertake their first expedition to North America in 1578. No doubt they hoped to emulate Spain, which by that time had taken from her colonies gold and silver amounting to nearly £1,000,000,000. The expedition turned out disastrously and Gilbert sank with his ship; but six years later Raleigh sent out another expedition, which landed in the country now known as North Carolina. The Indian who was asked the name of his country replied, "Win-gan-da-coa," which signified "What pretty clothes you wear." This name Queen Elizabeth, when the explorers reported it to her, transformed into Virginia.

After the first colony had been murdered by the Indians, Raleigh assigned the rights of trading in Virginia to a company of which the Rev. Richard Hakluyt was the most remarkable member. Though his own travels did not extend much further than Paris, he had listened with profit to the tales of all the travellers who went in and out of Bristol, and seems to have known by intuition the course which should be adopted by the colonists in choosing their headquarters and in dealing with the natives. He declared with prophetic insight that America would form a great market for English wares and a home for the thousands of labourers who were even then losing their employment owing to the substitution of pastoral for arable land. The paper of instructions which he drew up for the use of the settlers might have been the outcome of many years of personal experience of savage lands, so much to the point is his advice. No better man than Captain John Smith could have been found to carry out his admirable precepts. In service with Sigismund Bathori, Prince of Transylvania, he had met and killed three Turks successively in single combat, and received from the Prince a coat-of-arms with three Turks' heads in a shield. The Turks had their revenge later on, for they captured him, and sold him into slavery. He was dressed in the skin of a wild beast, and had an iron collar about his neck, but managed to kill the brutal Pasha who owned him and to escape into Russia, and thence, after further adventures in Germany, France, Spain, and Morocco, to England, just in time to take part in the expedition to Virginia, in 1607.

The explorers landed on May 13 in Hampton Roads, and built a fort, afterwards known as Jamestown. The Indians lurking in the long grass, and picking off the garrison with their barbed stone-tipped arrows—"sniping," in fact—were very annoying, and disease and starvation soon also assailed the intruders, while quarrels among the leaders, begun on board ship, continued on land. In January, 1608, Smith, who had been very active in trading with the Indians for corn, was captured by a party of the Powhatans, and would probably have suffered death had not the chief's young daughter, Pocahontas, rushed up and embraced him, and laid her head upon his to shield him; whereupon her father spared his life. This picturesque story has always furnished a battle-ground for historians. Bancroft, in the first edition of his history, gave it in all good faith. Charles Deane, in his Notes on Wingfield's Discourse of Virginia, published at Boston in 1859, attacked it so fiercely that Bancroft was induced to leave it out in subsequent editions, though by a curious oversight a reference to it was allowed to remain in the index. Eventually, it was once more restored to the body of the text. Mr. Fiske has examined the story in some detail, and comes to the conclusion that it is true, chiefly on the ground that in 1624, when Smith first published it, there were plenty of people who knew the facts to contradict it if it were false, and that "without it the subsequent relations of the Indian girl with the English colony became incomprehensible; but for her friendly services on more than one occasion the tiny settlement would probably have perished."

Times were very hard, as it was. A good many of the settlers were "gentlemen," who did their best to learn wood cutting, but

"the axes so oft blistered their tender fingers that many times every third blow had a loud othe to drwne the echo; for remedie of which sinne the President devised how to have every man's othes numbred, and at night for every othe to have a cann of water powred downe his sleeue, with which every offender was so washed (himselpe and all) that a man should scarce hear an othe in a weeke."

Soon somebody discovered a bank of bright yellow dirt, and "there was no thought, no discourse, no hope, and no work but to dig gold, wash gold, refine gold, and load gold." Captain Newport carried a load of the stuff to London, only to find that all is not gold that glitters, and that the coop of plump turkeys which he also carried, "the first that ever graced an English bill of fare," was far more valuable. The energy thus dissipated would have been far better devoted to agriculture, for the Indians were beginning to withhold their corn, "with a doggedness that refused even the potent fascination of blue glass beads"; and it required all Smith's ingenuity and pluck to obtain supplies, while a warning from Pocahontas alone saved him and his companions from massacre. Fortunately the Indians were in mortal terror of the white men's firearms.

"A couple of accidents confirmed this view of the case. One day, as three of the Chickahominy tribe were loitering about Jamestown admiring the rude fortifications, one of them stole a pistol and fled to the woods with it. His two comrades were arrested, and one was held in durance, while the other was sent out to recover the pistol. He was made to understand that if he failed to bring it back the hostage would be put to death. As it was intensely cold, some charcoal was charitably furnished for the prisoner's hut. In the evening his friend returned with the pistol, and then the prisoner was found apparently dead, suffocated with the fumes of the charcoal, whereupon the friend broke forth into loud lamentations. But the Englishmen soon perceived that some life was still left in the unconscious and prostrate form, and Smith told the wailing Indian that he should restore his friend to life, only there must be no more stealing. Then, with brandy and vinegar and friction, the failing heart and arteries were stimulated to their work, the dead savage came to life, and the two comrades, each with a small present of copper, went on their way rejoicing. The other affair was more tragic. An Indian at Werowocomoco had got possession of a bag of gunpowder, and was playing with it while his comrades were pressing closely about him, when all it once it took fire and exploded, killing three or four of the group and scorching the rest. Whereupon, our chronicler tells us, "these and other such pretty accidents so amazed and affrighted Powhatan and all his people that from all parts with presents they desired peace, returning many stolen things which we never demanded nor thought of; and after that . . . all the country became absolutely as free for us as for themselves."

Meanwhile the London company had been reorganised, the list of its new members being headed by the name of Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury, and it now sent a new expedition, under Captain Newport, to the relief of the colonists. But Newport's ship, the Sea Venture, was wrecked upon the "still vext Bermoothes," and only a portion—and they not the most desirable—of the new settlers reached Jamestown. Soon after their arrival Smith had to go home invalided, and then ensued a terrible period, which Mr. Fiske calls "the starving time."

"After the last basket of corn had been devoured, people lived for a while on roots and herbs, after which they had recourse to cannibalism. The corpse of a slain Indian was boiled and eaten. Then the starving company began cooking their own dead. One man killed his wife and salted her. . . . No wonder that one poor wretch, crazed with agony, cast his Bible into the fire, crying, 'Alas! there is no God!'"

At lengthsome sixty souls, the haggard remnant of 500 that Smith had left, determined to try and make their way to Newfoundland. They dismantled their cabins, and were sailing in pinnaces down the ever-widening James River when a black speck was seen far below on the broad waters of Hampton Roads. It was the Governor's own longboat bearing a message that his three well-stocked ships had passed Point Comfort, with himself on board.

Thenceforward the history of Virginia is smoother. Tobacco-planting was introduced with such success that soon it ousted almost every other form of agriculture. The sole currency was tobacco; even the parson's annual salary was 16,000 pounds of tobacco; fines were paid in tobacco. Charles I. tried to make himself the sole consignee of the colony's greatest product, and Cromwell passed a Navigation Act which forbade the importation of goods into England except in English or Colonial bottoms, and, as enforced by later rulers, produced much discontent. For though James I. had taken away the Company's charter, and Charles I. had appointed Royal Governors, the House of Burgesses continued to exhibit the "virus of liberty" inherent in English blood. The local laws were, however, somewhat paternal. An unmarried man was taxed according to his apparel; a married man—this is indeed drastic—according to his own and his wife's apparel. An attempt was even made to put down flirting by an enactment which provided that "what man or woman soever should use any word or speech tending to a contract of marriage to two several persons at once should for such their offence either undergo corporal correction (by whipping) or be punished by fine or otherwise."

We have left ourselves no room to speak of Mr. Fiske's interesting account of the settlement of Maryland, which was a "Palatinate" founded on the model of Durham, and of the subsequent history of the various States. His pages show clearly how the institution of slavery was the direct result of the tobacco industry, and how the plantation system tended to differentiate the population into three classes—the planters, the negroes, and the "mean whites." His book is a storehouse of facts relating to the government, history, and customs of Virginia and her neighbours. If we have a complaint against him it is that he has filled it almost too full of interesting details, so that the main lines of development are sometimes rather hard to follow. That is the sole blemish upon a work which is as entertaining as it is instructive.

JOHN NICHOLSON.

The Life of John Nicholson: Soldier and Administrator. Based on Private and Hitherto Unpublished Documents. By Captain L. J. Trotter. (John Murray.)

THE name of John Nicholson was probably unknown to the present generation until it was widely blazoned, only within the last year or two, by Mrs. Steele's novel of the Indian Mutiny, On the Face of the Waters, and by Lord Roberts's Forty-one Years in India. It is, therefore, in happy time that Captain Trotter has issued this full Life of a man concerning whom latter-day curiosity has been much piqued, and who appears to fulfil more completely than any other Englishman of the century both the simple and romantic ideal and the practical and philosophic notion of the Hero in Action. It puts no slight upon the admirable and industrious biography of Captain Trotter—at any rate, we do not mean it as such—to say that his method of putting together the material he has acquired and his style of writing are not equal to the magnificence of his subject; for to write adequately of the Hero and Demigod you need the Poet. And Captain Trotter, for all his admiration of Nicholson and his assiduity in collecting all the facts that can be gleaned of Nicholson's career, is lacking not only in the rhythm and eloquence of the Poet, but also in the far more valuable quality of imagination—that force of imagination which melts multitudinous hard detail in its own fire and runs it into the shape of life.

Although Captain Trotter's own efforts in style achieve no more than worn clichés and tags of verse for picturesque narrative and decoration, some of the letters he quotes, written by men of vigour and perspicacity (and "not necessarily for publication," the thought of which has the effect of panic on many capable men) are a refreshment and an illumination. Two years before the Mutiny Herbert Edwardes wrote thus to an inquiring friend concerning Nicholson:

"Of what class is John Nicholson the type? Of none; for truly he stands alone. But he belongs essentially to the school of Henry Lawrence. I only knocked down the walls of the Bannu forts, John Nicholson has since reduced the people—the most ignorant, depraved, and bloodthirsty in the Punjab—to such a state of good order and respect for the laws that, in the last year of his charge, not only was there no murder, burglary, or highway robbery, but not even an attempt at any of those crimes. The Bannuchis, reflecting on their own metamorphosis, in the village gatherings under the vines, by the streams they once delighted to fight for, have come to the conclusion that the good Muhammadans of historic ages must have been like Nikalsain. They emphatically approve him as every inch a hâkim (master or lord). And so he is. It is difficult to describe him; he must be seen. Lord Dalhousie—no mean judge—perhaps best summed up his high military and administrative qualities when he called him 'a tower of strength.' I can only say that I think him equally fit to be commissioner of a division or general of an army."

Take further these words of Colonel Becher, written upon Nicholson's famous death after the storming of Delhi:

"Foremost in all brave counsels, in all glorious audacity, in all that marked a true soldier, so admirable was our dear friend, John Nicholson. From the beginning of the great storm his was the course of a meteor. His noble nature shone brighter and brighter through every cloud, bringing swift and sure punishments to rebellion, wherever it raised its front in the Punjab, carrying confidence and new vigour to the walls of Delhi, triumphant in the greatest fight that preceded the assault; the admiration of all the force. His genius foresaw the sure success: his undaunted courage carried the breach. He fell, the greatest hero we have had, loved and mourned through all India. Glorious fellow! . . . How proud must his mother feel that God gave her such a son, even though he was so soon taken away!"

Nicholson was thirty-five when he died at Delhi of his wound. He went to India at the age of seventeen, and he was only two years older when he underwent a long and terrible imprisonment in Afghanistan after the disaster to our arms there in 1841. Ever after Nicholson had the extremest distrust and hatred of the Afghans. Himself of the nicest honour and the simplest sincerity, he declares he "cannot describe their character in language sufficiently strong. . . . From the highest to the lowest, every man of them would sell both country and relations. . . . The surest mode of apprehending a criminal was to tamper with his nearest friends and relations." After that, although he saw a good deal of service and won recognition in the two Sikh wars, it was mainly as administrator of certain districts of the conquered Punjab that he earned his unique fame, until the appalling and lurid episode of the Mutiny; and it is precisely in that administrative period that we get the most blurred and flat picture of the hero. And the reason is that that period is most cumbered with detail, not only in fact, but also in its exposition here. It was then that Nicholson won and exhibited his singular influence over the natives. But we see little and feel less of such influence until well through the volume we come upon one or two anecdotes characteristic of his dealing with the natives, whether prince or peasant.

But, after all, it is not difficult to understand the springs of Nicholson's god-like reputation among the tribes of the Punjab. His handsome, gigantic figure, his boundless energy, his wrath, his justice, his tenderness to the poor and feeble, his severity in punishment and his grim humour withal, his generosity in reward and his carelessness of himself,—all these things, as well as his swiftness in the act of war and his fiery personal courage, clearly marked him out to be the idol and the hero of simple, brave, and semi-barbarous tribes. The story has been told before how he was so adored and worshipped that, in 1849, a Hindu devotee discovered him to be "a new Avatar, or incarnation of the Brahmanic godhead," and how thus a new creed and a new sect were founded of Nikalsain. But, we imagine, the story has not been told before which Captain Trotter quotes from Sir Donald Macnabb of the singular and touching behaviour of the Nikalsains on the death of Nicholson. There is no space to quote it here, but it may be read in its proper place in Captain Trotter's volume.

And, in fine, it is due to Captain Trotter to repeat that, if we are somewhat disappointed with his work, it is not that his performance is so poor and small as that his subject is so rich and great. Some day Mr. Rudyard Kipling may think it worth his while to attempt a portrait of John Nicholson which we can "see all round."

ARCHITECT v. ENGINEER.

Modern Architecture: a Book for Architects and the Public. By H. Heathcote Statham. (Chapman & Hall.)

In this book Mr. Statham has chosen for the most part to make a liber aureus of creditable achievement. In addition to his example and his criticisms of contemporary work Mr. Statham expounds some principles which are the seeds from which only really fine results can spring. True architectural design, he says, is a kind of symbolism; it may merely symbolise the interior arrangements of the building; but in a sense more poetical it may symbolise moods of feeling or of association—"power, gloom, grace, gaiety, gracefulness." Every detail should express an idea which shall combine, like the words of a sonnet, with the many others that will crowd around, to form the harmonious symbol of the dominant intention. Mr. Statham cites an instance of this "architectural characterisation." At the Paris Exhibition of 1889 he wished to find the pavilion of the Pastellists. "All at once I caught sight of it a little way off: there was no notice that I could read from where I was, but I had no doubt of the building and went straight to it." He then describes the treatment of detail by which the ultimate expression of the motive was achieved. He applies the theory of symbolism to many of the buildings he has illustrated, and points to modern architects who have written large on their exterior elevations the objects of the structures. He notes that a church almost expresses itself: a very gifted architect of our day may have had this in his mind when he said: "O! any fool can design a church." From base to chimney summit a building should be an organism: to remove one feature should produce the same effect as a wound upon the body; it may be remembered that, some years ago, the urns that mark the receding stages of the tower of St. Mary-le-Strand were taken down; the effect was so painful that the parish rebelled and new vases of the old design were hauled aloft to their stone resting-places.

Mr. Statham rightly insists on the need of good planning; it is the first process in the creation of the organic whole; a plan well thought out goes far to secure the perfection of the completed structure. The making of clever plans is one of the few arts that have really flourished in our days. The growing up of new municipalities and the development of old ones, the demand therefore for town halls; the luxurious habits of the people, who have mansions built for them; the system of housing families in flats, the growth of hotels; all these and many other causes have produced a school of planning to which there has hitherto been no parallel. Never before was so much ingenuity needed nor so much thought expended on the compacting of plans. The complication of services; in towns the irregularity and restriction of sites; and, in other cases, the novelty of requirements have vitalised the dry bones of the old conventional system of plan, and introduced possibilities of internal effects and exterior symbolisms to which the older architects were never called. Elaborate plans are among our few originalities. Unfortunately, a lovely plan can, in most cases, only appeal to the expert. To be able to draw a competent plan is almost in itself a sufficient art; it is to create logical and geometric beauty; to have drawn it is to have made a picture; to set it out on the site is to capture an intellectual and practical delight which will not depart until the completion of the structure. The glory of the plan, as has been hinted, is so obscured by technicalities that it can be fully felt only by the initiate; still, such a plan as that of the Paris Hôtel de Ville—shown by Mr. Statham—should appeal, by its intrinsic dignity and charm, to that appalling majority who know nothing about architecture. It is sad to think how many cultivated people wander through the streets of cities and cannot distinguish good design from bad. How many persons know the only fine front in Piccadilly? How many ever think about the fragment of Whitehall? Do people often note the vista through the arches of Somerset House? Why is so much beautiful work lost in the Shaftesbury Fountain? Only the few could give the reason why.

Therefore such books as this of Mr. Statham, dealing with principles, are so useful, if the people will only read them; but architecture seems a stern study to those who are not strongly called to it, or who are engrossed in other pursuits. It is, however, a strange fact that one great profession which should be kind and kindred is, in effect, actively hostile. The civil engineer who builds in iron is a product of this century; his masterliness in construction, his powers of invention, his skill in satisfying the needs he has created, have gained for him a position which is new and amazing. The scientific spirit being clear as to its objects, keen in its analysis, and irrefutable in its deductions, has captivated many strong minds. Science unadorned, exultant and intolerant, has wrenched from architecture provinces of labour; indifferent to ugliness, it has set utility in high places, and, satisfied with its own ingenuity, has, with much success, eliminated beauty. In London Bridge you see the now excluded architect; in the railway viaduct at Charing Cross you view the engineer unashamed. Mr. Aitchison, A.R.A., in one of his Royal Academy lectures, said: "Science that in mediæval days was in the mire is now at the top of the wheel, while art is in the mud." And, again: "So far as I know there is no a priori reason why art and science should not flourish together, although in later times we know they have not." Thus we live in the age of the unaided engineer, since science has willed it so. Mr. Statham warns students against the argument of some architectural critics that such great structures as the Forth Bridge are the real architectural works of the modern period. He admits that the great intellectual triumphs of the present era have been in scientific invention and not in artistic creation. He lays it down as an axiom that it is not until we get beyond the merely utilitarian aim that we enter the domain of architecture in the best sense of the word. He says: "With whatever new materials we have to deal, architecture must still remain the art of producing what is beautiful and expressive in building, which involves a great deal more than the mere question of economic structure." Thus the Forth Bridge is not art but a problem in cantilevers.

MASTERS OF MEDICINE.

John Hunter. By Stephen Paget.

William Harvey. By D'Arcy Power.

Sir James Y. Simpson. By H. Laing Gordon. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

THE idea of a series of short popular medical biographies was a good one; and the three volumes before us make a capital beginning. Each Life is gripped sympathetically. Mr. Paget, for instance, tells the story of Hunter's breathless career with the right gallop, the right amount of anecdote—anecdote being so swift in its revelation. Hunter was one of those men who solve the riddles of life by hurrying on. Mr. Paget compares him with Swift, who "tore through life." He did not even play at cards. "Come to me to-morrow morning, young gentleman," he said to a budding surgeon newly arrived in London, "and I will put you in the way of things; come early in the morning, as soon after four as you can." The youngster kept the appointment, and found Hunter dissecting beetles. His thirsts to learn and to teach were equally insatiable. When need was, he could quarrel; and then he would keep twenty men at bay and do his work calmly the while; witness the story of his struggle to improve the medical teaching of St. George's Hospital, which he joined six years after its foundation. He fed his enthusiasm with endless acquisitions of natural history specimens—quick and dead; but the story of his collection is an old one. His letters to Jenner will be immortal in the profession. They quiver with haste and eagerness:

"Dear Jenner,—I received yours, as also the cuckoo's stomach." . . . "Dear Jenner,—I am always plaguing you with letters, but you are the only man I can apply to. I put three hedgehogs in the garden, and put meat in different places for them to eat as they went along; but they all di-d. Now, I want to know what this is owing to." . . . "Dear Jenner,—I received yours with the heron's legs."

Once he rushed into a bookseller's shop and said:

"Mr. N—, lend me five pounds and you shall go halves!"

'Halves in what?'

'Why, halves in a magnificent tiger which is now dying in Castle-street.'

"Don't think, try; be patient; be accurate," was his motto; and, in a large degree, it has been the broad motto of the medical profession since Hunter died. He left to his fellow-men achievements which even Mr. Paget hardly tries to estimate, and a collection which so embarrassed them that it lay for thirteen years in his house in Leicester-square before a scheme could be framed for dealing with it. Hunter found time to marry happily. In 1859 Frank Buckland sought for and found Hunter's coffin in the vaults of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, and the great anatomist was then laid in the north aisle of Westminster Abbey.

It is pleasant, in turning to the second and third volumes in this series, to find them written with the same quick apprehension of the charm of their subjects. Mr. D'Arcy Power is alive to the even, stately progress which Harvey kept through life under King and Commonwealth. We see him in his zenith, riding out from Ludgate to visit his patients, as Aubrey saw him, "on horseback with a foot-cloth, his man still following on foot, as the fashion then was, which was very decent." Maybe Shakespeare stood still to see the courtly physician, who had discovered the circulation of the blood, go past. Maybe Harvey passed Bacon in the narrow street, and bowed coldly to the man who, he said, "wrote philosophy like a Lord Chancellor." We see Harvey again, as Lumleian lecturer, presiding over a "public anatomy," with its quaint and turgid ceremonial, at Amen Corner. We follow him with Charles I. to Scotland, where he would steal away from the glittering court to the Bass Rock to pick up eggs, and solve, if he could, the problem of incubation; or, later, to Edgemoor, where, during the battle, he took charge of the two boys, aged twelve and ten years, who afterwards reigned as Charles II. and James II. Best of all, in the sunset of his life we find him sitting on the leads of Cockaine House, in the City, "for the indulgence of his fancy," or expounding, in wise and learned talk, to Janssen. He could look back on a life that answered to his fine motto, "Di laboribus omnia vendunt" ("For toil the gods sell everything"); yet so modest he was, that Janssen could write: "Our Harvey . . . has not comported himself like those who, when they publish, would have us believe that an oak had spoken, and that they had merited the rarest honours—a draught of hen's milk, at the least." Mr. Power makes a lucky comparison between Harvey and Hunter. They had, indeed, much in common. Harvey loved to cut up animals: "his lectures show an intimate acquaintance with more than sixty kinds." Aubrey says he dissected toads; and when the Parliamentary soldiery rifled his house, his chief sorrow was the loss of many observations on the generation of insects. Like Hunter, Harvey was a short, choleric man, a born collector, an ardent comparative anatomist; less eager, perhaps (there has been only one Hunter), but better bred—a finer and a courtlier man.

The third volume before us carries us into that world of Edinburgh medicine which has produced so many great doctors. Sir James Young Simpson, the discoverer of chloroform, rose from humble life in a Linlithgowshire village. The villagers always said he would do great things, for was he not a seventh son? And so heartily did he work and play as a boy that he was known as the "wise wean." He came to be a veritable king of medicine. In 1845, when he paid a professional visit to London, society rose to greet him, and boys sold his Life in the streets.

Simpson did more than promote health, he irradiated it. His consulting practice grew to enormous dimensions. He was gloriously unmethodical, and so careless of money that he would wrap professional or antiquarian specimens in bank-notes, and his valet had to empty his pockets each night of the money with which he had carelessly filled them during the day. Nor was he less than independent:

"When I called for Simpson," says one of his friends, "his two reception rooms were as usual full of patients, more were seated in the lobby, female faces stared from all the windows in vacant expectancy, and a lady was ringing the door-bell. But the doctor brushed through the crowd to join me, and left them all kicking their heels for the next two hours."

The personal magnetism of the man was immense: he had the "Heraclean cheerfulness and courage" which Robert Louis Stevenson ascribed to doctors. Mr. Gordon tells the story of his "Fight for Anæsthesia" in one stirring chapter, showing us how Simpson met the medical, the moral, and the religious objections to chloroform. In Scotland the religious objections were as strong as any, and were analogous to those raised against threshing machines by the Scottish farmers who had for generations tossed their corn on shovels. But Simpson could quote Scripture, and he silenced his opponents with the text: "And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam; and he slept; and He took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh instead thereof."

We have but dipped into these biographies; but they are racy enough to tempt columns of quotation. They are not too long. They are bound in as gay a fashion as many novels, and they are more readable than most.

WILD LIFE AND PHOTOGRAPHY.

With Nature and a Camera. By Richard Kearton, F.Z.S. Illustrated by Pictures from Photographs by Cherry Kearton. (Cassell & Co.)

WHEN Mr. Richard Kearton, some years ago, produced his book about British birds' nests it was seen that he had seized upon a method for taking full advantage of that re-awakened love of nature characteristic of the town-dwelling modern. He was the first to show what photography could do by representing young birds and eggs and nests in situ, and his writing, too, is in a sense photographic. That is, it is uninformed by the spirit and poetry of nature. You do not catch him dropping his camera "to feel back into the centuries"; when he is searching for the merlin or watching the kestrel on down and moor he is not distracted by curiosity about "the man in the barrow," who so long ago also saw the wild hawk striking the partridge, and the butterfly fluttering on its love flight; he does not stop to wonder at his own ego, and reflect that the wind will blow and the brook will sing and the rain fall, when his eye sees no longer, just as they did thousands of years before he was born. In a sense, the writer is lucky not to be perplexed by such thoughts: they endear him only to the few across whose minds similar speculations have flashed; they make dull, uncomprehended reading for the many who prefer a material fact, illustrated by an exact picture. But the grosser taste in itself is perfectly sane and wholesome. The healthy average man is not to be blamed for living only in the present minute and caring nothing for "the man in the barrow," and thinking little of the wider beauty and mystery of life. It is something to be thankful for when a writer like Mr. Kearton comes forward with wholesome and nourishing food for a robust and healthy appetite. We may, and do, regret that a Jefferies was allowed to starve mainly because he stood upon a higher plane; but that would be a poor reason for refusing to acknowledge the candour and sincerity, and a kind of sunny youthfulness, with which this book is written. Taken within its own limits, it is wholly pleasant and admirable.

In the end it will probably be found that photography is not an ideal method for illustrating natural history, and that its province is rather to rectify the errors of the draughtsman than to supplant his work, but it is admirably adapted to the book before us. The author's aim is to describe the difficulties and adventures encountered while gathering material for his previous work. He explains that he and his brother are engaged in the city, but having been born and bred on the wild Yorkshire moors, and having imbibed a passion for outdoor life in childhood, they are in the habit, when holiday time comes round, of returning to the old pursuit. And their zeal has carried them into distant and little known haunts. The rarer birds, especially those of the sea, can only be studied in places difficult of access. They are protected and breed freely on the Farne Islands, which are now preserved for them. When in the neighbourhood, however, we rather wonder that the brothers did not penetrate inland as far as Pallinsburn, where the famous pond is a breeding-place of the black-headed gull (Larus ridibundus) and has long been kept as a kind of sanctuary for wild fowl. Quite close at hand, too, is Haggerston, where Mr. Christopher Leyland has formed a very different kind of sanctuary, and nylghais, gazelles, mouflon, kangaroos, yaks and antelopes, may be seen in an English park. On the neighbouring Cheviots several of the rarer falconide may be studied to advantage. Further north the author and photographer visited the Bass Rock, where they obtained one or two excellent pictures of Solan geese. The following extract will exhibit the nature of this pastime:

"My brother was anxious to obtain a picture showing a good crowd of gannets in it; and when he descended for that purpose to the very edge of the cliff, and began to stalk the birds (with his camera in front of him) from ledge to ledge—off any of which the slightest slip meant a headlong plunge of a hundred and fifty feet into the sea below—I saw one of the men who had accompanied us in the boat turn away, and heard him mutter to himself: 'Ventreuxsome devil; he'll never get off the Bass alive.'"

More than a third of the book is devoted to an account of St. Kilda, another favourite hunting ground of the naturalist, inhabited by a score or so of the most primitive folk to be found in the British Islands. With very great charm Mr. Kearton has succeeded in rendering their old world habits and pursuits. On another occasion, perhaps, he may be induced to go yet further afield. There are many aspects of bird life well worth studying in the more remote and solitary islands of the Orkney and Shetland group. Twice—and both times, as it curiously happened, on a Christmas Day—we have seen a golden eagle perched upon the spire of St. Magnus' Cathedral in Kirkwall, and the scarce visited islets set amid those dangerous currents, where the Atlantic waters sweep round the stormy Pentland and make an endless jumble as they meet those of the North Sea, are practically undisturbed haunts of birds now become rare elsewhere.

We do not so much care for Mr. Kearton's writing on gamekeepers, poachers, and other themes connected with the South. These have been written about so often and so well that it is difficult to add a new touch, and we miss that charm of a first impression that is so attractive in the Northern sketches. Finally, let it be added with great caution of statement, that Mr. Kearton has described and photographed the famous St. Kilda wren. We add not one word more, because so emulous are naturalists of claiming the glory of having discovered this little mite of a bird, that to connect one man's name with it is only to invite indignant correspondence from another. Enough, then, to say that Mr. Kearton has not only confirmed the story that St. Kilda rejoices in a wren all to itself, but has succeeded in obtaining its photograph.

ARMCHAIR BOOKS.

BY AN UNPROFESSIONAL CRITIC.

II.—A CHIEF AMONG THE F.R.S.'S.*

"DR. SHARPEY, while writing the Council Minutes, talked with me of sundry matters. He said on the lunch table of the Athenæum there is, at times, a boar's head. Hart, the artist, a Jew, stood one day looking at the head, and Landseer, coming in with a friend, whispered, 'Do you know what Hart is thinking about? Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.'"

That is a quotation from The Journals of Walter White, the latest volume of reminiscences. Here is another passage, enshrining a picture of Thackeray. The date is June 23, 1859:

"While in Chapman's counting-house was introduced to Thackeray, who happened to come in. Had heard so often that he was ugly, that I was agreeably surprised to find him otherwise: he has a lively eye, fresh colour, and an appearance of old youth or youthful age. Told him I had been the means of making persons like his books. I longed to tell him that he had harped too much on the sentimental string in the Virginians, to the exclusion of incident and the detriment of the work. He said he wished he had five numbers yet instead of three. In reply to a remark of F. Chapman's he said that if he had a rich uncle he should strangle him. Then F. C., 'You say that who can write such books; why, if I could write such books as yours I wouldn't envy even Rothschild. I don't as it is.' Soon after he rose, shook hand, expressed pleasure at having made my acquaintance, and said: 'I go away a little taller, Mr. White, for this conversation with you.' During the conversation F. C. said that E. Chapman had once said to Dickens, 'Take a pinch of snuff,' and handed him a box containing £1,400.

That surely is a most excellent way to take snuff! From another of Walter White's entries it would seem that no small part of Dickens's life was occupied in receiving generous gifts from the Chapman counting-house :

* The Journals of Walter White. (Chapman & Hall.)

"G. Lovejoy hears from Charles Tilt that Dickens's Pickwick was not at first popular. The work had been offered to various publishers, and Chapman & Hall were not over pleased with their bargain. Tilt sold 1,200 of No. 6, and the publishers sent to Dickens a cheque for £30 over and above the £8 per sheet agreed on ; he acknowledged it. For No. 7 they sent him an extra cheque for £60, which he did not acknowledge. For No. 8, a cheque for £100, which he returned. They altered the one into four, and then the author kept it. Altogether he received for Pickwick £1,200 more than was stipulated for."

Walter White, the chronicler of this gossip, was largely a self-educated man, who after beginning life as a cabinet-maker attained to what it is customary to consider the infinitely finer position of assistant secretary of the Royal Society, and confidant of the late Lord Tennyson. Walter White was born, in 1811, at Reading, and began early to have literary ambitions and devote the nights to study. Married in 1830, he emigrated with his family to New York in 1834, varied cabinet-making with lecturing, teaching, and writing prose and poetry, returned to Reading in 1839, gave up cabinet-making about 1843, and became sub-librarian at the Royal Society, then at Somerset House, in 1844. In 1861 he became assistant secretary to the Royal Society, with a residence at Burlington House, a post which he held till 1885, when he retired. He died in 1893. Throughout his life he regularly kept a journal, selections from which have now been arranged by his brother and published in the compact volume which has beguiled an hour fairly interestingly. Their author was no Boswell ; but he knew several of the men whom one always is glad to read about. It is probably to the circumstance that he was on peculiarly friendly terms with Tennyson that we owe the book at all. Just now, one suspects, no publisher would dare to refuse any MS. which contained that august name.

The most circumstantial entry in the whole diary is an account of a conversation between Carlyle and Charles Kingsley at Chelsea in March, 1860. At one period the talk ran thus :

KINGSLEY: 'How long will this jackassery, this flood of books written by people who have nothing to say, continue? Look at Dickens, a man who might have been a Defoe if he would but have restrained his pen, who has degenerated even since Nickleby, whose Christmas stories are gloomy and depressing.'

'What is the reason?' I asked.
'Ignorance! He is one of the most ignorant of modern writers.'

CARLYLE: 'I find the humour of his Pickwick very melancholy. As for Defoe, he would have been a greater man, but he was such an incontinent fellow—always write, write, write on some petty city matters. But he had wonderful power of imagination, making you feel that he had seen everything he described.'

Then sermons were talked of, and the strictures on books applied to them. 'I hate the sound of my own voice,' said K., 'especially if I have to speak beyond a quarter of an hour. 'Tis a torture to me.'

'Then I: "Then every Sunday is to you a martyrdom?"'

'It is; and judge of my feelings when I am obliged to listen to somebody else's sermon for thirty-five minutes. Think of 15,000 clergymen having to stand up Sunday after Sunday with nothing to say. Ah! the Reformation has much to answer for.' Turning to C.: 'You and your Puritans have much to answer for. Those men first started the notion that the way to heaven was by infinite jaw; and see what infinite jaw has brought us to.'

'Ay,' said C. 'Tis wonderful how men will go on talking with nothing to say.'

There is nothing very new here, nothing surprising; but it is impossible to turn aside from a book which reports such conversations. Human nature is otherwise constructed. Elsewhere Carlyle calls Gilfillan a "brute," a "wild ass's colt"; and Kingsley tells how he stung Dickens's Child's History of England into the fire. Carlyle also says, when asked to take part in the movement for opening museums on Sunday, that "he would be sorry to give the old religion its last kick." Since then the kick has been administered, but the old religion still perseveres. Finally, let me quote one of the references to Tennyson. The date is October 16, 1852 :

"Tennyson came to the library to-day. After a time he said, 'I must have a pipe. Mr. Wild replied that he should either go and smoke up the chimney in the back library or on the roof. He chose the latter, and I went to show him how to thrust his huge length through the window. In a quarter of an hour he came down greatly refreshed. During a conversation on French affairs on the day of the christening of his child, he broke in with his deep sonorous voice, 'By the holy living God, France is in a loathsome state.'"

BRIEFER MENTION.

Life and Letters of William John Butler.
(Macmillan & Co.)

THE late Dean of Lincoln belonged to the first flight of the High Church Movement. The friend of Pusey and the saintly Keble, he looked with some distrust upon the Ritualistic vagaries of their more feather-headed successors. As a parish priest at Wantage, he did good work in civilising a somewhat lawless community; and he was one of the first to institute or revive Sisterhoods in the Anglican Church. His task was not lightened by the tendency of the Sisters to become converts to Roman Catholicism; but at the time of the founder's death the community of St. Mary of Wantage numbered thirty-four branches occupied in various works of piety and charity throughout England and India. In 1870 occurred a curious episode in Butler's life. He was taking a holiday on the Continent when the Franco-Prussian war broke out. He volunteered at once for Red Cross work, and for a considerable period this somewhat autocratic organiser served patiently as storeroom-keeper in a military hospital. His letters describing this curious experience are, perhaps, the most interesting part of the book; but as a whole it leaves a pleasant impression of an honest, hard-working, and, within his limits, a reasonable man. He had a great influence over his curates, the most remarkable of whom was the late Canon Liddon.

Our Churches, and Why we Belong to Them.
By Canon Knox Little and Others.
(Service & Paton.)

A COLLECTION of essays by two dignitaries of the Church of England and nine representatives of the principal bodies of Protestant Dissenters. There is no hint in the book itself of how it came to be written, but all the essays show internal evidence that their writers' attention has been especially drawn to the possibility of corporate re-union. When the Churches do agree, their unanimity is wonderful; and there is hardly a discordant note in the book, save for the pronouncements of the two Anglicans. From these we give a few extracts side by side.

CANON KNOX LITTLE. PREBENDARY WEBB
PEPLOE.

The Church of England has preserved the Apostolic Succession, and therefore has validity for her sacraments.

Evangelicals may doubt the reality or power of what is now called "Apostolical Succession."

The sacrament of confirmation . . . which is stated in the New Testament to be one of "the first principles of the doctrine of Christ."

The Church of England knows nothing whatever of more than two Sacraments . . . Baptism and the Supper of the Lord.

Prayers for the dead and unexaggerated invocation of saints have been revived and re-placed in their due position.

The Church of England has given proof that invocation of saints and prayers for the dead are not according to the mind of the Lord.

The Blessed Sacrament and Sacrifice (is) the chief service of the Church ordained by our Lord . . . Whenever "the Sacrifice of our Ransom" is celebrated, all hear the living voice of the creed of Nicæa.

For a man to profess to offer a "Sacrifice of our Ransom" or a propitiatory offering in any sense for the sins of his fellow-men is at once to place himself in opposition to the teaching of the Church of England.

May not those Dissenters who are invited to unite with the Church of England reasonably ask which set of doctrines it is that they are asked to accept?

The Nursery Rhyme-Book. By Andrew Lang. (F. Warne & Co.)

CONSIDERING that a work similar in scope and of the same bulk as this book appeared only two or three years ago, edited by Prof. Saintsbury and illustrated exceedingly well by Mr. Gordon Browne, we cannot speak of Mr. Lang's volume as a long-felt want. Nowadays, however, it is the fashion in literature to do the same thing twice; and Mr. Lang is so entertaining a compiler of books for the young that we cannot complain, whatever the publishers of the earlier work may do. For the volume before us Mr. Lang has gone avowedly to Mr. Halliwell-Phillips's collection. Having chosen the rhymes he has prefixed an essay upon them and added notes. The essay, which is intended for young readers, but will not (of course) be read by them, shows the author in one of his infrequent confidential moods. Thus:

"To read the old Nursery Rhymes brings back queer lost memories of a man's own childhood. One seems to see the loose, flappy picture-books of long ago, with their boldly coloured pictures. The books were tattered and worn, and my first library consisted of a wooden box full of these volumes, and I can remember being imprisoned for some crime in the closet where the box was, and how my gaolers found me, happy and impenitent, sitting on the box, with its contents all around me, reading. There was 'Who killed Cock Robin?' which I knew by heart before I could read (entirely 'without tears') by picking out the letters in the familiar words . . ."

We cannot always quite understand Mr. Lang's selections. For instance, why print this—

"There was an old man of Tobago,
Who lived on rice, gruel, and sage,
Till, much to his bliss,
His physician said this—
To a leg, sir, of mutton, you may go"— and not accompany it with many other and better nonsense rhymes? The number of funny jingles (irrespective of Edward Lear's) on this model is large, yet Mr. Lang offers only indifferent ones. But it is a kindly book, and for grown-ups its pages are filled with reminiscences. Some of Mr. L. Leslie Brooke's illustrations could hardly be better, others are singularly lacking both in fun and fancy. The Old Woman who Lived under a Hill is, however, perfect. So is the Pussy Cat who had been to London to look at the Queen.

Sketches of Rural Life. By Francis Lucas. (Macmillan & Co.)

SINCE the first edition of this pleasant little book was published, eight years ago, its kindly author has died. Mr. Lucas, who was by profession a partner in an old Quaker private bank at Hitchin, rhymed only occasionally; but his rhymes, though few, were fit, and his philosophy was old-fashioned and sound. The poems which give the title to this volume, comprising the Miller, the Hedger and Ditcher, the Ploughman, the Shepherd, and kindred others, have a fresh and simple note and a welcome homeliness and humour. Our copy concludes with pages 157, which bears the words "The End," although the index promises on page 159 another poem with the attractive title "Imaginary People of 1838 and their Sentiments and Surroundings." This is rather a curious error, to which we call the attention of the publishers. A formal and an informal portrait of the late Francis Lucas, the latter much the better, accompany the volume.

All About Animals. (George Newnes, Ltd.)

This book brings the Zoo to our very fireside. It consists of some four hundred photographs, reproduced to the scale of 10 inches by 7, of wild animals, taken instantaneously. The plates have been printed with the utmost care, and every picture in the copy before us is a sharp, clear impression. We have no hesitation in saying that this is incomparably the best book of its kind that has yet appeared. Here is the justification of the camera indeed: to enable a home-keeping reader in a comfortable chair to know accurately, and in a moment, what manner of beasts infest the jungles of India and the forests of South America, the bush of Australia and the African deserts! In the nursery the book should be an inexhaustible treasure: the lions almost growl, and when we come to the elephants' bath we almost dodge the spray. The photographs are the work of M. Gambier Bolton, the Scholastic Photo Company, Herr Anschutz of Berlin, and Mr. Stuart of Southampton. Until colour photography is introduced we cannot conceive of the camera excelling some of these plates. A brief and pithy account of each animal accompanies each picture.

The Blackberries and their Adventures. By E. W. Kemble. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

MR. E. W. KEMBLE, the American artist, is, by general consent, incontestably the best comic delineator of negro life that has yet appeared. In the volume before us we have a number of coloured drawings in his merriest manner depicting the adventures of a little company of nigger children. The model of the book is Mr. Palmer Cox's Brownies, but Mr. Kemble has taken nothing but the ground plan of that diverting work: the superstructure and fun are his own. The Blackberries pass through the usual experiences: they play golf, and swim, and make fireworks, and ride a steeplechase, and always contrive a comic mishap. Some of their facial expressions are a treat for sore eyes, as the saying is. The accompanying verses may or may not be good—so faint is the orange ink in which they are printed that we cannot read them. Luckily they are not needed.

The Making of Matthias. By J. S. Fletcher. (John Lane.)

WE cannot conscientiously call this anything but a dull book. The author's intention is admirable: to show a boy, rich with the freedom of the open air, the fields and woods and secret places of the earth; rich with the friendship of the beasts and birds; knowing no evil, yet wanting for his perfection the elements of human sympathy; finding it at last in grief for a dead friend, and thus being "made." But the treatment is unrelieved, undistinguished. Mr. Fletcher writes accurately, yet his book is without movement, without soul. Miss Lucy Kemp-Welch supplies some charming illustrations.

The Adventures of a Siberian Cub. Translated from the Russian by Léon Golschmann. (Jarrold & Sons.)

THE name of the Russian author is not given; but we are led to suppose that the true English equivalent of the title of the story is "The Ruined Home," which may be illuminative to some of our readers. The book is aimed at children, and it certainly should hit them. The life-stories of animals are always profoundly entertaining, when done well (witness the popularity of Black Beauty), and this is done well enough. It has an un-English roughness and abruptness, but the interest is sound and persistent. The following extract should give the nursery a pleasant foretaste:

"Next morning the grocer sent the following bill to Mishook's master: 'Yesterday were eaten in my shop by your Highness's cub:

|                                     | Rou-bles. | Co-pecks. |
|-------------------------------------|---------------|---------------|
| 6 lbs. spiced gingerbreads, at 30   |               |               |
| copecks per lb. . . . .             | 1             | 80            |
| 5 lbs. ordinary ginger breads, at   |               |               |
| 25 copecks per lb. . . . .          | 1             | 25            |
| 13. lbs caramel, best quality . . . | 0             | 50            |
|                                     | 3             | 55            |

Please pay this bill, and please forbid your Highness's cub to enter my shop!"

There are many excellent pictures of the cub, by Miss Winifred Austen.

Two Essays upon Matthew Arnold, with Some of his Letters to the Author. By Arthur Galton. (Elkin Mathews.)

NATURALLY one first goes to the letters in this volume. The series begins with one in which Mr. Arnold gave his correspondent the wholesome advice that "exercise in verse cannot but be valuable to you if you set yourself to be distinct." In the closing epistle Mr. Arnold remarks that "Macaulay can hardly be of use to any mortal soul who takes our times and its needs seriously." The letters between deal with nothing more important to the general reader than pet-dogs and lumbago, the fortunes of the Hobby Horse, and how the great critic had an "aching back" at Hastings and had little inclination for his American tours. They also show that he tried in vain to induce Mr. Galton to make a certain dedication less flattering. Had he seen these essays it is possible that he would have felt still more uncomfortable under their excessive laudation.

Mary Powell and Deborah's Diary. Edited by W. H. Hutten. (Nimmo.)

THE two romances which Miss Manning wove around the domestic life of Milton do not deserve to fall into total oblivion. A trifle sentimental, they are done with real knowledge and with sympathy alike for the poet and for the household to whom he must have been something of a trial. Mr. W. H. Hutten contributes a preface, in which he recalls memories of the authoress, old-fashioned and satirical, "a tall, thin lady with black hair, an aquiline nose, and a bright colour," and the reprint is adorned with some dainty drawings by Mr. Herbert Railton and Mr. John Jellicoe.

Carlyle on Burns. By John Muir. (Hodge & Co.)

FIRST came Burns, writing his best. Then came Carlyle, with a warm eulogy. Now comes Mr. Muir with opinions on both. Meanwhile Burns's poems await readers.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, 1898

No. 1339, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .               | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. . . . .                | 0 15 3  | 0 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE late Alphonse Daudet left behind him a considerable body of unpublished and incomplete work, including short stories, reminiscences, a novel entitled Quinze Ans de Mariage, and the bulk of a work of a personal nature, called Ma Douleur, the account of his own sufferings under ill-health, and those of other writers similarly afflicted. M. Léon Daudet will act as his father's biographer—at least, as his father's first biographer. It is not likely that only one memoir will be published.

MR. BALFOUR's plea for poor novelists confronted by a world whose fictional possibilities they have exhausted, upon which we remarked last week, has drawn forth much criticism. Probably Mr. Balfour intended that it should, just as a clever debater will sometimes change sides in order that the discussion may be more spirited.

THE best comment upon the speech that we have yet seen is made in a letter to the Scotsman from a writer whose work is now too seldom seen—Mr. William Black. He says:

"At this pacific season of the year, would you allow a perfectly obscure person to endeavour to calm the perturbed spirit of Mr. A. J. Balfour? He appears to be agitated about the probable future of the novel. At Edinburgh the other day he spoke of 'the obvious difficulty which novelists now find in getting hold of appropriate subjects for their art to deal with.' And again he said, with doubtful grammar, 'Where, gentleman, is the novelist to find a new vein? Every country has been ransacked to obtain theatres on which their imaginary characters are to show themselves off,' and so forth. Mr. Balfour may reassure himself. So long as the world holds two men and a maid, or two maids and a man, the novelist has abundance of material, and there is no need to search for a 'theatre' while we have around us the imperishable theatre of sea and the sky and the hills. If Mr. Balfour cannot master these simple and elementary propositions, then it would be well for him to remain altogether outside the domain of literature, and to busy himself (when not engaged in party politics) with some more recondite subject—say bi-metallism."

ANOTHER critic of the novel has been laying about him with some vigour—M. Rzewusik, a Pole. We cannot agree with much that he says, but the opinions of an outspoken intelligent foreigner are always interesting. M. Rzewusik begins by exempting Dickens and Thackeray, George Eliot, Lord Lytton, and Mr. Meredith from his strictures: they, he says, are, by the intensity of their style, their psychological analysis, the elevation of their feelings and the grandeur of their philosophical conceptions, the rivals of the great Slav, German, and French novelists; although even in their best work there is always something of insincerity and a tendency to metaphysics (Dickens metaphysical!). In structural skill, however, they are the inferiors of even second-rate Frenchmen.

As for the second-rate English novelists, men and women, M. Rzewusik thinks them terrible. Their work reveals bottomless depths of silliness, chatter, stupid admiration, mawkish sentimentality, and harsh, preachy cant. The women are the worse offenders: to let lodgings and write a novel is within the power (so M. Rzewusik says) of any Englishwoman. Still he finds some Englishwomen of the second rank who can please him: Miss Rhoda Broughton, Ouida, Harriet Beecher Stowe, and Charlotte Brontë!

IN the January Blackwood the late Mrs. Oliphant's office of "Looker On" will be found to be occupied by another. A fit successor of the wise and shrewd observer whose pen is now still for ever must have unusual gifts.

THE first number of Saint George, the quarterly journal of the Ruskin Society of Birmingham—the Society of the Rose—reaches us. The editor is Mr. John Howard Whitehouse. The reports of three lectures delivered before the Ruskin Society of Birmingham form the bulk of the number, which is well printed and well presented. A portrait of the Master serves for frontispiece.

Saint George also contains the following extract from a letter from Mr. W. G. Collingwood: "I am glad to say that Mr. Ruskin's health is much as it has been during these later years. He still takes his daily walks, sees his personal friends, and spends much time in reading. But it does not seem to be understood by the public that his comparative health depends upon his being kept from all unnecessary work. He directs his own business, but is obliged to decline correspondence, and cannot reply to the many letters which still come asking for his intervention in public matters, or for private advice and assistance." Mr. Ruskin, we might add, will be seventy-nine in February.

THE first number of The Ethical World, a twopenny weekly journal whose scope is explained by its title, is also before us. It seems soundly done. Among the articles in the current issue are a dissertation on a passage in Newman's writings, by Mr. Leslie Stephens, and an account of the social outlook in America, by Mr. Charles Zueblin.

FROM Mr. Conan Doyle poems come but seldom, but when he does turn to verse he hits the mark. His song of the English bow in Micah Clarke is a stirring ballad, and he wrote nobly of the Fourdroyant when it was proposed to sell her some few years ago. But in the main he adheres to prose. We are, therefore, the more glad to find his spirited ballad of "Cremona" in the January Cornhill.

"CREMONA" tells the story of the capture of that city by the Imperial army under Prince Eugène in 1702, and its recovery by the Irish regiments of Dillon and Burke, who were assisting the French army under Marshal Villeroy. Here are some stanzas:

"Prince Eugène of Austria is in the marketplace;
 Prince Eugène of Austria has smiles upon his face;
 Says he, 'Our work is done,
 For the Citadel is won,
 And the black and yellow flag flies o'er
 Cremona.'
 Major Dan O'Mahony is in the barrack square,
 And just six hundred Irish boys are waiting for him there;
 Says he, 'Come in your shirt,
 And you won't take any hurt,
 For the morning air is pleasant in Cremona.'
 Major Dan O'Mahony is at the barrack gate,
 And just six hundred Irish boys will neither stay nor wait;
 There's Dillon and there's Burke,
 And there'll be some bloody work
 Ere the Kaiserlics shall boast they hold Cremona.
 Major Dan O'Mahony has reached the river fort,
 And just six hundred Irish boys are joining in the sport;
 'Come, take a hand!' says he,
 'And if you will stand by me,
 Then it's glory to the man who takes Cremona!'"

At last the Irishmen succeeded in beating back the besiegers. The ballad ends:

"There's just two hundred Irish boys are shouting on the wall;
 There's just four hundred lying who can hear no slogan call;
 But what's the odds of that,
 For it's all the same to Pat,
 If he pays his debt in Dublin or Cremona.
 Says General de Vaudray, 'You've done a soldier's work!
 And every tongue in France shall talk of Dillon and of Burke!
 Is there anything at all,
 Which I, the General,
 Can do for you, the heroes of Cremona?'"

'Why, yes,' says Dan O'Mahony. 'One favour we entreat,
We were called a little early, and our toilet's not complete.
We've no quarrel with the shirt,
But the breeches wouldn't hurt,
For the evening air is chilly in Cremona.'

THE Pall Mall Gazette reviews Miss L. Alma Tadema's volume of poetry, Realms of Unknown Kings, as if it were the work of the artist, her father: "If Mr. Alma Tadema," it says, "will devote himself to his art, look closely for subjects, rid himself of the affectation that love, to be interesting, ought to be unlawful, and elaborate his lyrics, he ought to make a name." But when names are thus confused, the temptations to make one cannot be very alluring.

THE Critic prints the following letter from Mark Twain, in Vienna, concerning certain false rumours which have been recently circulating: "It has been reported that I was seriously ill—it was another man; dying—it was another man; dead—the other man again. It has been reported that I have received a legacy—it was another man; that I am out of debt—it was another man; and now comes this 82,000 dols.—still another man. It has been reported that I am writing books—for publication; I am not doing anything of the kind. It would surprise and gratify me if I should be able to get another book ready for the press within the next three years. You can see yourself that there isn't anything else to be reported—invention is exhausted. . . . As far as I can see, nothing remains to be reported except that I have become a foreigner. When you hear it, don't you believe it, and don't take the trouble to deny it. Merely raise the American flag on our house in Hartford and let it talk."

SOME time ago an article appeared in one of the American magazines in praise of an "artist of the monostich": in other words, a poet or phrase-maker who confined his productive powers to single lines. His capacity for epithet was sometimes striking, but it seemed to some of his readers that his task had only begun. Now, in the Critic, we find the same, or another, artist of the monostich again at work. Here are some specimens:

"A PEARL

Up from the deep sea's darkness stole a drop of light.

AN ALBATROSS

It climbed the horizon with slow stroke of wing.

MIST

God's breath upon the mirror of the sea.

TWILIGHT

Gray with the vestige of forgotten light."

A monostich in time, it may be presumed, saves nine; but we confess to preferring longer poems of more sustained interest.

FEW Christmases go by without seeing the publication of a new edition of Charles Dickens's Christmas Carol. This year the work has come from the house of Cassell in the shape of a facsimile of the original MS. According to the "Editor's Note" (though surely a facsimile of an original MS. is in no need of an editor) the book is published to give every reader the opportunity "to watch for himself, or herself, the master-mind at work; to see how the story grew under his hand; to trace his very moods, in the corrections and alterations made as the work progressed." Unfortunately, Dickens's writing at best was not too distinct, and the corrections and interlineations render it here quite illegible, except to a reader with a microscope and an infinite patience. But it is certainly extremely interesting to see such a story in the making.

THE humour of the authors of The Bad Child's Book of Beasts, and its sequel, which seems to us of a quite desirable quality, is not to all tastes. Among the eulogists of these gentlemen the Spectator holds, perhaps, the foremost place; yet see how an American reviewer can write: ". . . Its pictures are of the order of caricature. But they are not of a pleasing type of caricature, and the inequality of level between them and the 'verses' is marked. Such a book can have no refining influence on minds of any age, and it must be a very crude kind of taste that can find anything in it to enjoy. The production of such books is a waste of pens, ink, and paper." One man's meat is truly another man's poison.

A PROSPECTUS of the Art Journal for 1898 reaches us, decorated with a very modern design in colours. Among the special supplements for the year will be reproductions after Mr. Clausen, Mr. Swan, Mr. Peter Graham, Mr. Orchardson, and the late Sir John Millais and Albert Moore. Mr. B. W. Leader will paint the landscape from which the "premium plate" is to be etched. A series of articles on famous private picture galleries will run through the volume.

MR. OSCAR BROWNING has been engaged for some time past in writing a life of Peter the Great, which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. inform us they will publish about the same time that Sir Henry Irving's play of the same name is produced at the Lyceum. We do not know whether Sir Henry Irving or Mr. Browning is more to be congratulated on this happy coincidence.

OWING to an inadvertence, Mr. A. H. Norway's new book, Highways and Byways in Devon and Cornwall, was reviewed last week under the title, In the West Country. There is very good reason why Mr. Norway's volume should not bear such a name, for it already belongs to a pleasant collection of papers on Devon, Somerset, and Cornwall by Mr. Francis H. Knight.

MADAME SARAH GRAND has given an interviewer of the Weekly Sun her opinions on The Beth Book and its critics. She said, among other things:

"Anything more unlike what I should have understood was criticism than the diatribes directed against my little book, or even the grudging allowances made for it, cannot be imagined. If to praise moderately, as Vauvenargues said, is a sign of mediocrity, then (with some fine exceptions) are my critics a most mediocre lot. . . . I know I should be crushed, but there is something in me that won't be crushed, won't even take my critics seriously. You will see that their verdicts will not be final. There is only one thing in which I must acknowledge them cunningly clever—when they dubbed The Beth Book dull. It is not dull, and that they knew, but in order to injure the book they deliberately and dishonestly set themselves to mislead the public."

We are not concerned to return to The Beth Book and its merits; but it may be pointed out that to some one every author is dull, even Lewis Carroll and Thomas à Kempis.

Vittoria has just been added to the new cheap edition (if six shillings per volume can rightly be called cheap in the time of sixpenny Shakespeares) of Mr. Meredith's novels. We observe the phrase, "Copyright, 1897, by George Meredith," facing the contents. This has reference, we presume, to the revised text, and means that Messrs. Constable's edition of Vittoria is safe from the enterprise of rival firms for the next forty-two years, whereas the first form of the novel, which was published in 1866, will be accessible a considerable period earlier.

IN its new shape Vittoria has a frontispiece in photogravure representing La Scala, the opera-house at Milan.

IN the current number of the Artist we find an enthusiastic, but well-merited, eulogy of the work of Mr. William Hyde. This artist is as yet little known, except among the few, but certainly there are living few closer students, and no finer exponent, of the play of light and shade upon the face of nature. Mr. Hyde's usual medium is monochrome, which he uses with such mastery as to produce almost the effect of colour. The examples of his work which illustrate this article are all scenes of repose; yet to our mind it is when a landscape is in the grip of a storm or frowned upon by an angry sky that Mr. Hyde is at his greatest. Two of the pictures are chosen from a book on London, which Messrs. Constable will shortly publish.

THE Essex Review is one of the best of the county antiquarian magazines, but like many quarterly publications it has sinned against punctuality. It is resolved, we learn, to sin no more in this particular; and it aspires to positive improvements. From the beginning of the year Miss C. Fell Smith will be mainly responsible for the magazine.

WE are informed that Mr. Farrar Fenton who recently issued a translation of the New Testament in "current English," is about to issue the Old Testament on the same lines. The first section will include the Book of Job, and will be published immediately by Mr. Elliot Stock. We trust that "current English" does not mean slang.

REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED.

II.—WALTER PATER.

IN and about the year 1870 a great change became apparent in the spirit of English literature. The group of vigorous writers who had made letters subservient to morality, and who believed in "the man and his message," had begun to break up. Carlyle, who had wielded a long sway over every kind of intellect—the imaginative, the historic, even the scientific—was feeling the effects of years, and though, even in decay a rugged giant, his power was no longer what it had been. All along the line the movement was being carried on with feeblers hands. Whatever was weak or imperfect in art with a purpose became glaringly apparent in the work of those secondary writers to whom the elders handed on the torch. Brilliant young men no longer found it natural to adhere to Lord Tennyson's theory of literature; and very soon it became apparent that the centre of influence was shifting, and that for a time at least an opposite doctrine was to prevail. The rebellion—if one may be permitted to apply that word to a perfectly natural and, within limits, wholesome movement—was not carried out by any single leader. It sprang up simultaneously in a number of minds, not, indeed, of the very highest rank, but of fine and genuine capacity. In verse its clearest exponent was William Morris, who, in lines as bold as they were sweet and tuneful, announced that a bard had come who assumed to be neither prophet nor messenger. "Dreamer of dreams" sang the latter-day poet:

"Dreamer of dreams born out of my due time
Why should I strive to set the crooked straight?
Let it suffice me that my murmuring rhyme
Beats with light wing against the ivory gate."

But though he so beautifully found words for the creed, it was another who was to be the dominant influence. Atalanta in Calydon had appeared before the Earthly Paradise, and for twenty years to come its author was to be the most sedulously imitated of poets; and the imitators taking their cue from him and Morris ostentatiously ignored "the message." I am not concerned to discuss whether they were right or wrong; indeed, I do not believe there is any abstract right or wrong in the matter. Art will bear no heavier moral than is carried by life itself, and if the poet be true to life it is impossible for him to be false to its morals. The justification of a theory lies wholly in its fruit, and it may here be pointed out that the consciousness of a great aim in life itself, the belief that "eyes do regard you from eternity's stillness," the feeling that there is and must be some great and solemn object in existence has a bracing and ennobling effect upon letters. The wave of a great moral movement gave us Paradise Lost; its reaction only the drama of the Restoration. A somewhat similar wave produced In Memoriam, The French Revolution, and Adam Bede; its reaction has flowered into no achievement of the highest class, and is ending in something like paralysis.

Be that as it may—and I throw it out only as a suggested explanation—the late Mr. Pater, just about the time when Atalanta and The Earthly Paradise appeared, began to wield in prose an influence equal to that which Mr. Swinburne wielded in verse. It ran in channels, however, that were partially concealed. He was pre-eminently a writer's writer, and his power is not, as Carlyle's was, open, conspicuous, and commanding; it has been most deeply felt by the choice minds of his age, and has been filtered through them to the wider public. There is scarcely an aspect in which he does not differ from the great moralist. Not even Goethe could make Carlyle understand what Kunst was—"Carlyle knows nothing of art," said Tennyson—he used letters purely as the vehicle through which he delivered his exhortations to the age. To Pater literature was something very different. It was "a refuge, a sort of cloistral refuge, from a certain vulgarity in the actual world." He was the first great Englishman to preach the gospel of art for art's sake. He judged life not by its effect on the race or the future, but by the sensations it experienced by "the pleasure of the ideal present, the mystic now."

The creed looks foolish enough as presented by those who may be called derivatives from Pater; his own mind was too clear and strong to be content with its weaker aspect. All roads lead to Rome, and it is strange to note that the most diverse intellects, provided they be honest and capable, arrive finally at very nearly the same conclusions. He worked out his thoughts into a creed as large and austere as that of Carlyle himself. "Not pleasure, but fulness of life and insight as conducting to that pleasure—energy, choice, and variety of experience, including noble pain and sorrow"—so does he make his Marius think. Pain and sorrow are noble only when they are nobly born, and with this explanation the creed embodies all that makes for submission and conciliation, for adjustment to conditions.

Nor has any moralist laid down a sterner and more uncompromising law than this:

"Truth: there can be no merit, no craft at all without that. And, further, all beauty is, in the long run, only fineness of truth, or what we call expression, the finer accommodation of speech to the vision within."

Mr. Pater does not himself appear to have been of a combative or aggressive disposition; but some of the more ardent spirits, who caught up the cry of art for art's sake without troubling about its deeper meaning, at once began to use it as a battering-ram on the great reputations of their time. Lord Tennyson's biographer tells us that he saw in this a beginning of decay. His words are worth quoting. After giving the poet's impromptu made in 1869, after reading an attack on the Idylls,

"Art for art's sake! Hail, truest lord of hell!" he goes on:

"These lines in a measure expressed his strong and sorrowful conviction that the English were beginning to forget what was, in Voltaire's words, the glory of English literature—'No nation has treated in poetry moral ideas with more energy and depth than the English nation.'"

That was thirty years ago, and the young warriors who then rushed eagerly to the fray are grizzled veterans now, and it is their turn to be haled before the judgment-seat and asked, not What theory did you hold? but What work have you done? To some extent they have leavened English letters, and the young poet and the young novelist have been turned aside from "the purpose," but the condemnation of the movement from a purely literary and artistic point of view is that it has failed to produce any book of the first importance. Let us see why this has been so in Mr. Pater's case.

In one sense Mr. Pater was a brilliantly successful writer. He has done many things so well that one cannot imagine how they could have been done better. But he did not know where his own strength lay. His patient hunt for what he called "the exact word" was in his case, as in that of Flaubert, doomed to futility. For a writer never can convey any but a simple thought fully and lucidly from his own mind to that of another. The meaning he attaches to words is coloured not only by his learning and knowledge, but by his previous meditation and experience. And his phrases fall on minds, each of which has a separate and different body of experience, which contracts or expands, modifies or distorts, their significance. One need not go further for examples than to certain shibboleths of his school. The very word art, so vilely hacked and vulgarised during the past quarter of a century, is applied by nearly every writer to his or her own work. Sir Walter Scott very justly called himself an artist, so did George Eliot, so do a score of fourth-rate scribblers. In each case it conveys a meaning coloured by personality; it cannot be absolutely defined; it cannot, therefore, be employed with such exactitude as to convey a meaning fully and lucidly from one mind to another. Distinction, again, is a term which has the same ambiguity. It is constantly employed by critics to indicate a quality of phrase; with Pater it describes an attitude of mind. The writer is truly distinguished who looks at life independently with his own eyes; it is but a bastard distinction that springs from preciosity of phrase. Fuller and larger illustration of the impossibility of conveying thought exactly from one mind to another may be found in the history of any creed. The Gospel of Christ is set forth in clear and simple words, yet if we consider the number of creeds and sects, the divisions, arguments, and even battles to which its interpretation has given rise, how obvious must it be that the word had one meaning in the mind of him who uttered them; another in the case of those who heard. Nay, take Mr. Pater's own teaching and compare it with that of his derivatives, and it will be seen how distorted it has become in passing from the master to his scholars. That he knew this himself is evident from his fear that the well-known "conclusion" of his Renaissance studies should be misapprehended, as it undoubtedly has been.

But the great weakness of Mr. Pater and his school lies in a too great exaltation of art. He did not, indeed, as some of his followers have done, go the length of asserting that art transcended life, but art was his chiefest interest. His books are all those of a bookman. In no case that I know of did he take his materials direct from nature. His creative works, Marius and Gaston de Latour, are but attempts to show the development of a personality in times to which he was a stranger, and they could be reconstructed only through records and chronicles. The work is done marvelously well, but within limits that fix narrow boundaries to his sympathies. An imagination that had been fed not only by books, but by the living stream of life, could not have been satisfied with such a picture. It would have demanded not only the flower of the time in a refined Marius or a Gaston, but would have used a hundred vigorous forms from the wild, rugged surroundings to complete the picture, and to throw those exquisite portraiture into contrast. He does, indeed, talk of life for life's sake, but it does not work out in his conceptions. There is a passage in Marius typical of so much that it deserves quotation—it describes the hero's feelings after the death of his friend Flavian (the italics are mine):

"The sun shone out on the people going to work for a long hot day, and Marius was standing by the dead, watching with the deliberate purpose of fixing in his memory every detail, that he might have that picture in reserve, should any day of forgetfulness ever hereafter come to him with the temptation to feel completely happy again."

In other words, he was not living wholly in "the mystic now," but saving up his grief for future use. The man who lives his life fully, and drinks the cup, be it of joy or sorrow, to the lees, mourns or rejoices without any "deliberate purpose." Indeed, the moment emotion begins to be fondled and thought about it loses its direct natural character. One sees this more clearly by considering what a real single-hearted zest for life a great artist such as Scott had. To him, novel-writing was not even a very noble or grand way of earning a livelihood, and no one can imagine him treasuring his sensations, calculating his grief, measuring his joy, either as indicating the richness of life or to serve as stuff out of which to weave art. Far less can it be supposed that Henry Fielding, when going out to dine in his coach attended by his yellow-liveried servant, had a deliberate intention to lay by experience out of which to fabricate Squire Western. Not a bit of it. He and Shakespeare, and all the rest of the great artists, lived their lives without any arrière pensée about art, and all unconsciously gathered the experience from which their creations were ultimately fashioned. To be conscious of artistic intentions is enough of itself to take some of the fine flavour from life. In Pater, too, it led to over-bookishness and super-refinement and preciousity, so that his books, and still more those of his followers, tend to lose touch with the actual.

But it is the limitations of his own nature and temperament that lie at the root of the matter. The greatness of a writer largely depends on the extent of his sympathies. He is the interpreter of human nature, and the wider and deeper his interests the more certain is he to command attention. A great sunny nature like that of Scott wins upon us, because it can project itself into a thousand personalities and speak through as many different masks. King, priest, and beggar—he projects himself by turns into each. But there are other writers so rigid and self-centred, so incapable of changing voice or appearance, that they seem to speak with set features and in a monotone. They tap, as it were, only one vein of interest, and the reader who is not held by that is not held at all.

Now, Mr. Pater, supreme as he is in the exercise of a fine gift (of which more anon), is one of those strictly limited writers. Moreover, he was of a sterling honesty that scorned to make pretence of what he had not. Others we know who try to rope in all sorts of readers by imitating the qualities they do not possess. They can produce a sham humour, a sham pathos, a sham passion, that will pass without question in the market-place. It is a mark of greatness in Mr. Pater that he never condescends to this. He goes on sternly compressed within his narrow channel, and never dreams of throwing out a tentacle to those not fully in sympathy with him. He has no humour, and not even in writing of Charles Lamb does he make a pretence of it. With nineteenth-century pursuits of mankind he is out of touch, and appears to be quite content that it should be so. Cold and austere in his own temperament, he makes no attempt to appeal to the warmth and playfulness of human nature. The great surging passions of life never beat in view of the windows of his cloistral refuge. Indeed, it is somewhat of a paradox that in his two novels the apostle of art for art's sake is more of a teacher and sermoniser than an artist. There is far more of the gust of human life in many a novel with a purpose than in these works. So strangely does performance often contradict intention.

But in spite of all these drawbacks he is certainly a great writer, one of the first of his day. Neither his doctrine nor his actual work is likely at any time to appeal to the general public, but they are invaluable to the student and scholar. I do not refer to the matter—it would carry us far beyond the bounds of this paper to touch even superficially on that—but to the style by which he would presumably choose to be judged. The greatest quality manifest in it is that of vivid imagination. Of what may be called pictorial English it is doubtful if any finer exists in the language. There are whole pages of Gaston de Latour where each sentence is like a piece of exquisite carving from purest marble, and every word is that of a man who has conjured up the clearest image of what took place in his fancy. Of his "Cupid and Psycho" one can only say, as Tennyson said of Fitz-Gerald's Omar, that it is a "version done divinely well." And even in his less important essays there are bits which could have been composed by none but a man of strong imagination. What could be finer than this from the paper of Charles Lamb?—

"Reading, commenting on Shakespeare, is like a man who walks alone under a grand stormy sky, and among unwonted tricks of light, when powerful spirits seem to be abroad upon the air; and the grim humour of Hogarth as he analyses it, rises into a kind of spectral grotesque."

If the historical novelists would only study Pater's pictorial manner how much more difficult, but how much more delightful, would their work become! The plague of it is that they cannot reproduce the "quality" of Pater, while there is nothing easier than to catch at the hothouse mannerisms and preciousities that are his flaws. Nor will they amend their ways while critics bestow the epithet "distinguished" on those who murder his style.

P.

THE LONDON OF THE WRITERS.

IV.—THE NEW POETRY.

LONDON seems to have inspired the poets in proportion as she has become herself prosaic. If you deny that she has become prosaic, we will converge to this: that London poems have multiplied with London bricks. London gives more themes to poets now that she is vast and smoky and urban than she did when milkmaids carried milk to Fleet-street from the fields, when salmon leaped under London Bridge, and when strawberries were picked in Holborn. London is written about to-day in ways which are quite new, ways which the men of old would not have understood. When Wordsworth, standing on Westminster Bridge on the morning of September 3, 1802, breathed his sonnet, he foreshadowed this new poetry of London: the poetry which should no longer flatter king or aldermen, or compete with tinsel on Lord Mayor's Day, but should look on London as on Nature.

"Silent, bare,
Ships, towers, domes, theatres, and temples lie
Open unto the fields, and to the sky."

Long enough (and far more so) had London lain open to the fields and sky; but the thing had not been said, or much felt. Yet the poets have bettered Wordsworth's teaching. He could venture to show poor Susar only an imaginary and pasteboard Spring—"a mountain ascending, a vision of trees," a river in Cheapside—whereas to-day the very Spring is exquisitely found in London. How exquisitely has Mr. Henley found it—but we mean to quote him on another theme. In so recent a book as Mr. Lionel Johnson's Ireland, with Other Poems, we find these questions asked—but they have been answered many times:

"Do London birds forget to sing?
Do London trees refuse the Spring?
Is London May no pleasant thing?
Let country fields

To milking maid and shepherd boy
Give flowers, and song, and bright employ,
Her children also can enjoy
What London yields.

Gleaming with sunlight, each soft lawn
Lies fragrant beneath dew of dawn;
The spires and towers rise, far withdrawn,
Through golden mist:
At sunset, linger beside Thames:
See now, what radiant lights and flames!
That ruby burns: that purple shames
The amethyst."

Poets whom no one will compare with Wordsworth have gone far beyond him as singers of London's inner, intimate, and recondite beauty. The Cheapside plane-tree and the thrush raised for Wordsworth a momentary vision of spring which he transferred to Susan, but presently—

"They fade
The mist and the river, the hill and the shade;
The stream will not flow, and the hill will not rise,
And the colours have all pass'd away from her eyes."

For the poets of to-day the vision does not pass. Theirs is the vision of London's own spring, her own trees. Let us see how a plane-tree inspired a later poet of little name, but of the newer school of London overs:

"Green is the plane-tree in the square,
The other trees are brown;
They droop and pine for country air;
The plane-tree loves the town.

Here, from my garret-pane, I mark
The plane-tree bud and blow,
Shed her recuperative bark,
And spread her shade below.

Among her branches in and out,
The city breezes play;
The dun fog wraps her round about;
Above, the smoke curls gray.

Others the country take for choice,
And hold the town in scorn;
But she has listened to the voice
On city breezes borne."

In these simple lines by Amy Levy nothing is imparted into the London picture; no absence is regretted. She sings of a London plane-tree, green in a London square. The all of the spring is heard in London as it never was before. Take an "April midnight" from Mr. Arthur Symonds's
Silhouettes:

Side by side through the streets at midnight,
Roaming together,
Through the incongruous night of London,
In the miraculous April weather.

Roaming together under the gaslight,
Day's work over,
How the Spring calls to us, here in the city,
Calls to the heart from the heart of a lover!

Cool the wind blows, fresh in our faces,
Cleansing, entrancing,
After the heat and the fumes and the footlights,
There where you dance, and I watch your dancing.

Good it is to be here together,
Good to be roaming,
Even in London, even at midnight,
Lover-like in a lover's gloaming.
You the dancer and I the dreamer,
Children together,
Wandering lost in the night of London,
In the miraculous April weather."

Even in vers de société a note of intimacy is struck that was not struck before. "I still love London in the month of May," exclaims Mr. Wilfrid Scaven Blunt in a careless rhyme:

"I still love London in the month of May,
By an old habit, spite of dust and din,
I love the fair adulterous world, whose way
Is by the pleasant banks of Serpentine.
I love the worshippers at fashion's shrine,
The flowers, the incense, and the pageantry
Of generations which still ask a sign
Of that dear god whose votary am I.
I love the 'greetings in the market-place,'
The jargon of the clubs. I love to view
The 'gilded youth' who at the window pass,
For ever smiling smiles for ever new.
I love these men and women at their task
Of hunting pleasure. Hope, mysterious too, Touches my arm and points, and seems to ask,
'And you, have you no Juliet in the masque?'"

Shall we advance with the year? We have had the April night; and who will say that the London summer night is not truly seen and sung in these lines from Mr. Laurence Binyon's London Visions:

"Come let us forth, and wander the rich, the murmuring night!

The sky, blue dusk of summer trembles above
the street;

On either side uprising glimmer houses pale:
But me the turbulent bubble and voice of crowds delight;

For me the wheels make music, the mingled cries are sweet;

Motion and laughter call: we hear, we will not fail.

For see, in secret vista, with soft, retiring stars,

With clustered suns, that stare upon the throng below,

With pendent dazzling moons, that cast a noonday white.

The full streets beckon: Come, for toil has burst his bars,

And idle eyes rejoice, and feet unbounding go.
O let us out and wander the gay and golden night."

We are not sure that the summer, mid-day
London, dazzling and dangerous in its heat, has found, or needs, a song. But London's autumn glory has inspired Mr. Henley.
We wonder what Dr. Johnson would have thought of Mr. Henley's riotous praise of the beauty of the Strand and Fleet-street on an autumn afternoon. Johnson was the first man of letters who constantly exulted in being a Londoner. But he loved London for its size, its concentration of learning, its freedom from restraint—in a word, for the social advantages it offered to a man of spirit and culture. He loved the Strand and Fleet-street for their taverns, and the meetings and greetings they offered him.
Was he ever much touched by their beauty?
Did his eye rest afar on the dome of St.
Paul's, glowing in the five-o'clock sunlight of October? Could he have felt with Mr.
Henley?—

"Lo! the round sun, half-down the western slope—

Seen as along an unglazed telescope—
Lingers and lolls, loth to be done with day:

Gifting the long, lean, lanky street
And its abounding confluences of being

With aspects generous and bland;

Making a thousand harnesses to shine

As with new ore from some enchanted mine,

And every horse's coat so full of sheen
He looks new-tailored, and every 'bus feels clean,

And never a hansom but is worth the feeling;
And every jeweller within the pale
Offers a real Arabian Night for sale;
And even the roar

Of the strong streams of toil that pause and pour

Eastward and westward sounds suffused—
Seems as it were bemused

And blurred and like the speech

Of lazy seas on a lotus-eating beach—

With this enchanted lustrousness,

This mellow magic, that (as a man's caress

Brings back to some faded face beloved before

A heavenly shadow of the grace it wore

Ere the poor eyes were minded to beseech)

Old things transfigures, and you hail and bless

Their looks of long-lapsed loveliness once more.

Tall Clement's, angular and cold and staid,

Glimmers in glamour's very stuffs arrayed;

And Bride's her æry, unsubstantial charm,

Through flight on flight of springing, soaring stone

Grown flushed and warm,

Laughs into life high-wooded and fresh-blown;

And the high majesty of Paul's

Uplifts a voice of living light, and calls—

Calls to his millions to behold and see

How goodly this his London Town can be!"

Mr. Henley has written so beautifully about London that he compels quotation. He knows its morning cleanness, its evening pensiveness, and its midnight melancholy.

Here is part of a river reverie by night:

"Under a stagnant sky,
Gloom out of gloom uncoiling into gloom,

The River, jaded and forlorn,

Welters and wanders wearily—wretchedly on

Yet in and out among the ribs

Of the old skeleton bridge, as in the piles

Of some dead lake-built city, full of skulls

Worm-worm, rat-riddled, mouldy with memories,

Lingers to babble to a broken tune

(Once, O the unvoiced music of my heart!)

So melancholy a soliloquy,

It sounds as it might tell

The secret of the unending grief-in-grain,

The terror of Time and Change and Death,

That wastes this floating transitory world."

It is impossible within the limits of a short article to marshal and illustrate all the moods in which the beauty and significance of London are felt by poetical minds to-day.

We will conclude by quoting a short poem from Mr. Laurence Binyon's Lyric Poems, in which the consolations of London, the involuntary pity and encouragement she bestows, are finely touched:

"As I walked through London
The fresh wound burning in my breast

As I walked through London,

Longing to have forgotten, to harden my heart, and to rest,

A sudden consolation, a softening light

Touched me: the streets alive and bright,

With hundreds each way thronging, on their tide

Received me, a drop in the stream, unmarke.., unknown.

And to my heart I cried:

Here can thy trouble find shelter, thy wound be eased!

For see, not thou alone,

But thousands, each with his smart,

Deep-hidden, perchance, but felt in the core of the heart!

And as to a sick man's feverish veins
The full sponge warmly pressed,
Relieves with its burning the burning forehead and hands,
So I to my aching breast Gathered the griefs of those thousands, and made them my own;
My bitterest pains
Merged in a tender sorrow, assuaged and appeased.

London, it is safe to say, will take rich toll of the poets as her enormous life becomes more magnetic. But we suppose that the great song of London will be sung only when she lies in the dust.

PARIS LETTER.

A new writer, M. Remy Saint Maurice, has brought a note of freshness into the eternal theme of French fiction. In his powerful and delicate story, Temple d'Amour, he presents the eternal situation (this time composed of five instead of the usual three persons of the drama) with a charm, a reticence, a pathos, a freedom from vulgarity and banality, the cynical ferocity of the hour in modern French fiction has almost made us forget as graces of a remote and perfumed past. Not that he ceases for that to be intensely modern. The complexity of the situation, with its moral suffering, its morbid perturbation, its refinement of pain, could only be discovered in our own times. Even half a century ago sin was either more blithe or more lurid than to-day. The lover was tortured by the infidelity or the persistent fidelity of his mistress; either clung to her slavishly or left her without regret, as in either situation there was matter enough for the story-teller. But Stendhal and Bourget discovered new realms of pain and complication, and since then lover and mistress have entered into more poignant and more bitter strife with fatality or their own temperament. The day of the genial rake is over, and the sinner now has developed a terrible, an exasperated and dominating conscience.

M. Saint Maurice's touch is lighter than Bourget's; his analysis less searching, less ponderous and profound. His vision travels through an atmosphere less dense, and there is more of the charm and bright suggestiveness necessary to make the reading of fiction the entertainment it ought to be. He is more of the story-teller and less of the professional psychologist than is Bourget. And he has the art of capturing interest from the start. The exotic flavours of the Isle of Maurice is an added grace. Walmont, the dull and insignificant husband of British origin, is carefully drawn, but tends to the conventional, whereas his brother James, the real hero of the book, deformed and disfigured, is a more original figure. His jealousy of his beautiful creole sister-in-law, whom he has always silently adored, discovers her infidelity to Walmont, and drives him to the desperate act which ends the story, the drowning of himself and Hélène off the Breton coast. These summer scenes of Dinard are delightfully told, and in fine contrast with the unpremeditated tragedy of the last page. But the novelty of the study consists in the attitude of the lover, Hubert de Clessé, an elegant deputy with a conscience. It is the sight of Hélène's son, George, a lad of nineteen, dropped suddenly from his picturesque island into Parisian society, that fronts him with remorse and hesitation. The innocent lad instantly attaches himself to the elegant Clessé, and is so caressing, so living an image of his mother, that the mother's lover is confounded with a sense of their double iniquity. Hélène's conscience is less unquiet, perhaps, because passion holds her in a firmer grip. The analysis of Clessé's remorse and sufferings is finely shaded, and strikes deep and true. But the character is somewhat effaced—too modern and complex to be strong. He vacillates, succumbs, defends himself regretfully against the encroachments of the creole's passion; seeks refuge now in sentimental dalliance beside a girlish profile, now in trivial flirtation with a brazen coquette; is never sure of himself, never at ease, is wistful and uncertain in his rejection of the love he cannot live without, but always keeps our sympathy through his sincere and delicate affection for Hélène's son. "As soon as you became my son's friend," cries Hélène bitterly to him in their last scene, "you shrank from seeing in me her who loved you. Ah, how different is the heart of man from that of woman!" And he reproaches her with George's likeness to herself, which from the first glance was a mirror wherein he recognised the pitiless impurity of their relations. The style is excellent—not so limpid as French prose can be, not so contorted as it has become. Here and there a detail too much, here and there excessive weight upon a stroke, but a book to welcome cordially.

M. René Doumie is the critic of the Revue des Deux Mondes, and wields a frigid, a direct and honest pen. Of charms he has not a suspicion, of temperament not a hint. But he is a safe grinder, tolerably equipped for his difficult and delicate calling, and possibly none the worse for being so glacial and correct. His new volume of Études sur la Littérature Française is an interesting collection of articles that have appeared in the dull and famous "Review," as the members of that bleak house call it. To add "of the two worlds" for them is superfluous. There is but one "Review" in the universe, and it is of "the Two Worlds," possibly indicating this and the next.

M. Doumie is, very properly, an anti-naturalist, and as a lieutenant of the uncompromising M. Brunetière makes lustily for the moribund reputation of the illustrious Zola. It is somewhat late in the day to break a literary stick on that hard skull, but the article reads as an actualité, with all the students of Paris clamouring for Zola's blood, not even restraining their indecent shouts of "Spurn Zola" on leaving the cemetery on the day of Daudet's funeral. But as long as the Institute gates may be thought capable of a hospitable movement in Zola's regard, in the esteem of the pontifical Brunetière, it is never too late to say a disagreeable word of the author of Rome. Zola's style M. Doumie describes as "of a rare indigence." "Art," he elsewhere acutely remarks, "is absent; that is why it lacks life."

"It is less style than nearly style, making us think of those ready-made garments that nearly fit everybody and fit nobody well, too tight for the fat, too wide for the lean. . . . A book of M. Zola's is to literature what the chromo-lithograph is to painting, masonry to architecture, a statue of the Rue St. Sulpice to the sculptor's marble, the bronze of trade to a work of art. It is the novel by the yard, a serial by measure. The introduction of naturalism into the novel is the ruin of art, sent flying by industrial fabrication."

The Goncourts he clean sweeps out of the world of letters, as:

"The petits-mâtres of the contemporary novel, red-heels of naturalism, artists who have left descriptions in mosaic, books lacquered and varnished with Martin varnish, listeners at doors, who have passed from historical gossip to contemporary scandals, mildly maniacal collectors for whom the occupation of writing and literature also were but a mania."

Their historical knowledge he qualifies as that of "a dressmaker, a butler, or a valet." This is hard on the rivals of Richelieu, the founders of the cracked academy of Anteuil, but M. Doumie is nothing if not hard. It saves him from the surprises and inconsistencies of sympathy.

H. L.

TALES OF OUR GRANDMOTHERS.

CHILDREN are not what they used to be. The remark has been made often enough concerning real children, but you may see for yourself that it is true of the children of literature. Possibly Helen's Babies laid the foundations of popularity for the child who, though not very, very good, is certainly not horrid. Those babies have had many younger brothers and sisters who are far from exemplary; and even Mr. Kenneth Grahame's children, children of the age as they are, indulge in practices of which no well-conducted great-aunt could approve. We have been taught by the literature as well as by the experience of the present day that children may be naughty and yet nice. I was very different in the days when our grandfathers were remarking that our grandmothers were monstrous fine women by gad; at least, if we may judge from the children's literature that dates from the remote epoch. To-day we expect children to be naughty and to grow up good. In those days, it would appear, children were expected to be blameless. So we gather from a collection of books which were put into the hands of such as chance to be children in the early part of the century. Take, for example, a book picked from the twopenny box, Sketches of Young People; or, A Visit to Brighton, which bears the imprint of Harvey and Darton and the date 1822. This particular copy was given, as an inscription in an Italian hand tell us, to "Jessie, the gift of dear Granma," and the date of the gift is the date of publication, which shows that Granma was abreast of her time.

"Charles and Caroline Hamilton were one fourteen and the other twelve when they met to congratulate each other on the birth of a sister who had just made her appearance in the world."

So begins chapter one. Charles and Caroline are two very good children, though Caroline has one fault: she suspects that her father prefers boys to girls. But the appearance of Mr. Hamilton disposes of this error, and corrects this fault. He explains to Caroline that "boys require different treatment from girls." For, he continues,

"a modest reserve is most becoming in females; and it would be doing you equal injustice to bring you forward in all companies, as it would be to keep your brother back, while I see that he acts with propriety."

Caroline, aged twelve, is not quite convinced. "You are proud of my brother, papa," she said, "but in me you see nothing to value." Mr. Hamilton had his answer ready:

"Home is the sphere of females," he said to twelve-year-old Caroline, "and their male relations feel and confess their value when they know their happiest hours are spent in their society. Though we may wander abroad in search of pleasure or of profit, happiness is found with the least alloy by our own fireside, where the kind attention of our female relatives will lessen our cares, and make us forget the rough asperities of human life."

"Oh! my dear father," exclaimed Caroline, enchanted with the picture he had drawn, "may I hope to deserve such a character?" She did deserve it. For from page 5 she never gives her father a moment's uneasiness, and there are 180 pages in the book. The father, by the way, was a City merchant, who spent his days in his counting-house. But in the evening, when his tea was removed, "the happy father resigned himself to the luxury of ease and parlour comforts, which can only be enjoyed among affectionate relations, where each finds pleasure in the same employment." He is not, as he confesses, a scholar; but books are one of his parlour comforts—"something light and cheerful." As he well says: "Learned men may laugh at my presumption; but I think I have taste and judgment to admire their beauties, although my morning has been spent in calculating the price of sugar and other staple commodities."

Well, three years pass away, during which Mr. Hamilton enjoys parlour comforts and calculates the price of staple commodities; and then the health of Mrs. Hamilton transports her and Caroline, with Mr. Hamilton and Charles and the reader, to Brighton. On the way Caroline thought she perceived among the Sussex peasants, notwithstanding their rusticity, "a good will towards each other that bespoke the friendliness of their disposition." "So easily is the youthful, unsuspecting mind," remarks the author, "led to declare itself in favour of that which it has not tried." Her father was equally pessimistic. "Alas!" thought her mother, "she will too soon learn from the experience of others, if not from her own, that appearances are not always to be trusted." At Brighton Mr. Hamilton wanders, and conducts Caroline to a view of the "extended ocean." He even suggests that she should take a dip, though he puts the suggestion less crudely. "To-morrow morning," he says, "you will see a number of females and children dipping their heads beneath the wave. I would advise you to follow their example while you are here." "I fear I shall want courage," replied Caroline. "Not when you see so many going fearlessly in, and the bright waves, glittering and shining in the morning sun, dancing to receive you. Will you want courage then?" "I must take time to consider of this," said she. "Let me at present admire its wide expanse, and not confine myself to the little waves which roll towards my feet. They remind me of a small extract from Mason's English Garden," which she at once quotes. "Some young ladies," interposes the author, "would have come to the sea full fraught with extracts suitable to the occasion." But this was the best Caroline could do. The Pavilion puzzles her, with its incessant cry: "Thank you, madam. Two, three. Pray, madam, take a number." But Mr. Hamilton explains: "This is by some called gambling; it is the loo-table of noted celebrity." And Caroline is appropriately shocked.

Charles's letters—for Charles was engaged for a season in calculating the price of staple commodities—"will amuse some of my young readers," says the author. Charles is full of compliments to his sister, and devotes a postscript to the exclamation: "What can there be in all you females, that we are so at a loss without your society!"

The necessary spice of naughtiness is supplied by Miss Dobson, a young lady with a penurious papa and a passion for French lace, some of which she and her misguided mamma try to smuggle through on the London coach. They are detected, and the penurious papa has to pay. Retribution follows, for Miss Dobson and her mamma "were deprived of every recreation, except what their house and garden at Islington afforded, or occasional visits to their brother's shop." So do our sins bring their own punishment. Finally, however, the shining virtues of Caroline lighten the gloom of the house at Islington—Caroline, who "by mild and gentle remonstrances led her friend to see the error of her conduct."

As for the rest, Mr. Hamilton retired into the country with his wife, where he "cultivated a few fields and his garden," while the affectionate attention of their children rendered their excellent parents happy, and gave to themselves a lasting satisfaction. Charles, moreover, went on calculating the price of staple commodities, and "by his unremitting attention and respectable conduct, the credit of their house remained undiminished, and his own reputation became thoroughly established."

So ends the book—a book thumb-marked and dog-eared by childish hands that have long ago withered, wasted, and vanished; and when you reflect that this was the sort of book your grandmother had to read, you will wonder that your grandmother was such a delightful old lady.

C. R.

THE WEEK.

IT goes without saying that the output of new books during the last week has been small and unimportant. But we have received from the Fine Art Society a very handsome folio of reproductions of drawings and studies by the late Lord Leighton. This is neither small (it measures 17in. by 14in.) nor unimportant, whether considered as a book for the studio or for the drawing-room.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- THE DRUM LAUDAMUS. By the late Mrs. Rundle Charles S.P.C.K. 3s. 6d.
THE LESSONS OF HOLY SCRIPTURE. ILLUSTRATED BY THOUGHTS IN VERSE. Compiled by the Rev. J. H. Wanklyn. Vol. VIII. Bennrose & Sons.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- PUBLICATIONS OF THE NAVY RECORDS SOCIETY: VOL. X., LETTERS AND PAPERS RELATING TO THE WAR WITH FRANCE, 1512-1513. By Alfred Spont. The Navy Records Society. For subscribers only.
LINCOLN CATHEDRAL. By the Rev. Edmund Venables. Isbister & Co.
CARLYLE ON BURNS. By John Muir. Wm. Hodge & Co. (Glasgow).

POETRY, ESSAYS, CRITICISM.

- ALL'S RIGHT WITH THE WORLD. By Charles B. Newcomb. The Philosophical Publishing Company (Boston).

ART.

- DRAWINGS AND STUDIES. By the late Lord Leighton Stretton, P.R.A. The Fine Art Society.

NEW EDITIONS OF NOVELS.

- THE ROMANCES OF ALEXANDRE DUMAS, NEW SERIES: SYLVANDER. MONSIEUR DE CHAUVELIN'S WILL. AGÉNOR DE MAULÉON.

EDUCATIONAL.

- FIRST YEAR OF SCIENTIFIC KNOWLEDGE. By Paul Bert. Revised edition. Relfe Bros. 3s.
THE STUDENTS' SERIES OF LATIN CLASSES. M. Tullii Ciceronis, Laelius de Amicitia. With Notes by Charles E. Dennett. Leach, Shewell, & Sanborn (Boston, &c., U.S.A.).

JUVENILE BOOKS.

- ENGLISH HISTORY FOR CHILDREN. By Mrs. Frederick Bore. James Nisbet & Co. 2s. 6d. PHILIPPA'S ADVENTURES IN UPSIDE-DOWN LAND. By LARIA LUCIO Finlay. Digby, Long & Co. 1s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- ALCORN CLUB TRACTS: I., THE ORNAMENTS OF THE RUBRIC. By J. T. Micklethwaite, F.S.A. Longmans Green & Co. 5s.

DRAMA.

"SEASONABLE" ENTERTAINMENTS.

HOW misleading statistics may be is curiously shown by the returns of pantomime this season for Loudon and Greater London respectively. We know how the statistician deals with such a case. He takes the amount of pantomime provided at the West-end theatres—which, theatrically speaking, constitute London proper—and compares it with the same class of entertainment as given at theatres just within or without the four-mile radius, finally showing the proportion of both per thousand of the population. By this method —and the statistician knows no other—some startling results would be brought out. It would be shown, for example, that whereas the taste for pantomime in inner London remained limited and stationary, in outer London it was extensive, and growing by leaps and bounds; seeing that while two pantomimes suffice for the former area, the latter requires some five or six and twenty, or fully one-third more than last year. Of course this is all illusory; it only shows what could be done with statistics if one liked. In point of fact, the Drury Lane "Babes in the Wood" and Mr. Oscar Barrett's "Cinderella" at the Garrick are productions that serve for London at large and, perhaps, a little for the country too. As for the increased production of pantomime in the suburban theatres that is due to the fact that the theatres themselves have become more numerous, and because the ordinary manager has no idea of a Christmas and New Year entertainment other than that of tradition. Not only is pantomime de rigueur at this season, but year after year it continues to be written on the same model. Half-a-dozen familiar nursery tales are the stock-in-trade of the librettist. With endless iteration the changes are rung upon Cinderella, Dick Whittington, the Babes in the Wood, Aladdin, Sinbad, and the rest. Let the treatment be as varied and ingenious as you please, within the limits assigned to it, the sameness of subject and style must in the end become tiresome even to the children themselves.

WELL, the lane has been a long one, but the turning, I fancy, is at length in sight. The Drury Lane pantomime this year differs in some important respects from its predecessors. To be sure, the librettist sets to work upon the usual nursery fable, and for some little distance the conventional lines of treatment are faithfully followed. Good spirits and demons dispute with each other the control of the hero and heroine's destinies; there is the usual allowance of giants, gnomes, and fairies; the haunted wood is peopled with all the familiar monsters; the wicked uncle is to the fore in conjunction with his hireling cut-throats, Bill and Will. But the adventures of the Babes as known to nursery legend do not furnish material for more than half the evening's entertainment. After the murderers have quarrelled and fled, and the birds have performed the kindly office of covering the Babes with leaves, these little waifs sleep the sleep of—Rip Van Winkle. In short, the second half of the pantomime, although in form a sequel to the first, is in reality a wholly different entertainment, resembling in its main features the "musical comedy" or extravaganza popularised by Mr. Arthur Roberts. The Babes are no longer the Babes; they have attained to what the cynic calls their years of indiscretion, and are discovered leading a fast and horsey life about town, in as many capacities as those fertile comedians Mr. Dan Leno and Mr. Herbert Campbell can invent for them.

OF the impersonation of the Babes quid Babes this is hardly the place to speak. Mr. Dan Leno, in a little school-boy jacket, and the burly Mr. Herbert Campbell, disguised in gold ringlets and a pink pinafore, are a couple of amusing drolls, whom long association in Drury Lane pantomime has taught to play up to each other with excellent effect. But, unquestionably, the important feature of Mr. Arthur Collins's first pantomime is "the sequel." What a vista it opens up of the after-lives of all the heroes and heroines of nursery lore! The precocious child often wonders what happened to Jack the Giant Killer after slaying his enemy, to Cinderella after marriage, to Dick Whittington as Lord Mayor, to Aladdin after besting the magician and regaining possession of the wonderful lamp. Perhaps the pantomime librettist of the future will tell him, and then, if the Drury Lane precedent be followed, the Christmas pantomime will merge into the variety entertainment, with the chief comedian playing as many parts as the melancholy Jaques assigned to life itself.

CERTAINLY the time is ripe for a change of this kind, which is perhaps fuller of possibilities than it looks. The conventional Christmas pantomime has had a long career—longer than most of the various phases of the drama—the poetic, the romantic, the farcical, the realistic, &c.—enjoy. Originally the harlequinade, which attained its zenith in the days of Grimaldi, was the thing. The nursery fable served then as the opening to the antics of clown and pantaloone, who were ushered in by the transformation scene. Then "the opening" gradually extended, pushing the harlequinade into the background; and when the late Augustus Harris took up the work of production, with his unique faculty for mise-en-scène, the clown and his fellows sank further and further into obscurity. Grimaldi had no successors of his own calibre; but a long line of clowns followed in his footsteps, zealous exponents of the hot poker and the buttered slide which he invented. Almost the last of the race was the late Harry Payne, long associated with Drury Lane. He lived to see the practical extinction of the old-fashioned harlequinade, for which there was no room in the gorgeous Christmas spectacles of the Harris régime. Now the spectacular pantomime itself goes into the limbo; and there seems to be about to arise in its place the musical comedy, extravaganza, or go-as-you-please variety piece, to which the name of burlesque still clings. Truly the reflections of the elderly pantomime-goer are not all coulour-de-rose. The pantomime of his youth is only a memory. That of his manhood is disappearing. We are now in a transition stage. The latest Drury Lane pantomime is a blend of the old and the new, with the new decidedly predominating, and this tendency is likely to increase: for the one constant law of the drama in all its branches is change.

If change were not at work in pantomime itself, the popularity of this traditional form of Christmas entertainment would be threatened by the sort of "seasonable" fare which happens to be provided at Terry's Theatre. This is a selection of the children's tales of Hans Christian Andersen —"Big Claus and Little Claus," "The Princess and the Swineherd," "The Emperor's New Clothes," and "The Soldier and the Tinder-box"—adapted by Mr. Basil Hood, and set to music by Mr. Walter Slaughter. Little gems these pieces are purely fanciful effusions that transport the denizen of the workaday world into a delightful Toyland, where everything happens in story books. It is long since anything so pretty and charming has been seen on the stage, for between them the librettist and the composer have succeeded in reproducing these exquisite fables with all the original savour. The various little tales are not of equal merit. The rivalry in love of Big Claus and Little Claus smacks a little of Boccaccio; the moral atmosphere of the story is somewhat thick for children. But the Swineherd with his magic pipe, to which everyone who hears it must dance; the Emperor with his invisible coat; the soldier with his tinder-box, which proves as powerful a talisman as Aladdin's lamp; and the wooden soldiers who have replaced the real soldiers in this marvellous kingdom—nowhere—all these are creations in which young and old alike may revel. It is strange that Andersen should not be better known to theatre goers than he is. The Terry Theatre matinées are a promising instalment of a class of dramatic entertainment of which we have had too little. Of course Andersen is not exhaustible; but next we can have Planché, and perhaps Andre Lang. After which a new dealer in fairy stories may find the stage worth his attention.

J. F. N.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE CHRISTMAS TRADE.

IT is always interesting to know the results of a harvest, be it agricultural or otherwise; and we have obtained from a number of booksellers brief reports of their experiences last week. Here they are:

LONDON (STRAND).

The Christmas trade has been as good as usual in small books, but not so satisfactory in larger, with a few exceptions. The following have been most in demand:

Memoir of Tennyson.
Norway's Highways and Byways of Devon and Cornwall.
Deeds that Won the Empire.
More Tramps Abroad.
More Beasts for Worse Children.
Sixty Years a Queen.
Holmes's Life of the Queen.
Captains Courageous.
Jones's Rock-Climbing.
Watson's The Hope of the World.
Eugene Field's Lullaby Land.
Lucas's Book of Verses for Children.

LONDON (OXFORD STREET).

On the whole, we have had a good Christmas trade, although it has been a season of small things. There has been a run upon Memoir of Tennyson.

Palgrave's Golden Treasury.
Deeds that Won the Empire.
Lucas's Book of Verses for Children.
Keats, Illustrated by Anning Bell.

LONDON (HOLBORN).

Business has been uniformly good this Christmas. The demand has been for:

- Memoir of Tennyson.
- Creighton's Shires.
- Holmes's Life of Queen Victoria.
- Keats, Illustrated by Anning Bell.
- Lucas's Book of Verses for Children.
- The "Bab" Ballads (new edition).
- Drummond's Ideal Life.
- Captains Courageous.
- Nicholson's Alphabet.

DARLINGTON.

An excellent season. The following have sold best:

- Holmes's Life of Queen Victoria.
- Life of Lord Tennyson.
- Roberts's Forty-one Years in India.
- Farthest North.
- Westcott's Christian Aspects of Life.
- In Kedar's Tents.
- Captains Courageous.
- Deeds that Won the Empire.
- Montessor's At the Cross Roads.
- The Pink Fairy Book.
- The Vege-men's Revenge
- Adventures of Sir Toady Lion.

LEEDS.

THE "runs" during Christmas week here were on these books:

- Watson's Potter's Wheel.
- Drummond's Ideal Life.
- Miller's Personal Friendships.
- The Beth Book.
- Tennyson's Poems.
- Ian Maclaren's A Doctor of the Old School.

LEICESTER.

As a rule, parcels were smaller this year than last, but the number was much greater. These sold best:

- Deeds that Won the Empire.
- Pot-Pourri from a Surrey Garden.
- Captains Courageous.
- Nicholson's Alphabet and Sports.

BIRMINGHAM.

The Christmas bookselling season was a good one, the demand being principally for popular fiction for presents for adults, and the usual annuals and fine art coloured books for children. The large demands were for:

- Tennyson's Life.
- Forty-one Years in India.
- Pot-Pourri from a Surrey Garden.
- Ruskin's Modern Painters (new edition).
- Deeds that Won the Empire.
- Novels by Merriman, Crockett, and Rosa Carey.

CAMBRIDGE.

The Christmas bookselling season in Cambridge has been on the whole very fair. There has been a steady demand for well-illustrated books and popular novels. The only book on which there has been any considerable "run" is More Beasts for Worse Children.

CHELTENHAM.

The books most in demand last week were:

- Lord Tennyson's Life.
- Forty-one Years in India.
- Sixty Years a Queen.
- The Jubilee Book of Cricket.

- Deeds that Won the Empire.
- In Kedar's Tents.
- Doctor of the Old School.
- Sir Toady Lion.
- All Mrs. Steele's Books, New and Old.
- Watson's The Potter's Wheel.

CHESTER.

The general trade was good; and these sold well:

- The Jubilee Book of Cricket.
- Pot-Pourri from a Surrey Garden.
- Master Skylark.
- Deeds that Won the Empire.

CARDIFF.

The book sales this Christmas have been fairly satisfactory, especially for:

- Life of Tennyson.
- The Beth Book.
- St. Ives.
- Lang's Pink Fairy Book.
- The Christian.
- Rudyard Kipling's Works.
- Deeds that Won the Empire.
- Nister's Toy-Books.

BRISTOL.

Sales much as usual. Very little at a higher price than 6s. No remarkable runs; but Stevenson and Crockett showed great vitality.

EXETER.

Trade not quite up to the average. The most popular books here were:

- Nicholson's Alphabet and Sports.
- Mrs. Browning's Poetical Works.
- Pot-Pourri from a Surrey Garden.
- Captains Courageous.
- The "Bab" Ballads (new edition).

BOURNEMOUTH.

The season has been very fair, but heavy price sets and expensive books have sold scarcely at all. The demand here has been for these:

- Captains Courageous.
- The Seven Seas.
- Watson's Potter's Wheel.
- Memoir of Tennyson.
- Drummond's Ideal Life.
- Henty's new books.
- Eugene Field's Lullaby Land.
- Crockett's Sir Toady Lion.
- William Watson's Hope of the World.
- St. Ives.
- In Kedar's Tents.
- Mrs. Browning's Poems.
- Norway's Highways and Byways of Devon and Cornwall.

BRIGHTON.

Speaking generally, the season for books has not been a good one, and there has been no special run, but a decided increase in "annuals" is noted.

DUBLIN.

We are happy to be able to report favourably on the Christmas bookselling here. The most striking feature is that no particular book had a great run, with the exception, perhaps, of Life of John Nicholson and Deeds that Won the Empire. For the latter the demand far exceeded the supply. Lord Roberts's book is still in great request.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE "AUTHOR'S" FIGURES.

SIR,—I am sorry to have to destroy an illusion of Sir Walter Besant's. I am not a reader of the Author. I do not think I have seen more than two numbers in my life. I again repeat that I should not have paid one second's attention to any statement made in its columns had not that statement been reproduced by the ACADEMY. It is true that several years ago I had some correspondence and one or two interviews with Sir Walter Besant. I had seen, by chance, a number of the Author, and I pointed out in a friendly and good-humoured way the baselessness of many statements made therein; in especial, I proved by a + b how utterly inexact was the assertion that publishers always recovered their outlay and never made any losses. That statement and others of which I complained have since been repeated in the Author without one word of qualification. Sir Walter Besant says that he cannot understand my change of attitude. Here is the explanation. Nothing is easier, even to the most careful and fair-minded man, than to make mistakes of fact, and then to base upon them unfounded charges. But when the mistakes have been corrected the careful and fair-minded man does not reproduce them, and he withdraws or apologises for the charge.

I will be as brief as possible in dealing with Sir Walter Besant's answer to my criticism of his comptes fantastiques. He entirely fails to understand the nature of the charge I make against the Author. A young writer acquaints it with a proposal made by a publisher (it now seems that it was one the latter "had a perfect right to make"). Instead of testing the proposal, as could easily have been done by submitting the MS. to another firm for publication upon commission, the result of which test might conceivably have been to amply justify the Author's strictures, a series of pure assumptions respecting the cost of production of the work in question is made, and those assumptions are used as evidence in the Author's campaign against the publishing trade. I challenge those assumptions, and assert that they run counter to the probabilities of the case, and that they imply on the part of the Author "unfair animus or gross and negligent carelessness." Sir Walter defends those assumptions. The only result of his defence is to convince me that my strictures upon the Author's methods of controversy erred, if anything, upon the side of undue mildness.

The Author assumes that the work in question (published at 6s.) would run to 272 pages. I assumed that it would run to 388 pages. Sir Walter triumphantly cites five books which average 248 pages. Well, two out of his five examples (Many Cargoes and A Prisoner of Zenda) are three-and-sixpenny books. Is it also carelessness which makes him overlook the unfairness of comparing works by the most popular novelists of the day with that of a young and untried writer? Let the comparison stand, however, but then let it be carried through completely. The Author assumes the figure of £14 for advertising in its imaginary balance-sheet. Does Sir Walter really believe that the advertising bill of The Light that Failed or A Window in Thrums was only £14?

Meanwhile, I can only admire the lucky chance which led Sir Walter to take down from his shelves precisely those three six-shilling novels which support the Author's assumptions. I go into the nearest bookseller's and look at a number of six-shilling novels most in demand: The Christian (474 pp.); The Beth Book (536 pp.); The Gadfly (390 pp.); The Sorrows of Satan (488 pp.); Phroso (with illustrations, 452 pp.); Noëmi (with numerous illustrations, 368 pp.). As a simple matter of fact, the half-a-dozen most popular six-shilling novels issued by Mr. Heinemann between August and November of this year average 399 pages; the first forty numbers on Messrs. Methuen's list of six-shilling novels average 380 pages, and many of them are freely illustrated. In many of these cases, too (e.g., The Beth Book), the number of words to the page considerably exceeds the Author's assumption of 282.

I do not wish to take up the ACADEMY'S space by showing that the other assumptions made by the Author in order to arrive at its imaginary balance-sheet are just as reliable as the one I have examined. One assertion, however, is too characteristic to be passed over. I pointed out that the Author made no allowance for review and presentation copies, and I estimated them at 100. Sir Walter asserts that only 40 would be used, and that this number would come out of the "overs." I can assure him that the nominal "overs" do little more than compensate for the inevitable "shorts" on a long number. On an edition of 1,500 I should think myself lucky to get a clear 12 or 15 over the nominal number (on an edition of 500 copies, which I have just issued, I get one over), and these have to be reserved against the inevitable chapter of accidents, returns of damaged copies, &c., the loss entailed by which would otherwise fall upon the book.

There only remains one point. Sir Walter Besant accuses me of not deducting free copies from the author's royalty share; this is a mistake, as can be seen by reference to my letter. I do, however, interpret the agreement differently from him: it provided that royalties should accrue only after the sale of 100 copies. I take it they would then be retrospective. I may be mistaken, as the wording is ambiguous; so, too, may Sir Walter.

I think the facts are set forth fully enough for any fair-minded man to form an opinion. Apart, however, from any dispute as to questions of fact, I again protest that it is not right to base charges against third persons upon mere assumptions, even if those assumptions were infinitely better supported than in the present case.

ALFRED NUTT.

Dec. 27, 1897.

SIR,—When Sir Walter Besant's chimeras swamp the pages of his own little monthly pamphlet they are best left to the neglect and oblivion they court and get, but when they blazon forth in your respected columns, and strut about blatantly in their naked ignorance, they must at least "be put into their proper place."

It is the poor six-shilling novel whose cause its quixotic knight gives away so completely this time that it can never, never again trust its honour to Sir Walter's valour. To prove his case he cites among five examples of six-shilling books two which are not six-shilling books at all, but three-and-sixpenny ones; and for the rest of them their size (by the yard) is about as fair as if you took our own "Bobs's" inches as a proper computation of the average height of the British soldier. Not only does he neglect, in getting his average, the gigantic dimensions of the Life-Guardsman, but he drags in naively—shall we say?—the mignonne virandière.

Let him return, Mr. Editor, to his own quarters. He will be safer there, and, anyhow, he will be out of the sight of those who know.

WM. HEINEMANN.

Dec. 29, 1897.

HEINRICH HEINE.

SIR,—Our admiration for Heine should not make us forget his cruel behaviour towards a fellow-poet, Platen by name, with whom he had quarrelled, and who thereupon called him a vile Jew. The revenge Heine took for the offence is an ugly blot upon his character; and Platen died broken-hearted. When Heine was asked by the Hungarian writer Kertbeny whether he really believed all the horrors he had published about him in his Reisebilder, he coolly replied:

"Not a bit of it, and I consider Platen to have been one of our most important poets (bedeutenden Dichter). only, you see, I had to protect my legs from the bites of all sorts of curs and I seized the biggest of them all, skinned him as Apollo skinned Marsyas, dragging his corpse before the footlights to discourage the others from attacking me. Besides which, this Platen was such an arrogant fellow! He would call me a Jew although I more than once requested him not to do so. And so in my turn I called him a——" (Word untranslatable.)

Is it a fact that Heine killed the Suabian school of poetry? That school was hardly worth his steel, for it only produced one great poet, Ludwig Uhland, whose lyrics, however, will live as long as the Buch der Lieder. Heine could not have killed him had he tried. He did better than that, he imitated him. Uhland's influence upon the younger poet is distinctly discernible.

THOMAS DELTA.

Dec. 27, 1897.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"His Grace of THE critics all find fault Osmonde," with Mrs. Burnett's hero for By Frances Hodgson Burnett, being faultless. Says the Chronicle:

"From almost the hour of his birth the Duke is an epitome of all the virtues associated, by idealists, with the name 'gentleman.' He was a fine baby, a beautiful boy, as a man a sort of blend of Adonis and the Admirable Crichton. Throughout the book he never does one wrong thing or harbours one reprehensible thought. He is a gallant soldier and a favourite of Marlborough, but he loves not war; he is a passionate lover, but as pure as ice; a brilliant swordsman, a model landlord—in fact, everything that he ought to be except interesting. For that deficiency naught can atone; and we confess we should have thought Mrs. Burnett to be too true an artist not to know that mere virtue, like mere vice, is insufficient to give attractiveness to a character in fiction."

The Westminster Gazette agrees:

"In short, his perfection is a little tiresome; we long for him to break out in some manner not quite correct, to show character, to become human."

The Daily Telegraph and the Scotsman are more merciful, and the former finds the portrait of Lord Roxholm anything but tedious.

The Daily News critic is very severe on the relation of the book to its predecessor, A Lady of Quality: "The book is not a sequel to, it is in the main a repetition of, its predecessor"; and he agrees that "to an unregenerate critic, so perfect a man [as his Grace of Osmonde] is uninteresting and unconvincing."

The Standard agrees that as a sequel to A Lady of Quality the book is a failure:

"Mrs. Hodgson Burnett seems to be infatuated with her own heroine, Clorinda Wildairs, and no less with that lady's lover, who in the former book arrived an hour too late on the occasion of the betrothment. This has blinded her to the fact that sequels are usually mistakes, and that this book is no exception to the rule. We had had enough of Clorinda, and of her second husband, too, so that 'His Grace of Osmonde' (One Vol., Warne) comes as an anti-climax, and one that falls extraordinarily flat. Mrs. Burnett has nothing to tell—nothing that is new, at least. She introduces some minor characters, or, rather, we will say, some other characters, seeing that Marlborough is among them; but they only hang about the book, and do nothing that was worth the telling or doing, as it is done and told here. . . . This book must be a matter of real regret to Mrs. Burnett's admirers; the result is only wasted time for writer and readers."

On Mrs. Burnett's style the Daily Chronicle has these remarks:

"The attempt to write in the literary method of the last century is feeble at best, and for the most part intensely irritating. When, for instance, the characters say 'twas' and 'twould' and 'twere' we don't mind so very much, though we wish they would refrain; but when the author herself 'twases' and 'twoulds' us all over every page we get thoroughly savage and feel an almost irresistible desire to break things."

We have not met with more favourable reviews than the above.

People's Edition, price 6d., with Portrait. (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V. with Two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS ON DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES OF MAN."

"E. A. V.'s Memoir of Mazzini is, we are glad to see, now issued at sixpence, so that it can be procured and read by everyone interested in the development and growth of Democracy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

On MONDAY, January 3rd, MESSRS. METHUEN will publish

FROM TONKIN TO INDIA.

By PRINCE HENRI OF ORLEANS.

Translated by HAMLEY BENT.

With a Map and over a Hundred Illustrations from Wood-blocks after G. VUILLIER.

Crown 4to, 480 pp., 25s.

The Travels of Prince Henri in 1895 from China to the Valley of the Bramaputra covered a distance of 1,100 miles, of which 1,600 was through absolutely unexplored country. No fewer than seventeen ranges of mountains were crossed at altitudes of from 11,000 to 13,000 feet. The journey was made memorable by the discovery of the sources of the Irrawaddy. To the physical difficulties of the journey were added dangers from the attacks of savage tribes. The book deals with many of the political problems of the East, and it will be found a most important contribution to the literature of adventure and discovery.

METHUEN & CO., ESSEX STREET, W.C.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 987. — JANUARY, 1898. — 2s. 6d.

A LADY'S LIFE ON A RANCHE, by Moira O'Neill.—JOHN PERDUE: THE TALE OF A POOR GENTLEMAN, AND THE LITTLE WARS OF LOREN, by Neil Munro. Chaps. ix.-xi.—CAMBRIDGE: BY AN OKONIAN.—TWO GOOD BOOKS ON POETRY, by Sir Herbert Maxwell.—ADVENTURES OF THE COMTE DE LA MUEITE DURING THE REIGN OF TERROR: Le Grand Bête, by Bernard Capes.—EYE LANGUAGE, by Dr. Louis Robinson.—ONE TOUCH OF NATURE: A TALE OF SAN LINIATO.—THE FRONTIER RISINGS AND THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA IN THE FOREIGN DEPARTMENT.—THE NEW UMANITARIANISM.—THE GERMAN PERIL.—LONG CREDIT.—THE LOOKER-ON.—TO THE QUEEN: A CHRISTMAS GREETING.—THE ARMY PROBLEM: A PROPOSED SOLUTION.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

EDITED BY W. L. COURTNEY.
JANUARY.

THE FUTURE OF LIBERALISM—(1) THE NEMESIS OF PARTY. By A. E. C. (2) POPULAR FEELING and LIBERAL OPPORTUNITIES. By EXPERTS.
ACQUETHES LITERARUM: a French Example. By CH. BASTIDE
OSE-LEAVES from PHILOSTRATUS. By PERCY OSBORN.
THE GROWTH of a THINKER'S MIND: a Story in Platonic Chronology. By Prof. LEWIS CAMPBELL.
VELES and CYCLING. By J. PENNELL.
REAL LAND TENURE and the BEST MAKESHIFT. By W. E. BEAR.
THE PROBLEM of GERARD DE NEURAL. By ARTHUR SIMONS.
MY FRIEND ROBIN. By HOD. G. COLERIDGE.
THE NORWEGIAN-SWEDISH CONFLICT. By H. L. BREKSTAD.
LATE ADOPTION of STREET ARABS. By Mrs. A. SAMUELS.
MODERN FRENCH DRAMA.—V. By A. PILON.
ANTI-SEMITISM and the DREYFUS CASE. By LEON WOLF.
THE STRUGGLE of RELIGIONS and RACES in RUSSIA. By Dr. E. J. DILLON.
RUSSIA and her PATIENTS. By Mme. NOVIKOFF (O.K.)

CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd., London.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

With the JANUARY Number (now ready) commences A NEW VOLUME, and contains:

THE WAR OFFICE and its SHAM ARMY: (1) By Colonel BROOKFIELD, M.P. (2) By Major RASCH, M.P. (3) By Major-Gen. FRANK RUSSELL, M.P. (4) By Lord ALVENE COMPTON, M.P.
DO WE NEED an ARMY for HOME DEFENCE? By Major-Gen. SIR EDMUND DE CAPE, K.C.B.
A RECRUITING SERGEANT'S SUGGESTIONS. By ARTHUR V. PALMER.
A WALK through DESERTED LONDON. By the Right Hon. Sir ALGERNON WEST, K.C.B.
PARISH LIFE in ENGLAND before the GREAT PILLAGE. By the Rev. Dr. JE-SOPH.
THE CHILDHOOD and SCHOOL DAYS of BYRON. By ROWLAND E. PROTHRO.
AT A TECHNICAL INSTITUTE. By Professor MICHAEL FOSTER.
THE PRISONERS of the GODS. By W. E. YEATS.
ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH: a Sketch. By THOMAS ARNOLO.
THE HIGHER EDUCATION of WOMEN in RUSSIA. By Princess KRIOPTAIN.
IS the LIBERAL PARTY in COLLAPSE? By the Rev. Dr. J. GUINNESS ROGERS.
THE PARTITION of CHINA. By HOLT S. HALLETT.
LETTERS to the EDITOR from PROFESSOR GILBERT MURRAY and MR. HERBERT PAUL.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Limited.

A NEW WEEKLY JOURNAL.

Now ready, price 2d., by post 2½d., No. 1 of

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

Contents:—Notes—The Industrial War—The Decline of Assassination—Conformity and Intellectual Honesty—Theism and Morality, by W. M. Salter—The Social Outlook in America, by Charles Zaebler—On a Passage in Newman's Writings, by Leslie Stephen—Mr. Forbes Robertson's Hamlet—About Books, New and Old, by E. R. Chapman—The Ethical Movement in Germany, by Dr. Arthur Pfungst—The Moral Instruction of Children in Classes—Chronicle of Ethical Societies, &c.

"THE ETHICAL WORLD" Publishing Co., Limited, 17, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND

BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COLLECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CONTINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED, AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the Literary matter, and of the Advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

|   |     |     |   |   |
|---|-----|-----|---|---|
| FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE* | ... | ... | 8 | 6 |
| FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE | ... | ... | 4 | 6 |
| FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE   | ... | ... | 2 | 6 |

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS, the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print Books Wanted column.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

EPPS'S COCOA.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE ON 'FOODS AND THEIR VALUES,' BY DR. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., &c.—"If any motives—first, of due regard for health, and second, of getting full food-value for money expended—can be said to weigh with us in choosing our foods, then I say that Cocoa (Epps's being the most nutritious) should be made to replace tea and coffee without hesitation. Cocoa is a food; tea and coffee are not foods. This is the whole science of the matter in a nutshell, and he who runs may read the obvious moral of the story."

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS TO "THE ACADEMY."

The following have already appeared:—

|              |              |              |              |
|--------------|--------------|--------------|--------------|
| 1896,        | 1897,        | 1898,        | 1899,        |
| JANUARY 2    | JANUARY 2    | JANUARY 2    | JANUARY 2    |
| FEBRUARY 6   | FEBRUARY 6   | FEBRUARY 6   | FEBRUARY 6   |
| MARCH 6      | MARCH 6      | MARCH 6      | MARCH 6      |
| APRIL 3      | APRIL 3      | APRIL 3      | APRIL 3      |
| MAY 1        | MAY 1        | MAY 1        | MAY 1        |
| JUNE 5       | JUNE 5       | JUNE 5       | JUNE 5       |
| JULY 3       | JULY 3       | JULY 3       | JULY 3       |
| AUGUST 10    | AUGUST 10    | AUGUST 10    | AUGUST 10    |
| SEPTEMBER 17 | SEPTEMBER 17 | SEPTEMBER 17 | SEPTEMBER 17 |
| OCTOBER 24   | OCTOBER 24   | OCTOBER 24   | OCTOBER 24   |
| NOVEMBER 31  | NOVEMBER 31  | NOVEMBER 31  | NOVEMBER 31  |
| DECEMBER 5   | DECEMBER 5   | DECEMBER 5   | DECEMBER 5   |

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

“Kola is not a Food. . . Kola is not harmless.”
—MEDICAL WORLD.

CADBURY'S Cocoa is entirely free from all admixtures, such as Kola, Malt, Hops, Alkal, &c., and the Public should insist on having the Pure, Genuine article.

CADBURY'S Cocoa is “a Perfect Food.”

EXTRACT FROM AN OPINION BY

DR. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E.,

(Combe and Gilchrist Lecturer, &c.), expressed by him in a Lecture on Foods—

“I am distinctly of opinion that the modern tendency to add to Cocoa other substances, mostly of a stimulating nature, is a dietetic mistake, a practice to be thoroughly discouraged. If you have a pure Cocoa you want nothing else in the way of constituting it a food, for it contains in itself all the principles which go to make up a perfect article of diet. When people begin to add to Cocoa, Hops and Kola and other things, they are interfering with and altering its dietetic value. Cocoa thus treated is not Cocoa, but something else, and I have declined for my part, in all my long advocacy of Cocoa as a food, to recognise that anything but pure, unadulterated Cocoa can correspond with this definition of a perfect and desirable diet. I hope the time is not far distant when the public will awaken to a knowledge of the fact that ‘doctored’ Cocoa is not a thing to be recommended or advised as a food. To add other matters to Cocoa is ‘to gild the lily’ (in a nutritive sense), and we all know how offensive and needless a practice is the attempt to improve on the Chemistry of Nature’s Own Food.”

CADBURY'S COCOA
is Absolutely Pure, & a Perfect Food.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1340.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 8, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES.—The JANUARY CATALOGUES of Valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW REMAINDERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, are Now Ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 86, Strand, London, W.C.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 118, for DECEMBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 29, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

F. H. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices. CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities rendered by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING. NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 13, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated and other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast binding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 63121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING neatly done in the very best style at most moderate charges. Safe for MSS.—Address The Myside Type-writing Company, 29, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S.W. Patronised by Members of Parliament.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Misses & J. Purz, 435, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.) Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 7s. per dozen. ruled or plain.

ESTABLISHED 1851. BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London. TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS payable on demand. TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT. For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY. HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH. BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY. HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH. The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.

The EXHIBITION of WORKS by the late Sir JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, Bart., P.R.A., is NOW OPEN DAILY, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Catalogue, 6d. Season Ticket, 5s.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

QUAIN PROFESSORSHIP OF PHYSICS. This CHAIR will be VACANT by the resignation of Prof. Carey Foster at the close of the present Session. APPLICATIONS, accompanied by such Testimonials as Candidates may wish to submit, should reach the Secretary by TUESDAY, March 1, 1898. Further information will be sent on application. The new Professor will enter on his duties next October. J. M. HORSBROUGH, M.A., Secretary.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY. THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, AND ARTS. The NEXT TERM begins TUESDAY, JANUARY 11th. Prospectus (post free) from the REGISTRAR.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION for FILLING UP VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, and 17th JANUARY next.—For information apply to the Bursar of St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways. For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

FRENCH in THREE MONTHS.—FRENCH in THREE MONTHS.—DAMIEN'S NEW SYSTEM. Privately or by post. Any age. Success certain. Commended by the Press.—10, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 5, Furnival Street, London, E.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.) WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C. Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view. PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS. For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and Price List on application. Office: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

EPPS'S COCOA.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE ON 'FOODS and THEIR VALUES,' BY DR. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., &c.—"If any motives—first, of due regard for health, and second, of getting full food-value for money expended—can be said to weigh with us in choosing our foods, then I say that Cocoa (Epps's) being the most nutritious should be made to replace tea and coffee without hesitation. Cocoa is a food; tea and coffee are not foods. This is the whole science of the matter in a nutshell, and he who runs may read the obvious moral of the story."

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum. COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum. LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum. N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address. The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited, 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

NEW SERIES.—JANUARY, 1898. No. 25. MIND. Price 3s.

A Quarterly Review of Psychology and Philosophy. Edited by G. F. STOUT. With the Co-operation of Prof. H. SIDGWICK, Drs. E. CAIRD, VENN and WARD, and Professor E. B. TITCHENER.

CONTENTS. I. HEGEL'S THEORY of the POLITICAL ORGANISM B. BOSANQUET. II. A CONTRIBUTION towards an IMPROVEMENT in PSYCHOLOGICAL METHOD.—L. W. McDUGALL. III. ON the LOGICAL SUBJECT of the PROPOSITION. E. C. BENECKE. IV. THE DIALECTICAL METHOD.—I. Prof. E. B. McGLIVRAY. V. KANT'S DOCTRINE of TIME and SPACE. J. H. HYSLOP. VI. DISCUSSIONS.—Mc. Stout's Agnostic Theory. HENRY RUTGERS MARSHALL. VII. CRITICAL NOTICES.—Andrew Seth, "Man's Place in the Cosmos, and other Essays." C. DOUGLAS—Victor Basch, "Essai Critique sur l'Esthétique de Kant." B. BOSANQUET—W. S. M'KECHIE, "The State and the Individual." W. D. MORRISON. VIII. NEW BOOKS. IX. PHILOSOPHICAL PERIODICALS. X. NOTES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, London; or at their Edinburgh and Oxford Branches.

THE FORUM.

1s. 6d.—JANUARY, 1898.—1s. 6d. OUR COAST DEFENCES. Maj.-Gen. NELSON A. MILES. THE FUTURE of BIOMETALISM. Senator GEORGE G. VEST. ELECTRICAL ADVANCE in the PAST TEN YEARS. ELIHU THOMSON. EXPORTS and WAGES. JACOB SCHOENHOF. THE RECONQUEST of NEW YORK by TAMMANY. SIMON STERN. THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK. HENRY WATKINSON. THE INCORPORATION of the WORKING-CLASS. ITON MCGEEON. CHINA, and CHINESE RAILWAY CONCESSIONS. CLARENCE CARY IS IT WORTH WHILE to TAKE OUT a PATENT? HARWOOD HUNTINGTON. EDUCATION in HAWAII. HENRY E. TOWNSEND. AMERICAN EXCAVATIONS at SPARTA and CORINTH. J. GENNADIUS. THE RELATION of the DRAMA to LITERATURE. Professor BRANDER MATTHEWS.

London G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 24, Bedford Street, Strand

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

NEW WORK BY MR. MACKENZIE BELL.
Now ready at all Booksellers' and Libraries, in 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles, extra cloth, price 12s.

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI: a Biographical and Critical Study. By MACKENZIE BELL, Author of "Spring's Immortality, and other Poems," "Charles Whitehead; a Biographical and Critical Monograph," &c.
This is, in effect, the Authorised Life of the Poetess, being based largely on information and letters supplied by her relatives and intimate friends.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HER MAJESTY.
Sixty-seventh Year of Publication.

Now ready, in 1 vol., royal 8vo, with the Arms beautifully engraved, extra cloth, gilt edges, price 31s. 6d.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE for 1898.
CORRECTED by the NOBILITY.

NEW STORY BY MISS DAVENPORT ADAMS. Illustrated by HARRY FURNAISS.
Now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, extra cloth, gilt edges, price 4s.

MISS SECRETARY ETHEL. A Story for Girls of To-day
By ELLINOR DAVENPORT ADAMS, Author of "The Disagreeable Duke," "Little Miss Conceit," &c. Illustrated by Harry Furniss.

FAIRY TALES BY NETTA SYRETT. Illustrated by NELLIE SYRETT.
Ready shortly, in 1 vol., large 8vo, handsomely bound, price 5s.

THE GARDEN of DELIGHT. By Netta Syrett, Author of "Nobody's Fault," &c. Illustrated by Nellie Syrett.

NEW NOVEL BY MR. F. W. ROBINSON.
SECOND EDITION out of print, THIRD EDITION in the press.
In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

YOUNG NIN. By F. W. Robinson, Author of "Grand mother's Money," &c.

NEW NOVEL BY BEATRICE WHITBY.
THIRD EDITION out of print, FOURTH EDITION now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
SUNSET. By Beatrice Whitby, Author of "The Awakening of Mary Fenwick," &c.

NEW WORK BY H. D. TRALL.
Now ready, at all Booksellers' and Libraries, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
THE NEW FICTION, and Other Essays on Literary Subjects. By H. D. TRALL, Author of "The New Lucian," "The Life of Sir John Franklin," &c.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. BAIN.
Now ready, at all Booksellers' and Libraries, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
ACE O' HEARTS. By Charlotte Bain.

MRS. CRAIK'S WORKS.

SIX EDITIONS OF

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.

Now ready at all Booksellers'.

ILLUSTRATED EDITION. Large crown 8vo, Illustrated by Hugh Riviere, extra cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

STANDARD EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Frontispiece by Sir John Millais, Bart., price 5s.

TEWKESBURY EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Portrait of Mrs. Craik, by Professor Herkomer, price 3s. 6d.

POPULAR EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s.

PEOPLE'S EDITION. Medium 8vo, cloth, price 1s.

PEOPLE'S EDITION. Medium 8vo, paper cover price 6d.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, uniformly bound, bevelled boards, price 3s. 6d.

- |                             |  |
|-----------------------------|--|
| A LIFE for a LIFE.   | MISTRESS and MAID.              |
| CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE. | YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.             |
| A NOBLE LIFE.        | STUDIES from LIFE.              |
| HANNAH.              | HIS LITTLE MOTHER.              |
| NOTHING NEW.         | A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS ABOUT WOMEN. |
| THE UNKIND WORD.     | THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM.            |
| A BRAVE LADY.        |  |

*.* These Books are also issued in HURST & BLACKETT'S 5s. Series.
Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Frontispiece.

BEATRICE WHITBY'S NOVELS.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

- |                                       |                                     |
|---------------------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| THE AWAKENING of MARY FENWICK. | ONE REASON WHY.              |
| PART of the PROPERTY.          | IN THE SUNTIME of HER YOUTH. |
| MARY FENWICK'S DAUGHTER.       | A MATTER OF SKILL.           |

HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s. net.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON: a Memoir. By HIS SON. With Photogravure Portraits.

With Illustrations, demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

SOUTH AFRICA OF TO-DAY.

By Captain FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND, C.I.E., Indian Staff Corps, late Special Correspondent of the Times in South Africa, Author of "The Relief of Chitral."

BY THE RIGHT HON. JAMES BRYCE, M.P.

IMPRESSIONS of SOUTH AFRICA. By the Right Hon. JAMES BRYCE, M.P., Author of "The Holy Roman Empire," &c. With 3 Maps. Demy 8vo, 14s. net.
MORNING POST.—"Teems with information, and is the most complete short history of South Africa yet published."
WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"Informed by painstaking investigation, careful thought, and a truly liberal spirit."

ILLUSTRATED BY HUGH THOMSON.

NORTHANGER ABBEY and PERSUASION. By JANE AUSTEN. With 40 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON, and an Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, uncut edges, 3s. 6d. "Peacock" Edition. Cloth elegant, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.

CORLEONE: a Tale of Sicily. In 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.
MORNING POST.—"A delightful novel."
PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A splendid romance."
LITERATURE.—"An exciting and dramatic story."

NEW BOOK BY RUDYARD KIPLING.
Nineteenth Thousand, Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS. A Story of the Grand Banks. By RUDYARD KIPLING. Illustrated by I. W. TABER.
TIMES.—"All the varied exciting incidents of a summer's cod-fishing are etched in Mr. Kipling's best manner."
MORNING POST.—"As fresh as it is entertaining, as full of genuine realism as it is of virile humour."
DAILY CHRONICLE.—"That Mr. Kipling has drawn a picture of the Banker's life which no living writer could surpass is beyond dispute."

BY A NEW WRITER.

FOR PRINCE and PEOPLE: a Tale of Old Genoa. By E. K. SANDERS. Crown 8vo, 6s.
STANDARD.—"A romance written not only with considerable historical imagination, but also with a certain distinction of style; and if it is a first effort, it is one full of promise. . . . Each member of the Doria family is drawn vividly and with rapid strokes."
DAILY MAIL.—"So glittering is the web of plot, and so fascinating and vividly drawn are the few important characters, that the most prejudiced realist who begins the book will finish it."

With Portrait, post 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

HEINRICH HEINE'S LIEDER und GEDICHTE. Selected and Arranged with Notes and a Literary Introduction by C. A. BUCHHEIM, Ph.D., &c., Professor of German Literature in King's College, London. [GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.]

NEW EDITION, globe 8vo, 5s.

GUESSES at TRUTH. By Two Brothers. [EVERSLEY SERIES.]
DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A work that has taken a sure and lasting place in our literature."

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS TO "THE ACADEMY."

The following have already appeared:—

|                      |         |                             |          |
|----------------------|---------|-----------------------------|----------|
|                      | 1897.   | ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON       | April 17 |
| SAMUEL RICHARDSON... | Jan. 2  | HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW  | " 24     |
| THOMAS DE QUINCEY    | " 9     | ANDREW MARVELL              | May 1    |
| LEIGH HUNT           | " 16    | ROBERT BROWNING             | " 8      |
| LORD MACAULAY        | " 23    | THOMAS CARLYLE              | " 15     |
| ROBERT SOUTHEY       | " 30    | PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY        | " 22     |
| S. T. COLERIDGE      | Feb. 6  | CHARLES DICKENS             | " 29     |
| CHARLES LAMB         | " 13    | JONATHAN SWIFT              | June 6   |
| MICHAEL DRAYTON      | " 20    | WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY | " 13     |
| WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR | " 27    | WILLIAM BLAKE               | " 20     |
| SAMUEL PEYS          | March 6 | SIR RICHARD STEELE          | " 27     |
| EDMUND WALLER        | " 13    | ALEXANDER POPE              | July 4   |
| WILKIE COLLINS       | " 20    | DOUGLAS JERROLD             | " 11     |
| JOHN MILTON          | " 27    | FRANCIS BACON               | " 18     |
| WILLIAM COWPER       | April 3 |                             |          |
| CHARLES DARWIN       | " 10    |                             |          |

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS :   | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Napoleon by Flashlights ... ..                    | 25   |
| "Bub" ... ..                                      | 26   |
| Travels in Indo-China ... ..                      | 27   |
| Biography in Little ... ..                        | 28   |
| A Provost of Eton ... ..                          | 29   |
| BRIEFER MENTION ... ..                            | 30   |
| NOTES AND NEWS ... ..                             | 31   |
| THE "ACADEMY'S" AWARDS TO AUTHORS ... ..          | 34   |
| REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED :                        |      |
| ILL., Lord Tennyson ... ..                        | 34   |
| MILLAIS AT BURLINGTON HOUSE ... ..                | 36   |
| THE BOOK MARKET ... ..                            | 37   |
| The Bitter Cry of a Second-hand Bookseller ... .. | 38   |
| THE WEEK ... ..                                   | 39   |
| New Books Received ... ..                         | 39   |
| PETER THE GREAT ... ..                            | 39   |
| CORRESPONDENCE ... ..                             | 40   |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..                      | 42   |
| FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..                         | 3-4  |

REVIEWS.

NAPOLEON BY FLASHLIGHTS.

New Letters of Napoleon I. Translated by Lady Mary Loyd. (Heinemann.)

A CERTAIN ancient philosopher was called "The Bottomless," but with much better right might the title be given to Napoleon. Napoleonic literature pours forth in endless floods, and yet never is it exhausted. For all which there is a reason—Napoleon was more than a man: he was an epoch, and those who have no new light to throw upon the man may yet illustrate the epoch while the epoch is illustrated even by those who deal only with the man. Merely as a man, he is a portent, an extraordinary revelation of possible human faculty. Here is a fresh book on the infinite theme, and a book fascinating exceedingly, though it is the mere gleanings of the great Corsican's innumerable correspondence.

By a reader with the smallest knowledge of Napoleon's career, this book will be found graphic and vital to the last degree. Here we have, not the man of the Napoleonic legend, nor yet the petty domestic Napoleon of some unedifying backstairs memoirs, but what we might call the most private aspect of the public Napoleon. It does not, of course, show us the Emperor as a military genius, nor yet Napoleon as seen by his valet. But in almost all other respects it is a microcosm of the great conqueror. The first thing which stands out from it is his preterhuman administrative power: in its extensive and unflinching energy a Nasmyth steam-hammer, which can crush a bar of iron or crack a walnut. War, finance, police; the direction of his subject kings and kingdoms; the watching of some petty miserable suspect; the admonishment of a pope or a newspaper: he turns rapidly, clearly, detailedly, from one to the other, and issues the most diversified edicts in a breath. Now he is twirling the affairs of Spain between his fingers like a tectotum, now he is playing the match-making mamma over his brothers' obnoxious marriages. He breaks to shivers the dreaded army of Prussia, the legacy of Frederick the Great; and then pauses on the morrow of Jena, to decree the preservation of Paris from the wind of Mme. de Staël's petticoats. He regulates with the same minuteness the management of the State moneys, and the caricatures of the English which are to be published in the French papers. The impression is stupendous. Surely never was there such an organiser.

The next prominent feature in these letters is the irresistible arrogance of his autocracy. Our own Kaiser Wilhelm appears by the side of him a very indifferent performer, though on the present European stage Wilhelm is the most noted actor of what the Elizabethans called "a huffing part." The Kaiser can do little without rhodomontade and second-rate rhetoric; he clucks more over a ship or two at Kiao-Chau than Napoleon over the deposition of the Spanish monarchy. There is a world more stinging masterfulness in the first Buonaparte's curt matter-of-fact absolutism; his "It is my will," "You will do so-and-so," "You will let so-and-so know my sovereign displeasure"; the brief way in which he treats popes and kings as children, high functionaries as lackeys; his movements of his political pieces as simply as Blackburne playing a blindfold game. Bismarck is said to have treated his secretaries "as if they had stolen the silver spoons." It was little better to be a subordinate of Napoleon. All by turns are rated like schoolboys. The wretched brothers whom he set up in the regal business bore the brunt of the most scathing lectures. Most of them deserved it. He called them fools, and he called them by their names. He paid dearly for the nepotism which led him to make kings of men with all his own inadequacy of training, and without his marvellous compensation of genius. They all failed him; for they were not even soldiers, and what he needed first and foremost was soldierly allies. Yet when he tried a variation, by making a soldier king of Sweden, his nominee fought against him in the uprising of Europe.

The King of Westphalia, his brother Jerome, receives some of his most intolerable plain-speaking:

"I have met few men with so little circumspection as you. You are perfectly ignorant, and you follow nothing but your own fancy. Reason decides nothing in your case, everything is ruled by impetosity and passion. I do not desire to have any correspondence with you beyond what is indispensable as regards Foreign Courts, because they make you dance steps, and expose your want of harmony before the eyes of Europe; which I am not inclined to permit you to do. As for your household and financial affairs, I have already told you, and now tell you again, that nothing you do accords with my position and experience, and that your mode of action will bring you little success."

To which he adds in his own hand, "I love you, my dear fellow, but you are terribly young." In another letter he tells him: "You do not know men yourself, and you try to teach me to know them." Of such kind is letter after letter to Jerome, whom he nevertheless held by to the last, only to find him useless in his final emergency. Louis, King of Holland, is visited with even more astounding language; and Louis alone, of all the Buonapartes, was a man of feeling and principle. He wished to govern for the benefit of his people; whereas Napoleon was intent on the Gallicisation of all the subject kingdoms. Doubtless the Emperor was right politically. It was impossible to make French rule popular with the annexed states, and the only thing was to hold them by the strong hand, as the Germans hold Alsace. But Louis honestly resented such methods, and was, therefore, at perpetual war with his brother, till the Emperor finally deposed him. There is, perhaps, nothing here quite so trenchant as a previously published letter to the unhappy Louis, with its recurrent burden—"Don't be a fool." Nevertheless, such charming amenities as these are quite enough:

"What can I say to you? That which I have told you a hundred times already. You are no king, and you do not know how to be a king! . . . I have portfolios of complaints from my shipowners against your agents, and if you do not put a stop to the vile behaviour of your admirals to my flag, beware lest I put a stop to it myself. . . . You know very well that everything you do is opposed to my opinion, and that I have often told you I foresaw the changeableness and folly of your action would ruin your kingdom? . . . I thank you for the interest you take in my health. I should not think it very sincere, if I were to seek its proof in your speeches in which you strive to tarnish my glory—if that were possible to a man like you, who has done nothing at all."

In another letter, not to Louis but to Jerome, he tells him: "You make war like a satrap. Did you learn that from me?" Such phrases are often in his mouth, when he is addressing his brothers or his marshals: "You never learned that in my school"; "This is not what I expect from a man trained in my school." The Napoleonic school was as little scrupulous as the school of Fagin. The naked treachery by which he tried to occupy Lisbon and seize the Portuguese fleet together with the king, keeping Portugal amused with negotiations, while his army was advancing without declaration of war, is here flagrantly revealed. The high-handed and secret methods which he employed during his long struggle with the Pope are another interesting disclosure of these letters. Treachery, misrepresentation, falsehood, he is shown employing as recognised weapons of State. One of the minor impressions from these letters is that Napoleon was less able as a foreign statesman than in his other capacities. He cuts his Gordian knots with the sword; but in diplomacy he appears hardly a match for the Continental ministers. On the very eve of the campaign of Jena he is still sure that Prussia will never venture war; that she only needs to be humoured and managed like a tetchy child. He has no comprehension of the magnitude of his Spanish task, though history (to which he frequently appeals with more fluency and confidence than accurate knowledge) should have taught him that the difficulties of a Spanish invasion only begin with the overthrow of the regular army. In the somewhat parallel case of Russia he probably had no choice save war; but the Spanish business was one of the hugest mistakes of his career. The army of Spain might have averted Leipsic, had it been free for use. The final letter of the volume has a singular pathos. It is written on the morrow of Waterloo, and is the mere feverish raving of a shattered and desperate man.

"I will raise a hundred thousand conscripts. I will arm them with muskets taken from the Royalists, and the ill-disposed members of the National Guard. I will raise the whole of Dauphiné, the Lyonnais, and Burgundy. I will overwhelm the enemy."

It almost recalls those piteous words of the fallen Lear: "I will do such things—what they are yet I know not." So dramatically ends a captivating and valuable book, and a destiny of strangely tragic brilliance which still sways the imaginations of mankind.

"BAB."

The Bab Ballads. By W. S. Gilbert.
(Routledge & Sons.)

In preparing this new edition Mr. Gilbert was not well advised. In the first place, no book of comic verse should extend to 554 pages; human nature is frail, it cannot endure so much. Mr. Gilbert would have done well to omit all the "Songs of a Savoyard"—that is to say, the numbers from his Savoy operas, which are not at all in keeping with the Bab Ballads and sometimes are positively discordant. Take, for example, this ingenious mock-Elizabethan "conceited" lyric:

"Is life a boon?
If so, it must befall
That Death, when'er he call,
Must call too soon.
Though fourscore years he give,
Yet one would pray to live
Another morn!
What kind of plaint have I,
Who perish in July?
I might have had to die
Perchance in June!

Is life a thorn?
Then count it not a whit!
Man is well done with it;
Soon as he's born
He should all means essay
To put the plague away;
And I, war-worn,
Poor captured fugitive,
My life most gladly give—
I might have had to live
Another morn!"

It is pretty and quaint and very dexterous, but how ill does it consort with its companions, "Sir Guy the Crusader"—

"His views were exceedingly proper:
He wanted to wed,
So he called at her shed,
And saw her progenitor whop her
Her mother sit down on her head"— and "Haunted"! No; Mr. Gilbert has endeavoured to fuse irreconcilable elements, and the result is a huge and somewhat disconcerting jumble.

But he has done worse than this: he has re-drawn most of his best pictures. The cuts in the original editions, and in Fifty Bab Ballads published in 1877, signed "Bab," were almost as good as cuts need be: they had crispness, fun, and they corroborated and strengthened the text so ably as to make them almost perfect not only as independent comic drawings, but as illustrations. Yet Mr. Gilbert apparently has never shared this view. "I have always felt," he says in the preface to the new edition, "that many of the original illustrations . . . erred gravely in the direction of unnecessary extravagance. This defect I have endeavoured to correct." The pity of it!—as if unnecessary extravagance were not the life-blood of Bab's humour. And the unreason of it, because the unnecessary extravagance of the text still remains, even if that of the pictures has been eliminated. Mr. Gilbert is, however, the author, and the book is his, and he may, we suppose, do what he likes with it; but we retain the right to grumble. And more, Mr. Gilbert is not the draughtsman he was: his hand has lost its strength, his line is no longer decisive, his sense of the respective value of black and white has left him, so that his new pictures, with few exceptions, are just ordinary amateur comic work, and we linger with relief over those ballads whose old cuts have been permitted to stay untouched—over "The Rival Curates" and "Sir Macklin," "The Bishop of Rum-ti-foo" and "The Perils of Invisibility." Once the correction of unnecessary extravagance has compelled the artist to sacrifice a stanza. It will be remembered that one of the pictures to "Thomas Winterbottom Hance" represents the two gladiators in the ring, and their mothers, shrunken almost to nothing, looking on. It is a piece of delightful fooling, emphasised by the explanatory lines:

"The mothers were of decent size,
Though not particularly tall;
But in the sketch that meets your eyes,
I've been obliged to draw them small."

That has all been swept away; and the revised mothers need no apology—and raise no smile.

Fortunately—and we have now done with complaints—Mr. Gilbert has not thought it needful to alter the text of the ballads. It is true that in the amusing nonsense entitled "Barnaby Bampton Boo" the young woman who once was called "Carrotty Nell" is now chastened to "Volatile Nell"; but in the main the stories are as they were when they first diverted readers, some thirty years ago. Some, we must confess, hardly bear re-reading, but the best are still entertaining, and we have spent a most agreeable hour in renewing old impressions. Particularly have we enjoyed meeting again with some of the pieces not included in the collection known as Fifty Bab Ballads, which, for most people, has been the only edition. Among these is the story of "Babette's Love."

"Jacot was, of the Customs bold,
An officer, at gay Boulogne,
He loved BABETTE—his love he told,
And sighed, 'Oh, soyez vous, my own!'
But 'Non!' said she, 'JACOT, my pet,
Vous êtes trop seraggy pour BABETTE.'"

Instead she loved Bill, a marine, gifted with a graceful way of leaning against a post; and she told Jacot as much:

"'Oh, mon!' exclaimed the Customs bold,
'Mes yeux!' he said (which means 'my eye'),
'Oh, chère!' he also cried, I'm told,
'Par jove,' he added with a sigh,
'Oh, mon! oh, chère! mes yeux! par jove!
Je n'aime pas cet enticiog cove!'"

Bill's captain heard of Bill's depravity.

"He wept to think a tar of his
Should lean so gracefully on posts,
He sighed and sobbed to think of this,
On foreign, French, and friendly coasts.
'It's human natur', p'raps - if so,
Oh, isn't human natur' low!'"

And so on. Here we have one phase of Mr. Gilbert's peculiar humour in a nutshell: the elevation of an infinitesimal peculiarity or habit into an offence of serious import and magnitude. In the topsy-turvy world which he has invented, every inhabitant of which is mad, such exaggerations and inversions are the order.

Humour of this mechanical kind is simple, but in the hands of a clever workman it can be made quite irresistible. Mr. Gilbert does it to perfection "Mister William" is his masterpiece—but "Captain Reece" and "The Martinet," "The Bishop of Rum-ti-Foo" and "The Bishop of Rum-ti-Foo Again," "The Rival Curates" and "Etiquette," "Annie Protheroe" and "Gentle Alice Brown," "Thomas Winterbottom Hance" and "The Baby's Vengeance," "The King of Canoodle Dum" and "Ellen McJones Aberdeen"—these are fine enough performances. One may become a little weary of the formula, but the execution is admirable.

Another of Mr. Gilbert's tricks is to extract fun from truthfulness and credulity. In real life people lie, and disbelieve each other; in the land of Bab they accept all statements. No sooner does Private James inform General John that they were changed at birth, than General John degrades himself to the ranks and elevates Private James to the position of commander; no sooner does Paley Vollaire, who is bankrupt, make a similar remark to Frederick West, than Frederick West hands him his hard-earned savings.

Again, tenacity to life and respect for life are the ruling passions of the normal man. In Mr. Gilbert's world death becomes, therefore, a mere incident, whether of oneself or of another. When Gentle Alice Brown went to confessional and admitted:

"I have helped mamma to steal a little kiddy from its dad,
I've assisted dear papa in cutting up a little lad,
I've planned a little burglary and forged a little cheque,
And slain a little baby for the coral round its neck;"

this is what happened:

"The worthy pastor heaved a sigh, and dropped a silent tear—
And said, 'You mustn't judge yourself too heavily, my dear.
It's wrong to murder babies, little corals for to fleecy;
But sins like these one expiates at half-a-crown apiece.

'Girls will be girls—you're very young, and flighty in your mind;
Old heads upon young shoulders we must not expect to find.
We musn't be too hard upon their little girlish tricks;
Let's see—five crimes at half-a-crown—exactly twelve-and-six.'

'Oh, father,' little Alice cried, 'your kindness makes me weep,
You do these little things for me so singularly cheap.'

But when Gentle Alice Brown went on to say that she had seen a young man and had winked at him, the pastor held out no hope of forgiveness. He informed Brown père, and Brown père arranged for the young man's immediate removal. He said:

'I've studied human nature, and I know a thing or two;
Though a girl may fondly love a living gent,
as many do,
A feeling of disgust upon her senses then will fall
When she looks upon his body chopped particularly small.'

All this would be very horrible if we looked at it calmly, just as so much of that American humour which jests at death would be horrible; but we are not permitted to be calm. Mr. Gilbert supplies the right atmosphere—the laughing gas—with which to take his extravagance.

How the Bab Ballads will strike readers who are now coming to them for the first time, we cannot say. We suspect, however, that their heyday is over. Taste in humour has changed, and much that was funny thirty years ago is funny no longer. Extravagant fun, particularly, is out of date, owing, probably, to the surfeit of it which the enterprise of America has offered. The humorist to-day is required to keep closer to the fact. But for readers of an older generation Bab has still strong attractions.

TRAVELS IN INDO-CHINA.

From Tonkin to India by the Sources of the Irawadi—January, 1895—January, 1896. By Prince Henri d'Orleans. Translated by Hamley Bent, M.A. Illustrated by G. Vuillier. (Methuen.)

EXILED royalties have the most difficult position in the world to maintain with any dignity; they are frequently in the extreme condition of genteel poverty, and even when this humiliation is spared them—as it is spared to the House of Orleans—their path lies along the very brink of the ridiculous. Yet in this questionable eminence, and, perhaps, by reason of the pathetic irony in their surroundings, they succeed frequently in producing picturesque and taking characters. Prince Henri is a singularly good example; the very man to have headed such a raid as Charles Edward's in the "forty-five"; an elegant figure of a "Young Pretender." France denies him a career; he does not seek it (like the heir of the Buonapartes) in Russia's service; but the world is wide, and, like a young man of spirit, he sets out to explore it, in the interests of the country where his uncle is still, to not a few adherents, "the king." We have heard of him in Abyssinia; but this book relates an earlier adventure. In January, 1895, he set out, accompanied by M. Roux, a naval lieutenant, and another Frenchman—M. Briffaud—from Hanoi, in Tonkin, to strike the Mekong River, explore its course up to the Thibetan frontier, and push west from there into Assam—in short, to go overland from China to India, skirting the borders of Upper Burmah, and keeping south of Thibet. It was a stiff piece of travel, but the French, so little disposed to settle down in any new country, have always been among the best explorers.

The book, to begin with, has a considerable scientific value. A very careful log, with observations, was kept by M. Roux, and is published in an appendix. So is a list of the natural history and botanical specimens collected by Prince Henri, who, although not a man of science himself, knows what to bring home; and perhaps the most interesting of all his finds are the examples of Mosso and Lolo MSS. reproduced in facsimile with a translation. The Lolo, like the Chinese, have separate characters for each word; the Mosso are picture writing. There is, however, no explanation given of these which is in the least adequate for the uninitiated. All these scientific matters are relegated to the appendices; the book itself is popular in style and intention; and a very readable, light-hearted narration it is, describing travel among the many peoples of many speeches who fringe the Chinese Empire. The queer folk and their queer customs are duly chronicled; but even stranger, perhaps, is the glimpse into mission life away far up here in the interior among an unfriendly race with a government who secretly incite to outrage. After months of wandering along the Mekong, through great tracts untravelled by Europeans, the party at last debouched upon the plain in which lies Lake Erhai and the large town of Tali-fou, the chief centre of commerce in Western Yunnan.

"At the base of the hills, in stony chaos, lay the cemetery—the town of the dead at the gate of the living. We reached the river that forms the outlet of the lake; and here three routes converged—the one from the capital (Yunnan), our own, and that from Burmah, called the Ambassadors' Road. Along the last-named stretched into the distance the posts of the new telegraph line from Bhamo—the Future; and here, on the right bank of the river—the Past, a grey loop-holed wall, with battlements and bastions crumbling to decay, vestiges of the Mussulman war. It was dark by the time we came to the gate of Tali: luckily, it had not yet been closed. A tunnel led under the ramparts, and, once inside, we asked to be brought to the house of the French Father. After a long détour, our guide stopped before a dwelling and hailed loudly for admittance; then, finding a side door open, entered. What was our surprise to hear a feminine European voice! The owner at the same moment appeared at the head of the staircase with a companion, both dressed as Chinese, and disclosed herself as a young English lady."

She was the wife of the Protestant missionary. Prince Henri stayed for some time with the French Father Legnilcher, and heard later from him of the old persecutions, when the Christians had to invent a private dialect for use among themselves ("devil-talk," the Chinese called it) and of the secret society, "the United Brotherhood," which organised the persecutions. It certainly seems that mission work in China is justified of its results; any religion, indeed, is an advance on the various forms of Chinese superstition—for the purer forms of their teaching have no hold on the people. Prince Henri notes that the Houi-houi, or Mussulmans, are much better to have dealings with than the other Chinese. But the Christians whom the expedition took on from Tali—seven of them—seem to have been real good men, and the interpreter Joseph a treasure. He was a youth who had been trained for the priesthood, but feeling no vocation had married and become a trader, but preserved his knowledge of Latin! In this tongue—or some modification of it—did he and the Prince hold communication through the rocky Thibetan ranges and by the sources of the Irawadi!

Of Yunnan, the slice of China which France is likely to annex, Prince Henri gives no very brilliant account. It does not seem a rich country, though, perhaps, if it were rid of mandarins and their exactions prosperity might appear. But, even on a Frenchman's showing, the French system of colonial government is not much more economical. Here is a crucial example of what is likely to happen in the Far East. Mong-tse is a considerable Chinese town just beyond the French border; its trade should naturally come down the Songhai to Haiphong; but the freights and dues are so high on the French water that nine-tenths of the foreign trade, according to Prince Henri, goes down the Si-kiang to Canton and is in English hands. But when France occupies Hainan—as she will certainly do—she will also occupy Pakhoi, a port on the mainland opposite; from Pakhoi she will push up to the middle of Si-kiang, and from that moment our trade with Mongtse will be either cut off or desperately hampered. It is not an agreeable prospect, and it is only one of many such.

Except for the Christians, Prince Henri says little good of any Chinese. It was a relief to him to reach the Lissous, and other tribes of the Thibetan border, where edicts of the Tsung-li-Yamen hardly run; but no impression is stronger from reading this book than the slackness of all ties in that vast agglomeration of provinces. Even at Tali people seemed scarcely aware that China was then at war with Japan. The notion of a united movement of the Yellow Race seems a mere nightmare. It is hardly conceivable that China should ever grow aggressive; but it might prove a difficult country to subdue. Travel was nowhere easy; it was most difficult along the march westward from the Mekong to Assam, across an interminable series of clefts and chasms. Indeed, at this point the expedition was in grave danger of loss by starvation; its worst time came just at the end, after they left the Khamtis, the first people beyond the border of Assam. It was with a sense of great deliverance that they reached the outposts of civilisation, and were cordially welcomed by the English magistrate. This is how our Raj strikes a foreigner :

"Sadiya is the extreme north-east outpost of the British Indian empire. Mr. Needham's position is that of Assistant to the Political Service, and he is in supreme and sole charge. He has passed twenty-eight years in India, and exercises the functions of Resident, judge, and commandant of the troops, of whom there are one hundred under native officers. Another five hundred sepoy could be summoned by telegraph within twelve hours. In addition to the importance involved by his relations with the frontier tribes, he governs in and around Sadiya more than 60,000 people. After thirteen years spent in this district, he speaks besides Hindustani: Bengali, Thai (of which he has compiled a grammar), Singpho, Assamese, Abor (also with a grammar in preparation), and Mishmi. What an example to France of the right man in the right place! and what a simplification of the world of vice-residents, commiss de residence, and chancelliers, all engaged in manipulating the papers which we deem indispensable to the administration of a province. Here one hand controls the whole. It is true that he is well paid, and that after thirty years' service he will be entitled to a pension. He submits his claim for travelling expenses, and it is discharged to him direct. There is none of that system of mistrust to which we are too prone. The English place implicit confidence in the zeal of their officers to work their hardest for the interests of their empire."

The praise is frank, generous, and merited; and it is only fair to admit, what Prince Henri insists on, that in the East we have stepped into the heritage of Duplex. In how many quarters of the world has such enterprise paved the way for the English to enter in and complete the edifice? Neither under a monarchy nor under a republic has France shaken off the curse of officialism. We commend the book to many readers. The pictures are lavish; many are photographs—some too obviously not: there is a rope bridge whose top cable is drawn no thicker than the other strands. The translation has been done presumably by an Orientalist, and should have been revised by someone who knew, for instance, that "trompe" means an elephant's trunk. Mr. Bent translates it "trumpet."

BIOGRAPHY IN LITTLE.

Philip II. of Spain. By Martin A. S. Hume. Foreign Statesmen Series (Macmillan & Co.)

This is pre-eminently the age of the hand-book. Our writers for the most part cannot write—and their readers will not read—the ponderous histories and treatises such as their ancestors dealt in, and the modern historian excels in the production of concise monographs and biographies, of "Epochs of History," and the like. Such excellence is by no means to be despised. The books are usually accurate and scholarly. Often their modest two hundred pages represent an immense amount of independent research and the consultation of many a neglected original authority, as well as the "boiling down" of all the old unmanageable tomes in which a more leisurely age was wont to seek its information. Mr. Martin Hume's contribution to Messrs. Macmillan's "Foreign Statesmen Series," Philip II. of Spain, is an admirable example of this kind of work. Mr. Hume, who is the editor of the Calendar of Spanish State Papers of Elizabeth, is thoroughly master of his subject. In the short space of some two hundred and sixty pages he has brought together an immense range of material. He has gone to the original and unpublished authorities in many cases for his facts, and has succeeded in making his sketch at once comprehensive and succinct. His view of Philip is, on the whole, a favourable one, though he is free from excessive partiality. As we see him in these pages, he stands before us as a gigantic failure, his vast schemes all frustrated, his ambitions humbled. To many temperaments he can never be a sympathetic figure. He is too cold and hard and calculating. He lacks dash and brilliancy. His courage is not conspicuous and his generosity infinitesimal; moreover, his reign is pre-eminently stained with the atrocities of the Inquisition, and that alone repels many who might otherwise admire this cold, strong man. As a statesman, too, he is disappointing, with his incapacity for rapid decision and prompt action. Mr. Hume allows all this, but at the same time he dwells lovingly on his higher qualities, and no one will put down this book without a feeling of sympathy and pity for its subject. Here, if anywhere, was a man whose epitaph might have been the famous Miserrimus. The one defect of Mr. Hume's book seems to us to lie in the writing. The English is not always impeccable, and it is often slipshod. But much may be forgiven its author for his wide knowledge, his comprehensive sympathy, and impartial weighing of authorities.

William the Silent. By Frederic Harrison. (Macmillan & Co.)

MR. FREDERIC HARRISON has not left the world in ignorance as to his preference in letters and character. Something of the moralist, a little of the "friend of man" and liberal philosopher, and a great deal of the honest lover of plain courage and worth, are apparent in all his writings. The Puritan—a very enlightened and liberal Puritan, to be sure—the uncompromising hater of Machiavellianism in every form, is written so largely over his work that we do not wonder at his turning to the history of hopeless struggling against odds, and men whose natures were of gray, unadorned simplicity.

The history of the rise of the Dutch Republic has been popularised by the excellent and rhetorical Motley, and, indeed, the bare fact is sufficiently marvellous. It is the tale of the wars of one man and a little people against the greatest power of the age. More, it is the narrative of the formation of a nation from apparently hopeless elements—a mere chaos of fanaticism and narrow passions. "It was formed without design," said Voltaire, "and in the end it belied all human forecast." And the man who chiefly worked the marvel was all his life unsuccessful; his record seemed entirely of defeat; he was by no means a great soldier, and his materials forbade prosperous statesmanship; at the last he was murdered and ended an apparently ineffectual life in what seemed the blackest hour of all. And yet the foundation had been laid, and his enemies even in their hour of triumph had been irretrievably defeated. The seven Northern provinces, with the poor, hard, toil-worn populace, had been endowed with the spirit of a nation, and were on the eve of making sounding history among the states of Europe.

The whole life of the man is a series of anomalies. Though undeniably brave, he had no military genius, and he found himself pitted against the two greatest captains of the age, Alva and Alexander of Parma, as well as Don John, its most dashing soldier. A certain measure of statecraft was undoubtedly his, but his diplomacy was less subtle than ceaseless, and his contemporaries read him like a book. Yet he had to play the game against a master of the art like Granvelle, and attempt to treat with Elizabeth and her wary ministers. He was a Lutheran by the tradition of his house, a Catholic by upbringing, and he ended by becoming a Calvinist—"I am now bald and Calvinist," he writes, "and in that faith will I die"—but it is certain that his temper was very little that of the sectary. Yet all his life he had to strive with religious fanaticism both in his own and in the enemy's camp, and this calm and reasonable man had to face the whole crazy tribe of priests and pastors. And for what end? This, indeed, is the crucial question in the matter, and we can only give a hesitating answer. The whole rebellion had an element of the fortuitous. We may conceive him as a man of humane and liberal feeling, with an honest love for his people's welfare, protesting against Spanish cruelty. Little by little the chain of accident draws him deeper into difficulties, till he is forced into assuming a bolder front for his very manhood's sake. Gradually as difficulties thicken he begins to get sight of a great end—liberty of conscience, civil freedom, national spirit—and his soul is hardened to withstand. But it is always a rebellion under protest; he is "for peace" if his foes are "inclined for battle," and his policy is slow, cautious, even timorous at times. The key-note of the man's character is a certain grave simplicity and kindness—which made him pardon his would-be murderers and ask mercy even for the assassin—and a certain freedom from prejudice in all details of life. He is above sectarianism, and he is not scrupulous about his political morality. A lofty opportunism lies at the base of his policy; a spirit which was highly necessary for such rough times, and which, in spite of Mr. Harrison, it is the glory of the much-abused Florentine to have fostered.

A comparison with his great contemporary, Henry IV. of France, inevitably presents itself. Both men had real greatness, but both had something homely and pedestrian in quality. Mr. Harrison draws an excellent picture of the Prince:

"His shabby dress, with a loose old gown and a woollen vest showing through an unbuttoned doublet, was that of a poor student or a waterman, and he freely consorted with the burghesses of that beer-brewing town (Delft). Yet in conversing with him an English courtier admits there was an outward passage of inward greatness. Now, at the age of fifty-one, he was bald, worn with wrinkles, and furrowed with age and with sorrows; the mouth seemed locked with iron, the deep-set watchful eyes, the look of strain and anxiety, give the air of a man at bay, who has staked his life and his life's work."

Ranke gives a similar account of Henry, who "preferred the hautboy and the bagpipe to elaborate music, who would mix with the common people at inns and ferries, and loved dearly to chaffer with horse-jockeys at country fairs." Both men had a sort of scheme for a Christian Republic, and both cared little for the squabbling of rival creeds. "If the Reformed opinions are false," wrote William, "if the Catholic Faith be based on eternal truth, their doctrines will melt away in good time, like the snow before the sun"; which may be compared with the opinion of Henry, that a man might work out his salvation in one religion as well as another. These are the words of the great Laodicean, and yet we need not say with Montaigne that "religion ne les touche ni l'un ni l'autre." William at least was essentially devout, but after the fashion of the Samaritan and not of the Levite.

Mr. Harrison has written a scholarly and shrewd study of a great character. The book is worthy of its place in an excellent series.

A PROVOST OF ETON.

Sir Henry Wotton: a Biographical Sketch.
By Adolphus William Ward. (Constable.)

This is a book of a peculiarly irritating type. It was open to Prof. Ward to treat his subject in either of two ways. He might have given us a work of research, exhausting the available material for a Life of Wotton, disinterring new facts, sifting evidence, and establishing once for all the authentic history of the man. This had been the way of the scholar. Or, taking some other point of view than Walton's—some point of view less naïve and more self-conscious—he might have drawn a new portrait, created a new, or at least a revised, conception of an unusually fascinating personality. This had been the way of the critic. Possibly he might have been felicitous enough to do both these things. Actually he has not quite done either of them. He has written a Monday Popular Lecture for some provincial college which hovers between the ideals suggested, and falls short of both. There is scholarship in the book. Prof. Ward has carefully studied Walton's Life, the miscellaneous papers printed in the Reliquia Wottoniana, and a good deal of illustrative matter bearing on his subject. But he has not done his work thoroughly: he has left many points unexamined and many difficulties unsolved. To take a single instance: "The precise date of Wotton's death is not mentioned by Walton, or in the dictionaries. It might perhaps be ascertainable at Eton." Why, then, did not Prof. Ward take steps to ascertain it? We expect this kind of half-baked work from an amateur, but surely not from a professor. And if the exigencies of the lecture-room made incompleteness necessary, why publish? On the other hand, there is an attempt at criticism in the book also. The contrasts, the paradoxes, of Wotton's life, the double temperament in him of the man of affairs and the philosophical recluse; these Prof. Ward sees, and seeing would communicate his vision. Unfortunately he has the heaviest of heavy hands in these matters, and totally lacks that gift of phrase without which verbal portraiture can neither interest nor endure. His picture of the man is true in its main outlines, but it is wooden, cumbrous, lifeless; and an inferior portrait, to be hung as a pendant to Walton's, stands but a poor chance.

On the whole, then, one fears that the chief merit of Prof. Ward's book is, that it recalls one to Walton, and to a subject worthy of Walton's pen. Walton had fraternised with Wotton over their common friend, Dean Donne, in a Life of whom they had agreed to collaborate. But Wotton died before the book was written, and it fell to Walton to complete it and to supplement it by one of his intended colleague. It was a congenial task, for Wotton's later years had all the simplicities and the pieties which were so attractive to the worthy draper. Like Donne, he had somewhat suddenly changed his whole manner of life. He had been a courtier and a busy diplomatist. One of the secretaries of Essex, he had escaped the fate of his unfortunate fellow, Henry Cuffe, by a hasty flight. Disguised as an Italian, under the assumed name of Ottavio Baldi, he had conveyed a warning of intended assassination to James VI. of Scotland from the Grand Duke of Florence, together with a casket of antidotes. When James became King of England he had, though a Stuart, sufficient gratitude to recall Wotton from his practical exile and to take him into his service. Wotton was a persona grata at Venice, and for many years he was permanent or "leiger" ambassador in that city of historic memories. He took a part in the disputes, partly political, partly theological, between the Republic and the Papacy, and was vehemently attacked by that shameless pamphleteer, Caspar Schioppius. Only once, however, did Wotton give his enemies a real handle, when with too ready epigram he wrote in an album that "an ambassador is a good man sent to lie abroad for the sake of his country." Schioppius pretended to take this as the serious doctrine of the English Foreign Office, and Wotton had some difficulty in making his peace with James. At a later period Wotton became famous for his chivalrous championship of "the Queen of Hearts," the fair and ill-fated Elizabeth of Bohemia, for whose sake so many brave men went to ruin. It was in her honour that Wotton wrote his prettiest verses, those beginning, "Ye meaner beauties of the night"; and when he left the Court of Ferdinand II. he gave away a jewel presented to him by the Emperor, "because he found in himself an indisposition to be the better for any gift that came from an enemy of his royal mistress, the Queen of Bohemia."

About 1622 Wotton found himself out of official employment and stranded with an inconsiderable fortune. He thought himself happy to obtain, through the friendship of Buckingham, the vacant Provostship of Eton. The income was a poor £100 a year; but on this he settled down, took orders, wrote both prose and poetry in a somewhat dilettante fashion, leaving most of his writings unfinished; fished, enjoyed the friendship of Izaak Walton and the Admirable Mr. John Hales, and superintended the education of the scholars of Eton like a virtuous and godly gentleman. He lived until 1639, and when seventy years of age wrote the following pleasant idyll, which appears in the Compleat Angler:

"And now all nature seemed in love;
The lusty sap began to move;
New juice did stir the embracing vines,
And birds had drawn their valentines;
The jealous trout, that low did lie,
Rose at a well-dissembled fly:
There stood my friend, with patient skill,
Attending of his trembling quill.
Already were the eaves possessed
With the swift pilgrim's daubed nest:
The groves already did rejoice
In Philomel's triumphant voice.
The showers were short, the weather mild,
The morning fresh, the evening smiled,
Joan takes her neat-rubbed pail, and now
She trips to milk the sand-red cow;
Where, for some sturdy football swain,
Joan strokes a sillabub or twain.
The fields and gardens were beset
With tulip, crocus, violet;
And now, though late, the modest rose
Did more than half a blush disclose.
Thus all look'd gay, all full of cheer,
To welcome the new-liveried year."

Wotton's verse is scanty in quantity, and some of it is of no great account. Many pieces, moreover, are ascribed to him on somewhat unsatisfactory evidence. Prof. Ward would take from him even the famous epitaph, "On Sir Albertus Morton and his Lady":

"He first deceased. She for a little tried
To live without him: liked it not, and died."

In the following lines Wotton strikes a wise and manly note, struck after him by Wordsworth in the "Happy Warrior," and at an earlier date by Vaughan, in a poem called "Righteousness," which Wordsworth must surely have known:

"How happy is he born and taught
That serveth not another's will;
Whose armour is his honest thought,
And simple truth his utmost skill;

Who hath his life from rumours freed;
Whose conscience is his strong retreat;
Whose state can neither flatterers feed,
Nor ruin make oppressors great;

Who God doth late and early pray
More of His grace than gifts to lend;
And entertains the harmless day
With a religious book or friend.

This man is freed from servile bands
Of hope to rise or fear to fall:
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And, having nothing, yet hath all."

It is a pleasant picture Walton draws of the aged Wotton, with his books and his Thames trout. Gladly he left courts and cities for cloister and pasture.

BRIEFER MENTION.

Rowing. By R. C. Lehmann. (The Isthmian Library: A. D. Innes & Co.)

WITHIN the compass of some three hundred and forty pages Mr. R. C. Lehmann has compressed what is most necessary to be known of the art of rowing. His book is written primarily for the novice, but it will be read with equal pleasure by the finished oar; for though the instructions to the young oarsman are very full and explicit, there is much that will interest the expert in the later chapters. Mr. Lehmann has had the collaboration of Mr. Guy Nickalls, who writes on sculling; of Mr. G. L. Davis, the famous Cambridge cox of the seventies, who deals with steering; and of Messrs. C. M. Pitman on Oxford College rowing, W. E. Crum on Eton rowing, and E. G. Blackmore on rowing in Australia. Mr. Lehmann himself deals with rowing in America, a subject which his recent experiences as coach of the Harvard Eight specially fit him. He is also responsible for the chapter on rowing at Cambridge, and for the remarks on the recent controversy on the health of the oarsman. To the freshman and the second year man at the Universities the opening chapters on oarsmanship will be of the greatest use; and the coach in a small college who often has to instruct others in what he scarcely understands himself will find his duties much simpler if he studies the cautions and hints carefully before getting into the stern of a tub. The two chapters on training and racing also contain many useful hints from Mr. Lehmann's ripe experience. As much, moreover, will be learned from the photographic illustrations of good and bad positions in rowing with which the text is well furnished, and after the awful example which faces page 50, a round back should be an impossibility. The book is very well illustrated with photographs, a most necessary precaution, as few draughtsmen know how to row, or if they do are singularly unfortunate in their efforts to put that knowledge on paper. The Isthmian Library Rowing may be safely recommended to all those who row or hope to row.

The Note-Book of Tristram Risdon. Edited by J. Dallas, F.L.S., and H. G. Porter. (Elliot Stock.)

IN 1714 the pirate Curll published the Chorographical Description of Devon. This is the common-place book of Risdon, its author, printed after a MS. existence of nearly 300 years. It contains several features of interest to the heraldically inclined; among others, many coats-of-arms not to be found elsewhere, and a correction of some early descents in the Courtenay pedigree. A few coats are given in facsimile of the originals. If they are fair specimens of the bulk of those tricked "by the Travail of Tristram Risdon, Gent.," it is certain that the "travail" of the editors in deciphering them must have been as painful as his own. Although neighbouring counties are included, most of the book is devoted to Devonshire, in whose armorial roll meaner escutcheons are glorified in the company of those of Raleigh, Drake, Gilbert, and Grenville. Here, too, occur the family names of the judicious Hooker and the heraldic Upton. Let it not be forgotten that Devonshire gave birth to the father of English writers of blazon in Nicholas Upton, who in the loud days of Henry VI. serenely wrote of "heraldry, colours, and armouries, with the duties of chivalry, whence our modern writers have taken great light."

Analecta Eboracensia. Collected by a Citizen of York, Sir Thomas Widdrington, Knt. Edited by the Rev. Cæsar Caine, F.R.G.S. (C. J. Clark.)

THE writer of this book sulked about its dedication, and his book appears 250 years after time. Sir Thomas Widdrington, a man of good lineage (he was descended from the Northumbrian Widdringtons) was Recorder of York and many other things under Charles I. and the Commonwealth, and he offered to dedicate his book, the fruit of several years of labour, to the Mayor and Corporation of York. But the Mayor and Corporation looked upon the book as a stone for an egg; and they sent Widdrington a pithy, peevish letter, telling him in plain terms that "a good purse is more useful to us than a long story," and hinting that to make the Ouse navigable were a nobler work than compiling history. Sir Thomas was so chagrined that he forbade the publication of his book. From that day to this it has remained in MS., and historians of York, like Drake, have arisen and helped themselves to Widdrington's facts, and said how sorry they were, and passed on. Now, when Widdrington's account of ancient York is itself ancient, it is printed by subscription; nor would the old knight—a self-seeking, consequential little man by all accounts—blush at sight of this handsome folio, with its list of weighty subscribers and its "process" illustrations. After all, he got the "process blocks" by waiting. Widdrington was one of our earliest topographers, and worked under many disadvantages; but he went to original documents, and copied them without mistakes; he was not orderly. There we leave him. It is too late to review a superseded history that was ready for the press 250 years ago.

The Making of Abbotsford. By the Hon. Mrs. Maxwell Scott. (A. & C. Black.)

IN this handsome and well-printed book Mrs. Maxwell Scott tells the story of her home, and discourses pleasantly on several incidents in Scots and French history. She has little of the serious historian; rather, her essays are the gossip of a well-informed woman with a love for the past, and some genuine national enthusiasm. The book is, of course, in no way propagandist, but it is clearly written from the standpoint of a religious party. The paper on "Mary Stuart," which was originally published by the Catholic Truth Society, is a pleasant statement of one side of the case. Her references are chiefly to violent Marians, but it is strange to find no mention of Froude, Sir John Skelton, M. Philippon, and, above all, Mr. Swinburne. "The Scots Guard in France," which is chiefly a review of a book by Father Forbes-Leith, adds nothing to the work of Hill Burton, and Francisque-Michel. The few purely antiquarian papers are, as a rule, too slight to be of much value. Indeed, we like Mrs. Maxwell Scott best when she merely tells a good story, such as that of the Chevalier de Feuquerolles or the heroic Lady Nithsdale.

Pratt Portraits: Sketched in a New England Suburb. By Anna Fuller. (Putnam's.)

THESE little studies of New England life are in the genre which the art of Miss Wilkins has done so much to render illustrious. The inspiration is the same, with its constant effort to render fine qualities of the human spirit among unpromising surroundings; and if the narrowness and weariness of the life painted is more conspicuous, and its homely, remote beauty less conspicuous than in Miss Wilkins's work, that is, perhaps, partly a matter of temperament and partly because Miss Fuller writes of New England, suburban and sophisticated, Miss Wilkins of the simple village existence of New England proper. Of the individual stories, "Aunt Betsy's Photographs," "A New England Quack," and "A Yankee Quixote" strike us most. Aunt Betsy has her picture done "in front of the grapevine, her right hand in a black lace mitt, reposing upon the wicket-gate, and her voluminous skirts spreading on either side." The sitting is a secret one, and the dramatic production of the photographs in the family circle is the triumphant moment of the poor flabby, oppressed lady's life.

The Central Italian Painters of the Renaissance. By Bernhard Berenson. (Putnam's.)

THIS little study is a companion to the earlier volumes on Florentine Painters and Venetian Painters by which Mr. Berenson has already won golden opinions. A fourth volume on North Italian Painters will complete the series. Mr. Berenson's intimate knowledge of technique, befitting a disciple of Signor Morelli, together with his genuine critical gift, make him a most delightful guide to the study of Italian art. Moreover, he is an original thinker, and his speculations as to the psychology of æsthetic enjoyment give to his disquisitions a philosophical breadth and interest. The Central Italian schools are those of Siena, the Romagna, and Umbria, all of them largely influenced by Florence, and Mr. Berenson finds in them all a common tendency to develop the "illustrative" rather than the "decorative" side of painting; to excel, that is to say, more in the representation of ideas than in colour, tone, form, or movement. To this common quality individual artists add individual qualities. Piero dei Franceschi has his impersonality, Perugino his sense of space, Raphael his mastery of composition. Mr. Berenson appends valuable index lists of the works of a large number of painters, and prefixes a reproduction of Raphael's La Donna Velata in the Pitti Gallery at Florence. It is a practical and a highly stimulating little book.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 8, 1898.

No. 1340, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .       | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom.                | 0 15 3  | 0 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. | 0 18 0  | 0 0 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE most interesting literary event of the week is the publication in the Telegraph, synchronously with the Youth's Companion in America, of Mr. Gladstone's recollections of Arthur Henry Hallam. It is a sketch of great beauty. As boys at Eton they were the closest friends, bound by ties more worthy and secure than schoolboys commonly are; and biography is richer for Mr. Gladstone's tribute. It is surely a unique performance: an old man of eighty-seven (the essay was written last year) setting down luminously and powerfully the praises of a friend who has been sixty-four years in the grave!

We quote a few of the more easily separated passages:

"It is the simple truth that Arthur Henry Hallam was a spirit so exceptional, that everything with which he was brought into relation during his shortened passage through this world came to be, through this contact, glorified by a touch of the ideal. . . . Whether he possessed the greatest genius I have ever known is a question which does not lie upon my path, and which I do not undertake to determine. It is of the man that I speak, and genius does not of itself make the man. When we deal with men, genius and character must be jointly taken into view; and the relation between the two, together with the effect upon the aggregate, is infinitely variable. The towering position of Shakespeare among poets does not of itself afford a certain indication that he holds a place equally high among men. . . . In this world there is one unerring test of the highest excellence: it is that the man should be felt to be greater than his works. And in the case of Arthur Hallam all that knew him knew that the work was transcended by the man."

THE glimpses of life at Eton seventy years ago; the friendly eulogy, at once so warm and so reasonable, so unstinted and so tender; the shrewd and impressive asides on great and grave questions and issues; the incidental words of literary and general criticism—all serve to make the essay important and memorable, and to lead us to wish that Mr. Gladstone oftener pursued the reminiscent mood.

THE literary partnership between the late Alphonse Daudet and Mr. R. H. Sherard yielded a story which is shortly to be published in Mr. Sherard's English translation. The original plan was for Daudet to dictate and for Mr. Sherard subsequently to elaborate. But the dictated matter was so good and self-sufficient that Mr. Sherard wisely left it as it stood. The story will be called "My First Voyage: My First Lie." It is a reminiscence of the author's boyhood.

MR. KIPLING, who, accompanied by his family and Mr. J. Lockwood Kipling, sails to-day in the Dunvegan Castle, intends to make his trip to South Africa a complete holiday from work. His forthcoming volume of short stories is to be postponed from the spring to the autumn of this year.

MR. HENLEY's Essay on "Burns: His Life, Genius, and Achievement," which appeared in the concluding volume of The Centenary Burns, will shortly be published in a separate form by Messrs. Jack, of Edinburgh, at a shilling.

A NOVELIST in search of a good execution scene—there is one excellently done in The Gadfly—will find one all ready to his hand in a recent telegram from the Daily News correspondent at Berlin. Five haiducks—Servian robbers—were shot at Czaka a few days ago. The two most notable were Brktytsch and Woiko. This is how they died:

"As the procession passed a house, at the window of which Brktytsch discovered a pretty girl, he cried: 'Oh, women, women! It is you who have brought me to this.' Woiko smiled, and conversed the whole way. Of a high official he asked: 'Sir, do you think as many people will attend your funeral?' Turning to the gendarme who sat next to him, he said, 'Brother, do aim at the nipple of my left breast, so that I need not suffer so long.' It was nine o'clock when the execution ground was reached. Each of the haiducks was told to alight, and to stand next to a post which was erected by the grave destined to close over his body. Woiko appeared quite lively, and kept laughing and joking. Brktytsch had become serious and smoked a cigar, and the others stood silent and immovable as if they were already dead. Woiko's grave was close to that prepared for Brktytsch. When he noticed this, he said to him, 'Brother, don't be anxious. We shall remain close to each other. We shall soon find each other again' . . . . Woiko requested to be allowed to die with open eyes, but he was refused. 'Why are you blindfolding us?' he said. 'When I killed men I did not first blindfold them.' The people were now forced back by the gendarmes. The Prefect gave a sign, the captain flourished his sword, the crack of rifles sounded, and the five men were men no more.

This is more than journalism; it is literature.

To the enterprise and industry of Mr. C. M. Falconer, of Dundee, is due the "Catalogue of a Lang Library"; which does not mean a library conspicuous for length, but one consisting entirely of the works of Mr. Andrew Lang. For ten years has Mr. Falconer worked, and he now has a list mentioning 658 volumes, in which, in some capacity or other, Mr. Lang figures. Think of it, think of the industry it implies—and Mr. Lang was once called the Divine Amateur! The divisions of the Catalogue are five: books written by Mr. Lang alone; books written in collaboration with others; books edited or prefaced by Mr. Lang; books and magazines containing contributions by Mr. Lang; volumes containing Mr. Lang's poems.

WE have received from Mr. Jerome K. Jerome a photograph of a Christmas card which he has received from a band of Russian admirers. It represents a view of St. Petersburg surrounded by visiting cards—one hundred and eleven in all—and is ascribed to Mr. Jerome, with the assurance that other of his works are eagerly anticipated in translation by his friends in St. Petersburg.

THE recipient says: "To Russia is a long cry in many senses, and to be read and liked in Russia is not too common an honour for an English writer. Madame Jarintzoff in sending the card writes me: 'Certainly you understand that it would be simply impossible to send you in that way the expression of sympathy from all your admirers in St. Petersburg; if all of them knew of the device and would be allowed to join us—then surely there would be no place for that Christmas card in your house! As it is, I had just to mention about it among our friends, and the idea instantly flew through many circles, and reached the theatres, and in a few days I received more cards than I could use in trying not to be too plump with our feelings. Please notice that everyone knew the strict and inevitable condition: perfect sincerity. You can see from all this how right we were to tell you in the summer that the moral success of your books is enormous here; all these persons (and several hundred more in St. Petersburg) have them and love them: notwithstanding the general small amount of bookbuyers with us.' I get so little honour now [Mr. Jerome adds] from a certain class of critic in my own country that I may be forgiven some gratification for my recognition abroad."

By the way, the same writer's statement, which has just appeared in the daily papers, that he is in no way interested in a certain forthcoming periodical, is one of the most complete and emphatic denials we can remember: "May I, Sir—not entirely in my own interests—ask your assistance in counteracting this falsehood? I am neither directly nor indirectly—not as proprietor in whole or in part—not as editor nor as contributor—not even as well-wisher, concerned with any such venture."

An English lady is reported to be now at work in the Vatican Library, busily engaged in seeking corroboration of the theory that Dante was acquainted with the Venerable Bede's Latin version of the legend of the Irish saint Furse, wherein a suggestion of the idea of the Divine Comedy is to be found. The lady has already written an essay on the supposed influence on Dante by the Irish legend, upon which Mr. Gladstone has thus commented: "It is indeed of great interest, and the presumptions you raise appear to be important. Dante's being acquainted with a remote local saint, such as Bede, is of itself remarkable, and if it was due to his studying in England, as I am inclined to believe he did, then England may have furnished the thread which brought into his view the root idea of his poem." Very little would be gained by proving any such dependence. A man's inspiration is nothing: his work is everything.

MR. JACOBS'S, Many Cargoes and The Skipper's Wooing are to be added to the Tauchnitz Library. Meanwhile, Mr. Jacobs has, it is said, decided not to resign his position in the Post Office, a step which his literary friends are alleged, very unwisely, to have urged upon him. Instead, he will continue to endure what the Bookman calls "the sober routine of a Government Office." A number of busy literary men, it might be remarked, manage to endure it very easily.

THE late Sir Edward Augustus Bond, Sir Maunde Thompson's predecessor as Principal Librarian of the British Museum, survived his receipt of the distinction of K.C.B. only a few days. It is curious that one of the last scholars selected for honour by Her Majesty—the late Sir John Skelton, whose knighthood came with the Diamond Jubilee—died also within a week of its conferment. The late Sir Edward Bond married a daughter of "Thomas Ingoldsby."

THE first number of L'Enfant Terrible is probably now in the hands of expectant Americans. The editors, it seems, are known as Governors, and the office is called the Nursery. One of the Nursery Rules says: "No one not duly appointed an Honorary Infant shall be allowed to contribute, except on payment of the usual space rates (ten dollars per column)." Among the contents of No. 1 is the story of the Winchester Repeating Hen, which seems to promise entertainment.

"The transformation of the old Boston Public Library into a menagerie has called forth verse from Mr. Gelett Burgess, of L'Enfant Terrible, two stanzas of which follow:

"A Literary Zoo!
A Spectacle to view!
Boston used to keep them private, but now they'll roar for you.
Now they name 'em and they tame 'em, and they shame 'em and they brand 'em,
And in spite of guttural dialect, a child can understand 'em.
Here's a Panther with a Purpose and a Problematic Tail.
An I mark these neat poetic feet! An educated Snail!

A Literary Zoo!
So really clever, too!
Ah, what ghostly authors shudder from the shelves that once they knew!
In the alcoves that the sometime Literary Lights invaded
Now the plagiaristic monkey thinks he does as well as they did,
And the Unenlightened Publishers assemble here to gaze
While the anaconda swallows indiscriminating praise!"

IN honour of the Star's tenth birthday, which will be celebrated on the 17th inst., Mr. Conan Doyle has written a story, entitled "The Confession," for which Mr. Marcus Stone has made illustrations. To find Mr. Marcus Stone again acting as illustrator carries the mind back to days long past.

MR. ANTHONY HOPE'S lecturing tour in America has been so successful that he is postponing his return. Meanwhile Mr. Marion Crawford is beginning a lecturing tour through the Southern and Middle States, which will occupy him until May. Another lecturer leaves our own shores for America in a few days—Mr. Le Gallienne.

THE following story of the late Lord Tennyson may or may not be true; but it is good enough, merely as a flight of pure fancy, to stand. In company with a few friends, says a correspondent of the Telegraph, the Poet Laureate one day entered a public reading-room and sat down in a large arm-chair before the fire. Much to the amazement of the other occupants of the room, he then proceeded to elevate his feet until they rested on the chimney-piece in the fashion we are led to believe is "real American." No expostulations on the part of his friends respecting the inelegance of the position were of the slightest avail. Suddenly a brilliant inspiration seized one of them—the father of one of our leading actors of to-day. Going close to Lord Tennyson, he whispered in his ear, "Take your feet down, or they'll mistake you for Longfellow." In an instant the poet's boots were on the floor, and he assumed the ordinary position of an Englishman.

THE American Bookman for January gives its usual returns of the most popular books in the States. It is interesting to note that those fine novels, The Choir Invisible and The Kentuckians, are in high favour. The popularity of Quo Vadis with American readers is at last on the wane; but only, it would appear, after it has been read by an enormous section of the American reading public. The different appeals which this Polish author's novel has made to English and American readers is surely not a little curious and suggestive. We happen to know that the sale of Quo Vadis in this country has amounted to about 4,000 copies. Whereas in America 100,000 copies have been sold.

AMERICAN opinion of books often upsets that of England. In this country Mr. Blackmore's Dariel has not been reviewed with the unction which some of his recent novels drew forth, nor is it by the average reader considered quite in his best manner. Yet America has offered it a very warm welcome. The Boston Globe says: "Like Lorna Doone, it is worth reading many times over, and the older it gets the more popular it is likely to become. The story is tremulous with human emotions, described as only a master can pourtray them." The Chicago Tribune says: "Every page must be read and savoured for itself. Every line shows a compression and a polish that makes it glitter and flash a new light from a new facet every time the mind turns it over." We are the more glad to find Mr. Blackmore's new story so popular in America, since we could not give it very high praise ourselves.

Appropos of difference of opinion, "A. E. T." writes: "The following from to-day's Observer is an amusing instance of that kind of summary criticism to which Browning once attributed the retardation of his own acceptance with the public:

'NEW POEMS. By Francis Thomson. (Constable).—A collection of verses of only mediocre pretensions. It is dedicated to the late Mr. Coventry Patmore, but the disciple lingers longo intervallo behind his revered master.'

It is not easy to conceive the class of reader for which guidance of this character is intended."

ANOTHER correspondent—Mr. C. Giffard—writes: "During my reading of the last Weekly Sun—a luminary in whose rays I frequently bask when the other is obscure—it seemed to rain cats and dogs. I may be wrong, but one of the latter looked something of a 'howler.' 'We hardly know whether to regard De la Motte Fouque's [without the accent] Undine (Macmillan & Co.) as an allegory pure and simple or as a fairy tale. . . . The author's literary style reaches a high level of excellence, and joy and pathos are artistically blended in the narrative.' Shades of die Romantische Schule!—but perhaps the Weekly Sun is only playing upon our press-cutting agencies."

Finance, the new weekly paper devoted to money matters, makes a very creditable appearance. It has everything handsome about it, from its deep-red cover to its headings and initials. A special feature of "No. 1, Vol I," is a series of three articles, entitled "Other People's Opinions." These are contributed by Sir Edwin Arnold, Mr. Jerome K. Jerome, and Mr. I. Zangwill. Sir Edwin likes money; and will not hear it abused. He even blesses the millionaire:

"I should no more grudge his luxuries and splendours to such useful servants of the sublime History of Man than I should grudge to the upland lake its golden-spotted trout, its tranquillity, and the colours of heaven upon its elevated breast. Allons! marchons! then; Gentlemen of the High and Low Finance! with the varied and stupendous industries of your calling! Make money—si possis, recte! Start mighty enterprises! Establish companies! Exploit the earth, which is our leasehold estate! Pierce isthmuses! Tunnel under mountains! Bridge the baffled seas with swift-beled ships! If it be money, and the pursuit of money, which does all these things—so long as it does them honestly—I say let Finance be lawful as eating!"

MR. JEROME, being, according to the latest biographical dictionary, "the founder of the New Humour," ascends the pulpit:

"You [the Financiers] have rewritten the laws: You shall live by the sweat of other men's brows. The earth is yours and the riches thereof. You toil not neither do you spin (unless you call the fevered dice-thrower a toiler), yet Solomon in all his glory was not trayed like you—nay, nor his wives either. You have prepared a new gospel for yourselves. How long do you think its statutes will stand?"

MR. ZANGWILL is less exclamatory and more argumentative than his coadjutors. He points out that, according to recent biblical scholars, the notion that the Bible enounces usury and interest is founded on misprint. Be this as it may:

"The Church has long since abandoned its objection to the breeding of money by money, and has even, I believe, investments of its own. But I cannot help thinking that the old ecclesiastical objection to money and financial operations still lingers on in a transformed shape in many modern minds equally narrow. These poetic or aristocratic spirits do not see that the international financiers are keeping the life-blood of the world circulating, and that the millennium of peace and brotherhood is more likely to come through the Bourses than through all the religions. The interest every population has in every other is a great pacificatory force when passions rage, and the profits they achieve what the prophets may have failed in. Not that this necessarily persuades us to do homage to the great god Per Cent. But it is for the philosopher to recognise the value of everything in life, and then—put it in its place. There is the Stock Exchange now, much-abused institution in more senses than one. If people unite their capitals in big undertakings, there must be shares, and a medium for negotiating them. That this provides an opportunity for gamblers is an unfortunate consequence, but it can no more be helped than the unpleasantly-exaggerated velocity of that wind which normally moves our ships."

And, to be sure, it is his spare cash that a man spends on literature; and if he is to have spare cash, he must have much cash. We all stand or fall together.

THE New York Life seems to have been bewildering its readers almost to distraction with a literary puzzle. A prize of 100 dols. was offered to the lucky guesser of the line of lines by Longfellow illustrated by a picture of an old gentleman in armour, standing in front of his soldiers, over flowers strewn before him by women in mediæval costume. More than three-quarters of all the guesses sent in quoted lines from "The Elfry of Bruges" and "Coplas de Manrique." Nothing could have been more natural. And nothing could have been more absurd than to intend the picture to illustrate the line from "Morituri Salutamus":

"For age is opportunity, no less than youth itself."

If the number of guesses had been twelve million, says the Critic, instead of twelve hundred, not one of them would have given this line. Nothing could be farther fetched.

Literary London: its Lights and Comedies, by Mr. W. P. Ryan, will be published by Mr. Leonard Smithers this month. The volume deals with most of the prominent authors and schools of the day, and contains articles and satires on such subjects as "The Great Young Man and the New Style of Literary History," "The New Doom of Narcissus," "The Devil and a Modern Knight-Errant," "A Lunar Elopement: the Key to Allen Gaunt's Defection," "The Passing of the Poets," "The Flight from the Paineyard."

LAST week we said a word on Mr. Conan Doyle as a poet. There is another popular prose writer who occasionally plays with verse, and does it sometimes exceedingly well. We refer to Mr. Barry Pain, the author of the satirical comments signed Tompkins in the Chronicle of a Saturday. Often they display merely a keen, if mordant, humour, an intimate knowledge of Cockney dialect, and a true sense of rhythm: but on Saturday last Mr. Pain, it seems to us, achieved something finer. In the following poem there is a certain uncommon grim force, which prevails in spite of the slang setting:

"AT MIDNIGHT.

" 'Ninety-sev'n,' the bell is syin', tollin', slow,
 'Orf yer go,
 'Arf-a-moment's all that's left yer — 'arf-a-mo, Doncher know?
 'Arf-a-moment and you're dead,
 Says the big bell overhead,
 ' And 'Iteen-ninety-ite tikes on the show—
 Orf yer go.'
 Do yer 'ear the bell a-callin', 'Ninety-ite,
 Ninety-ite!
 Tike the ribbons of the cheriot of fite
 Thet won't wite
 While the 'orses gallop fast
 Through the midnight dawkn' vast,
 Snatch the ribbons from the dead 'aunds of yer mite,
 Ninety-ite!
 Whort's ahead? The driver speaks not. All is still,
 Dark and chill.
 And the 'orses gallop forrud with a will,
 Darn the hill.
 And the big bells as was swingin',
 An' so jooberlantly ringin',
 A myster'us silence keep;
 And the world drops off ter sleep
 As 'e drives us darn the steep.
 Whort's ahead? Won't no one tell us—good or ill? . . .
 All is still."

RECENT rearrangements and additions in the South Kensington Museum include another Old English Room, which has been set up in the Western Arcade of the South Court by the side of the "Inlaid Room" from Sizergh Castle. The new specimen is from an old house, now pulled down, at Bromley-by-Bow, belonging to the early years of King James I. The spacious stone fireplace has over it an elaborate mantelpiece in oak with the Royal Arms very boldly carved. The ceiling bears in the centre the same arms with the initials I.R., and is covered with fine strapwork ornament, having floral enrichments and medallions containing heads of ancient warriors. Specimens of furniture of the period have been taken from the museum and arranged in the room in order to give it a furnished aspect.

THE arrangement of two rooms in the Cross Gallery connecting the Indian Section and Science Collections has now been completed. The first room on descending the staircase is devoted, for the most part, to Cairene art. In the second room are textile fabrics and embroideries from various parts of the Turkish Empire. On the ground floor of the Indian Section an important addition has been made to the plaster casts by a collection of ornamental details from the palace of the great Akbar, at Fathpur Sikri, near Agra.

MR VERNON BLACKBURN'S The Fringe of an Art: Appreciations in Music, will be published by the Unicorn Press on February 15. It will contain portraits of Mozart, Berlioz, Gounod, and Tschaikovsky. Mr. Blackburn is musical critic of the Pall Mall Gazette.

Sport in the Highlands of Kashmir, by Mr. H. Z. Darrah, is a new volume to be published almost immediately by Mr. Rowland Ward, of Piccadilly, London.

NEWS from Paris states that Lieutenant Julien Viaud has a holiday from service, which—under his better-known name, Pierre Loti—he proposes to use in seeking material for a new book.

By permission of the Council of the Church House, four performances of the Rev. Henry Cresswell's ecclesiastical drama, "The Conversion of England," will take place in the Great Hall of the Church House, Westminster, on Saturday, January 15, at 2.30 p.m., and on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, January 17, 18, and 19, at 8 p.m.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. announce for early publication a translation of L'Education à Port Royal, being extracts from the writers of Port Royal, on the theory and practice of education, selected by the late M. Félix Cadet, Inspector-General of Public Instruction in France, with an introduction by the compiler.

The Life of Joseph Arch, M.P., edited, with a preface, by the Countess of Warwick, will be published immediately by Messrs. Hutchinson. Mr. Arch himself tells the story of his life, but Lady Warwick has prepared the book for publication, and has contributed a preface, in which she reviews at some length the history of the Union which Mr. Arch founded, and the position of the agricultural labourer at the present day. Mr. Arch is a Warwickshire man, and lives within a few miles of Warwick Castle.

THE ACADEMY'S AWARDS TO AUTHORS.

In reference to our intention to "crown" two books of signal merit published during 1897, we sent the following communication to certain men of letters who have been in touch with the literature of 1897:

"The proprietor of the ACADEMY having decided to set apart sums of One Hundred Guineas and Fifty Guineas as awards to the authors of books of signal merit published during 1897, the Editor asks your kind assistance in selecting the recipients. He will esteem it a favour if you will write on enclosed post-card the titles and authors of two or three books belonging to the period named, which are, in your opinion, most worthy of being 'crowned.'"

Below are a few of the replies already received. We shall announce our decision next week:

Mr. Andrew Lang suggests that the following books might be suitably "crowned":
The Song Book of Bethia Hardaere. By Mrs. Fuller Maitland.
The King With Two Faces. By Miss M. E. Coleridge.
Admirals All. By Henry Newbolt.

Mr. Edmund Gosse writes:
Works by the forty members of your "Academy" being obviously excluded from consideration, my vote would be given thus:

One Hundred Guineas to Mr. Arthur Symons for his Studies in Two Literatures.

Fifty Guineas to Mr. Frederic G. Kenyon for his edition of Bacchylides.

[We have not restricted our awards in the way Mr. Gosse supposes.]

Mr. W. I. Courtney suggests:
The Diary of Master William Silence, by Chancellor D. H. Madden, as being the most illuminative bit of dramatic criticism which we have had for years, as well as the most definitive answer to the Baconian theory regarding Shakespeare's works. The novel I should suggest would be The School for Saints.

Mr. Hugh Chisholm, editor of the St. James's Gazette, makes the following suggestions: One hundred guineas to Mr. David Hannay for his Short History of the Navy; or, to Mr. William Ernest Henley for his "Burns."

Fifty guineas to Mr. Henry Newbolt for his Admirals All; or, to Mr. W. Alison Phillips for his History of the Greek War of Independence.

Mr. James Payn writes:
Among the best books of fiction published in 1897 are—by well-known authors:
The Tragedy of the Korosel.
In Kedar's Tents.

And by new-comers:
Many Cargoes.
Deborah of Tod's.

Mr. Cloment K. Shorter writes:
Samuel Rawson Gardiner's History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate, 1651-1654.
William Butler Yeats's The Secret Rose.

Mr. I. Zangwill names the following books:
The Will to Believe. By Prof. William James.
What Maisie Knew. By Henry James.
The Nigger of the "Narcissus." By Joseph Conrad.
The Painters of Central Italy. By Bernhard Berenson.

Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll writes:
Mr. D. H. Fleming's Mary Queen of Scots deals with a theme of perennial interest; is derived direct from the sources; and no error has been pointed out by any critic so far as I know. It must always be considered and referred to by every student of the subject. I venture to think it belongs to the class of books the ACADEMY should honour.

Mr. W. Davenport Adams writes:—I should give my vote for:
The Memoir of Lord Tennyson.
The Coming of Love. By Theodore Watts-Dunton.
The School for Saints. By John Oliver Hobbes.
Admirals All. By Henry Newbolt.

Dr. Richard Garnett sends the following list of eligible books:
The Life and Letters of Benjamin Jowett. By Evelyn Abbott and Lewis Campbell.
Impressions of South Africa. By James Bryce.
The Hope of the World. By William Watson.
The Secret Rose. By W. B. Yeats.

Mr. H. G. Wells writes:
Henley & Henderson's edition of Burns is the sort of book that particularly deserves "crowning"—a magnificent performance of the utmost value to English literature, and not a very remunerative one to its authors. Mr. Henry James's What Maisie Knew ranks next, perhaps. The Nigger of the "Narcissus" is, to my mind, the most striking piece of imaginative work, in prose, this year has produced. Captains Courageous I couldn't read by reason of the illustrations; so I know nothing thereof.

REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED.

III.—LORD TENNYSON.

It would be useless to deny that however noisy, vulgar, and impertinent may be the newspaper post-mortem, it is uniformly successful in laying bare the weaknesses of its subject. Enmity and scandal soon lose their power if there is no element of truth for them to work on. Lord Tennyson did not fully recognise this. He only saw that after death a man's reputation has to go through a grim and savage ordeal, as likely as not to "shrivel it up like a cabbage," and having hated publicity all his life, the greatest terror death held for him was that it would be no longer possible to fence off the prying journalist and the gossip-monger. "The newspapers will get hold of me at last," he exclaimed sorrowfully, when taken with his final illness. It is, therefore, with a sense of relief that we find his reputation emerging unsullied from the discussion to which his death and subsequent biography gave rise. Of other great men of the century, Scott alone passed through the ordeal as well. His popularity never received a check. From Carlyle downwards the rest of them have seemed to dwindle and recede as soon as life was out.

The parallel does not end here. Like Scott, Tennyson had no dark spot or mystery in his life to whet a vicious curiosity. His biography is that of a tranquil and refined English gentleman who, in early life, fixed his ambition on a certain object and resolutely pursued it. He has written no idyl more beautiful than the story of his own quest from the time when the wizard

" . . . found me at sunrise
Sleeping, and woke me
And learned me Magic," till that fine ending in which the ancient sage, gazing frankly and fearlessly over the very edge of life, finds the light of poetry shining even on the valley of the shadow of death:—

"And so to the land's
Last limit I came—
And can no longer,
But die rejoicing.
For thro' the Magic
Of Him the Mighty
Who taught me in childhood,
There on the border
Of boundless Ocean,
And all but in Heaven
Hovers the Gleam."

In any attempt to picture the troubled yet splendid nineteenth century a conspicuous place must be given to his great and majestic figure, ever intent on his chosen art, and yet eagerly interested in every intellectual movement of the day; listening attentive to the voices that had anything to say, yet led by none from his own path; looking life with his own eyes and reflecting it in his independent art. Something, too, of the golden atmosphere which constitutes the charm of his verse hovered about his personality. The glamour must have been great indeed that evoked not only the respect but the warm and personal love of so many great minds, that bewitched Thackeray and Carlyle, Edward FitzGerald and Spedding, Mr. Gladstone, and the late Mr. Palgrave. Nor was his life altogether so sunny and enviable as to justify those who, like M. Taine, drew a sharp contrast between the opulent peer and the unfortunate race of bards whose lot too often is like that of Alfred de Musset in his garret or Burns at the plough-tail. On the contrary, he had crosses and tribulations enough to win our sympathy. Prosperity did not come till he had reached middle-age. For long enough he had to encounter public indifference and hostile criticism. "A barbarous people" were "blind to the magic and deaf to the melody." As he put it in homelier words, "the mass of Englishmen have as much notion of poetry as I have of fox-hunting." Yet this is not quite an accurate statement to make of a race that has produced an unequalled literature. Wordsworth was probably nearer the truth when he asserted that every great poet must educate and form his own audience. The disciple or imitator steps into a place ready-made for him; the original man has to overcome old prejudices and win adherents to his new convention. It was not till many years after Tennyson had produced some of his best work that he came to be generally recognised.

All this may be said, however, and a doubt still remain as to whether Tennyson is entitled to that high place in literature claimed for him by his contemporaries. In reading his son's biography, no one can help being struck with the indiscriminating character of their eulogy. Everything mentioned seems to be looked upon as a masterpiece by some person of authority. As often as not the result is to make one wonder how bad the criticism of a great writer may be. We are told that "Spedding, a first-rate Shakespearean scholar, George Henry Lewes, and George Eliot admired his plays." The last-mentioned wrote to Mr. Cross: "Tennyson's dramas are such as the world should be glad of—and would be if there had been no pre-judgment that he could not write a drama." A great deal more, and with deeper emphasis, has been written to the same effect. It can be very well understood when it comes from a great Shakespearean scholar. In drama alone did Tennyson allow himself to become an echo and no voice. It would be slaying the slain to insist upon the point. Time has gradually been sapping the work of those critics who used to enlarge upon his dramatic capacity, and it is apparent that here, at least, is failure. Nor was the failure accidental; it was the doom of his temperament. He had not that gift of imagining human beings acting under all conditions of light and shade that Shakespeare had to perfection, and that Scott among moderns possessed most highly. If we are to arrive at any true estimate of his work we must begin by flinging the plays overboard.

Again, we doubt if the popular "Idylls of the King" have any enduring quality, save it be in the case of the first and last of them, the rich and magnificent "Passing of Arthur."

Even at their first publication Mr. Ruskin, Edward FitzGerald, and many of the choicer minds, found something amiss. Their effect on the crowd was partly due to the strangeness and romance of the period in which they were set; but since then King Arthur and his knights have become familiar through numerous editions of Malory. It has become apparent to the dullest that Lord Tennyson fell below his model in so far as he tried to render the clash of arms and the romance characteristic of that old world, while his allegory sits badly on the characters, and is not sufficiently transparent for readers whose taste for this kind of writing has been formed on John Bunyan. Nor will his excellent style save the Idylls. There is nothing more changeable in literature than the fashion of narrative style. Let anyone who doubts it compare three translations of Homer, each of which seems to have fulfilled the requirements of its day—Chapman's, Pope's, and Butcher and Lang's Odyssey. Here the identical story is told, but how the language of each is varied to suit its generation! If it be true—as no doubt it is—that Lord Tennyson has refined the old stories till they lost life and colour, and that he has loaded them with a heavier moral than they can carry, then their endurance has but a feeble guarantee in a quality depending on the fickle caprices of taste.

But our poet is so opulent, that a great body of splendid work remains, even after the Plays and the Idylls have been laid aside. "In Memoriam" offers a surer foothold than either. Judged, not so much as a tribute to the memory of his dear and gifted friend Arthur Hallam, but as a book of elegies dealing with the elemental mysteries of life and the swaying of an utterly just and candid mind between faith and doubt, they reflect as nothing else does the spiritual struggles of his time; and the recognition of obstacles is so full, the inclination of his mind to the higher view so reasonable, that it wins the sympathy of all, the approval of a vast majority. No doubt, it is conceivable that the twentieth century may develop a different mood and a different attitude. On a lower plane, Lord Tennyson himself saw something of the kind happen to another poet. When he, a boy of fourteen, was carving "Byron is dead" on the sandstone rock at Somersby, the most acute minds of the time were convinced that Byron had vindicated his claim to a place beside Shakespeare. But the point of view was already beginning to shift. New streams of life and thought were breaking on the nineteenth century, and to the young generation Byron made no appeal. That this could be so did not dawn even on the clear mind of a Goethe. The mood of rebellion of which Byron was spokesman was not insular; it flushed the entire thought of Europe, and who could tell how fleeting and transient it was? Those of us who have found consolation and spiritual sustenance in the pages of "In Memoriam" cannot see any inherent defect that will make it of less comfort to those who are stricken with grief and doubt a hundred years hence; but we know that the thought of the moralist "waxeth old, as doth a garment," and there are spiritual needs to which only a contemporary can minister. How much even of a Jeremy Taylor falls meaningless on ears that have listened to a Darwin and a Renan! Much there is in the elegies eternally true; but much, too, that may well prove transient.

As often happens, it was not in his most ambitious, but in his simpler work that the poet achieved his most indisputable success: in those little country idylls that he always spelt with one l, to distinguish them from the "Idylls of the King." The light did not lead him astray when it fell on "Silent river,

Silvery willow,
Pasture and plowland,
Innocent maidens,
Garrulous children,
Homestead and harvest,
Reaper and gleaner,
And rough-ruddy faces,
Of lowly labour."

When Carlyle first read "The Grandmother" it is said that tears ran down his cheeks, and he could say nothing but "Poor old body! Poor old body!" It would be difficult to imagine a finer tribute to this wonderful picture of old age. But many of the other Lincolnshire pieces done at or before the same period are equally good: "The Northern Farmer," "Locksley Hall," "The May Queen," "The Brook" and "Dora." To mention the names is to point to literature that has passed into the life and being of England. It must not be thought, however, that I suggest that his charm depends on locality. On the contrary, it is at its highest, I consider, in "The Lotos Eaters," which for finish, melody, and consistency is second to no work that he has done, is scarcely second to anything of its kind anywhere.

And it is this inimitable charm—"the golden atmosphere," as Carlyle named it—that constitutes Tennyson's unique distinction. In his time the wells of romance that had been closed during the materialistic eighteenth century were re-opened. What the reader of to-day finds lacking not only in Pope and Dryden and Addison, but in Fielding, Defoe, Smollett, Johnson, and the rest, is the fulness of vision that sees a human action or a human character not only as a definite material fact, but as standing against a background of endless possibility, endless emotion, endless pathos. This is what Carlyle meant by his infinities, eternal veracities, and so forth. He shook people out of their materialism, but going too far on the other side he drove them away from himself by over-emphasis and exaggeration. He did not realise, or could not apply, the truth finely expressed by Robert Browning, "nor soul helps flesh more, now, than flesh helps soul." Tennyson, on the other hand, was keenly alive to the nineteenth century awakening of spirit, but he was artist enough not to insist unduly upon it. One perceives that his mind was saturated with the feeling, but it is all suggested rather than expressed; it does not come out in set expression, but in fine, inexplicable charm. The quality is akin to what we find both in Homer and Shakespeare, but only it is modified and changed by modern ideas; it is the very poetry of to-day.

Quite as much as in the pieces we have mentioned this intensely modern note is felt in the little snatches of song scattered through his longer poems. They are not all equal. In Tennyson two natures are always contending for mastery, and the struggle does not invariably produce an equilibrium. There is the almost too gentle and sensitive spirit he inherited from his mother tempting him ever into sentimentality, as in his "Home they brought her warrior dead," a song that had a great vogue once, but already is worn threadbare. There is also the sterner and stronger temperament that came from his father, accounting for passages in "The Vision of Sin" which seem to suggest that there was in Tennyson the possibility of grimmer work. But this combination of tenderness and strength formed no bad equipment for a poet when the two were blended and working in equipoise. Even then an immortal song is produced only at a fortunate hour. We feel occasionally, as FitzGerald said of the "Princess" lyrics, that the foam is gone from the champagne. And they are like pictures: you must live with them a long time before being quite sure that they deserve adding to the world's list of masterpieces. I could not very well explain why "Blow, Bugle, Blow!" loses its savour while "Sweet and Low" retains it; why "Break, Break, Break" seems to gain and "Tears, Idle Tears" to lose in charm. The best songs are very few in number, and a slight apparent difference distinguishes the mortal from the immortal.

These lyrics are of a kind peculiarly modern, and such as have only been written by Tennyson and him "who sang to one clear harp on divers strings." The best of them are not love-lyrics in the old sense, but bits of philosophy set against this background to which allusion has already been made. In those of Goethe one finds a wider, clearer, colder outlook on the universe, but Tennyson's are suffused with deeper emotion. The imagination of the former is at its best when bringing the whole of existence within focus of a little song; that of the latter is rich in magic and illustration. Indeed, in that respect Tennyson is without a rival. Of many possible examples it will be sufficient to give one taken not from a song, but from the epilogue to "Tiresias," where he bewails the fact that "Old Fitz," to whom the poem was dedicated, was dead ere he received it. The passage has always appealed to me as illustrating what Prof. Palgrave called the "mediocritas aurea of Tennyson":

"The tolling of his funeral bell
Broke on my Pagan Paradise,
And mixt the dream of classic times,
And all the phantoms of the dream,
With present grief, and made the rhymes
That missed his living welcome seem Like would-be guests an hour too late,
Who down the highway, moving on
With easy laughter, find the gate
Is bolted and the Master gone."

It was by passages such as this, the exquisite lyric "To Sleep!" in "The Foresters," and "Crossing the Bar," that Lord Tennyson showed that his mind kept opening and growing to the very last.

There was a period when, unknown to himself, "the light retreated, the landscape darkened." All those secondary Lincolnshire studies, "The Northern Cobbler," "The Sisters," "The Village Wife," "The Spinster's Sweet-Arts," and "Sixty Years After," are written without the Tennysonian charm. He had in them lost touch of his atmosphere and his fancy. Yet the great work that accompanied them showed it to be only a temporary and accidental lapse. There is no one period of his life wherein his good work was done; it is sown all along his sixty years of labour. Without denying the very great merit of his other work, I think, however, that his strongest claim to immortality lies in the songs and the idyls with one l.

At starting it was my intention to discuss at some length his treatment of nature, but I have outrun the constable in the matter of space; and, besides, another "reputation" will afford an opportunity to enter upon that subject. P.

MILLAIS AT BURLINGTON HOUSE.

SIR JOHN MILLAIS was young during the whole of the time when he was joyously passing through his phases, contemptuous of the phase just left behind, as a child of ten scorns his achievement at eight, or as any one of the growing centuries despised the work of its predecessor. The century just dying is old because it admires the past; and Millais ceased to be young when he—painting with an emancipated and triumphant hand—stopped to admire, because the world was resolved to admire, the intense, intent, and constrained work of 1849 and 1850. There seldom was so consistently changing, so intolerant, so honest, or so long a youth as his. In 1861, when he had begun to paint in what is called his second manner, he wished that he could but get his pre-Raphaelite pictures into his own altered hands, that he might tear them in pieces. It was a hearty wish. But he could not then buy them back to mend his reputation; and the owners (not yet very proud of their possessions—they no doubt called them "quaint") kept them until their day of popularity came at last. But though Millais got hold of none of his old pictures to destroy them, he borrowed all he could to repaint them. He did not spare his earlier work, having a vivacious and healthy dislike of it. That dislike might not be particularly healthy in others, but in him it was a sign of health and of life. Therefore, it is with mixed feelings that we see the proofs of an effectual pentimento in "The Vale of Rest." The nun who is sitting by while the lay-sister digs the grave received a new face; and something of the same kind may possibly have befallen the children in "Autumn Leaves." For the faces are exceedingly beautiful, whereas our fathers complained of the ugliness of these girls. The figures are primitive, but the faces—two of them, certainly—belong to the quickly altering period of "The Ransom" and "Trust Me." This, however, is not so certain an incident as that of the intolerant refitting of the nun. Millais' nun, in fact, was like a solid doll mended with a new head.

As to this famous picture last-named, it is more than usually mingled work: it has one of the best skies in the whole collection, and the painting of the tree that stands against the lightest part of the after-sun sky is beautiful; there is, as it were lighted air between our eyes and these sprinkled leaves. In colour the upper part of the picture has beauty, but is the colour of the white head-dresses in the cool shadowless shadows of evening a beautiful study of white? It seems to our eyes greatly lacking in tenderness, delicacy, and sweetness, nor is there much mystery here in any colour. The execution, too, is painty. But the picture is an imaginative one and a sincere; it is the rather naïf work of a simple-minded working painter who is inspired by his literary friends. These nuns by the way, seem to have by some mean broken into an English Protestant church yard full of an 1830 kind of gravestones tablets for the express purpose of recording names and virtues—a "Low Church" church yard in strongly English provincial taste, but a modern country town. Nuns lie under thin crosses, or without anything except their mounds, and do not wear their names even in the seclusion underground. "Ophelia" is the next picture of equal fame. It is six years' earlier work (1852) than "The Vale of Rest" as this was before the partial repainting. And surely a obvious help to the study of a painter who was all things, not by turn so much as by passage, would have been the chronological hanging of these collected pictures. No such order has been observed, but it has not been neglected for the sake of dodging the discords of colour, which occur here and there. The "Ophelia" has always been famous for the beauty of its flower-painting. A landscape, however, is not a flower-piece, and assuredly this rose-bush in flower is not a landscape-painter's work. The green leaves must have been painted in the studio, for no open-air leaves ever wore this green; but the equally open roses—a very equal republic of roses, as out—are most ambiguous. The painter has contrived to fill them—wherever painted—with rich light, but you must rifle them to find it; at any reasonable distance the white rose-bush is quite dim and cold. It is much the same with the flowers in the hands of the floating figure; but what is really fine in the picture is the painting of the face. Here, and in "The Blind Girl," the fine brush, the sweetness, and the essential a fundamental finish, have produced a surface far more like that of Velazquez than Millais' work when he set himself to do so. Velazquez "on purpose." A little further on, the "Joan of Arc" helps us to decide what was Millais' perfectly dull time—was about 1864, when the "Joan of Arc" was painted; and 1880—when the new picture, "Miss Alcyone Stepney," was painted—was a day of success claimed for every touch of an easy hand; some of the accessories—hair and lace especially—in the portrait are masterly. As for the "Blessed Brunswicker" (1860), it was painted when the Primitive time was over and remembered with great uneasiness and shame, when the sentimentality of the painter expressed itself, free from the constraining inspiration of early friends, and when Millais became exceedingly popular. The parting of these rather uninteresting lovers divides the interest of the picture with the white satin dress, of which it seems strange, perhaps, to say that it is not beautifully painted, seeing that one is compelled to own that it is very like white satin.

To our mind the best picture of these few transitional years is "The Ransom" (1861). There are passages of this work that force us to call this particular transition a fine one; the hands, the hair of the children, all the surfaces of the garments in the middle and left of the picture, are not less than magnificent. The drama, indeed, is too obvious even for this obvious manner of painting incidents in suspense; the painter insists and insists that we shall see how the robbers are hesitating to take the knight's treasure because he betrays his anguish of desire to get his children back; but the action of one of the little girls with her arm stretched up over the father's mailed arm is more really dramatic than anything Millais achieved in the expression of attitude.

Among the chief early pictures are "Christ in the House of His Parents," "Autumn Leaves," and "Sir Isumbras at the Ford." The first is perhaps the principal and the most famous of Millais' Primitive or Pre-Raphaelite works. It has something more of affectation (to speak plainly) than is inevitable in work forced into the ways of other men and other times; the conception of the picture is excessively deliberate and self-conscious, and deliberate are also the actions of the figures; but the boy-Christ is an exquisite child, a figure in which simplicity wins; it is wonderfully painted, moreover.

"Autumn Leaves" is the work of a true colourist, and its sky, if not all that it ought to be, is fairly atmospheric, and has some beauty. This faint praise has to be denied to the utterly dull landscapes, from "Chill October" downwards, in which the skies have no life, no light, no intention, no unity, no movement, no repose. The truth should be told that Millais' skies are miserable. "Sir Isumbras" belongs to the Primitive period, and has strong beauties. Why, one wonders, did they in the middle-century smile at this "plum-coloured" horse? There is no visible plum-colour now, but a fair enough black. Was it not at the painting of this picture, by the way, that Mr. Ruskin, seeing the Primitive inspiration weakening, broke off finally in his praise of Millais, crying, "This is not a fall, but a catastrophe!" Three years earlier Mr. Ruskin himself had sat for the delicately beautiful portrait in the same room. The eyes of the young critic watching the young artist, through whom he so desired to paint his own will and his own way, must have been keen to descry decline in "Sir Isumbras"; but who shall say that it had not set in so soon as in 1857, seeing that seven more years landed Millais in the depth he had reached—undone, degraded, undistinguished—when he painted the portrait of a child in the Water-colour Room—"Lily, Daughter of J. Noble, Esq."? Even the drawing—and Millais' drawing is generally excessively and subtly beautiful and searching—had fallen into wretched ruin in the face of this vulgarised child.

But, again, what a draughtsman was Millais, whenever the year was not 1864 or thereabouts! How his drawing turns, how it grasps and holds, lingers and finishes and chisels! And how beautiful it is! See "The Bishop of Manchester," the exquisitely drawn mouth of the John Bright portrait, and the well-constructed hands in a score of portraits. See, too, the portrait of Mr. Gladstone, which has masterly lines; and the head of Trelawney in the "North-West Passage." That quality of drawing, which had given to his primitive work a value nothing will ever lessen, did not forsake him again, when, in later life, he had recovered it.

And yet this later work has, in general, no cheering effect upon a Millais-lover, gathered thus as it is at Burlington House, in a mass. For the display and flagrancy of the portraits of fashionable middle-aged women Millais had not enough distinction of mind, enough style. He did not deal with them grandly. He had courage, but not a grand courage. He had not the gravity that can present an extravagant stout dress with dignity; and he painted extravagant stout dresses on defiant women by the score.

In "Hearts are Trumps" the heads are admirably painted, and full of essential life; the picture is one of Millais' masterpieces, and yet "is it style"? A grasp at style is made in the large gray silk dresses—a resolute grasp. Well, in the heads it is attained; but there is something lacking in all the deliberate rush of labour with which that silk is executed; we grow tired of it under the table. A great painter would not have wearied us with it even there. Then there are the landscapes—it is impossible not to refer to them again. They are not only ugly, but insipid; and there is hardly any possible covering of the same space of wall that one would not rather look at than "Dew-drenched Furze," for example.

Perhaps the greater number of the portraits of men painted in late years are Millais' finest work. They have not more dignity than nature, but they have extraordinary power, character, freedom, knowledge, security, and ease, and if not intellect, a most uncommon intelligence. Next to these is the beauty, here and there, of a child's hair and flesh painted with the freshness he loved; for, having painted many things, he owned that he rested upon one thing with unaltered delight—the mingled colour in the middle of a child's or a woman's cheek.

THE BOOK MARKET.

BOOK SALES OF 1897.

THE end of a year is as much a time for retrospection as it is for a natural indulgence in hope for the year to come. Even for the book-collector or the bookseller this is true; and so, on the eve of a new year, let us see what the year that has just gone has done for either of these speculators in the world of letters. A satisfactory consideration of this subject would demand the inclusion not only of the regular auction sales, but of all the catalogues of the chief booksellers; and as this is practically impossible, let us restrict ourselves to the more important public sales, and let us see what conclusions are to be drawn from them.

At once we are met with a sale for which the year 1897 must always remain distinguished—the Ashburnham Sale. So far, only two portions of the late Earl's magnificent library have been disposed. But those two portions are in themselves sufficient to establish an event in the annals of bibliomania. Eight days in June and July and six days in December sufficed to distribute some thousands of lots, which realised the enormous sum of nearly £50,000—a sum which must represent a substantial advance on the price paid for the books originally. No doubt the volumes were in good condition, and the library was one of the few private libraries in the country which was held in high esteem by those who can judge of what rare books are. But these considerations are not in themselves sufficient to account for the almost phenomenal sums paid. We can but surmise that our American cousins, infatuated with a desire to possess Ashburnham books, must have given commissioners carte blanche. Only by such an explanation can we understand the giving of £1,050 for a "Biblia Pauperum," which fetched £36 15s. the last time it was sold; or £147 for a pamphlet of nine leaves from the press of Machlinia; or £106 for an imperfect copy of the first edition of Shelton's translation of "Don Quixote"; or £81 for Gawin Douglas's "Palis of Honour"; or £390 for Laudonnière's "Foure Voyages unto Florida"; or £2,100 for Le Fevre's "Lylf of Jason" (Caxton, c. 1477)—the very copy for which Payne the bookseller gave £87 at Heber's sale; or £760 for "Les Prophecies de Merlin," even though it be bound by Le Monnier; or £41 for a six-leaved tract containing a "metrical declaration of the Paternoster." The truth is, such prices represent the final stage of the bibliomaniac, and may, in no sense, be taken as market prices. It may almost be prophesied that these books when next they come "under the hammer" will find a much soberer reception than they received at Messrs. Sotheby's rooms this year.

It is when we come to examine such sales as those of the libraries of Beresford R. Hope, Esq., Hon. Ashley Ponsonby (the Bessborough Collection), Sir Cecil Denville, H. W. Bruton, Esq., M. C. Scott, Esq., and J. J. Farquharson, Esq., that we arrive at material which should help us to legitimate conclusions. Not that these were ordinary collections; by no means. But they were treated with a calm judgment and a business-like attention, which is the rule. Sensation is the exception; and if sensation form good "copy" for the reporter, it must be avoided when we require a guide as to the future. The Bessborough Collection contained a fine assortment of extra-illustrated books, and these fetched good prices. The Bruton Library consisted wholly of books and illustrations referring to Cruikshank, and the prices were by no means insignificant. Mr. Scott's library was rich in Australasian books, and particularly in Tasmanian newspapers; and for such there is always a good demand. Other libraries included some fine specimens of eighteenth-century French works illustrated by such famous book illustrators as Eisen, Moreau, Marillier, and Cochin; many very rare early gardening book; and a few of the scarcer first editions of works illustrated by William Blake. To appreciate properly the prices paid for the illustrated editions of such works as Dorat's "Fables Nouvelles" (£30 and £72); Dorat's "Les Baisers" (£20 10s. and £55 13s.); La Fontaine's "Contes et Nouvelles" (£16 10s., £31, and £51); Montesquieu's "Le Temple de Gnide" (£18 10s. and £46); Le Sage's "Le Diable Boiteux" (£31); "Daphnis et Chloe" (£35 10s. and £41); and Erasmus's "L'Eloge de la Folie" (£22 10s.), we must remember that the illustrations, which form the real value of these works, are in the finest "states." Fine impressions of the plates and fine condition of the books make the collector's heart to expand—it is not long before his purse opens. That early gardening books fetch such high prices is to be explained on the ground of their great rarity. Most of them, we notice, were bought either by Mr. Zaehnsdorf or Mr. Quaritch. Here are a few: "Ein Blumenbuch" (1616), £25 10s.; Hill's "Gardener's Labyrinth" (1586), £10; Alamanni's "La Coltivazione," £14; "Flower Garden Displayed" (1734), £13 15s.

However much the market may fluctuate with regard to Continental books or temporary fads, or privately printed works, the Englishman is always true to his own. Thus it is that the rare editions of English classics are always sure to fetch good prices. And thus it is that good sporting books, provided they are rare, of course, always are certain of respectful attention.

Shakespeare and Milton, Defoe and Sterne, Goldsmith and Johnson, Burns and Byron, Shelley and Keats are names to conjure with when first editions are about. Then it not a matter for surprise when we see the "Merchant of Venice" bring £315; "Paradise Lost," £80; "Lycidas," £60; "Robinson Crusoe," £45 10s.; "Moll Flanders," £10 15s.; "Sentimental Journey," £22; "Tristram Shandy," £20 10s.; "Haunch of Venison," £35; "Vicar of Wakefield," £60; "Poems" (Kilmarnock), £80 and £86; "St. Irvyne," £16 10s.; and "Zastrozzi," £15 15s.

That great sporting artist, Henry Alken, seems destined to remain at the head of his class. His "Angling Sports," "Sporting Ideas," and "National Sports," which realised £9, £18 10s., and £30, always maintain a good average. The Badminton Library "large papers" are still in vogue, and the volumes on "Hunting" and "Shooting" still command many times their original prices. This year a copy of the former brought £30 and a copy of the latter £15.

But early books are things of the past. What may we collect of the things of the present, to judge from the sales of this bygone year? Undoubtedly, first editions of Mr. Kipling, and possibly of Robert Louis Stevenson. We are not quite sure of the latter, although his juvenile writings are realising ridiculous sums: "Pentland Rising" (£13); "Familiar Epistles" 1896 (£3 18s.); Edinburgh University Magazine for 1871 (£11 5s.); "On the Thermal Influence of Forests" (£14). Mr. Kipling's works, however, are bringing in more and more as the months go by. Two years ago we could purchase, at any bookseller who had a copy of it, his "Departmental Ditties" for £5; now the auctioneer obtains £16 from a bookseller. The magazine "Quartette" continues to be much sought for, and lately was sold for £12. Even the shilling Allahabad editions of his short stories now command £1, £2, and even £2 6s.

From all that we have recorded and discussed, it is easy to see that the rage for rare books is by no means soothed. The passion to have what others have not is as strong, if not stronger, now than ever it was. But if we are to indulge our passions, let us, at any rate, consider carefully before the fit seizes us. And let us, if we are lovers of good literature, buy the first editions of the classical writers; if we are sporting men, let us collect the illustrated works of Alken and others, especially those with coloured illustrations; if we are amateurs—using that word in its best sense—let us acquire good states of the illustrations of French eighteenth century masters; if we are millionaires, let us go in for incunabala, Hore, and hand-painted and illuminated Missals. Otherwise we shall have much, but shall have gained little. Let us also think of early-printed books with woodcuts, for of a surety these will remain worth their price. But let us never buy extra-illustrated books without examining the illustrations; and, above all, let us never extra-illustrate books ourselves, unless we have not only the elixir of life, but the philosopher's stone as well. Satisfied we never shall be, even though we be as wise as Solon, or as rich as Cresus, or as patient as Diogenes. Life is too short for this labour. Far better to attempt the "higher faking" of a Walton's "Angler." That, at any rate, can have an end.

T. S.

THE BITTER CRY OF A SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER.

The preceding article will give little pleasure to a certain London second-hand bookseller, of good standing, who expressed himself very freely the other day to an ACADEMY representative. The subject of the conversation was the state of the second-hand book trade. Said the bookseller sadly: "It is miserable compared with what it was twenty years ago."

"How do you account for the decline you speak of?"

"There are many causes; but the greatest to my mind is the publication of the prices of books, current in the sale rooms, in annual volumes. There are two such volumes, as you know."

"Will you explain?"

"Certainly. Here am I, a second-hand bookseller; my success depends largely on my inner knowledge of the values of books, just as a furrier's knowledge depends on his knowledge of the values of furs. But whereas the furrier is able to keep his knowledge to himself, mine is all printed in a book and distributed to the public. Naturally a great part of my knowledge has been picked up by constant attendance at the sale rooms, which means time, which means money; and by speculations and experiments, which also mean money. Then comes a 'chief among us, takin' notes.' Yes, and 'faith, he'll prent it.' Now, these annual volumes of current book prices are easily compiled. A clerk at fifteen shillings a week could take down the prices from the lips of the last bidder. It is easily done. But what is the effect? My secrets become everybody's. My knowledge is imparted to my customers. Is this the case in any other business? I don't want to charge an unfair price for a book, but I do want to fix its price myself. And I say that unless I am allowed to do this elementary thing I cannot prosper. Another thing: these publications send my customers direct to the sale rooms."

"Where, however, you can 'run prices up.'"

"Yes; but there's no satisfaction in that. The multiplication of private bidders necessarily spoils trade."

"Have you thought of a remedy?"

"The remedy is plain, but I fear we shall never get it. It is cohesion among second-hand booksellers."

"Is there none now?"

"None whatever."

"Well, suppose you cohere; what next?"

"Then we should publish our own 'book prices' at 2s. a copy, and limit its circulation strictly to the trade. That would kill the existing publications."

"But would it?"

"Oh, yes. They thrive now mainly on booksellers, who foolishly allow private bidders to consult these works. The private bidders are not numerous enough of them selves to support such expensive works."

"I see. Then your point is that there are enough private bidders and too-knowing customers to spoil business, but not so many that you could not defeat them by the plan you suggest."

"That is my point."

"And you really consider, not as a matter of inference only, but as a matter of shop experience, that the publication of current book prices is hurtful to your trade?"

"It is ruining it."

THE WEEK.

PUBLISHING is languid, after the holidays, and the arrivals are very miscellaneous. With the issue of Northanger Abbey and Persuasion in their series of "Standard Novels," Messrs. Macmillan complete their edition of Jane Austen's novels. Mr. Austin Dobson has contributed an introduction to each volume, and none better than the one which we find here. The peculiar fate which overtook the MS. of Miss Austen's earliest effort is narrated by Mr. Dobson as follows:

"Even at this distance of time, the genuine devotee of Jane Austen must be conscious of futile, but irresistible, desire to 'feel the bumps' of that Bceotian bookseller of Bath who—having bought the MS. of Northanger Abbey for the base price of ten pounds—refrained from putting it before the world. That can have been the phrenological conceptions of a man who could remain insensible to such a sentence as this, the third in the book: 'Her father was a clergyman, without being neglected, or poor, and a very respectable man, though his name was Richard—and he had never been handsome.' That the sentence was an afterthought in the proof cannot be intended, for Northanger Abbey was published sthumously, and 'the curious eyes, that saw the manner in the face,' had long been closed under a black slab in Winchester Cathedral. Only two suppositions are possible—one, that Mr. Bull, of the Circulating Library at Bath (Mr. Bull it were) was constitutionally insensible to the charms of that master-spell which Mrs. Slipslop calls 'ironing'; the other, that he was an impenitent and irreclaimable adherent of the author of the Mysteries of Golpho. The latter is the more natural conclusion. Nothing else can explain his suppression for so long a period of Miss Austen's 'copy'—the scene of which, by the way, was largely laid in Bath itself. He was infatuated with Mrs. Radcliffe, and Mrs. Radcliffe's following: the Necromancer of the Black Forest, the Orphan of the Rhine, the Midnight Bell, the Castle of Wolfenbach, and all the rest of those wor-shipful mas'erpieces whichabella Thorpe, in chap. vi., proposes for the de-lectation of Catherine Morland, and the general note of which Crabbe (on a remembers Miss Austen's leaning to that favourite poet) anticipates so aptly in The Library:

Hence ye profane! I feel a former dread,
A thousand visions float around my head:
Hark! hollow blasts through empty courts
resound,
And shadowy forms with staring eyes stalk round.
Whatever be the solution, the fact remains."

There comes to hand a volume of more less humorous verse by "Ironquill," selected and arranged by J. A. Hammerton. Who is "Ironquill"? Here is part of the answer furnished by Mr. Hammerton:

"The name of 'Ironquill,' though known to me in America, and familiar as a household word in the Transmissouri, has yet to gain in Great Britain that reputation it has so deservedly won beyond the Western wave. . . . Most Americans who know 'Ironquill' know that he is none other than the Honourable Eugene F. Ware, of Topeka, Kansas, who, to use the words of Dr. John Clark Ridpath, the historian, 'as a publicist and man of affairs, is second to none of the leaders of that great commonwealth.'"

Mr. Ware is an eminent attorney, and the verses are the fruitful occupation of his leisure."

"Ironquill" is now introduced to English readers as the typical poetic product of Kansas. The verses in this volume are very various. Here are two stanzas from "The Flopper":

"Bill was a combination of despondency and hope;
At times he grew gregarious, at times he used to mope.
There wasn't any office that he thought he couldn't fill;
He looked at each new ism, and embraced it with a will.

He entered all new parties. He pioneered new creeds.
He ran for sheriff, then he flopped to register of deeds.
And then he tried for probate judge—but none of it would work;
He tried to be a minister, then flopped to postal clerk.

"Ironquill's" Americanisms of style and spelling have been retained throughout the book.

Mr. R. FARQUHARSON SHARP'S Dictionary of English Authors is biographical and bibliographical. "In the case of each author the essential facts in his career are stated as briefly as is practicable, followed by as complete as possible a list of the first editions of his works, arranged chronologically."

A Bibliography of British Municipal History has been compiled by Mr. Charles Gross, assistant Professor of History at Harvard University. Incidentally, the author states that "the British Museum has the largest collection of works relating to municipal history, including many valuable MSS.;" but he adds that it does not possess more than three-quarters of the whole body of topographical books relating to Great Britain. Mr. Gross's volume runs to more than 450 large octavo pages.

A NEW "Double Section" of the New English Dictionary is issued by the Clarendon Press. It has been compiled by Mr. Henry Bradley, and embraces Frank-Law—Fyz, and G—Gain-coming.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- THE NEW TESTAMENT OF JESUS; OR, THEISIS' COMPILATION OF SELECTED PASSAGES. Williams & Norgate.
- THE LATEST FRUIT IN THE RIBEST. By Frederick James Gant. Digby, Long & Co. 1s. 6d.
- THE STABLES' CROWN, AND OTHER POEMS. By J. L. II. Elliot Stock. 2s. 6d.
- WINNING THE SOUL, AND OTHER SERMONS. By Rev. Alex. Martin, M.A. Hodder & Stoughton.
- LOGOS: CHRIST-IDEALS, NOT CHRISTIANITY! Printed and Published by the Author, A. Gottschling.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- OUR TROUBLES IN POONA AND THE DECCAN. By Arthur Crawford, C.M.G. Archibald Constable & Co. 14s.
- PETER THE GREAT. By Oscar Browning. Hutchinson & Co.
- CHRISTINA ROSSETTI. By Mackenzie Bell. Hurst & Blackett.
- LETTERS AND PAPERS OF ANDREW ROBERTSON, A.M. Eyro & Spolanswoode. 12s. 6d.

POETRY, BELLES LETTRES, CRITICISM.

- GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES: HEINRICH HEINE'S LIEBES UND GEDICHTE. Selected and Arranged by C. A. Bacheim, Ph.D. Macmillan & Co. 2s. 6d.
- ARISTOTLE'S THEORY OF POETRY AND FINE ART. By S. H. Butcher. Second edition. Macmillan & Co. 12s. 6d.
- LOVE'S FRUITION. By Alfred Gurney. Loogmans, Green & Co. 2s. 6d.
- A VISION OF ENGLAND, AND OTHER POEMS. By John Rickards Mozley. Richard Bentley & Son.
- SPECIMENS OF THE PRE-SHAKSPEAREAN DRAMA. Edited by John Matthews Mealy. Vol. II. Ginn & Co. 5s. 6d.
- RIP VAN WINKLE, AND OTHER POEMS. By William Akerman. George Bell & Sons. 5s.
- RHYMES OF IRONQUILL. Selected and Arranged by J. A. Hammerton. George Redway. 3s. 6d.

NEW EDITIONS OF FICTION.

- NOTHANGER ABBEY, AND PERSUASION. By Jane Austen. Illustrated by Hugh Thomson. Macmillan & Co. 3s. 6d.
- THE TEMPLE "WAVELEY" NOVELS: THE ANTIQUARY.

FOREIGN.

- MANZONI, ILLUSTRATO DA G. PREVIATI. U. Hoepfi (Milano).
- LA DIVINA COMMEDIA DI DANTE ALIGHIERI. Various parts. Utrico Hoepfi.

TOPOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

- CAIRO OF TO-DAY. By E. A. Reynolds-Bell, B.A. A. & C. Black. 2s. 6d.

EDUCATIONAL.

- EUCLED'S ELEMENTS OF GEOMETRY. Books I. and II. Edited by Charles Smith, M.A., and Sophie Bryant D.Sc. Macmillan & Co. 1s. 6d.
- ORDINARY DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS: AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK. With an introduction by James Morris Page. Macmillan & Co. 6s. 6d.
- THE PITT PRESS SHAKESPEARE: THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. By A. W. Verity. Cambridge University Press. 1s. 6d.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

- OUR POLLY: THE ADVENTURES OF A PARROT DURING HER LIFE OF 100 YEARS. By Mrs. Rouquette, Gardner, Darton & Co.
- THE SECOND FROGGY FAIRY-BOOK. By Anthony J. Drexel Biddle. Gay & Bird.
- STORIES OF BALLOON ADVENTURE. By Frank Mundell. The Sunday School Union. 1s. 6d.
- HEROINES OF HISTORY. By Frank Mundell. The Sunday School Union. 1s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- A DICTIONARY OF ENGLISH AUTHORS. By R. Farquharson Sharp. George Redway. 7s. 6d.
- PRACTICAL ETHICS: A COLLECTION OF ADDRESSES AND ESSAYS. By Henry Sidgwick. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 4s. 6d.
- THE FLOWERS OF LIFE. By Anthony J. Drexel Biddle. Drexel Biddle (Philadelphia, U.S.A.)
- SKANTYTOWN SKETCHES. By Anthony J. Drexel Biddle. Drexel Biddle (Philadelphia, U.S.A.)
- A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF BRITISH MUNICIPAL HISTORY. By Charles Gross, Ph.D. Longmans, Green & Co. 12s.
- A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES. FRANK-LAW—FYZ; G—GAIN-COMING. Vol. IV. Edited by Dr. James A. H. Murray. Clarendon Press. 5s.
- THE BAPTIST HANDBOOK FOR 1898. Clarke & Co. 2s.
- SIXTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BUREAU OF AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY TO THE SECRETARY OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION: 1894-'95. By J. W. Powell, Director Government Printing Office. KNOWLEDGE: VOL. XX.: 1897. Knowledge Office. THE COMMONWEALTH: 1897: A SOCIAL MAGAZINE. Gardner, Darton & Co.

PETER THE GREAT.

WHEN Sir Henry Irving intimated, a few months ago, that he intended to produce a play by his younger son, Lauronce Irving, on the subject of Peter the Great, there was no undue surprise expressed in any quarter, because the young author in one or two fugitive and experimental pieces had certainly manifested a dramatic talent above the average and beyond his years. On other grounds the production of "Peter the Great" at the Lyceum on Saturday night aroused exceptional interest. It is a remark frequently heard in theatrical circles that Sir Henry Irving has done much for the drama but little for dramatists—indeed, the Lyceum “chief,” as he is familiarly called by his subordinates, made a playful allusion to this very saying when he announced the acceptance of his son’s play. Whether a more enterprising policy like that pursued by Mr. George Alexander and Mr. Beerbohm Tree would not have proved equally advantageous at the Lyceum there is, of course, no knowing. But it is a curious fact that on the rare occasions when Sir Henry Irving has left the safe ground of classic drama or of well established French adaptation, like “The Bells,” “The Lyons Mail,” or “Louis XI.,” he has not been too happily inspired; and, possibly, the reception accorded to “Peter the Great” will check, rather than encourage, his patronage of contemporary writers. For it is to be feared that this ambitious effort on the part of a very young author will not repay the expense and the histrionic talent expended upon it at the Lyceum in so un stinted a measure.

SCENICALLY, “Peter the Great” ranks with any of Sir Henry Irving’s great productions, and it employs the entire personnel of the Lyceum, including not only “the chief” himself, but Miss Ellen Terry, although the part of Catherine, for which she is cast, is a purely episodic one. Never, indeed, has a young author had a more magnificent opportunity for distinction opened up to him. But opportunity is one thing and the ability to grasp it another. I am not sure that the very wealth of illustration brought to bear upon young Mr. Irving’s tragedy does not tend by contrast to accentuate its weakness. The picture might have appeared to more advantage had it been enclosed in a less gorgeous and less massive frame. Similarly, the author’s talent might have proved more effective had it been applied to a subject less ponderous and intractable than the character of the enigmatical Tsar, at once a bloodthirsty savage, a monster of cruelty, an enlightened patron of the sciences, and a great empire builder. The truth is, that the youthful author of “Peter the Great” has confidently stepped in where dramatists of more experience have feared to tread. The life of Peter the Great has never been successfully placed upon the stage except with the softening accompaniment of music. It is too harsh, brutal, inexplicable for the purposes of drama, unless, indeed, the lines of history are widely departed from.

MR. LAURENCE IRVING has sought, I imagine, to show us the Tsar on his terrible side. Peter fumes and scowls and bellows at his terrified courtiers, who huddle together at his approach like sheep. He throttles this knavish poltroon and that, orders off another to be married against his will, or whittles away placidly at his ship-building models, while groans and agonised cries proceed from the torture chamber where evidence is being manufactured to his orders. All this is, theoretically, very awe-inspiring, and yet, somehow, despite Sir Henry Irving’s untiring exertions in the part, one does not feel this monster in human shape to be so very terrible after all. His bark is worse than his bite. In fact, one has a suspicion that this imperial Bogey-man is merely pretending, like the ghost which terrifies children until the white sheet is pulled off its face. He is far too noisy, restless, changeable, to be the strong man that the dramatist would have us believe. The harder Sir Henry Irving toils at the part the less convincing this too turbulent Peter becomes. He veers about like a reed shaken by the wind,

“One foot on sea and one on shore,
To one thing constant never.”

This is not how force of character is shown. Whether such a personage as the Peter of history—madman and statesman of genius—could be adequately enacted is, perhaps, open to doubt. The experiment has never, I believe, been made, albeit the subject must often have presented itself to the mind of the practical dramatist. There are great natural forces that defy the art of the stage, such as a moving railway train, and commanding personalities like those of Napoleon and Peter the Great. In this instance the Peter of the play stands to the Peter of history in pretty much the same relation as the cardboard simulacrum to the railway train of the workaday world.

WITH true instinct Mr. Laurence Irving has taken the death of Peter’s ill-starred son Alexis as the knot of his story—an event which history has left obscure. That the prince died in prison, into which he had been flung by his father’s orders, is certain; but whether from natural causes, by misadventure, or by the Tsar’s decree, is unknown. The author fills up the gap left by the historian. In his view, Peter’s great ambition is that his successor should be able worthily to carry on his great scheme of empire-building. Accordingly, with doating fondness, the Tsar applies himself to the task of educating the youth so as to fit him for his great position. But Alexis, wrapped up in a worthless woman, has no stomach for education of any kind. Nor does he aspire to rule Russia. In fact, he is a white-faced poltroon of the most contemptible description. The Tsar sees his duty before him. Alexis, who had fled to Italy with his mistress, is brought back, tried on the charge of treason, and condemned to death. It remains for the Tsar to sign the fatal decree. Shall he do it? In the interests of the State, which he places before those of humanity, he takes his dread resolution. There is a final scene, at first of recrimination, but ultimately of reconciliation, between father and son. They arrive almost at the point of understanding each other. But Alexis prefers death to life, and the Tsar is not unwilling that he should pass into the hands of the executioner, whose weapon is poison. And so the dévouement comes, the Tsar feeling his son’s untimely end all the more acutely that the young man has in his last moments betrayed an unexpected fortitude.

EVIDENTLY it was for this idea that the play was written, and these closing scenes, in point of fact, are the best that the author has given us. For once the play rises to the appropriate tragic plane, and here, to Sir Henry Irving, as Peter, obtains his finest effects. From being an unspeakable monster of cruelty, Peter becomes nobly with the nobility of Virginius, and in the interests of the State slays his son virtually with his own hand, as the Roman father slew his daughter in order to protect his honour. If the play had all been couched in this elevated vein it would have been much more satisfactory work. The author, however, wastes valuable time in leading us to his dénouement; he has neglected to provide a sufficiency of illustrative action, three-fourths of a portentously long cast of mere lay figures (albeit one or two of them are ecclesiastics), and the whole rendered in a curiously flippant and trivial vein of dialogue—the opposite extreme to the “stages” of convention. A lay figure like the great Catherine herself would be in the hands of an actress of less verve and emotional power than Miss Ellen Terry. Perhaps the one consistent and proportionate character of the play is the Alexis of Mr. Taber, an American recruit to the company. His sketch of the feeble-spirited youth is one that lives in the memory. Sir Henry Irving’s physical exertions in the part of Peter require a word of acknowledgment. I have never known him work with more zeal and sincerity.

J. F. N.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE AUTHOR’S FIGURES.

SIR,—It is a common way out of a mess to prove your adversary making a still greater error of detail.

1. Mr. Nutt first declared solemnly that the “least” number of pages for a shilling book was 388. It was not, as he now calls it, an “assumption,” but a plain, naked assertion. Not the average, mind. The “least”—on this assertion he placed up his figures.

2. I showed by five examples that he was wrong.

3. He says that two of these examples are 3s. 6d. books.

4. Very well. I am out of the reach of the books. Let it be so. Three remain. How can 388 pages be the “least” alleged when three of the most popular of modern novels contain far less? Down go all his figures.

That is the whole thing. I showed, however, that on other points his letter was quite wrong, because I had allowed for everything. He tries to get out by saying if £14 is all that is spent on advertising a Barrie. A Barrie, indeed! The book before me was one which no one would produce except at the author’s cost. I assure your readers that not £14 but nearer the mark in such a book as this.

Mr. Heinemann’s letter gives me great pleasure, for it shows—what, indeed, I knew before—that he loves the Author as much as he loves the literary agent, and for the same reason. He has, indeed, other occasions shown his love of both. Lastly, however, Mr. Nutt should not contradict himself. In the same paragraph he says, first, that he has not seen more than two numbers of the Author in his life; and, next, that a certain statement, which he would find it difficult to quote from the Author, has been repeated without a word of qualification. If he does not see the paper, how does he know?

WALTER BESANT.

Bath, Jan. 3, 1898.

MATHILDE BLIND'S POETRY.

SIR,—I think that your review of A Selection from the Poems of Mathilde Blind, in your issue of December 26, must have pained and surprised those of your readers who have read Mathilde Blind's poems with care and sympathy. Your reviewer expends his pity on her "well nigh fruitless effort to become a poet." Her productions are "slenderly meritorious." She "has little or no imaginative insight, no creative, and little interpretative power." Well, I disagree with these judgments. It so happens that I know Mathilde Blind's verse only through the volume on which your reviewer bases his remarks, and it has affected me very differently. May I jot down a few comments and quotations, in haste and at random? Your reviewer thinks that Mathilde Blind has no creative power; I think she has it: witness the figure of Sam in "The Teamster." Here are the first four stanzas of a poem which your reviewer thinks is a "dull and conscientious study":

"With slow and slouching gait Sam leads the team;
He stoops i' the shoulders, worn with work not years;
One only passion has he, it would seem—
The passion for the horses which he rears:
He names them as one would some household pet,
May, Violet.
He thinks them quite as sensible as men;
As nice as women, but not near so skittish;
He fondles, cossets, scolds them now and then,
Nay, gravely talks as if they knew good British:
You hear him call from dawn to set of sun,
'Goo back! Coom on!'
Sam never seems depressed nor yet elate,
Like Nature's self he goes his punctual round;
On Sundays, smoking by his garden gate,
For hours he'll stand, with eyes upon the ground,
Like some tired cart-horse in a field alone,
And still as stone.
Yet, how's'er stolid he may seem,
Sam has his tragic background, weird and wild
Like some adventure in a drunkard's dream.
Impossible, you'd swear, for one so mild:
Yet village gossips dawdling o'er their ale
Still tell the tale."

This is vivid and loving portraiture. Mathilde Blind could see things and make them be seen by her readers. Take this little Millet landscape:

"Sun-tanned men and women, toiling there together;
Seven I count in all, in you field of wheat,

When the rich ripe ears in the harvest weather
Glow an orange gold through the sweltering heat.

Busy life is still, sunk in brooding leisure;
Birds have hushed their singing in the hushed tree tops;
Not a single cloud mars the flawless azure;
Not a shadow moves o'er the moveless crops.

In the glassy shallows, that no breath is creasing,
Chestnut-coloured cows in the rushes dank
Stand like cows of bronze, save when they flick the teasing
Flies with switch of tail from each quivering flank.

Nature takes a rest—even her bees are sleeping,
And the silent wood seems a church that's shut;
But these human creatures cease not from their reaping
While the corn stands high, waiting to be cut."

This is truly felt, and sweetly set down; it is not great poetry, but it is not "dull," it is not unimaginative, it is more than "slenderly meritorious." Your reviewer's criticism of "The Street Children's Dance" does not seem to me quite fair. He says that "the subject of the poem is not even touched until the fifteenth stanza is reached." But the children are introduced in the seventh stanza, and are not again lost sight of for a moment. The poem is reflective, and will be seen to be such at once by the discerning reader. Your reviewer might have complained with justice that its title does not strictly answer to its contents. But Mathilde Blind need only have called her stanzas "Lines Suggested by Street Children Dancing" to have anticipated his criticism. Your reviewer seems to ignore Mathilde Blind's wonderful human pity. Yet this is so pure, profound, and constant as to be itself poetry. She loved "all things both great and small" with a sad, deep love. She remembered the lowly and humble men of heart; and longed that all feeble things should know something of the glory of life. Who but she would have given that turn, in the sextet, to her sonnet, "The Red Sunsets, 1883"?

"The twilight heavens are flushed with gathering light,
And o'er wet roofs and huddling streets below
Hang with a strange Apocalyptic glow
On the black fringes of the wintry night.
Such bursts of glory may have rapt the sight
Of him to whom on Patmos long ago
The visionary angel came to show
That heavenly city built of chrysolite.

And lo, three factory hands begrimed with soot,
Aflame with the red splendour, marvelling stand,
And gaze with lifted faces awed and mute,
Starved of earth's beauty by Man's grudging hand,
O toilers, robbed of labour's golden fruit,
Ye, too, may feast in Nature's fairyland."

Note, again, how in trying to express her own intimate love for another soul she accumulates tenderly observed images:

"As opiates to the sick on wakeful nights,
As light to flowers, as flowers to poor men's rooms,
As to the fisher when the tempest glooms
The cheerful twinkling of his village lights;
As emerald isles to flagging swallow flights,
As roses garlanding with tendrilled blooms
The unweeded hillocks of forgotten tombs,
As singing birds on cypress-shadowed heights,
Thou art to me. . . ."

I think with Mr. Arthur Symons, who edits the Selection, that Mathilde Blind "was a poet, almost in spite of herself." Let me, in conclusion, quote her sonnet "Nirvana," in which she seems to say her last word:

"Divest thyself, O Soul, of vain desire!
Bid hope farewell, dismiss all coward fears;
Take leave of empty laughter, emptier tears,
And quench, for ever quench, the wasting fire
Wherein this heart, as in a funeral pyre,
Aye burns, yet is consumed not. Years on years
Moaning with memories in thy maddened ears—
Let at thy word, like refluxing waves, retire.
Enter thy soul's vast realm as Sovereign Lord,
And, like that angel with the flaming sword,
Wave off life's clinging hands. Then chains will fall
From the poor slave of self's hard tyranny—
And Thou, a ripple rounded by the sea,
In rapture lost be lapped within the All."

Put Mathilde Blind's case as you will, she cannot be dismissed as a woman who went to Parnassus on a vain errand. Her poetry has much grace; it is charged with emotion; and it is so sincere as to be a relic of her living self. J.

CRITICS.

SIR,—Will Mr. J. E. Yerbury allow me to ask him if he has ever read Daniel Rochate and Rabagas? Has he not simply opened a catalogue of Victorien Sardou's complete works and chosen two of the least known, which he is pleased to give us as models of criticism? His choice is hopelessly unhappy.

If, as Mr. Yerbury claims, I have "a very limited conception of what a critic really is," he, at least, has a very large conception indeed. For Mr. Yerbury every writer—the journalist, the philosopher, the satirist, the man who as novelist gives his opinion on any subject, the author of what French people call "la pièce à thèse"—is a critic. This at least appears from his statement that Daniel Rochate and Rabagas are "perfect specimens of criticism."

Would the readers of the ACADEMY bestow on Messrs. Hardy and Grant Allen (I beg pardon for this juxtaposition) the title of critic when these authors speak of free love? Why, then, should Sardou have a greater right to be so called for having set forth in Daniel Rochate the struggle between Atheism and Christianity ament the question of civil and religious marriage; for having given us in Rabagas—which, after all, is but a poor pamphlet—an overdrawn witless caricature of a republican? No matter! Hats off, gentlemen! Long life to Victorien

Sardou, the great French critic! Would Mr. Yerbury kindly tell me in what paper I can find, "at least twice a week, criticisms of men and things from the pen of Sully-Prudhomme"? a philosophical poet whom I greatly admire. I should be very thankful, I am sure!

For the articles of François Coppée three numbers of Le Journal, kept by mere chance, I assure you will give us a good example of his weekly collaboration. On July 1 Coppée writes on the Jubilee; on October 28 he tells us of a winter sunset at Geneva, "above the clouds"; finally, on November 25, he relates at length that on a Sunday morning at church he saw a poor girl praying fervently.

But Mr. Yerbury is quite right. Coppée is sometimes a critic, and this is how he comes to be so. A young writer, unknown to the crowd, publishes a book. He goes to his friend, François Coppée: "Cher maître," says he, "you who have acquired a universal reputation by your verses and your tales, will you not commend me to the public?" And the "cher maître," who likes the younger generation, for he has not forgotten the days, long since past, when he also was young and unknown, kindly takes his pen and writes:

"I have lived through many years; I have seen many things, many men; I have read many books, good and bad; therefore I am able to discern genius when I come across it. Be advised by me, read Mr. X.'s book, it is worth while, for . . . I was pleased with it."

And that is all. As we say in France: "Pour un vrai trio de critiques, c'est un vrai trio de critiques. O combien!" But does Mr. J. E. Yerbury understand French?
JEAN-CYRANE.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

MR. WATSON'S new book of poems has received very various treatment, in which, however, a general agreement is discernable. The Standard and the Saturday Review critics have each been led to make an estimate of Mr. Watson's work as a whole, and their views differ only slightly. This is the Standard critic's elaborated judgment:

"Mr. Watson has never had very much to say, and he does not seem to find more as the years grow upon him. Beautiful as his verse often is, his poetic 'message' has always been slight and unimportant, his philosophy somewhat superficial, his outlook upon life narrow and limited. He is a poet of the study, or, perhaps, we should say of the library, and, for the most part, seems rather to catch the echoes from other lyrics than to strike out original harmonies of his own. But something more than scholarship and wide reading and a nice feeling for style are required for the making of a great poet.

Mr. Watson does not, as a rule, write out of the depths of a full and varied experience. But he has read his Wordsworth, his Tennyson, his Shelley, his Matthew Arnold; he has learned to manipulate a few English metres with remarkable skill; he has a gift, assiduously cultivated, of chaste, lucid, and dignified expression; and he has the true poetic command of imagery and epithet and suggestive allusion. The result is that we seldom turn his pages without finding some passages of almost classical perfection, some exquisite touches, and a few lines that ring nobly upon the ear.

If a reader can be satisfied with good workmanship and literary accomplishment, with many a felicitous simile and metaphor, and with frequent notes that recall the greater masters, he may be well content with Mr. William Watson. For passion, for depth of emotion, for profundity of thought, for the magic of one of those inevitable phrases that live for ever, he must look elsewhere. Mr. Watson is no Theban eagle 'soaring with supreme dominion' through the azure spaces; he is only a very cultivated and conscientious poet of the later strain, whose carefully finished verses can usually be read with pleasure, but seldom with any dangerous exaltation of the critical pulses."

The Saturday Review sadly says:

"Serious and sober and edifying as his work is, it becomes evident that Mr. Watson has no surprises in store for us: his verse seems to be already essentially middle-aged. Almost while we were still prepared to be expectant—for from Mr. Watson's power of harmony much might have come had there been enough of imperative imagination behind it—we found ourselves beginning to look back to discover him at his strongest. And so the conviction has steadily increased that whatever rank he may take in the future must come from work already achieved."

But the Standard has kind words for Mr. Watson's lyrics and sonnets:

"The 'Ode in May' has a spontaneous music, not disguised by a most elaborate choice of words, which is quite captivating:

'What is so sweet and dear
As a prosperous morn in May,
The confident prime of the day,
And the dauntless youth of the year;
When nothing that asks for bliss,
Asking aright, is denied,
And half of the world a bridegroom is,
And half of the world a bride?'"

And the Saturday admits: "We can cordially praise work which remains sincere, often large in utterance, and correct in model without being cold."

The political element in the volume has made the St. James's Gazette critic angry:

"It is really quite time that the author of 'The Purple East' retired, like Lord Rosebery, from politics and went back to poetry. This little volume, though its inspiration is decidedly meagre, shows once more that there is a field in which Mr. Watson might yet grow more of those beautiful flowers of poetry which gave such promise in his earlier books. There is sometimes a new Swinburnian ring in his lines:

'We are children of splendour and flame,
Of shuddering, also, and tears.
Magnificent out of the dust we came,
An abject from the Spheres.'

The volume is mainly composed of trifles, some of them pleasing, all the work of a graceful and accomplished writer. But if Mr. Watson is content with such trifles he will shortly be relegated to the ranks of the minor poets."

The Daily News thinks that, regarded in one way, "the political poems—the 'Poems on Public Affairs' as the author calls most of them"—are but the expression of the same idea as the more personal and general poems:

"We have here much that we have had before: his deep sympathy with suffering nations and with lost causes, and the fine insight which shows him the spiritual triumph where others see only the disasters of the field. But he has, in this instance, given a fuller expression of himself in powerful 'problem-poems, which, in their full significance, are but utterances of a sublime despair."

This critic thinks that Mr. Watson's verse "has not improved in quality." "He seems to lose something of the exquisite workmanship that distinguished him, as he grows more strenuous in purpose. . . . He has been caught up in the whirl of our political controversies, and his muse may suffer from it by losing its dignity and its sense of repose."

The Times passes from the political poem to praise

"such glowing verse as 'Jubilee Night: Westmoreland' and the little poem called 'The Lost Eden,' which expounds in noble language the eternal significance of that ancient story. At first man dwells in Eden, but he cannot stay there: he is pressed forward by Eve,

'Eve, the adventurous soul within his soul.
The sleepless, the unslaked:'"

And he fares forth on the inevitable pilgrimage of sorrow and of joy:

"Never shall he return: for he hath sent
His spirit abroad among the infinitudes,
And may no more to the ancient pales recall
The travelled feet. But oftentimes he feels
The intolerable vastness bow him down,
The awful homeless spaces scare his soul;
And half-regretful he remembers then
His Eden lost, as some grey mariner
May think of the far fields where he was bred
And woody ways unbreathed-on by the sea,
Though more familiar now the ocean-paths
Gleam, and the stars his fathers never knew

The Manchester Guardian refuses to believe that we have yet had Mr. Watson's best work. He still "awaits a supreme opportunity for rising to the full height of a genius that we believe to be great."

"Derelicts." This story has had, at least, a success d'estime. The Daily News critic describes it as "an impressive book." He says:

"An impressive book, an important book. It is not without artistic blemishes, but these are atoned for by its fine spirit, its high feeling. It deals with a very terrible and a very actual situation; it brings home to us vividly the terrible conditions in which hundreds of men are condemned to struggle, here, immediately about us, every day. And then—Yvonne. Yvonne is a creation that any artist might be proud of."

The Daily News says that "this moving and interesting book, dealing with the tragic fate of a released prisoner," is a book to be read. "The heroine, Yvonne, is quite charming. She is a sweet, sunny-souled creature, an artist to the tips of her fingers and a woman to the core of her heart."

"Few," says the Manchester Guardian, "could read without stirring of the heart this picture of the desperate struggles and decent life of a man who has once fallen, but whose instincts remain sensitive and generous."

NOTICE.

IN response to complaints as to the difficulty of obtaining this paper, we now publish a LIST OF AGENTS from whom "THE ACADEMY" may be obtained. We shall be pleased to receive applications for agencies from Booksellers and Stationers, and to supply them direct or through their London Agents.

LONDON. Wholesale.

Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, Strand
" CASSEL & LAMB, Salisbury Square
" DAWSON & SON, Bream's Buildings
" KENT & CO., Paternoster Row
" KINGSBURY & CO., Racquet Court, E.C.
" MARLBOROUGH & CO., Old Bailey, E.C.
" H. MARSHALL & SONS, Temple Avenue, London
" SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO., Stationers' Hall
Mr. GEORGE VICKERS, Strand [Court
Messrs. H. WILLIAMS & CO., 48, Old Bailey, E.C.
" TERRY & CO., Hattoy Garden
Mr. E. W. ALLEN, 4, Ave Maria Lane, E.C.
Mr. POULFER, Temple
Messrs. COWIE & CO., 17, Gresham Street, E.C.
" FARRINGTON & CO., St. Bride Street
" RICHIE & CO., Red Lion Court
Mr. ROGERS, 32, Portland Street, Soho
Messrs. STECKERT & CO., Star Yard, W.C.
Mr. B. F. STEVENS, 4, Trafalgar Square
LONDON and SUBURBAN DISTRIBUTING AGENCY,
Bonville Street
Mr. WALTERS, Bell Yard, Temple Bar
London, E.O.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Liverpool Street Station (Main Line)
" " " Book Stall, Cannon Street
" " " Ludgate Hill Station
Mr. BLENKINS, Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane
Mr. SMITH, 14, Cursitor Street, Chancery Lane
Mr. MANNERS, 58, Fetter Lane
Mr. KELLY, 2, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane
Mr. WALKER, Mitre Court, Temple
Mr. JENKINSON, Shoe Lane, Fleet Street
Mr. WALKER, Imperial Arcade, Ludgate Hill
Mr. COLE, 97, Queen Street, Chancery Lane
Mr. BERRY, Cullom Street, Fenchurch Street
Mr. STYLES, Fishmonger Alley, Fenchurch Street
Mr. ABBOTT, 32, Faucheur Street
Mr. ATKINSON, London Bridge
Messrs. W. H. EVERETT & SON, Royal Exchange
Mr. POTTE, Royal Exchange
Mr. BLAIR, Royal Exchange
Mr. DAVIES, 1, Finch Lane, Cornhill
Messrs. LEATHWAITE & SIMMONS, 1, Pope's Head Alley, Cornhill
Mr. R. GRAVATT, King Street, Cheap side
Mr. OWEN, 35, Little Britain
Mr. RALPH, 57, Little Britain

London, W.C.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Euston (Express side)
" " " King's Cross, G.N.R.
" " " St. Pancras, Mid. R.
" " " Charing Cross
Mr. WOOD, Portsmouth Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields
Mr. BUNDOCK, St. Martin's Court, St. Martin's Lane
Mr. PERKS, 41, St. Martin's Lane

London, S.W.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Waterloo Station
" " " (Main Line) "
" " " (Loop Line) "
" " " Victoria (L.B. & S.C.) Str.
" " " (L.C. & D.) "
" " " (District) "
" " " Richmond
Mr. BLACKBURN, 14, Lowndes Street, Lowndes Square
Messrs. RASTALL & SON, Eccleston Street, corner of Ebury Street
Mr. LOVELL, 149, Fulham Road
Mr. NEWBURY, 190, Fulham Road
Mr. H. S. EDWARDS, 303, Fulham Road
Messrs. H. SPORNE & SON, 270, Fulham Road
Miss LANGLEY, 594, King's Road
Mr. STONE, 510, King's Road
Mr. J. SUTTON, 69, Cheyne Walk, Chelsea
Mr. CHANNON, 82, Brompton Road
Mr. MONK, 9, Montpelier Road, Brompton Road

London, S.E.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, London Bridge Station (Main, S.E.R.)

London, W.

Messrs. SMITH & SON, Paddington Station.
Book Stall, Kensington
Mr. ANDREWS, 1, Bridge Street, Hammersmith
Mr. KETTON, 70, North End Road, West Kensington Station
Messrs. HOBBS & CO., 154, Earl's Court Road
Mr. BATES, 2, Station Buildings, Gloucester Road Station
Mr. HALL, 17, Bute Street, West Kensington Station

PROVINCIAL TOWNS.

Bath.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.
" " " G.W.R.
" STANFORD & MANN, New Street
Mr. ASTON, Smallbrook Street
Mr. BEACON, Pershore Street

Birmingham.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.
" " " L. & N.W.R.

Bradford.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.
" " " L. & Y. & G.N. Ry.
Messrs. BILLBOROUGH & KITCHINGHAM, Dale Street
Mr. W. H. CLOUGH, 28, Forster Square
Mr. HOPPER, Bridge Street
Mr. TROTTER, Cheapside

Brighton.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Bristol.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.
Carlisle.
Mr. STEWART, 36, Botchergate, and English Street
Messrs. MUIR & CO., English Street
Messrs. CHAS. THURNHAM & SON, English Street
Messrs. MENZIES, Railway Station

Cheltenham.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.

Chester.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.
Mr. ASTON, Market Square
Mr. MOUNTFORD, Northgate Street
Mr. C. W. THOMAS, Northgate Street
Messrs. MINSHILL & MEBSON, Eastgate Row
Mr. AINSWORTH, 54, Foregate Street

Cambridge

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Messrs. DEIGHTON, BELL & CO., Booksellers

Crewe.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Mr. EARDLEY, Chester Bridge
Mr. W. DISHART, 39, Nantwich Road

Croydon.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Durham.

Mr. CALDCLEUGH, Junr., 6, North Street
Mr. JOHN PALMER, Saddler Street
Mrs. SLACK, North Road

Darlington.

Mr. WALKER, Railway Station

Exeter.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Queen Street

Gloucester.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.

Ipswich.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Jarrow.

Messrs. ROBINSON & CO., Ormond Street

Koswick.

CHAPLIN'S LIBRARY
Liverpool.
Messrs. SMITH & SON, Castle Street (Wholesale)
" " " Book Stall, Lime Street Station
" " " Exchange "
" " " Central "
Mr. McKEON, 8, Exchange Street East
Mr. WINTERBOTTOM, Moorfields
Mr. PARTINGTON, Renshaw Street

Leeds.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Wellington Street
Railway Station
Central do.
Messrs. GOODALL & SUDDICK, New Station
Mr. JOHNSTON, 1, Call Street
Mr. BURNISTON, 48, Briggate, and Covered Market
Mr. CORNWALL, Upper Mill Hill
Mr. N. G. MORRISON, Bishopsgate
Mr. E. JOWETT, 51, North Street
Mr. RICHARD JACKSON, 16, Commercial Street
Mr. JAMES MILLS, 39, Bond Street

Leicester.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.

Manchester.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Depot (Wholesale)
" " " Book Stall, Exchange Ry. Station
" " " " London Rd., L. & N.
" " " " W. R. Station
" " " " ditto, M.S. & L. R.
" " " " Station
" " " " Central Ry. Station
" " " " Victoria Rly. Station
Mr. JOHN HEYWOOD (Wholesale Newsagent)
Mr. ABEL HEYWOOD, Oldham Street
Messrs. MORRIS & CO., 42, Deansgate
Mr. WHEELER, Pall Mall
Mr. POWELL, Corporation Street

Malvern (Great).

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stalls

Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Mr. C. C. ROSS, 35, Side, Dean Street
Mr. WATMOUGH, 40, Newgate Street
Mr. J. COCHRANE, 291, Westgate Hill
Mr. J. A. DE LACY, 218A, Westgate Road
Mr. RENDER, Newgate Street
Mr. MACEY, New Bridge Street

Nottingham.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.
" " " Northwich

Norwich.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Thorpe Station

Oxford.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Messrs. WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Booksellers

Peterborough.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Preston.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Portsmouth.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Plymouth.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall (Millbay)

Reading.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Stafford.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Stookton.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Mr. J. R. WOOD, Caxton House

Southampton.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Southport.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, L. & Y. R.

Shields (North).

Mr. CLARKE, Nile Street

Shields (South).

Mr. LAWSON, Fowler Street

Sheffield.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Victoria Station

Thirsk.

Mr. WALKER, Railway Station

Tunbridge Wells.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, S.E.R.

Warrington.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Windsor.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.

Wimbledon.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

York.

Mr. BENTLEY, 53, Coney Street
Mr. GILBERTSON, Silver Street
Mr. A. W. OUTHWAITE, 35, Market Street
Mr. SAMPSON, 13, Coney Street, and Book Stall, Ry. Str.
SCOTLAND.
Edinburgh.
Mr. ARCHIBALD, 2, Dalry Road, Haymarket
Mr. W. G. B. ARCUS, 43, Broughton Street
Mr. ELLIOTT, 26, Princes Street
Mr. FAIRGRIEVE, 7 & 9, Cockburn Street
Messrs. GRANT & SON, 107, Princes Street
Mr. GARDNER, Dundas Street
Mr. JAMES HAIG, 1, Antigua Street
Messrs. KEITH & CO., 68, Princes Street
Mr. WM. KAY, 5, Bank Street
Messrs. MOODIE BROS., 9, Antigua Street
Miss MAACK, 10, Clark Street
Messrs. MENZIES & CO., Hanover Street (Wholesale)
" " " Waverley Station (two Stalls)
" " " Central Station (Caledonian)
Mr. MACPHAIL, 33, St. Andrew's Square
Mr. ROBINSON, 111, Leith Street
Mr. F. M. SLOAN, 19, Broughton Street
Mr. W. M. URQUHART, 46, Queen's Ferry Road

Glasgow.

Mr. BLYTHWOOD, Sauchiehall Street
Mr. WM. BARR (Wholesale), 15, Dumbarton Road
" " " 62, Sauchiehall Street
Mr. M. DICKINSON, 192, Sauchiehall Street
Mr. GRAHAM (Wholesale), 108, Eglinton Street
Mr. GRAHAM'S Book Stall, College St. Station, G. & S.W.R.
" " " Queen Street Station
Mr. HIGGINS, 13, Stobcross Street
Mr. HOLMES (Wholesale), St. Enoch's Square
Mr. KEARNEY, High Street
Mr. HOOD, 220, Argyle Street
Mr. WM. LOVE (Wholesale), 221, Argyle Street
Messrs. MENZIES & CO. (Wholesale), 90, West Hill Street
" " " Central Station (two Stalls)
Mr. MOORE, Charing Cross
Mr. ROBERTSON, 142, Dumbarton Road
Mr. STEWART, 187, George Street
Mrs. WALKER, 230, Dumbarton Road
Messrs. WILSON & KING (Wholesale), 83, London Road
Leith.
Mr. GEORGE ELLIOTT, 71, Elm Row, Leith Walk
Mr. CHARLES DRUMMOND, 49, Duke Street
Mr. FRASER, 174, Leith Walk
Mr. A. HARDIE, 8, Eastern Road
Mr. C. HUNTER, 79, Brunswick Street, Leith Walk
Messrs. JOHN NAYLOR & CO., 147, Great Junction Street
Lockerbie.
Messrs. MENZIES & CO., Railway Station

Stirling.

ENEAS MACKAY, 43, Murray Place

IRELAND.

Dublin.

Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville Street

AMERICA.

New York.

Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM & SONS

PARIS.

Messrs. GALIGNANI, 224, Rue de Rivoli

Blaisdell

have a .
pull . .
over other

Pencils.

BEST LEAD . . . .
- - ALWAYS READY - -
- - - - NO WASTE.

USED BY

THE WAR OFFICE.
BANK OF ENGLAND.
NEW ZEALAND GOVERNMENT OFFICE.
BANKERS' CLEARING HOUSE.
UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT OFFICES.
OXFORD UNIVERSITY.
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.
ETON COLLEGE.
UNITED STATES ARSENAL.
UNITED STATES NAVY.
PENNSYLVANIA AND OTHER AMERICAN RAILWAY COMPANIES.
THE LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.
NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE AND OTHER INSURANCE OFFICES.

HOW TO USE:

Start the paper with a pin or any pointed instrument—a slight pull—off it comes, and the lead pencil is sharpened. Thirty Fresh Points to every Pencil. The only wear is from use, not from whittling away or breaking the lead.

No wood chips are left on the floor, nor any dirty marking-stuff on your fingers.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS:

The Queen.

"What an improvement this is upon the old laborious process of pencil sharpening, and how much less extravagant with regard to the consumption of the lead, which cannot snap off when thus treated!"

Westminster Gazette.

"It is decidedly an ingenious idea."

Black and White.

"The 'Blaisdell' self-sharpening paper pencil is a remarkably smart contrivance. The lead is encased in paper, which can easily be unrolled when a fresh point is required."

If your stationer does not sell them, send 1s. for a set of sample Pencils to—

BLAISDELL PENCILS CO., LIMITED,
46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

Self-Sharpener.

FOUNTAIN PENS AND STYLOS

The objections to them,
and how they have been met.

Ceteris paribus everyone would rather use a fountain pen that carries its own ink, and can, therefore, be used anywhere and at any moment, in preference to an ordinary pen, which has to be dipped in the ink every minute or so.

But fountain pens have acquired a bad name from two or three general objections to them. "A fountain pen is all very well," people say, "but it has to be carried upright, otherwise the ink comes out in your pocket; in fact, the ink spills and makes a hideous mess on the smallest provocation. By way of compensation, when you want to write, the ink retires to the barrel (if it isn't all spilled into your pocket) and refuses to emerge until the pen has been shaken and thumped until it squirts out a blot on the carpet."

This used to be true; but the CAW PEN has met the difficulty. It does not have to be carried upright; it can be carried sideways, upside down, or in any position whatever. The ink cannot possibly spill, because it is in a hermetically closed chamber, screwed tight. There is no air-hole.

The pen can be jerked or thrown about as much as you please; it cannot spill. On the other hand, until the CAW PEN is opened for use the nib (which is a gold one of the finest quality) is immersed in the ink. Consequently it writes at once, without giving any trouble.

The CAW PEN is not merely the only fountain pen which anyone cares to use who has once seen it as a pocket pen, but it is so convenient for desk use that it supersedes all other pens whatever.

It is easily filled, and having a wide mouth does not clog with air bubbles during that operation. Prices from 12s. 6d.

"Caw pens have a repnte beyond their neighbours."—Westminster Budget.

The objection to Stylographic Pens is that the point rarely suits the writer's hand, and cannot be adjusted.

The CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN can be adjusted in an instant. It has not all the advantages of the CAW FOUNTAIN PEN; but for people who prefer a stylo this is the best stylo on the market. Prices from 5s.

British Depot—

46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

READY JANUARY 17TH. AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

THE BUILDING OF THE EMPIRE. The Story of England's Growth from Elizabeth to Victoria. By ALFRED THOMAS STORY...

THE JOURNALS of WALTER WHITE, Assistant-Secretary to the Royal Society. With a Preface by his Brother, WILLIAM WHITE...

WHAT IS LIFE? Or, Where are we? What are we? Whence did we come? And whither do we go? By FREDERICK HOYDEN...

MODERN ARCHITECTURE. A Book for Architects and the Public. By H. HEATH COLE STATHAM, F.R.I.B.A., Editor of the Builder...

MR. COOPER'S NEW SPORTING NOVEL. THE MARCHIONESS AGAINST THE COUNTY. By E. H. COOPER, Author of "Mr. Blaise of Newmarket."

THE ATHENEUM SAYS:—"This is an eminently readable and entertaining book."

THE PRESERVATION OF OPEN SPACES, and of FOOTPATHS, and OTHER RIGHTS OF WAY. By Sir ROBERT HUNTER, M.A., Solicitor to the Post Office...

LONDON: EAST HARDING STREET, E.C.

EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE.

LETTERS and PAPERS of ANDREW ROBERTSON, A.M. Born 1777, died 1845. Miniature Painter to his late Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex...

THE ART OF SEEING. By an Artist. Elementary and Practical Hints as to the Perception and Enjoyment of the Beautiful in Nature and in the Fine Arts...

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. By Captain DAY (Oxfordshire Light Infantry). Besides describing the unique collection of Instruments exhibited at the Royal Military Exhibition...

SCORES and ANNALS of the WEST KENT CRICKET CLUB (1812-1896). Compiled by PHILIP NORMAN. With Woodbury-gravure and other illustrations. 21s. net.

"Full of interest for lovers of cricket, whether on its practical or its social side. . . . Delightful book."

SPECIAL REPORTS ON EDUCATIONAL SUBJECTS, 1896-7. 3s. 4d.; by post, 3s. 9d.

"Full of the most interesting and valuable information on a great variety of subjects."—Secondary Education. "Should be read by everybody who wants to know the true inwardness of foreign competition."—Daily News.

THE REFORMATORY and INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL ACTS. With Memorandum, Appendices, and Index. By F. V. HORNBY, Barrister-at-law, and one of Her Majesty's Assistant Inspectors of Reformatory and Industrial Schools. Cloth, 5s.

A HISTORY of NEWFOUNDLAND from the ENGLISH, COLONIAL, and FOREIGN RECORDS. By D. W. PROWSE, Q.C., LL.D., Judge of the Central District Court of Newfoundland. With numerous Illustrations and Maps. Second Edition. Revised and Corrected. Cloth 6s.

THE PRESERVATION OF OPEN SPACES, and of FOOTPATHS, and OTHER RIGHTS OF WAY. By Sir ROBERT HUNTER, M.A., Solicitor to the Post Office, and late Hon. Solicitor to the Commons Preservation Society. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

LONDON: EAST HARDING STREET, E.C.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS'S SELECTED LIST.

ADMIRALS ALL, and other Verses.

By HENRY NEWBOLT. (Shilling Garland, No. VIII.) Fcap. 8vo, 1s. net. [Seventh Edition.]

"Genuinely inspired patriotic verse. . . . There are but a dozen pieces in this shilling's worth, but there is no more among them."

St. James's Gazette.

"All the pieces are instinct with the national English spirit. They are written in a sturdy rhythmical speech, worthy of their own high themes."—Scotsman.

"Looking back to recent achievements in the same line, and including even Mr. Kipling's, we do not know where to find anything better after its own kind than his ballad of 'Drake's Drum.'"—Westminster Gazette.

"To the hand of modern ballad-writers a new recruit is always most welcome. It is therefore with the greatest possible pleasure that we notice the delightful little collection of ballads which Mr. Newbolt publishes under the title of 'Admirals All.' Mr. Newbolt has done a notable thing. He has managed to write ballads full of ring and so, and full also of patriotic feeling without imitating Mr. Rudyard Kipling. 'Admiral All' is practically Mr. Stevenson's charming essay on 'The Old Admirals' put into ballad form—Mr. Newbolt has improved on the essay, and given us a poem which could be sung by sailors all the world over."—Spectator.

"Stirring ballads, written by a man who has force and spirit."—Times.

"These splendid songs will take an eminent and enduring place among our patriotic poetry."—Daily Chronicle.

"There are here all the qualities of ballad poetry, simplicity, directness, and vivid impression, and the quick sympathy which leaps from word to eye, and makes every reader yearn to be up and doing."—Literature.

"We should like to see these stirring verses in the hands of every high-spirited youth in the Empire."—Globe.

CHRIST IN HADES, and other Poems.

By STEPHEN PHILLIPS. Fifth Edition, with Additions, 1s. net. [Shilling Garland Series.]

"It is a wonderful dream, a dream that stirs the heart in almost every line, though Christ himself never utter a word throughout the poem, but only brings His sad countenance and bleeding brow and torn hands into that imaginary world of half-conceived and chaotic gloom."—Spectator.

TWO ESSAYS UPON MATTHEW

ARNOLD, with his Letters to the Author. By ARTHUR GALTON. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"It is good to be reminded of the man himself not only by the reappearance of his delightful satire ('Friendship's Garland'), but by such books as the tiny volume."—Times.

"A small book, but more in it than in many a heavier appreciation of the great critic."—Scotsman.

"We heartily welcome this little book."—Saturday Review.

IRELAND, with other Poems. By

LIONEL JOHNSON. (Uniform with "Poems.") Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"Mr. Johnson's poems regarded at first rather as the austere exercises of a ripe scholar, have now taken their proper place by reason of the real fire and imaginative fervour which underlie their technical excellence."—Westminster Gazette.

"A poet whom the Irish reader will take to his heart of hearts."—Freeman's Journal.

THE JOY OF MY YOUTH. A Novel.

By CLAUD NICHOLSON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"There is very delicate work in 'The Joy of My Youth.' There is not much story in it, but reminiscences from the history of a sensitive man, peculiarly open to impressions and influences from without. It has a Breton background, and, indeed, there is nothing at all English about it. . . . Its style, its sentiment, its attitude were all made in France. It has charm and subtlety, and the childhood portion must captivate all readers who have time to linger in their reading."—Sketch.

"The delicate charm of this story is not realised until the reader has read more than two or three chapters. The first chapter is so read more than two or three chapters. The first chapter is so read more than two or three chapters. The first chapter is so read more than two or three chapters. . . . Too delicate, too cultivated, most will vote the book; but that judgment will ignore its intention, which is fulfilled almost without a flaw."—Bookman.

SELECTED POEMS from the WORKS of the Hon. RODEN NOEL. With a Biographical and Critical Essay by PERCY ADDELSHAW. With 2 Portraits. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Adleshaw has done his work well. . . . It is inconceivable that all will die of a poet endowed with so splendid an originality, though claiming kinship, by the rare blend of his qualities with Blake, with Victor Hugo, and with Edgar Poe."—Manchester Guardian.

AN ATTIC in BOHEMIA: a Diary without Dates. By E. H. LACON WATSON, Author of "The Unconscious Humourist." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Watson discourses with shrewdness and humour upon such topics as diaries, tea and muffins, golf and matrimony. . . . There are few writers who can treat so deftly and so entertainingly the most commonplace feelings and incidents of everyday life."—Scotsman.

"The style is always fresh and graceful; it is always easy without losing a pleasant literary flavour and without degenerating into slipshod slanginess. His humour is spontaneous (or seems to be so) because he has the art of concealing his art, and a title subacid at times, whereby it loses nothing in piquancy. Of the seventeen essays which make up the volume there is not one which does not contain some happy fancy, some quaint conceit, or some shrewd reflection."—Pall Mall Gazette.

LONDON: ELKIN MATHEWS, Vigo Street, W.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S LIST.

THE WORKS OF LORD BYRON.

Edited by WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY. To be completed in Twelve Volumes. Small crown 8vo, price 5s. net each: also an edition, limited to 150 sets for sale in Great Britain, printed on Van Gelder's hand-made paper. Price £6 6s. net.

Subscribers names for this edition of the Complete Works of Lord Byron, Edited, with Copious Notes, by W. E. Henley, are now being received.

VERSE, Vol. I. Containing "Hours of Idleness," "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers," and "Child Harold." With a Portrait after Holmeis. [Next month.]

LETTERS, Vol. I. 1804-1813. With a Portrait after Phillips. [Is now ready.]

Academy.—These Byron Letters (Vol. I.) Mr. Henley has annotated as never surely were letters annotated before. . . . It is safe to say that henceforth the typical edition of Byron can never be separated from these notes. In conclusion, if Byron has waited long for a heaven-sent editor, he has him at last."

PETER THE GREAT. By K. WALLSZEWSKI. With a Portrait. 1 vol., 562 pp., 6s. The Sketch.—"A brilliant book. The historian calls the figure up and makes it move before us. A strange, a terrible story, which compels admiration."

UNDER THE DRAGON FLAG. My Experiences in the Japo-Chinese War. By JAMES ALLEN. 1 vol., 3s. 6d.

Daily Mail.—"A sensational little book, which is likely to be talked about."

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE FOURTH NAPOLEON. By Charles BENHAM.

THE BETH BOOK. By Sarah Grand. Punch.—"The heroine of 'The Beth Book' is one of Sarah Grand's most fascinating creations. The story is absorbing; the truth to nature in the character every reader with some experience of life will recognise."

THE CHRISTIAN. By Hail Caine. The Sketch.—"It quivers and palpitates with passion, for even Mr. Caine's bitterest detractors cannot deny that he is the possessor of that rarest of all gifts, genius."

THE NIGGER of the "NARCISSEUS." By JOSEPH CONRAD. The Daily Telegraph.—"There are few characters among the crew which do not stand out with vivid and lifelike presentment. We know them all. Mr. Conrad has for the first time given to the world the English seaman as he is."

THE GADFLY. By E. L. VOYNICH. The St. James's Gazette.—"Exciting, sinister, even terrifying, we must allow it to be a work of real genius."

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by S. R. GARDINER, D.C.L., LL.D., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, and REGINALD L. POOLE, M.A., Ph.D. No. 49.—JANUARY, 1898.—Royal 8vo, price 5s.

1. Articles.

THE EARLY HISTORY OF BABYLONIA.—I. THE RULERS of KENGI and KISH. By Sir HENRY II. HOWARTH, K.C.I.E., M.P.

THE CONQUEROR'S FOOTPRINTS IN DOMESDAY. By F. HABING.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE NAVY from the RESTORATION OF THE REVOLUTION. Part II., continued. By J. R. TAYLOR.

JOHN DE ROETHON and the ROETHON PAPERS. By J. P. CLARKE.

2. Notes and Documents.—3. Reviews of Books.—4. Correspondence.—5. Notices of Periodicals.—8. List of Recent Historical Publications.

LONGMANS, GREEN & Co., London, New York, and Bombay.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 383.—JANUARY, 1898.—8vo, price 6s.

I. VALMIY and AUERSTADT.

II. THE ANNALS of a PUBLISHING HOUSE.

III. DONGOLA.

IV. THE IRISH UNIVERSITY QUESTION.

V. THE SUCCESS of the ANGLO-SAXONS.

VI. THE HARLEY PAPERS.

VII. THE BIRDS of LONDON.

VIII. THE WORKS of MR. RUDYARD KIPLING.

IX. MR. BRUCE on the FUTURE of SOUTH AFRICA.

X. INDIAN FRONTIER POLICY.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co., London, New York, and Bombay.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 373, will be published on WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 19.

CONTENTS.

I. WAGNER and the BAYREUTH IDEA.

II. IRELAND in '98.

III. THE VENTURE of THEMIS.

IV. GEORGE VILLIERS, DUKE of BUCKINGHAM.

V. FOUR GREAT HEADMASTERS.

VI. NELSON.

VII. COLONIAL CHAMPIONS in the MOTHER COUNTRY.

VIII. GIBSON et LAUSANNE.

IX. ENGLISH ART in the VICTORIAN AGE.

X. THE HOUSE of BLACKWOOD.

XI. THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL.

XII. FIFTY YEARS of LIBERATIONISM.

LONDON: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S SELECTED LIST.

WILL BE READY NEXT WEEK.

TOURGUENIEFF and HIS FRENCH CIRCLE: a Series of Letters to Flaubert, George Sand, Emile Zola, Guy de Maupassant, Gambetta, and Others. Edited by H. HALPERINE-KAMINSKY. Translated, with a Preface, by ETHEL M. ARNOLD. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

WILL BE READY NEXT WEEK.

WILD NATURE WON BY KINDNESS. By Mrs. BRIGHTWEN. Many Illustrations. New Edition (the Eighth). Cloth, 1s. 6d.

WILL BE READY NEXT WEEK.

HOW to be HAPPY THOUGH MARRIED. By Rev. E. J. HARDY, M.A. New Edition, completing the Fifth Thousand. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.

NEW VOLUMES. Price 6s. each.

JOHN OLIVER HOBBER. The School for Saints.
LORD ERNEST HAMILTON. The Outlaws of the Marches.
DR. WEIR MITCHELL. Hugh Wynne.
BENJAMIN SWIFT. The Tormentor.
GEORGE BARTRAM. The People of Clopton.
OLIVE SCHREINER. Trooper Peter Halket.

The WORK of CHARLES KEENE. Introduction by J. PENNELL, and a Bibliography. Over 139 Illustrations. Buckram, £3 13s. 6d. net.

LETTERS of DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI to WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, 1854-1876. Illustrated, cloth, 12s.

An ARTIST'S LETTERS from JAPAN. By JOHN LA FARGE. Illustrated, cloth, 16s.

The STORY of MARIE ANTOINETTE. By ANNA L. BICKNELL. Illustrated, cloth, 12s.

LIVES of TWELVE BAD WOMEN. Edited by ARTHUR VINCENT. Illustrated, cloth, 16s.

MARGARET FORSTER: A Dream Within a Dream. By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA. Cloth, 6s.

The LOVE AFFAIRS of SOME FAMOUS MEN. By Rev. E. J. HARDY, M.A. Cloth gilt, 6s.

WILD LIFE in SOUTHERN SEAS. By LOUIS BECKE. Second Edition. Cloth gilt, 5s.

The PEOPLES and POLITICS of the FAR EAST. By HENRY NORMAN. Over 60 Illustrations and 4 Maps. Third Edition. Cloth, 21s.

SIR THOMAS MATTLAND By W. Frewen LORD. (Vol. 2 of "Builders of Greater Britain.") Illustrated, cloth, 5s.

SIR JAMES Y. SIMPSON. By H. Laing GORDON. (Vol. 3 of "Masters of Medicine.") Illustrated, cloth, 3s. 6d.

MODERN FRANCE. By Andre Le Bon. (New Volume of "The Story of the Nations.") Cloth, 5s.

WITHOUT PREJUDICE. By I. Zangwill. Author of "The Master," &c. Cloth, 6s.

GLIMPSES into PLANT LIFE. By Mrs. BRIGHTWEN. Author of "Wild Nature." Illustrated. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

The CROWD: a Study of the Popular Mind. By GUSTAVE LE BON. Second Edition. Cloth, 6s.

THOSE DREADFUL TWINS: Middy and Bessie. By THEMSELVES. Second Edition. Illustrated. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

LIZA of LAMBETH: A Study of London Slum Life. By W. S. MAUGHAM. Second Edition. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

OLD TALES from GREECE. By Alice ZIMMERN. Second Edition. Frontispiece. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Le SEUVE. A Novel. By Ouida. Second Edition. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

LEISURE HOURS in the STUDY. By JAMES MACKINNON, Ph.D. Cloth, 6s.

AUSTRALASIAN DEMOCRACY. By HENRY DE R. WALKER. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A SELECTION from the POEMS of MATHILDE BLIND. Edited by ARTHUR SYMONS. Parchment, 7s. 6d. Edition de Luxe, 10s. 6d. net.

A Set of Prospectuses, Catalogues, and Lists, containing descriptive details of books in every class of literature, will be sent post free to any address on receipt of card. If desired, arrangements can be made for intending purchasers to view any book at the local bookseller's.

London:

T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

Hodder & Stoughton's Publications.

READY NEXT WEEK.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE BOOK OF THE TWELVE PROPHETS.

COMMONLY CALLED THE MINOR.

By Prof. GEORGE ADAM SMITH, D.D., LL.D.,
THE SECOND VOLUME,
COMPLETING THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE
IN 49 VOLUMES.

TENTH THOUSAND.

THE IDEAL LIFE, and Other Un-published Addresses. By HENRY DRUMMOND. With Introductory Sketches by W. ROBERTSON NICOLL and IAN MACLAREN. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.
"These addresses are written in a singularly beautiful style, and contain much beautiful thinking, showing that the writer had pondered deeply on some of the most spiritual aspects of religion. They will, we are sure, be much prized by the many admirers of their author."—Glasgow Herald.

THE CLERICAL LIFE. A Series of Letters to Ministers. By JOHN WATSON, D.D., Prof. MARCUS DODS, D.D., Prof. JAMES DENNEY, D.D., Principal T. C. EDWARDS, D.D., W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D., T. G. SELBY, T. H. DARLOW, M.A., and J. T. STODDART. Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

DAVID LYALL'S LOVE STORY. By the AUTHOR of "THE LAND o' the LEAL." Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

THE LAND o' the LEAL. By David LYALL. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.
"The tales are tender and pathetic, permeated with simple religious feeling much more likely to edify the ordinary reader than what are known as Sunday books."—Times.

ON THE THRESHOLD OF CENTRAL AFRICA. A Record of Twenty Years' Pioneering in the Upper Zambesi, among the Banyal and Barotse. By FRANCOIS COILLARD, Paris Evangelical Mission. Translated and Edited by C. W. MACKINTOSH, with Photogravure Portrait and 40 Illustrations from Photographs by the Author. Imperial 8vo, 15s.
"We do not remember to have read any book of missionary adventure in Africa more thrilling and beautiful than this, since Livingstone laid down his life for that great land."—Lewis Mercury.

SECOND EDITION

Completing Seventh Thousand.

FRIENDSHIP. By the Rev. Hugh Black, M.A., Free St. George's, Edinburgh. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"A wise and charming little book on Friendship. It is full of good things winningly expressed, and though very simply written, is the result of real thought and experience. Mr. Black's is the art that conceals art."—British Weekly.

TO the ANGEL'S CHAIR. A Story of Ideals in a Welsh Village. By the Rev. JOHN THOMAS, M.A., Liverpool. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

"Written with a delicacy and sympathy that has not been equalled for many a long day."—Christian World.

THRO' LATTICE WINDOWS. By W. J. DAWSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The choicest bit of literary work that has yet come from Mr. Dawson's gifted pen."—The Methodist Recorder.

SECOND EDITION.

THE LAST THINGS. A Study of the Coming of Christ, the Eternal Punishment of Sin, and the Eternal City of God. By the Rev. J. AGAR BEET, D.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The Right Rev. G. A. Chadwick, D.D., Bishop of Derry and Raphoe, says:—"The most sober and careful, as well as thorough and trustworthy examination known to me of the scriptural teaching on Future Punishment.""

MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From her Birth to her Flight into England. A Brief Biography, with Critical Notes, a few Documents hitherto unpublished, and an Itinerary. By D. HAY FLEMING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"As a critical history and a magazine of facts, the book is an invaluable one; its study the essential preliminary to the first steps towards an historical judgment of Mary. It will secure Mr. Fleming an honourable reputation for fine scholarship and patient industry."—Academy.

THIRD EDITION.

THE SILENCE OF GOD. By Robert ANDERSON, C.B., LL.D., Assistant-Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"He writes forcibly, eloquently, with much knowledge of what others think and say, and with profound conviction and confidence."—Daily News.

Dr. Anderson's book is well worth reading."—The Glasgow Herald.
BY FAR EUPHRATES: a Tale. By D. ALCOCK, author of "The Spanish Brothers." Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"This is a vivid story of sublime heroism in the face of fiendish cruelty."—Church Times.
BELL'S READER'S SHAKESPEARE. By D. C. BELL, author of "Bell's Standard Elocutionist."

In 2 Vols. Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. each.
Vol. I.—THE HISTORICAL PLAYS, Condensed, Connected, and Emphasised for School, College, Parlour, and Platform. By D. C. BELL. Vol. II. THE TRAGEDIES AND ONE ROMANTIC PLAY, Condensed, Connected, and Emphasised for School, College, Parlour, and Platform. By D. C. BELL.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

OLIPHANT'S LIST.

SECOND EDITION OF
DR. WHYTE'S NEW BOOK.
SECOND EDITION. Price 2s., art linen, gilt top.

SANTA TERESA: AN APPRECIATION.

With some of the Best Passages of the Saint's Writings Selected, Adapted, and Arranged by ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D.

The BOOKMAN says: "As an introduction to the study of the life and works of one of the most remarkable women of any age. Dr. Whyte's monograph is admirable."

By the Same Author. Fourth Thousand, price 2s. Uniform with "Santa Teresa."

JACOB BEHMEN: an Appreciation
Also, price 2s., uniform with above.

THOUGHTS on the SPIRITUAL LIFE.
By JACOB BEHMEN. Translated from the German by CHARLOTTE ADA RAINY.

The New Volume of the "FAMOUS SCOTS" Series is—
ROBERT FERGUSON.
By Dr. A. B. GROSART.

Price 1s. 6d., cloth; with gilt top, 2s. 6d.

The SCOTSMAN says: "The book will be welcomed as a worthy addition to that wonderfully entertaining and instructive series of biographies, the 'Famous Scots.'"

In the same Series, uniform in price and style.

SIR WALTER SCOTT. By George SAINTSBURY.

THE "BLACKWOOD" GROUP. By Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS.

TOBIAS SMOLLETT. By Oliphant SMEATON.

JAMES BOSWELL. By W. Keith LEASK.

List of the "FAMOUS SCOTS" Series post free.

Crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE, PURITAN and RECUSANT. By Rev. T. OSWALD. With a Prefatory Note by Rev. Principal J. CRAWFORD DYKES, D.D. Sir HENRY IRVING—"A most interesting book, which ought to have many readers."
The SPECTATOR—"Mr. Carter has, by a clear-headed historical investigation, added definitely to our knowledge about Shakespeare himself."

New and Cheaper Edition, with 16 Illustrations, 2s. 6d.

MODERN PALESTINE; or, the Need of a New Crusade. By Rev. JOHN LAMOND, B.D. LIFE and WORKS.—Mr. Lamond has given us a good account of his travels in Palestine—fresh and living, because he did not follow the beaten track. It will be found worth while to ponder his plea for Palestine.

Now ready, cloth extra, price 2s. 6d.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS. By Rev. GEORGE JACKSON, B.A., of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission, Edinburgh.

The YOUNG MAN.—"These are, in the best sense of the word, sermons for the times, and we recommend them to all who want to settle the problems and difficulties of life according to the spirit and genius of Jesus Christ."

THE CHINESE CRISIS—BOOKS TO READ.

CHINA.

A CYCLE of CATHAY: China, South and North, with Personal Reminiscences. By W. A. P. MARTIN, D.D., LL.D., ex-Pr sident Emeritus of the Imperial Tungwen College, Peking. With Map and Numerous Illustrations. 7s. 6d.
The TIMES.—"It is perhaps the most valuable contribution that has been made to our knowledge of China in recent years."

CHINESE CHARACTERISTICS. By ARTHUR H. SMITH, D.D. Popular Edition. Revised with 16 Full-Page Illustrations. 5s.

The LITERATURE.—"The series of mastery essays embodied in 'Chinese Characteristics' has deservedly achieved for itself a position among the standard works indispensable to every student of the Far East."

JAPAN.

THE GIST of JAPAN: the Islands, their People, and Missions. By Rev. R. B. PEERY, A.M. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations, price 5s.
The ATHENEUM says: "Mr. Peery's volume portrays with admirable truth and justice the Japanese people."

FORMOSA.

FROM FAR FORMOSA: the Island, its People and Missions. By GEORGE LESLIE MACKAY, D.D. Twenty-three Years's a Missionary in Formosa. Edited by the Rev. J. A. MACDONALD. Third Edition. With Portraits, Illustrations, and Maps. 7s. 6d.

The LONDON and CHINA TELEGRAPH—"The work is valuable and entertaining, and is as good an account of the island as the general reader will desire."

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER, 21, Paternoster Square; and Edinburgh.

CONTENTS.

|   | Page |
|---|------|
| OUR AWARDS FOR 1897:                              |      |
| Mr. Stephen Phillips's Poems .. .. .              | 47   |
| Mr. Henley's Essay on Burns .. .. .               | 48   |
| REVIEWS:  |      |
| Pindar's Rival .. .. .                            | 49   |
| Popular Anthropology .. .. .                      | 50   |
| South Africa .. .. .                              | 51   |
| Criticism from a Distance .. .. .                 | 52   |
| BRIEFER MENTION .. .. .                           | 53   |
| EDUCATIONAL SUPPLEMENT.                           |      |
| INTERVIEW WITH DR. J. E. C. WELLDON .. .. .       | 57   |
| EDUCATION FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA .. .. .  | 58   |
| WHAT THE PEOPLE READ: VIII., A Schoolboy .. .. .  | 59   |
| THE TRADE IN SCHOOL BOOKS .. .. .                 | 59   |
| NEWSPAPER ENGLISH .. .. .                         | 60   |
| REVIEWS:  |      |
| Science .. .. .                                   | 64   |
| English .. .. .                                   | 66   |
| French .. .. .                                    | 70   |
| THE CLASSICS:                                     |      |
| Greek .. .. .                                     | 71   |
| Latin .. .. .                                     | 72   |
| NOTES AND NEWS .. .. .                            | 75   |
| REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED:                         |      |
| IV., Matthew Arnold .. .. .                       | 77   |
| A FORGOTTEN NOVEL BY JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE .. .. . | 78   |
| A GERMAN MARRIAGE .. .. .                         | 79   |
| THE BOOK MARKET .. .. .                           | 80   |
| THE WEEK .. .. .                                  | 80   |
| New Books Received .. .. .                        | 80   |
| DEAMA .. .. .                                     | 81   |
| CORRESPONDENCE .. .. .                            | 82   |

OUR AWARDS FOR 1897.

THE "CROWNED" BOOKS.

IN accordance with our intention to crown two books of signal merit published in 1897, we have made the following awards:

ONE HUNDRED GUINEAS to MR. STEPHEN PHILLIPS, for his volume of Poems.

FIFTY GUINEAS to MR. WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY, for his Essay on the Life, Genius, and Achievement of Burns, contained in the fourth volume of the Centenary Edition of The Poetry of Robert Burns.

THE bestowal of the awards has been beset with difficulties. As our readers have had an opportunity of seeing, the men of letters of whom we requested an opinion differed so completely as to be of little help as guides. The task of selecting recipients, therefore, devolved wholly upon ourselves. Before proceeding to choose, it was necessary first to reply to the question: Are these awards intended more for the encouragement or for the recognition of merit? In other words: Is it more desirable to find young writers of striking potentialities and to help them on their way, or to select two of the best books of the year irrespective of the age or standing of their authors? The answer was that, in the present instance, excellence of performance was to be preferred above richness of promise, "excellence" as here used implying good matter, good manner, and good personality. So much premised, we turned to our duty.

The result of a searching inquiry into the merits of some half-score of the foremost books of 1897 was that a cheque for one hundred guineas has been sent to Mr. Stephen Phillips for his volume of Poems, and a cheque for fifty guineas to Mr. W. E. Henley for his essay on Burns. In other columns the reader will find articles on these works, which should afford reasons enough for the faith that is in us. It is not likely that the choice will please everyone—indeed, the suggestions from outside which have already been printed in the ACADEMY are sufficient testimony to the contrary—but the most patient consideration of the whole matter convinces us that we have done well.

Mr. Stephen Phillips's poetical rivals were three in number—Mr. Francis Thompson, Mr. Watson, and Mr. Newbolt. We think, however, of Mr. Thompson's 1897 volume more as a collection of magnificent experiments than matured poems; while, on the other hand, Mr. William Watson's Hope of the World causes us to glance back to what he has done rather than to look forward to what he may do. More persistent rivalry was that of Mr. Newbolt, whose Admirals All holds in its thirty pages a kind of straightforward, vigorous, musical national verse of which Englishmen cannot have too much. But good though we consider these ballads, they have not the shining merit of Mr. Phillips's work, nor can we hold them quite worthy of the honour of "coronation."

In criticism Mr. Henley's position was contested by Mr. W. P. Ker's Epic and Romance, Mr. Walter Raleigh's Style, and Mr. Arthur Symons's Studies in Two Literatures. Against each, however, some objection held. Mr. Ker's volume, erudite and fascinating though it be, is eminently academic—that is to say, the good personality that might be there, and in a work of literature should be there, has been too vigorously suppressed in the cause of learning. Mr. Raleigh's brilliant essay has literary skill and distinction in a degree not often to be met with; but it savours over much of a tour de force. Mr. Symons's Studies in Two Literatures is a thoughtful, graceful work, but it is detached, a series of flutters rather than a steady flight.

Other claimants were, especially in fiction, numerous, and possessed of considerable right to be heard. Mr. Joseph Conrad's Nigger of the "Narcissus" was judged to be too slight and episodic, although we consider it a remarkable imaginative feat, marked by striking literary power. Again, Mr. Benjamin Swift's The Tormentor stands out as a vivid and commendable performance, although its author's method is still too immature and spasmodic to be within the scope of the ACADEMY's awards. Mr. Kipling has himself fixed his standard too high for Captains Courageous to be satisfying; and The Skipper's Wooing by Mr. Jacobs and The King with Two Faces by Miss Coleridge, in different ways, do not quite comply with the requirements set forth in the definition of "excellence" given above. The author of St. Ives is, alas, dead. Mrs. Craigie, we may add, expressed a wish that The School for Saints should not be entered for competition.

Two other claimants remain: Mme. Darmesteter for her Life of Renan, and Mrs. Constance Garnett for her admirable translation of Turgenev's novels into English. Mrs. Garnett has been at work for some years in the prosecution of her task; but it came practically to an end in 1897 with the publication of the eleventh volume—Torrents of Spring. Translation was held, however, to be outside our scope; and Mme. Darmesteter's biography, beautiful and tender though it be, had to give place to Mr. Henley's Burns.

MR. STEPHEN PHILLIPS'S POEMS.

IT is but a fortnight ago that we reviewed Mr. Stephen Phillips's work at some length; and we have not much to add now to what was said then. Mr. Phillips has qualities out of which the very staff of poetry is wrought. He is sensitive, with fibres that respond quickly to the pity and the passion of the world; he is thoughtful, curious after certain subtleties of thought, ready for philosophy; he has a feeling for style which impresses us as being of natural growth, rather than painfully acquired; and above all, he takes his art seriously. His heart is attuned to the beauty and the meaning of things, and to those who have ears to hear he will endeavour to interpret them. The author of the following lines, which we had not room to quote in our review, has surely seen deep into nature's heart:

"BY THE SEA.

"Remember, ah remember, how we walked Together on the sea-cliff! You were come
From bathing in the ocean, and the sea
Was not yet dry upon your hair; together
We walked in the wet wind till we were far
From voices, even from the thoughts of men.
Remember how on the warm beach we sat
By the old barque, and in the smell of tar;
While the full ocean on the pebbles dropped,
And in our ears the intimate low wind
Of noon, that breathing from some ancient place,
Blew on us merest sleep and pungent youth.
So deeply glad he grew that in pure joy
Closer we came; your wild and wet dark hair Slashed in my eyes your essence and your sting.
We had no thought; we troubled not to speak;
Slowly your head fell down upon my breast,
In the soft breeze the acquiescing sun;
And the sea-bloom, the colour of calm wind,
Was on your cheek; like children then we kissed,

Innocent with the sea and pure with air;
My spirit fled into thee. The moon climbed,
The sea foamed nearer, and we two arose;
But ah, how tranquil from that deep embrace!
And with no sadness from that natural kiss:
Beautiful indolence was on our brains,
And on our limbs, as we together swayed,
Between the luminous ocean and dark fields.
We two in vivid slumber without haste,
Returned; while veil on veil the heaven was bared;
And a new glory was on land and sea.
And the moist evening fallow, richly dark,
Sent up to us the odour cold of sleep,
The infinite sweet of death: so we returned,
Delaying ever, calm companions,
Peacefully slow beside the moody heave
Of the moon-brilliant billow to the town."

Mr. Phillips has also a more realistic manner. Modern life wants its poet badly enough; and if Mr. Phillips can show us anything of heavenly beauty or of tragic terror under its tawdriness and its squalor, he will earn a reward that all Academies in the world cannot give him. But, for the moment, he seems to us confused with the spectacle he looks at—the glare of the gas-lamps blind him; we hear in his verses the roar of what he calls "the orchestral Strand," but not any central melody; he has not set the life of London to any music, but only reproduced some of its discords.

Yet that he will find a music of his own we are confident, for in both his long poems of modern life—The Wife and The Woman with the Dead Soul—there are passages which, taken alone, would almost justify our selection. Mr. Phillips is labouring to find out precisely what he means, and to put down none but true and genuine impressions. That singular instinct for the right word, so characteristic of him at his best, helps him to flash the picture time after time upon our consciousness; and we are convinced that popularity, if it comes his way, will not tempt him to remit his labour. He has solidly laid the foundation-stone of a fine reputation. May the edifice grow to ample and enduring proportions!

MR. HENLEY'S ESSAY ON BURNS.

THE first thing—and, for the matter of that, the last thing—that strikes one in Mr. Henley's essay is the victorious art of it. So far, it is its author's masterpiece, in the sense that, being more largely and deliberately planned than any of his former ventures in criticism, it yet loses nothing, for all its superadded qualities, of the old brilliancy, lightness, and deftness of touch. In Views and Reviews, Mr. Henley was the beau sabreur of the weekly press. It was open to him—you are sure he did not undervalue the privilege—to take up and lay down his subjects as he chose, to vent his likes and dislikes, to kick up his heels in audacity and paradox, to be personal, whimsical, irresponsible. The result was a suggestive, fascinating, disputable little book. It was fine criticism, but not altogether serious criticism. But in dealing with Burns Mr. Henley was bound to be serious. It fell to him to say the last words which should sum up a long and elaborate investigation into masses of detailed and often inconsistent evidence. He had to pronounce a deliberate literary judgment, to take up a considered position which would be tenable in the face of almost inevitable outcry. He has not shirked the responsibilities laid upon him. Both in this essay and in the commentary, for which he shares the credit with Mr. T. F. Henderson, the signs of a minute and rigorous industry are apparent. And the verdict given is a solid one, standing complete, four square to all the winds that blow. Disagree with it who will, it is impossible to challenge the patience, the sincerity, the conscientiousness with which it is formulated. For all this, it is, as we have said, the art of the thing that strikes us first and last. Mr. Henley has followed the Dry-as-dust's method to spurn the Dry-as-dust's results. The pains which he has spent upon his work, the mass of closely studied facts and opinions which lie behind it, are suffered no whit to affect the vigour and freshness of the expression which it finds. The phrasing is as vivid and clear-cut, the metaphors are as ringing, as ever. Gregory, schooled in the University, has not forgotten his swashing blow.

One of Mr. Henley's reviewers—from "ahint the Border," of course—has expressed his disappointment that Mr. Henley "has not even attempted to give Burns his place in European literature." As though criticism were a class-list or a horse-race! Mr. Henley knew his business better. And this was, not to compare the incomparables or measure the incommensurables, but, for once, to paint from the life; to thrust aside the veils of ignorance or idealism, and to give the man and the poet in his habit as he stood. Burns has been pawed over often enough by patriots and sentimentalists; let us for once have the plain unvarnished truth, not explained away, not excused, not necessarily even condemned—simply stated. Such we conceive to have been the critical ideals which Mr. Henley set before him in undertaking his task, and with what vigilance, what zest he lives up to them! How salient his portrait! how it stands out from the canvas! with what economy and precision of line the artist insists on what he means to say. Let us recall some of the fine passages in which Mr. Henley's conception of Burns, a vital and creative conception, a conception with which it shall go hard if it be not permanent, is built up. And first of Burns the man:

"We have to recall the all-important fact that Burns was first and last a peasant, and first and last a peasant in revolt against the Kirk, a peasant resolute to be a buck. . . . He was absolutely of his station and his time, the poor-living, lewd, grimy, free-spoken, ribald old Scots peasant world came to a full, brilliant, even majestic, close in his work."

Of the Burns of the sentimentalist, and especially of the 'unco' guid' sentimentalist, Mr. Henley will have nothing:

"The tame, proper, figmentary Burns, the coinage of their own tame, proper brains, which they have done their best to substitute for the lewd, amazing peasant of genius, the inspired faun, whose voice has gone ringing through the courts of Time these hundred years and more, and is far louder and far clearer now than when it first broke on the ear of man."

And if Mr. Henley will not palter with or slur over the facts about Burns, neither will he apologise for them. What need, indeed, of apology, now, in the retrospect? Is it not enough just to understand?

"There needs but little knowledge of character and life to see that to apologise for Burns is vain: that we must accept him frankly and without reserve for a peasant of genius perverted from his peasantry, thrust into a place for which his peasantry and his genius alike unfitted him, denied a perfect opportunity, constrained to live his qualities into defects, and in the long run beaten by a sterile and unnatural environment. We cannot make him other than he was, and, especially, we cannot make him a man of our own time: a man born tame and civil and unexcessive—he that died o' Wednesday," and had obituary notices in local prints. His elements are all-too gross, are all-too vigorous and turbulent for that. 'God have mercy on me,' he once wrote of himself, 'a poor damned, incautious, duped, unfortunate fool! the sport, the miserable victim of rebellious pride, hypochondriac imaginations, agonising sensibility, and bedlam passions.' Plainly he knew himself as his apologists have never known him, nor will ever know."

Nor is Mr. Henley's vision less keen, his hand less sure, when he passes from the analysis of Burns's temperament to the consideration of his achievement. Certain critical points he certainly puts better, more judiciously than they have ever been put before. The debt of Burns to his forebears, to Ramsay and Fergusson, and the nameless many, is insisted on, justly and without exaggeration; it is for Burns as the inheritor of a folk-tradition, of a long line of peasant bards, that Mr. Henley claims our especial admiration. The triumphs that he allows him are all triumphs of the vernacular muse. When he "falls to his English" he is one stumbling in a foreign language, imitating his writing master's copy. Of the secrets of English speech he knows nothing. "He wrote the heroic couplet (on the Dryden-Pope convention) clumsily;" "he was a kind of hob-nailed Gray." For the great Englishmen his sympathy was imperfect.

"Thus, if he read Milton, it was largely, if not wholly, with a view to getting himself up as a kind of Tarbolton Satan. He was careless, so I must contend, of Shakespeare. With such knowledge as he could glean from song-books, he was altogether out of touch with the Elizabethans and the Carolines. Outside the vernacular, in fact, he was a rather unlettered Eighteenth Century Englishman, and the models which he must naturally prefer before all others were academic, stilted, artificial and unexemplary to the highest point."

But "he had the sole ear of the vernacular muse." As a lyricist, in the peasant manner, simple, vivid, direct, singing of the elemental qualities of life, he is unsurpassed; and of his descriptive poems, when it is the peasantry that he describes, the level is hardly lower. His highest, most enduring characteristics, Mr. Henley is inclined to formulate as humour, a "broad, rich, prevailing" humour. Beauty, in the sheer sense of the word, he would deny him.

"It is not, remember, for 'the love of lovely words,' not for such perfections of human utterance as abound in Shakespeare, in Milton, in Keats, in Herrick, that we revert to Burns. Felicities he has—felicities innumerable; but his forebears set themselves to be humorous, racy, natural, and he could not choose but follow their lead. The Colloquial triumphs in his verse as nowhere outside the Vision and Don Juan; but for beauty we must go elsewhere. He has all manner of qualities: wit, fancy, vision of a kind, nature, gaiety, the richest humour, a sort of homespun verbal magic. But, if we be in quest of Beauty, we must e'en ignore him, and 'fall to our English': of whose secrets, as I've said, he never so much as suspected the existence, and whose supreme capacities were sealed from him until the end."

It need hardly be said that Mr. Henley's treatment, whether of the man or the poet, has not passed unchallenged. He is not careful to avoid controversy, rather trails his coat of purpose, for "the common Burnsite." The green olive-branch of a pacific life was never a button-hole for him. Urbanity has always been unrecognisable in his literary ideal. But we may leave "the common Burnsite" to fend for himself. We do not, indeed, suppose that Mr. Henley has given us the definitive portrait of Burns. In criticism, indeed, there is nothing definitive. Always and inevitably the temperament of the critic must colour the personality seen through its medium. This is Mr. Henley's Burns; it is not the whole Burns. Mr. Stevenson's Burns is another. The critics who are to come will have their own. But the balancing of critical temperaments may safely be left to the long process of time. In the meantime, let us be grateful to Mr. Henley's art for having given us the real presentment of a real man.

REVIEWS.

PINDAR'S RIVAL.

The Poems of Bacchylides. Edited by F. G. Kenyon, M.A., D. Litt. (British Museum.)

THE revival of classical discovery has come at a happy time for scholars. Since those heady days of the humanists, when any fugitive from Greece might disclose the priceless MS. of some new poet, some four centuries had passed. Grammarians and philologists had long ceased to look for new material, and were already within measurable distance of exhausting the possibilities of ingenious speculation afforded by the old. About Homer and Sophocles there was really not much more to be said. The reconstruction of Greek civilisation—so far, at least, as the evidence of written texts was concerned—seemed well-nigh complete. Then, slowly, the tombs in the Egyptian sands began to give up their dead, and the learned world was once more agog. Among the swathings of mummies, in the rubbish heaps of ancient cities, ardent explorers disinterred papyrus after papyrus. The museums of Europe are choked with them now, and as they are painfully flattened out, pieced together, and deciphered, every once and again, among the débris of ritual treatises and farm accounts, some real treasure-trove rewards the labour. None of the Dii Majores have yet appeared. Some day we may be electrified by the announcement of a volume of Sappho's lyrics, or a play of Menander; but in the meantime a treatise of Aristotle on the Polity of Athens has set the constitutional historians correcting their facts and suppressing their hypotheses, Hyperides has been added to the already adequate supply of orators, the mimes of Herodas have revealed an entirely new genre of urban poetry, while the Logia of Jesus form an important contribution to our knowledge of the conflicting tendencies of primitive Christianity.

More important than any of these, from the point of view of pure literature, are the Odes of Bacchylides, now edited with great pains and skill from a British Museum papyrus of the middle of the first century B.C. by Mr. F. G. Kenyon. Of Bacchylides we had but a hundred lines of fragments and the laudatory notices of the Alexandrian and Byzantine critics. We knew that he wrote in the first half of the fifth century, that he was born in Ceos, that he came of poetic stock, being the nephew of Simonides, that he was exiled from the island and dwelt in the Peloponnese. Like Pindar, he found a patron in Hieron, the tyrant of Syracuse, and the two poets were in a way rivals. Pindar, indeed, is supposed to allude to Bacchylides in phrases of some asperity. He was, however, held to be one of the nine lyric poets of Greece, and the author of the treatise De Sublimitate affords him considerable praise. He does not put him on Pindar's level, but ascribes to him a "smooth, equable, and pleasing" genius, which neither rises so high nor sinks so low as that of his great contemporary. Thanks to Mr. Kenyon, we are now able, for the first time, to verify the substantial justice of this criticism. It is unlikely that the papyrus, even when perfect, contained the whole works of Bacchylides, but even as it is it preserves enough to make him once more an actual personality and not merely the shadow of a name. Certainly he will not oust Pindar from his pride of place: he has not the wide sweep—

"The ample pinion,
That the Theban eagle bare,
Sailing with supreme dominion,
Through the azure deep of air."

"His merits," says Mr. Kenyon, truly enough, "are merits rather of art than invention. He has lucidity, grace, picturesqueness, and an easy command of rhythm." More than Pindar, he has certain characteristically classical qualities, the serenity and the sense of form of the typical Hellene. Bacchylides is to Pindar, says Mr. Kenyon again, as Sophocles is to Æschylus. He might have added as Tennyson is to Browning.

There is, of course, much work yet to be done on Bacchylides. It is understood that an edition by Prof. Jebb is in prospect, and no one is better fitted for the task. In the meantime, the admirable editio princeps which Mr. Kenyon has given us deserves especial praise. Mr. Kenyon has wisely been sparing of emendation, but he has been liberal of introductory matter and of apparatus criticus. He prints on opposite pages the uncials of the papyrus and a version in ordinary Greek text; to these he proposes to add, in a separate volume, a photographic facsimile of the whole MS. The measure of Mr. Kenyon's labour may be taken when we learn that his material reached him in the form of about 200 torn fragments. These had to be pieced together, like a Chinese puzzle, and as a result we have, besides small unplaced fragments, twenty distinguishable poems, of which six are practically complete, while the others have suffered a greater or less amount of mutilation. The first fourteen odes, as arranged by Mr. Kenyon, were written, like all those of Pindar that we possess, in celebration of victories at the athletic games; the remaining six are of a novel and far more interesting character. Technically they are probably pæans or dithyrambs, intended to be sung by choirs at festivals of Apollo or Dionysus. But they belong to a stage in the development of these forms in which the literary interest has become predominant, while the religious element has been reduced to a perfunctory line or two. In effect they are lyrical idylls, brief studies of moments in legends which had been the subject of earlier epical treatment. They are full of appeal to the vision, and, but for the lyrical form, correspond very closely to such poems of Tennyson's as "Cenone." The most interesting of all is the eighteenth, for this is the only extant example of such an idyll presented dramatically and showing the type of the lyrical hymn as modified by imitation of the already nascent drama. We venture to offer a translation for the benefit of Greek-less readers. The dialogue is between Ægeus, king of Athens, and his wife, Medea, who speak alternate strophes. Theseus, the son of Ægeus, who has been brought up at Troezen, is coming to Athens, doing deeds of heroism on his way. A herald has announced the advent of a formidable stranger.

MEDEA.

"King of sacred Athens! Lord of the Ionians who live delicately! Why has the trumpet's brazen note even now blared forth its warlike message? Is it that some foeman with his host besets the frontiers of our land? Or do raiders of evil intent harry the herds by force, hungry for fat cattle? Or of what does thy heart misgive thee? Speak; for of all men thou, I ween, hast brave young hearts at need, thou, a king sprung from Pandion and Creusa."

ÆGEUS.

"But even now came a herald, footing it over the long Isthmian way; and unheard deeds of a mighty doer he tells. The insolent Sinis he has slain, strongest among men, the child of Kronos' son who split the ravine and shakes the earth. He has slain the man-eater in the glens of Krommyon, and slain Skiron who lorded it in night. He has stayed the wrestling-school of Kerkyon, and the dread club of Polypemon has Prokoptes dropped, for he met with the better man. My heart misgives me how these things shall end."

MEDEA.

"Whom reports he the man to be, and whence coming? What his garb? Brings he a great array in harness of war, or comes he alone and unarmed, like some wandering merchant to an alien land, this man who is so strong and brave and bold, that he has quelled the strength of mighty champions? Surely some god impels him, that he may wreak justice on the unjust. How else should one be doing always and light on no mischance? But of all this will time see the issue.'

ÆGEUS.

'Two squires and no more he tells of, and a sword on the gleaming shoulders, and in the hands two polished darts. Upon his auburn hair is a cunning helm of Lacedaimon, and for raiment he has a purple shirt and a woolly mantle of Thessalian weft. The light in his eyes is as the fires of Lemnos. Only a lad is he, in the morning of life. His heart is set on the joys of Ares—war and the clash of bronze in battle. And his questing is for the splendours of Athens town.'

Surely a living picture of this knight-errant of the prime:

"A fairy prince, with joyful eyes,
And lighter-footed than the fox,"

The curious in literary parallels may compare the relation of this dramatic idyll to the contemporary drama of Athens, with that of the East Midland poem, "The Harrowing of Hell," to its contemporary drama of the great mystery-play cycles.

POPULAR ANTHROPOLOGY.

The History of Mankind. By Prof. Fr. Ratzel. Translated from the Second German Edition by A. J. Butler, M.A. Vol. II. (Macmillan & Co.)

In the present volume Prof. Ratzel deals with the aborigines of the New World, the Arctic races of Europe and Asia, and the Negro and Negrito inhabitants of Africa. Here are at once seen some of the disadvantages inseparable from his geographical distribution of the subject-matter of this comprehensive treatise on the main divisions of the human family. The plan answers well enough for America, which has practically been an isolated and independent ethnical domain from the Stone Ages down to the Discovery. But it breaks down completely when we come to the great divisions of the Eastern Hemisphere. Thus we here see the Arctic peoples detached from the Mongolic stock, with which most of these "Hyperboreans" (Lapps, Samoyedes, Ostiaks, Yakuts, Tunguses, &c.) are undoubtedly connected. The case is even worse in Africa, where the Negro and Negrito aborigines are divorced from the kindred Papuans, Melanesians, and others of the Oceanic world described in the first volume.

It is, however, but fair to add that this inconvenient arrangement is somewhat obviated in the introductory section, where the essential unity of the several branches of each main division is emphasised, and where a somewhat higher level is maintained than in the discussion of details. But perhaps this could not well be otherwise. It is given to but few to master the rich materials that have accumulated in recent years on the countless tribes and peoples spread over the globe, whereas it may lie within the power of many to draw tolerably correct general conclusions on fundamental ethnological questions even from desultory reading. Our author may also plead, in excuse for many shortcomings, that he writes for the general public, as is evident enough from his avoidance of all reference to authorities, except, indeed, of the vaguest kind. But we are here reminded that even "the man in the street" has now become critical, and is apt to resent being put off with the shadow for the substance when consulting works of this sort for accurate information. What, for instance, is he to make of the barren and misleading statement (p. 49) that the Yucas lived "near Truxillo on the coast"? Surely space might have been found to say a little more about the most civilised, and in every respect the most important, people of South America in pre-Inca times. Yunca was not, in fact, the name of any single tribe, but the collective name applied by the Peruvians to several highly cultured groups, who were not confined to Truxillo, but who extended along the seaboard for about ten degrees of latitude, and on the site of whose chief city, Grand Chimú, Truxillo now stands.

On the same page we are told that "it is principally to Karl von den Steinen and Ehrenreich that we owe a grouping by languages of the Brazilian tribes." What will Spix and Martius, d'Orbigny, or even Dr. Brinton, say to this? The above-mentioned travellers have, no doubt, recently done excellent work in Central Brazil, where they have discovered the probable cradle-land of the Carib race. But they would be the last to claim priority for a general linguistic classification of the Brazilian aborigines, a classification which, as far as this writer is aware, they have not yet undertaken.

Passing to North America, we come upon a strangely inadequate account of the great Dakotan (Siouan) nation, which is mainly confined to the Mississippi-Missouri basin, as if that were its original home, although recent research has placed beyond doubt the fact that their earliest seats lay in Virginia, the Carolinas, and other parts of the Atlantic slope. The point should not have been overlooked, because of its importance in the history of the Dakotan migrations, which are now shown to have trended westwards to their present domain, and not from the Pacific side, as formerly supposed.

Most perfunctory is the treatment of the American languages, which are said (p. 22) to be "based on an agglutinative system," whereas most of them are typical polysynthetic forms of speech. No examples are given, without which it is quite impossible to convey a clear idea of the strangely involved structure of this linguistic group. Here also reference is made to a "Maklak language," which is not otherwise located, and which appears now to be heard of for the first time.

But many of these shortcomings in the American section may well be forgiven for the author's opportune remarks on the evolution of American culture independently of Old World influences. Those anthropologists who still trace everything to the Eastern Hemisphere, whence little or nothing came after the Stone Ages, and who find the prototypes of Cholula, Uxmal, and Tiahuanaco in the pyramids of Egypt, the Hindu temples of Java or Camboja, and the monolithic monuments of Brittany or Britain, should reflect that "when people began to draw parallels between the cultured races of America and those of the Old World, they overlooked those numerous points of affinity existing in the matter of culture among individual races all over the world, from the highest religious conceptions down to peculiarities in the style of their weapons or their tattooing, and looked for a limited region—by preference in South or East Asia—as a centre of migration and radiation. But the origin of the old American civilisations will never be traceable to a particular corner of the earth, nor to any of the still surviving civilised races, and all attempts to do so have remained fruitless. The roots of those wonderful developments reach down rather to some primeval common property of all mankind, which found time in the thousands of years which precede history to spread itself over the earth. In other parts of the earth its development was more rapid than in America, which lacks in situation and natural endowment certain accelerating forces that have been bestowed on the Old World. . . . Nevertheless we may hold firmly to the relationship of the Americans with the East Oceanic branch of the Mongoloid race" (p. 170).

The apparent contradiction implied in the last clause of this quotation is explained by the author's view, enlarged upon elsewhere, that the American aborigines are autochthonous only in a relative sense, that they were an offshoot probably of the Malayo-Polynesian division of the Mongol stock, and that they spread to the New World in remote prehistoric times. Since then their relations with the Oceanic peoples came to an end, or at least no regular communications were maintained between the populations on both sides of the Pacific; consequently the culture of the mound-builders, Pueblo Indians, Mexicans, Maya-Quichés, Chibchas, Chimús, and Peruvians are to be regarded as independent local developments, practically unaffected by the civilisations of the Eastern Hemisphere. This doctrine is not new; indeed, it was advocated some years ago in the article on the "American Indians" contributed to the last edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, and has since been steadily gaining ground among ethnologists and archaeologists. But it is here presented in a somewhat modified form from several new points of view, and is supported by a considerable number of fresh facts and inferences.

In the Arctic section the student is arrested by the statement that the Yakuts are disappearing, and that their ten tribes "do not number on an average more than three hundred each," or, say, 3,000 altogether (p. 226). They are, on the contrary, the most energetic and progressive of all the Siberian peoples, and we are told by M. Sierochevsky (Ethnographic Researches, 1896) that they number at present about 200,000, spread over a territory some two million square miles in extent, though chiefly concentrated along the river banks between the Lena and the Aldana. The Turki origin of these hardy Hyperboreans is fully confirmed by this observer. . . .

Although the treatment of the African races is, on the whole, somewhat more satisfactory, here also occur many views and statements of facts which must be received with extreme caution. Both the negro cradle-land and negro culture, such as it is, are traced on the feeblest grounds to Western or Southern Asia. We cannot find that any exception is made even for iron, which was almost certainly of African origin, and which, as clearly shown by M. Gabriel de Mortillet (Formation de la Nation Française, 1897), was introduced into Europe not from Asia, but from the Dark Continent. In this connexion, Lepsius' exploded theory of the Hamitic origin of the Hottentot language is revived, and spoken of as "a stimulating idea," while the Hamites themselves are "immigrants probably from Asia" (p. 248). The home of the Hamites is to be sought rather in North Africa, and if the kinship of the Berber and Basque languages, suggested by the late G. von der Gabelenz, is ever established, then the same region will have to be regarded as the cradle of the Semites as well, the fundamental connexion of the Hamito-Semitic linguistic family having now been placed beyond reasonable doubt.

The translation shows no improvement on that of the first volume. There is the same painful struggle with involved German sentences, and too often even with quite simple expressions, while the defective knowledge of details is constantly betrayed by the writer's helplessness when grappling with obscure or erroneous statements in the original. Thus we have such expressions as "two monstrous islands," where vast or huge is meant; "Africa is better off for inhabitants than," &c., meaning more thickly peopled; "shabby" applied to wooden spoons of poor workmanship; "a pre-eminent delicacy of tools"; "foreign bodies of manners"; "reaches of the road"; "benumbed by Nature's lavishness"; "the terribly melted-down Aborigines"; "mustered up"; and at p. 250: "The seclusion towards the North due to the deserts must have lasted until seamen, better than Africans now are, from elsewhere, struck the coasts of Africa," and, a few lines below, "a wide belt of retrogression." Then the Quechuas of Peru are confused with the Quichés of Guatamala (164); "Prince of Wied" is, we suppose "short for" Prince Max von Neuwied (14); east for west (10 and 260) and west for east (246). Schweinfurt's Mombuttu everywhere appears instead of the proper form, Mangbattu, as established by Junker; the meaning of Damara is said to be "obscure" (463), although fully explained in accessible books (Stanford's Africa, ii., p. 176); and we are elsewhere informed that "Amakosa—also written Amaxosa—seems to mean 'The People of Kosa' (Kosa being a chief). This naming of a tribe after its chief, a feature of the patriarchal system, recurs among most Negro tribes" (446). But the patriarchal system is not prevalent among most Negro tribes, being confined to a few groups, prominent among which are the Zulu-Xosas here in question. Ama-Xosa (the only proper spelling) does really mean "The People of Xosa," who, however, was not merely "a chief," but the eponymous hero and founder of the nation, who is traditionally said to have flourished in the sixteenth century, and from whom all the present chiefs of the Galekas, Gaikas, and other Xosa groups trace their descent.

Like the first, this volume is profusely illustrated, and many of the portraits, being reproductions of good photographs, are of considerable scientific value.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Impressions of South Africa. By Prof. Bryce. (Macmillan & Co.)

In the latter part of 1895 Prof. Bryce travelled across South Africa from Cape Town to Fort Salisbury, in Mashonaland, passing through Bechuanaland and Matabililand. From Fort Salisbury he returned through Manicaland and the Portuguese Territories to Beira, on the Indian Ocean, sailed thence to Delagoa Bay and Durban, traversed Natal, and visited the Transvaal, the Orange Free State, Basutoland, and the eastern province of Cape Colony. It is a tolerably extensive journey, even in these days of globe-trotting, and the densest of mankind could not fail, if he undertook it, to gather some information which would interest and entertain. When this vast expanse of territory, containing so many conflicting races, such incomparable variety of natural objects, and presenting such innumerable problems to the statesman, the naturalist, and the ethnologist, is brought under the eye of a man of Mr. Bryce's grasp of mind, the reader is entitled to expect something more than an ordinary book of travel.

He will not be disappointed. Mr. Bryce's admirable book is as far removed from the publications of the ordinary globe-trotter as Treasure Island from a penny dreadful. It is scarcely too much to say that what Mr. Bryce has already done is here surpassed. To any student of South African affairs this book must of necessity be as indispensable for many years to come, as The Holy Roman Empire and The American Commonwealth already are to anyone who would understand the rise of European nationalities and the political system of the United States.

The work before us is arranged under the three main headings of Nature, History, and a Narrative of the Author's Journey. The physical features of South Africa are fairly well known by this time, but Mr. Bryce is certainly successful in presenting a general sketch of the country which is far more informing than any collection of isolated photographs can possibly be. With him we deplore the rapid destruction of the large wild animals which is going on, and most heartily endorse his plea that the various governments should combine to prevent their total disappearance. If the present rate of slaughter is persisted in, the African elephant will have ceased to exist within another half-century, and a similar fate awaits the rhinoceros. Nevertheless, we cannot help seeing that there is another side to the picture, and one which appeals very nearly indeed to the inhabitants. It is distressingly unromantic to hear that the establishment of street lamps has made the lion as rare in Bulawayo as in Fulham; but the fact is not without its advantages to foot passengers. We are even prepared to pardon a total absence of enthusiasm for the preservation of the rare white rhinoceros on the part of that Dutch governor who, while traversing the streets of Cape Town, was butted out of his comfortable coach by one of these engaging creatures.

The human problem is, however, after all, much the most interesting which South Africa presents, and with this Mr. Bryce deals at length. Of the three native races, the Bushmen, the Hottentots, and the great nationality which we, following the Arabs, call "Kafir," but which proudly calls itself "Abantu"—the People—the last alone is now of real importance. Out of it three men have arisen from whom it is difficult to withhold the epithet of "Great." The Zulu Tshaka was in his way as great a warrior as Napoleon. He devised a military system so admirably adapted to the capacities of his people that no other natives could face his impis, and so perfect that its defeat taxed all the resources of European skill. Tshaka had probably never heard of the Romans, but his introduction of the short, broad-bladed, stabbing spear in place of the lance shows a thorough appreciation of one of their greatest secrets of success. Moshesh, the Basuto, who successfully defied Boers and natives alike from his fastness of Thaba Bosiyu, and governed the nation he created in a manner which compelled the respect even of his enemies, was no ordinary man. Khama, the Bechuana, now rules a great territory with a tact, prudence, and tenacity of purpose which would do credit to any European statesman. Well may Mr. Bryce say that "three such men . . . are sufficient to show the capacity of the race for occasionally reaching a standard which white men must respect." And this race shows no tendency to die out. On the contrary, it is more prolific than its white conquerors, and therein lies one of the most difficult problems of the future.

"The native—that is to say, the native of the Kafir race—not merely holds his ground but increases far more rapidly than he did before Europeans came, because the Europeans have checked inter-tribal wars and the slaughter of the tribesmen by the chiefs and their wizards and also because the Europeans have opened up new kinds of employment."

In fact, the problem before the white inhabitants of South Africa is very much the same as that which is beginning to assume such a serious aspect in the Southern States of America.

"Two races, far removed from one another in civilisation and mental condition, dwell side by side. Neither race is likely to extrude or absorb the other. What then will be their relations, and how will the difficulties be met to which their juxtaposition must give rise?"

Upon the whole Mr. Bryce is hopeful. Some sort of lingua franca will, he thinks, spring up: heathenism will disappear—it is, by the way, curious to note that the existing Kafir religion does not appear to include any idea of the Supreme Being—and the natives will become Christians, at least in name; but there will be no intermarriage between the white and black races. If only the native can be levelled up by education, and the European induced to treat him more like a man and less like an animal, it is possible to look forward to a day when the two races will be able to work harmoniously together in a partnership in which the white man will be the head and the black man the hands.

It is not the least of Mr. Bryce's many claims to the confidence of the reader that, in dealing with the Native Question, he never allows himself to become a partisan or to cater for cheap philanthropy. To him the invading European is neither angel nor demon, but a very human person indeed, acting as might reasonably be expected in the circumstances. On the other hand, he does not pretend that the native altogether likes the change which has driven him to work for his living and for the enrichment of his conqueror. We confess that, in considering this part of the subject, we draw much comfort from the pictures which Mr. Bryce repeatedly draws of the miserable state of the native under his own rulers. A Zulu king was, indeed, compelled to admit the right of his people to the soil just as a Saxon ruler was, but to their lives they, apparently, had no title at all, and every man dwelt in the Valley of the Shadow of Death. Lo Bengula was probably rather above than below the ethical standard of the average African chief, but the following passage does not inspire one with much regret that he no longer reigns at Bulawayo:

"Only one old tree marks the spot where the king used to sit administering justice to his subjects. A large part of this justice consisted in decreeing death among his indunas or prominent men who had excited his suspicions, or whose cattle he desired to appropriate. Sometimes he had them denounced—'smelt out' they called it—by the witch-doctors as guilty of practising magic against him. Sometimes he disposed with a pretext, and sent a messenger to the hut of the doomed man to tell him the king wanted him. The victim, often ignorant of his fate, walked in front, while the executioner, following close behind, suddenly dealt him with the knobkerry, or heavy-ended stick, one tremendous blow, which crushed his skull and left him dead upon the ground. Women, on the other hand, were strangled."

The rule of the Chartered Company may be hard, and diamond-mining at Kimberley is not, perhaps, very agreeable to an ex-Zulu warrior, but they are, at least, better than the hideous possibilities involved in being a subject of Lo Bengula or Mosilikatze. It is a grim commentary on the happiness of savage life that the very name of the Matabili capital means "The Place of Slaughter." If the Bantu race has not much for which to be grateful to Mr. Rhodes, it at least owes him some thanks for deliverance from the terrors of the king, and the nameless horrors of the witch-doctor.

Far below the Native Question in point of ultimate importance, but still in itself of considerable moment, come the relations of the British and the Dutch. And here, again, we have nothing but praise for the manner in which Mr. Bryce has discharged his task. It is not the pen of the Liberal politician, but of the philosophical student of men which writes:

"The Boers . . . fancied themselves entitled to add some measure of contempt to the dislike they already cherished to the English, and they have ever since shown themselves unpleasant neighbours. The English in South Africa, on their part, have continued to resent the concession of independence to the Transvaal, and especially the method in which it was conceded."

Not even in dealing with the American Colonies has the British Government made such astounding mistakes as in South Africa. From the appointment of Sir Theophilus Shepstone, whose swart complexion made the Boers think that he had some tinge of the hated Kafir blood, to Majuba and Krugersdorp, the errors have been enough to wreck an empire. To these Mr. Bryce is studiously gentle—more gentle, we suspect, than he would have been if he were not so anxious to avoid the suspicion of mingling politics with history. Upon one point he attempts no sort of concealment. Sooner or later, and sooner rather than later, the English-speaking population of the Transvaal will become politically as well as economically supreme. He rightly refuses to commit himself to any statement as to whether this change will come peaceably or not, but that it will come somehow he has no hesitation in saying is inevitable.

We wish that space would permit us to follow him through the many fascinating sidepaths into which when dealing with this and other South African subjects he frequently diverges. The thorny question of the suzerainty and the true construction of the Convention of London; the light which the native custom of taking tokens as pledges of a promise throws upon primitive law; the plagues—which he describes as consisting of white ants, locusts, horse-sickness, fever, and speculators in mining shares; the strange pits of Inyanga, upon the purpose of which we would with great deference suggest that possibly Canon Atkinson's investigation of the "British Village" at Danby might give some hint—any one of these contains the material for a long article in itself. We venture only, however, to conclude this necessarily abbreviated review of a really powerful book with one more quotation, partly because it is couched in noble words, but more because of the grasp and foresight which it displays:

"While Britain continues to be a great naval power the maintenance of her connexion with South Africa will ensure the external peace of that country, which, fortunately for herself, lies far away in the Southern Seas, with no land frontiers which she is called on to defend. She may not grow to be herself as populous and as powerful a state as will be the Canadian or the Australian confederations of the future, for her climatic conditions do not promise so large an increase of the white race; but her people may, if she can deal wisely with the problems which the existence of her coloured population raises, become a happy and prosperous nation. They are exempt from some of the dangers which threaten the industrial communities of Europe and North America. The land they dwell in is favoured by Nature, and inspires a deep love in its children. The stock they spring from is strong and sound; and they have carried with them to their new home the best traditions of Teutonic freedom and self-government."

CRITICISM FROM A DISTANCE.

Literary Statesmen and Others: Essays on Men Seen from a Distance. By Norman Hapgood. (Chicago and New York: Herbert S. Stone & Co.)

MR. NORMAN HAPGOOD is a young American critic, already known in this country by some contributions to the Contemporary Review, equally remarkable for independence of thought and epigrammatic brilliancy of expression. These are reprinted in the present volume, together with various other papers, all marked by the same high standard of literary excellence. Mr. Hapgood has carefully trained himself for the work of appreciation; and his remarks on American criticism may, perhaps, be read as partly introspective. For instance, when he points to the special study of French literature as characteristic of contemporary American and English critics, enumerating various advantages derived therefrom, we can easily believe that such training was an important element in the process by which his own mind was formed. "Sentimental rhetoric and heavy truisms," he observes, "are killed by it." On the positive side it gives "lucidity and prudence"; while as a drawback it "instigates the attempt to assimilate qualities which seldom enter organically into superior English style, such as the studied emphasis of the epithet and the manner of intellectual sprightliness" (p. 166). The constraint and clumsiness of this last phrase indicate another danger against which the author and his school would do well to stand more on their guard, and which a more assiduous study of French models might help them to correct. Mr. Hapgood has at any rate an appreciation of style as such, of literary technique, which is rare enough in England, while, to judge by what he tells us, it is actively discouraged in America. In letters, as in politics, the democratic spirit resents an assumption of superiority. "Expert handling of what we all feel capable of handling bores us, and even insults us" (p. 136). One can imagine the American philistine finding himself, if not exactly bored or insulted, at least painfully bewildered by the three papers on literary statesmen that give a title to this collection. Even a French reader of more than average cultivation might feel disappointed at hearing so much more about the manner than about the matter of Lord Rosebery, Mr. John Morley, and Mr. Arthur Balfour. Let us at once add that this exceptionally trained American critic, although an expert in style, is really most interested in the psychology of his subjects, and that he values the most serious literary qualities as an index of qualities which are more than merely literary; while conversely he finds in the absence of such qualities a key to the limitations of purely literary excellence. Thus, according to him, what Lord Rosebery lacks is

"as necessary to a philosopher or a poet as it is to a man of action. . . . There is a want of unity, of strong single feeling, of purpose. There is honesty, frankness, generosity; there are convictions; but there is no single unifying conviction or conception, no faith or passion or need of accomplishment. So it is that the more serious the subject, the farther removed from the spectacular intellectual world, the nearer to a reality demanding action, the less adequate is Lord Rosebery in speaking or writing" (pp. 88-9).

Whether strictly applicable to the late Prime Minister or not, his critic has here got hold of a most valuable and far-reaching principle.

In the opinion of our observer from a distance, Mr. Arthur Balfour is, on the whole, a failure in literature and philosophy; but besides intellectual power he has sincerity and sympathy; he has succeeded in practical life by a thorough scepticism combined with thorough earnestness (p. 64). Is not this working what Mill called the inverse deductive method a little hard? One cannot help suspecting that had "the picturesque young leader" failed, or, what is unhappily still on the cards, should he fail after all, Mr. Hapgood would be equally ready with a psychological explanation after the fact. Mr. Hapgood is very severe on Mr. Balfour's style, finding it even ungrammatical. No examples are given; and it is a little odd that the same censor should apply such epithets as "faultless" and "impeccable" to Lord Rosebery's prose, which certainly has not the elementary merit of perfect syntax.

The paper on Mr. John Morley is a specimen of what our critic can do—and he can do a good deal—in the way of detraction. He has pointed out many blots in the pages of a perhaps overpraised writer; but the total impression left is one of unjustifiable violence. For apart from the high intellectual and moral qualities which receive a rather grudging recognition, Mr. Morley has literary merits not less deserving of praise than Lord Rosebery's, above all the power to coin such barbed phrases as "sombre acquiescence," "shrill levity," "end it or mend it," and of these no account has been taken. We note, also, in the analysis of Mr. Morley's intellectual character a complete lack of the historical method, without which it can never be understood, to such an extent have the studies and opinions of this literary statesman been determined by the lead of antecedent thinkers, more especially Comte, Mill, and Buekle.

Like other young critics, Mr. Hapgood finds it easier or more exciting to blame than to praise. But the "prudence" as well as the "respect for expert opinion" supposed to be acquired by the study of French models might have suggested that Stendhal was not a safe object for kittenish attacks. That great master, we are told, "is little read in France, and scarcely at all elsewhere." "The solution of his doubt whether he would not by 1930 have sunk again into oblivion seems now at least as likely as it was then [in 1830] to be an affirmative" (pp. 69, 70)—a sentence the extreme clumsiness of which offers one more proof of the ill-luck that attends mere talent when it falls foul of immortal genius. He who, apart from all psychology, apart from all intellectual interests, has experienced in himself as a simple reader seeking only for amusement the overwhelming and inexhaustible charm of Le Rouge et le Noir, will not let his enjoyment be disturbed by the disclosure of any foibles in the life of its creator; he who has failed to experience that delight may seek elsewhere for aesthetic objects better suited to his somewhat limited sensibility; but let him not dream that he can analyse away the ultimate facts of taste. Mr. Hapgood himself, after quoting some unfavourable judgments passed by his countryman, Mr. Kenyon Cox, on the "Assumption" and the "Presentation," dryly observes: "That may be true, but it may well be said that Titian is not adequately accounted for" (pp. 156-7). Nor has he himself adequately accounted for Stendhal.

In Mr. Henry James, on the other hand, he has a subject exactly commensurate with his means—a phrase that must not be taken as intended to emphasise the limitations either of the novelist or of his critic. Both have the delicacy of touch, the subtlety of discrimination, the finely modulated expression which we have learned to regard as characteristic of the American intellect in its present phase of elaboration. Every reader of Mr. Henry James will recognise "the unusual shadings given to words, the complicated and facile syntax, the broken sentences in dialogue that suggest a shrug . . . the irrelevant parentheses, the completions that are so close to repetitions"; as well as "the habit of pricking a thought here with delicacy, then there, so near that sometimes here and there seem like one point" (p. 193), although few, or none, could have conveyed their impressions with equal felicity. But not every reader will have felt for himself before it was pointed out the false note struck when, in "The Tragic Muse," Julia takes Dick's head in her hands and kisses it. Still less could he picturesquely formulate his discomfort by observing that "the airy world so parallel to the real world, so representative of it, is shattered when such material is forced into it" (p. 202).

Such quotations might be multiplied ad libitum. But enough has been said to show that in Mr. Hapgood we have a critic who may be wilful, but who is never weak.

GEOLOGICAL PUBLICATIONS. (Government Office, Washington.) We have received five huge volumes, from the United States Government Printing Office at Washington, dealing with the geology of the States. Two of the volumes are devoted to the Seventeenth Annual Report of the United States Geological Society to the Secretary of the Interior, 1895-96. The other four belong to a series of important "Monographs" which is in course of being presented by the same society.

BRIEFER MENTION.

A Medieval Garland. By Mme. James Darmesteter. Translated by May Tomlinson. (Lawrence & Bullen.)

THIS is a dainty collection of old-world stories, gathered with Mme. Darmesteter's unerring art from that "garden of romance," the Middle Ages. Some of them are touched with jewelled colour, like miniatures on the borders of a book of hours; others, and these the majority, have the delicately faded hues of once brilliant garments. If one may vary the metaphor, they are plaintive melodies, recording the quaint thin tones of an old spinet; and this dreamy aloofness of manner suits well their themes of joyous knights, fair ladies, and massive stone castles, long since crumbled into dust.

"Flowers found between the leaves of old books," Mme. Darmesteter calls them. Placed there, rather than found there, one thinks, for Mme. Darmesteter has let her imagination play at will around her trouvailles, and the pages of monkish chroniclers of France or Italy blossom into fresh life at her bidding. Of her dozen tales, liking them all, we like best "Philip the Cat," with its memories of Joan of Arc, "The Countess of Dammartin," and "The Wife of Ludovic the Moor." This last is really a gem. Ludovic is Duke Ludovic of Milan, and his wife the Duchess Beatrice, she who had her husband's nephew assassinated for his popularity, and invoked the invasion of Italy by the French. The narrator had imagined her "some young and lovely Lady Maebeth of Lombardy," or "the exquisite and sinister type of Luini's daughter of Herodias." Then she visited the tomb of the Duchess in the Certosa of Pavia.

"She is a delicious child, who, even in sleep, is full of checked vivacity. Her long hair falls in disordered curls, spread over the pillow and on her lovely shoulders, and tiny little crisp curls hide her round, infantine forehead. She has an admirable expression of candour—the candour of a child. She is graceful, with that irresistible grace which defies laws. Her eyebrows are scarcely marked, but her closed eyelids, curved like the petals of a thick white flower, are richly fringed. She has the small nose of a child, and this gives her a pathetic naïveté. Her cheeks, also, are rounder than those of a grown-up woman. The Herodias' daughter of Luini would find them entirely wanting in distinction; I find them charming. . . . But the face is nothing. It is the attitude. It is that childish figure, so small and so full of life, so soft, so delicately supple and rounded beneath the sumptuous court-gown of silk and embroidery, with its long train artistically arranged not to hide or impede the feet—those little feet which only cease dancing four hours before death, and seem still so ready for the awakening."

Miss May Tomlinson has performed the translator's task admirably, catching the exact fragrance of the original, its rich subdued beauty and the sentiment of "old, unhappy far-off things" that clings around it. Reading, you hardly recognise that it is a translation you read. And this is the highest praise.

Etching, Engraving, and the Other Methods of Printing Pictures. By Hans W. Singer and William Strang. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

THIS treatise is addressed less to artists, producers of fine prints, than to collectors of these, who are often sorely puzzled to distinguish between an etching and an engraving, and are occasionally even at the mercy of a debased photographic reproduction. Many such difficulties should vanish after a perusal of Messrs. Singer and Strang's luminous treatment of the subject. They divide it into the three heads of relief, intaglio, and plane prints, and under each they give a clear and business-like account of the various processes employed and of the characteristic effects which can be obtained. They have abundant resources alike of book-learning and of practical experience, and are not without a considerable gift of lucid and intelligible exposition. Mr. Strang is himself, of course, one of the most distinguished of our younger etchers, of the school of Prof. Legros, and he enriches the volume with a dozen experiments of his own in the principal methods described. These are particularly interesting, as showing the way in which a marked artistic individuality adapts itself to varying conditions; and several of them, notably the example of etching proper, are intrinsically beautiful plates. In a chapter on the appreciation and enjoyment of prints, the authors allow themselves a digression upon the vexed topic of aesthetic theory. Rejecting the formulæ alike of idealism and realism, of decoration and of physico-psychology, they broach an hypothesis that art is essentially "the manifestation of human will exercised over nature at large":

"When a picture presents us some features of nature, clearly recognisable as such, but upon which some one human intellect has impressed its stamp, then it is a work of art, and I believe that the simultaneous intertwined presentation of the two great factors of the world—mind and matter—is what creates in us the distinctive art enjoyment."

This doctrine has at least the advantage over many of its rivals, that it is a catholic one, and the essay in which it is elaborated is remarkably stimulating and suggestive. The concluding chapters of the book give a contemptuous attention to the various mechanical processes by which the methods of true engraving are respectively mimicked. These are accurately described and unhesitatingly condemned:

"Anybody who claims that a photograph or a photogravure gives him any artistic pleasure is his own dupe. It may help to recall the pleasure that he experienced once upon a time in face of the original painting, and thus cause him to rehearse it mentally, but that is all."

Surely this is too sweeping. A photograph loses much, yet it continues to afford an artistic pleasure, quite apart from association or merely literary interest. But with the general tendency of the authors' polemic against the devastation of black and white art by photography we need hardly say we heartily agree. A careful bibliography completes the book.

Strong Men and True. By Morley Roberts. (Downey & Co.)

SURELY a somewhat misleading title for Mr. Morley Roberts's vivid studies of the manners and customs of colonial man. "Strong" they are, these drovers and miners, but "true" only in a sense which perhaps Polonius might have understood, but which is certainly compatible with a very alert vigilance for any opportunity to "do" their neighbours. Mr. Roberts's background is generally some American mining-camp or bit of Australian bush, and against this the "strong" man is sketched with rough fidelity in a few bold strokes. Among the rest the Arrow-maker pleases us the most, because he was wholly uncivilised, and not partly civilised or "decivilised." He was a noted artist in warlike implements, but found his handiwork one day distanced by a rival manipulator of the flint; determined to learn the secret of the superior workmanship, he crept to the hostile camp and waited.

"On the third day of his long waiting he saw a tall young Ast come ambling towards the little flinty hill, and The Dog's heart beat fiercely as the slaver gathered on his thin lips. 'Was this the arrow-maker? It could not be so young a man,' he thought. But in a little while his little eyes glittered and his corded muscles ridged themselves heavily, for this Ast was chipping flint on the hillock, working dexterously. The Dog watched and learnt something.

As he stayed and waited, he doubted whether he should slay this Ast with his own arrow or not. At last he plucked out the sharpest and smoothest of the three, and in a moment it was buried in the Ast's heart.

* * * * *

'It was good enough,' said The Dog.'

Mr. Morley Roberts is evidently familiar with his characters and their surroundings, and his command of their habitual modes of expression is masterly. They do not speak European English when slang is available, and the literary as well as the ethical code of the drinking saloon prevails.

A Benedictine Martyr in England. By Dom Bede Camm, O.S.B. (Bliss, Sands & Co.)

JOHN ROBERTS is looked upon with reverence by the Benedictines as the first of their order who, after the suppression of the monasteries, "attacked the gate of hell, and provoked the prince of darkness in his usurped kingdom"—that is to say, in less flowery language, preached Catholicism in Protestant England. Of Welsh descent and Oxford training, he was converted when on a visit to Paris, and devoted his life to the propagation of his faith in his own country. After spending some years in preparation for his task at Valladolid and Compostella, he began a series of missionary visits to England in 1603. These were brief, because he was time after time taken and banished from the country. At last the patience of the Government was exhausted. Father Roberts was arrested in the very act of saying mass. He refused to take the Oath of Allegiance, and suffered death under the law of treason. Dom Camm has taken infinite pains to disinter the minutest details of his hero's biography. His book should be of service to scholars, alike for its learning and for its clear expression of the Catholic view with regard to the Jacobean executions. Dom Camm does not fear polemic; he courts it by his display of all the somewhat ridiculous zeal of the convert. For poor Archbishop Abbot he has a particular distaste, painting him as a "sour fanatic" inspired by "fanatical fury" and a "bloodthirsty hatred" to Catholics. The following passages give evidence of a very extraordinary condition of intellect. It would seem that Dom Roberts and other Catholics executed under Elizabeth and James have become the objects of an unofficial cultus, and that Pope Leo XIII. was moved to take the first steps towards their formal beatification:

"More than ten years have elapsed since then, but no one who knows anything of the mature and deliberate care by which the Holy See, in its wisdom, conducts such examinations will wonder that the cause of our martyrs has not meanwhile made many steps further towards the longed-for goal."

This does not seem to be meant for irony; and Dom Camm adds:

"Meanwhile, we should add that those who privately invoke the martyrs to obtain any great grace or miracle should not turn to one or another of that glorious band, but should invoke them all; so that, if the miracle be granted, it may serve for the cause of the beatification of all. For, in such cases as this, it is impossible to prove miracles for each member of so great a band of martyrs."

But, let alone the ethics of this proceeding, does Dom Camm really suppose that the Pope will be unable to determine which of the candidates it was that actually answered to this general invocation?

"HANDBOOK TO CHRISTIAN AND ECCLESIASTICAL ROME."—Part II.: The Liturgy in Rome. By H. M. and M. A. R. T. (A. & C. Black.)

THIS should be a most valuable book to tourists abroad, who generally flock to ecclesiastical functions, especially at Rome and in Holy Week, with the very vaguest idea as to what precisely it is that they are seeing. The author prints the Ordinary and Canon of the Mass, with notes and an English translation, and adds chapters on the nature of the liturgical vestments and ornaments, the chief services and ceremonies, the festivals, and in especial the Good Friday and Easter functions. Appendices contain the Roman Calendar and a bibliography. The information given is well arranged and clearly put, and good use has been made of various trustworthy authorities, such as the Abbé Duchesne's Origines du Culte Chrétien. Some of the historical statements, however, are open to criticism. Thus the account of tropes does not seem to owe much to Gautier's masterly researches into the subject. To say that the Easter sepulchre may have had its origin in one of the "Miracle Plays" is a curious inversion of the true order of things, and the "pascal," so common in English church accounts and inventories, is surely not "an elaborate detached stone sepulchre," but a candlestick for the ceruus, or Paschal candle.

THE ACADEMY.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 15, 1898.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

TRAVEL AND ADVENTURE.

Adventure in the Far East. The Crisis in China. Second Edition in the Press.

FROM TONKIN TO INDIA.

By PRINCE HENRI OF ORLEANS. Translated by HAMLEY BENT, M.A. With over 100 Illustrations and a Map. Crown 4to, gilt top, 25s. The crisis in China lends importance to the travels of Prince Henri in 1895 from China to the valley of the Bramaputra, which covered a distance of 2,100 miles, of which 1,600 was through absolutely unexplored country. No fewer than seventeen ranges of mountains were crossed at altitudes of from 11,000 to 13,000 feet. The journey was made memorable by the discovery of the sources of the Irrawaddy. To the physical difficulties of the journey were added dangers from the attacks of savage tribes. The book deals with many of the political problems of the East, and it will be found a most important contribution to the literature of adventure and discovery.

"A welcome contribution to our knowledge. The narrative is full and interesting, and the appendices give the work a substantial value."—The Times.

"The story is instructive and fascinating, and will certainly make one of the books of 1898. The book attracts by its delightful print and fine illustrations. A nearly model book of travel."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"China is the country of the hour. All eyes are turned towards her, and Messrs. Methuen have opportunely selected the moment to launch Prince Henri's work."—Liverpool Daily Post.

"An entertaining record of pluck and travel in important regions."—Daily Chronicle.

"The illustrations are admirable and quite beyond praise."—Glasgow Herald.

"The Prince's travels are of real importance... his services to geography have been considerable. The volume is beautifully illustrated."—Athenaeum.

"The Prince's story is charmingly told, and presented with an attractiveness which will make it, in more than one sense, an outstanding book of the season."—Birmingham Post.

"The book describes a notable feat."—Daily Mail.

"An attractive book which will prove of considerable interest and no little value. A narrative of a remarkable journey."—Literature.

THE NIGER SOURCES. By Colonel J. Trotter, R.A. With a Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s. A book which at the present time should be of considerable interest, being an account of a Commission appointed for Frontier Delimitation. [Ready.]

ADVENTURE and EXPLORATION in AFRICA. By Major A. ST. H. GIBBONS, F.R.G.S. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations by C. Whympet, 25 Photographs, and Map. Demy 8vo, 15s. An account of Travel, Adventure, and Big-Game Shooting among the Marose and contiguous tribes, with a description of their Customs, Characteristics, and History. [Jan. 20.]

THREE YEARS in SAVAGE AFRICA. By Lionel Decle. With an Introduction by H. M. STANLEY, M.P. With 100 Illustrations and 5 Maps. Demy 8vo, 21s. Few Europeans have had the same opportunity of studying the barbarous parts of Africa as Mr. Decle. Starting from the Cape, he visited in succession Bechuanaland, the Zambosi, Matsabeland and Mashonaland, the Portuguese settlement on the Zambosi, Nyassaland, Ujiji, the headquarters of the Arabs, German East Africa, Uganda (where he saw fighting in company with the late Major "Roddy" Owen), and British East Africa. In his book he relates his experiences, his minute observations of native habits and customs, and his views as to the work done in Africa by the various European Governments whose operations he was able to study. The whole journey extended over 7,000 miles, and occupied exactly three years. [Feb. 5.]

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

RELIGION and CONSCIENCE in ANCIENT EGYPT. By W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE, D.C.L., LL.D. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Jan. 20.]

A HISTORY of the GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY, 1845-95. By C. H. GRINLING. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Feb. 1.]

ANARCHISM. By E. V. Kenker. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Feb. 1.]

THOMAS CRANMER. By A. J. Mason, D.D., Canon of Canterbury. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. Leaders of Religion. [Feb. 1.]

THE LIFE of ERNEST RENAN. By Madame Darmesteter. With Portrait. Second Edition in the Press. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A polished gem of biography, superior in its kind to any attempt that has been made of recent years in England. Madame Darmesteter has indeed written for English readers 'The Life of Ernest Renan.'"—Athenaeum.

"A fascinating biographical and critical study, and an admirably finished work of literary art."—Scotsman.

"Interpenetrated with the dignity and charm, the mild, bright, classical grace of form and treatment that Renan himself so loved; and it fulfils to the uttermost the delicate and difficult achievement it sets out to accomplish."—Academy.

THEOLOGY.

THE CHURCHMAN'S LIBRARY. Edited by J. H. Burn, B.D. A series of books by competent scholars on Church History, Institutions, and Doctrine, for the use of clerical and lay readers.

THE BEGINNINGS of ENGLISH CHRISTIANITY. By W. E. COLLINS, M.A., Professor of Ecclesiastical History at King's College, London. With Map. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

SOME NEW TESTAMENT PROBLEMS. By Arthur Wright, Fellow and Tutor of Queen's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LIBRARY OF DEVOTION.

MESSRS. METHUEN have arranged to publish under the above title a number of the older masterpieces of devotional literature. It is their intention to entrust each volume of the series to an editor who will not only attempt to bring out the spiritual importance of the book, but who will lavish such scholarly care upon it as is generally expended only on editions of the ancient classics.

Mr. Laurence Housman has designed a Title-page and a Cover Design. Pott 8vo, 2s. leather, 3s.

THE CONFESSIONS of ST. AUGUSTINE. Newly Translated, with an Introduction and Notes, by C. BIGG, D.D., late Student of Christ Church.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. By John Keble. With Introduction and Notes, by WALTER LOCK, D.D., Warden of Keble College, Ireland Professor at Oxford.

A BOOK of DEVOTIONS. Edited by J. W. Stanbridge, M.A., Rector of Bainton, Canon of York, and sometime Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

WORKHOUSES and PAUPERISM. By Louisa Twining. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Social Question Series.]

EDUCATIONAL.

THE ODES and EPODES of HORACE. Translated by A. D. GODLEY, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 2s. [Classical Translations.]

PASSAGES for UNSEEN TRANSLATION. By E. C. Marchant, M.A., Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge; and A. M. COOK, M.A., late Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford. Assistant Masters at St. Paul's School. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

EASY LATIN EXERCISES on the SYNTAX of the SHORTER and REVISED LATIN PRIMER. By A. M. M. STEDMAN, M.A. With Vocabulary. Seventh and Cheaper Edition, Revised by Mr. C. G. BOTTING, of St. Paul's School. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. Issued with the consent of Dr. Kennedy.

TEST CARDS in EUCLID and ALGEBRA. By D. S. Calderwood, Head Master of the Normal School, Edinburgh. In a Packet of 40, with Answers, 1s. A Set of Cards for Advanced Pupils in Elementary Schools.

FLECTION.

TRAITS and CONFIDENCES. By the Hon. Emily Lawless, Author of "Hurrish," "Maselcho," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Jan. 20.]

JOSIAH'S WIFE. By Norma Lorima. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Feb. 1.]

LOCHINVAR. By S. R. Crockett. Illustrated, and with a Coloured Map. Large crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.]

"Full of gallantry and pathos, of the clash of arms, and brightened by episodes of humour and love. . . . Mr. Crockett has never written a stronger or better book."—Westminster Gazette.

"Always bright and full of stir and movement."—Daily Telegraph.

"A stirring romance of tremendous adventure."—Graphic.

"The story is one of well-sustained interest, full of movement and incident, and told in a spirited style."—Globe.

A DAUGHTER of STRIFE. By Jane Helen Findlater. Author of "The Green Graves of Balgowrie," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The construction of the plot is close and skilful, and shows no weak points. A story of strong human interest."—Scotsman.

"It has a sweet flavour of olden days delicately conveyed."—Manchester Guardian.

"Her thought has the solidity and maturity, and her literary method the quiet strength which characterised 'The Green Graves of Balgowrie.'"—Daily Mail.

OVER the HILLS. By Mary Findlater. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A strong and fascinating piece of work."—Scotsman.

"The story has considerable charm and undeniable human interest."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"An unusually clever story well told."—World.

"We have to reckon with a writer of force and individuality."—Spectator.

"A charming romance. The characters are true to life, and the book is as fresh and strong as the winds blowing over the hills at Glarn."—Speaker.

"The grip of character is very remarkable."—Journal of Education.

"Miss Findlater is to be congratulated. Her story is markedly original and excellently written."—Daily Chronicle.

A CREEL of IRISH STORIES. By Jane Barlow, Author of "Irish Idylls." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Frequent humour brightens the shadows."—Daily Mail.

"Vivid and singularly real."—Scotsman.

"Genuinely and naturally Irish."—Scotsman.

"The sincerity of her sentiments, the distinction of her style, and the freshness of her themes combine to lift her work far above the average level of contemporary fiction."—Manchester Guardian.

"The stories are characterised, like the author's 'Irish Idylls,' by thorough and comprehensive knowledge of the people whom they concern, by a sympathy so intimate that it breathes in her pages, and by those two great gifts—unsought pathos and unstrained humour."—World.

"Subtle and penetrating studies of Irish character. The children of Erin are described in these tales with unflinching insight and humour."—Daily News.

BYEWAYS. By Robert Hichens, Author of "Flames," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A very high artistic instinct and striking command of language raise Mr. Hitchens's work far above the ruck."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A batch of tales which have distinction as well as fascination, and contain by far the best work that Mr. Hitchens has yet given us."—Daily Mail.

"The work is undeniably that of a man of striking imagination and no less striking powers of expression."—Daily News.

A PASSIONATE PILGRIM. By Percy White. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A work which it is not hyperbole to describe as of rare excellence."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The clever book of a shrewd and clever author."—Athenaeum.

"Narrated with captivating gusto."—Daily News.

"Mr. Percy White's strong point is analysis, and he has shown himself capable of building up a good book upon that foundation."—Standard.

THE FALL of the SPARROW. By M. C. Balfour. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Written with genuine ability."—Glasgow Herald.

"A powerful novel."—Daily Telegraph.

"The interest in the narrative is always well maintained."—Scotsman.

"A work of quite unusual quality."—British Weekly.

"It is a well-knit carefully wrought story."—Academy.

BLADYS. By S. Baring-Gould. Illustrated by F. H. Townsend. Crown 8vo, 6s. A romance of the last century. [Second Edition.]

"A story of thrilling interest."—Scotsman.

"A sombre but powerful story."—Daily Mail.

"Teems with incident and adventure."—Glasgow Herald.

"One of the most fascinating volumes a reader can possibly pick up."—Morning Post

A SELECTION FROM MR. MURRAY'S LIST OF SCHOOL BOOKS.

A NEW AND THOROUGHLY REVISED EDITION OF

SIR WILLIAM SMITH'S PRINCIPIA LATINA. Part I., containing Grammar, Delectus, Exercise Book, Vocabularies, &c. A New Edition, the Thirty-seventh, thoroughly Revised, so as to meet the Requirements of Modern Teachers and Scholars. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
Practical experience has proved that this is one of the best, if not the best, Latin Grammar and Exercise Book for Beginners now in existence.

COMPANIONS TO THE FOREGOING :—

INITIA GRÆCA. Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises and Vocabularies. 3s. 6d.

FRENCH PRINCIPIA. Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises and Vocabularies, and materials for conversation. 3s. 6d.

SIR WILLIAM SMITH'S SMALLER HISTORIES. New Editions, thoroughly Revised, and in a great part Re-written. 3s. 6d. each.

"The reputation of Sir William Smith's School Histories, tested as it has been by thirty years' continuous success, needs no advertisement."—Literature, Dec., 1897.

I. A SMALLER HISTORY OF ENGLAND: from the Earliest Times to 1887. Revised by RICHARD LODGE, Professor of Modern History in the University of Glasgow, formerly Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford. With 4 Coloured Maps, 14 Plans, and 68 Woodcuts.

II. A SMALLER HISTORY OF GREECE: from the Earliest Times to the Roman Conquest. Revised by G. E. MARINDIN, M.A., sometime Assistant Master at Eton College. With 2 Coloured Maps, 12 Plans, and 5 Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

III. A SMALLER HISTORY OF ROME: from the Earliest Times to the Establishment of the Empire. Revised by A. H. J. GREENIDGE, M.A., Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford. With Coloured Map, 6 Plans, and 66 Illustrations, many from photographs of Italy at the present day.

AN ENTIRELY NEW BOOK ON A NEW PLAN.

FRENCH STUMBLING-BLOCKS and ENGLISH STEPPING-STONES. By FRANCIS TARVER, M.A., late Senior French Master at Eton College. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

Mr. Francis Tarver's skill as a teacher of French to Englishmen is well known. His thorough knowledge of both languages, and his thirty years' experience as a master at Eton, have afforded him exceptional opportunities of judging what are the difficulties, pitfalls, and stumbling-blocks which beset the path of an Englishman in his study of French.

THE REALM OF NATURE: a Manual of Physiography. By Dr. HUGH ROBERT MILL, Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. With 19 Coloured Maps and 68 Illustrations. (330 pp.) 5s.

TRANSLATION AT SIGHT; or, Aids to Facility in the Translation of Latin. Passages of Graduated Difficulty carefully Selected from Latin Authors, with Explanations, Notes, &c. An entirely New and Original Work. By Professor T. D. HALL, Author of "The Students' English Grammar," &c. Crown 8vo, 2s.

"The passages—some three hundred and fifty in number—are remarkably well graduated from the very simplest of simple sentences up to chapters from Livy and Tacitus, and by no means easy extracts from the Latin poets."—Glasgow Herald.

"Such a book as this makes one wish that it were possible to have one's schooldays again."—Birmingham Post.

THE ELEMENTS OF ETHICS. By JOHN H. MUIRHEAD, Balliol College, Oxford, Lecturer on Moral Science, Royal Holloway College, Examiner in Philosophy to the University of Glasgow. 3s.

THE STORY OF THE PERSIAN WARS AS TOLD BY HERODOTUS. In English. Selected, Arranged, and Edited, so as to form a History Reading Book for Schools. By the Rev. C. C. TANCOCK, sometime Head Master of Roseall School. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

HERODOTUS. The Text of Canon RAWLINSON'S Translation. With the Notes Abridged for the Use of Students. By A. J. GRANT, M.A., of King's College, Cambridge, Professor of History, Yorkshire College, Leeds, Author of "Greece in the Age of Pericles." With Map and Plans. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s. (Uniform with GROTE'S "Greece.")

"The delightful pages of the old Greek, whose flavour has been so admirably presented by Canon Rawlinson, will thus be made accessible to a far wider circle than heretofore. There is no better introduction to Greek literature than Herodotus, and the English reader gets him here under the best possible conditions."—Literary World.

LATIN LITERATURE. By J. W. MACKAIL, formerly Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"It seems at first sight extravagant and paradoxical to describe a 'University Extension Manual' as a work of genius; but Mr. J. W. Mackail's 'Latin Literature' possesses such excellences as render it not unworthy of title."—Pall Mall Gazette.

STUDENT'S MANUAL OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. A Comprehensive Review of English Writers from Chaucer to Tennyson. With Biographical Notices of the Authors. By T. B. SHAW. 7s. 6d.

SPECIMENS OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. Companion to the foregoing. By T. B. SHAW. 5s.

GREECE IN THE AGE OF PERICLES. By A. J. GRANT, King's College, Cambridge, and Staff Lecturer in History to the University of Cambridge. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—The Essentials of Greek Civilisation—The Religion of the Greeks—Sparta, Argos, Corinth, Thebes—The Earlier History of Athens—The Rivalry of Athens and Sparta—Civil Wars in Greece—The Athenian Democracy—Pericles: His Policy and His Friends—Society in Greece—From the Outbreak of the Peloponnesian War to the Death of Pericles—The Peloponnesian War.

"We cordially commend the book to all classes of readers."—Speaker.

The HEAD MASTER of a large Public School writes: "That he has found the work of the greatest value in teaching his Sixth Form, as an accompaniment of the Greek Classical work."

SIR W. SMITH'S ENGLISH GRAMMAR. With Exercises. 3s. 6d.

SIR W. SMITH'S PRIMARY ENGLISH GRAMMAR. With Exercises and Questions. 1s.

STUDENT'S MANUALS. A Series of Historical Works from the Creation of the World to the Present Time. Detailed List on application. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

THE STUDENT'S HUME: a History of England from the Earliest Times to 1868. Thoroughly Revised Edition, continued to the Treaty of Berlin, 1878. By Prof. J. S. BREWER. (830 pp.) With Maps and Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

The Work may also be obtained in Three Divisions, price 2s. 6d. each. Part I., n.c. 55-A.N. 1435; Part II., A.D. 1435-1638; Part III., 1638-1878.

LYELL'S STUDENT'S ELEMENTS OF GEOLOGY. A New Edition, thoroughly Revised and in great part Re-written by Prof. J. W. JUDD, C.B., F.R.S., of the Royal School of Mines. With upwards of 600 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 9s.

"It was a happy thought to entrust the preparation of so important a manual to one of the most intimate, and certainly not the least eminent, of the surviving friends of Sir Charles Lyell. It is hardly too much to say that Lyell's 'Principles of Geology' is not unworthy to stand side by side with Darwin's 'Origin of Species' as an epoch-making book in modern science."—Standard.

A Detailed List of Mr. MURRAY'S SCHOOL PUBLICATIONS will be sent on application.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

Educational Supplement.

SATURDAY: JANUARY 15, 1898.

SCHOOL BOOKS IN THE SCHOOL.

INTERVIEW WITH THE HEAD MASTER OF HARROW.

WHEN (writes a representative of the ACADEMY) I was asked to obtain the views of a head master upon current educational literature I applied to Dr. J. E. C. Welldon, the Head Master of Harrow School. Dr. Welldon kindly offered to submit to some questioning on the large and important subject of school books. It was not on the classic height of Harrow, and in the venerable school buildings, that I found the head master to whose care six hundred boys are committed. Instead, I journeyed to the quaint little town of Southwold, on the Suffolk coast. There I received a welcome from Dr. Welldon that made my task easy from the moment of my arrival. Dr. Welldon gave me carte blanche to ask him questions. Facing me, the waves, brown and fretful, moaned on the pebbles only fifty yards off; and while I framed a question, or listened to Dr. Welldon's animated replies, the horizon would be broken by a passing ketch under half-sail, or the vague and distant form of a coasting steamer. I ought, perhaps, to explain that I do not profess to reproduce Dr. Welldon's precise words throughout this article. I reproduce his sentiments exactly, and his words as nearly exactly as possible.

"What shall I tell you first?" said Dr. Welldon.

"Will you give me," I replied, "some idea of the manner in which school books find their way from the London publishers to the boys' desks at Harrow?"

"Certainly. You will understand that new school books are sent to me in great numbers. I am assisted, therefore, by a Book Committee, consisting of a few of the Harrow masters, who carefully examine the books and report upon them to me—or rather to the regularly-held masters' meetings over which I preside."

"I understand. Then you closely follow in this way the developments of educational publishing?"

"Yes. It is our endeavour to learn what improvements are introduced, and to discover the best book on any given subject."

"Do you believe in making frequent changes in school books?"

"Provided such changes are fully justified by an examination of the merits of new books—I do. Of course, change for change's sake is a mistake. But I am of opinion that fickleness in the choice of school books is not a common fault with schoolmasters. The tendency is the other way. I should rather complain that schoolmasters have a tendency to go on using books with which they are familiar after better ones have become available. It is a very natural tendency, but it can be indulged too far."

"And, as a matter of fact, do you at Harrow make frequent changes of old school books for new?"

"Oh, yes. There are books, of course, which remain in use for very long periods. The Latin Public Schools Primer, for instance, which was compiled by Dr. Kennedy at the request of the head masters of English public schools, was in use for a great many years. It has been revised, but never superseded. There was a kind of agreement, explicit at first, but now I think only tacit, that this book should remain in use, thus preserving uniformity in the teaching of Latin in the schools. Other grammars and, of course, lexicons, &c., are given long leases. But setting aside these, we have no superstitions or prejudices. Our aim is to secure the best book of its kind."

"Do you, as one means of obtaining the best book, have primers specially compiled for use at Harrow?"

"No!" said Dr. Welldon, with emphasis. "I have never been able to see advantage in that system."

"You prefer to come into the open market, and look round, and select the book that is nearest to your ideal?"

"I do. It is best that books should stand upon their own merits. The book which survives in the keenest competition is generally the best book."

"But now, Dr. Welldon, may I put another aspect of the enormous production of new school books before you? You will admit, I think, that it is enormous—not to say bewildering?"

Dr. Welldon smiled his complete assent.

"Would you say that the actual progress made toward the production of the ideal set of school books for a Harrow or any other schoolboy is at all to be gauged by this extraordinary activity in multiplying primers and re-editing classics term after term, and year after year?"

"Oh, dear, no. The progress is very small. More than half the new school books are probably produced for the benefit of the authors or editors, not of the boys."

"I should not have dared to suggest that to you, but I have always imagined so."

"It is not difficult for a scholar to produce an edition of a classical author. Schools are many; school books sell readily; and if such an edition makes its way even into a limited number of schools, it soon brings a fair remuneration both to editor and to publisher. It does not follow that the edition is in any marked degree superior to others which preceded it or which will follow it. In fact, scholastic education would suffer no loss if the editing of classical books were now suspended for twenty years."

"You mean that textual criticism and commentary—so far as they can be useful in classical school books—have now reached their limits?"

"Yes, I mean that. As regards texts there is not likely to be any progress worth considering. Of course, commentary has greatly widened its scope since the days of the 'pure scholars'; geographical and archaeological contributions to the elucidation of classical authors have poured in. But I think that we have got a surfeit of commentary; in short, boys have now got all they want, and perhaps more than is good for them. I mean the new school books give too much help. They do not leave enough for the boys' own research. The modern boy hardly knows what difficulty is—what with elaborate notes, vocabularies, and translations of difficult phrases. The system of making things easy is being pushed to the extreme. The compilers of school books are forgetting that knowledge is best retained when it is acquired by real effort."

I now took the liberty of turning the conversation upon the teaching of English literature. "Have you," I asked Dr. Welldon, "any general criticism to make on the English classics as they are presented to schoolboys?"

"They are apt to be regarded too much as a medium for teaching grammar and etymology; and there is not enough effort made to make boys feel the beauty of masterpieces of literature. At the same time, such efforts must rest with the schoolmaster using a classic, rather than with the editor who annotates it. In the teaching of English literature the personal element counts for almost everything."

"You believe, then, Dr. Welldon, that it is possible to teach English literature to boys—I mean in the sense of inspiring them with a love of it?"

"Most certainly I do; and I regard it as of the utmost importance to rouse in boys' minds the sense of literary beauty. Nothing is more refining, more educating."

"But is there not a danger of 'staleing' fine passages of literature by presenting them, more or less as task work, to immature minds?"

"Yes, there is some danger; but where discretion is used in choosing the right books for boys, according to their age, I think no such mischief need ensue. Teachers, I admit, do not always sufficiently consider boys' ages in selecting English subjects. Milton and Shakespeare, for example, are not suited to young minds; on the other hand, such a book as The Pilgrim's Progress, if it is not read in childhood, is never really understood and appreciated. Let me again insist on the importance of the personal element in the teaching of English literature. Men like Dean Farrar and Mr. Bosworth Smith—both Harrow masters—have shown a wonderful faculty for making boys appreciate good literature, and it is this faculty that counts—not books overloaded with introductions and notes."

"Do you approve of repetitions as a means of implanting literary feeling?"

"Oh, yes. When I went to Harrow I induced one of my colleagues to make a selection of simple and beautiful poems, such as appeal to boys; and these have been in use ever since for repetitions. Too much care cannot be exercised in selecting passages that shall charm boys, and leave an indelible impression of beauty. But the spirit of freedom must inform all efforts to teach English literature. It is important that every large school should have its library, and that this library should be a comfortable room to which the boys may retire unobserved, and take down books at their own wills. I attach the greatest importance to school libraries. Boys' private reading should be encouraged as far as possible."

"Do you think that public school boys are interested in current literature?"

"Not in an effective way. You see, we have no writer who is taking the nation by storm. No writer is generating a powerful current of sympathy, as did Scott and Dickens. It requires such an influence in our midst to make current literature really a topic and a subject of thought among boys."

"You have insisted, Dr. Welldon, on the need to awake in boys the sense of literary beauty. I believe you have made special efforts at Harrow to awake their sense of artistic beauty, also, by reviving the teaching of drawing?"

"Yes; and I am glad to say that we now get remarkable results at Harrow. I must explain to you that every young boy at Harrow is compelled to study either drawing or singing. The compulsion, however, to study either ceases after a time; and thus the music and drawing masters' chance of retaining their pupils is, in general, to arouse in them, during the compulsory period, a genuine love for one or the other of these studies."

"And now, Dr. Welldon, an old question in conclusion. Does the constant widening of the curriculum alarm you? Do you find that thoroughness is giving place to variety?"

"The two are certainly, in some sense, antagonistic; there can be no denying that. Grammatical accuracy, for instance, tends to suffer when much time is given to the development of the literary sense. It is a balance of gain and loss, and all we can do is to be watchful and see that the gain is greater than the loss. I ask myself at Harrow: How can I make the best of the boys as future citizens of the greatest empire of the world? And I do not doubt that it is my duty to give the widest, the most various, the most liberal teaching possible. Moreover, there are other ends to be kept in view than mere learning. It is the function of the public schools to teach public duty. Wherever possible, book-learning should be made the medium of inspiring this sentiment in English school-boys. I may mention that before leaving Harrow I gave the Harrow boys Mr. Fitchett's Deeds that Won the Empire as their holiday task."

"Indeed! That is interesting. And will they be examined in it on their return?"

"Oh, yes."

"You have a large Army class at Harrow?"

"Yes; and we have recently started a Navy class. What is more, we have just passed a boy first into the Navy direct from Harrow School. He is the firstfruits of a new system, in which Mr. Goschen takes the liveliest interest—a system of training young boys for the Navy at our public schools."

Time forbade further conversation; but as I rose to go, I launched yet another question in summary of all my others:

"What broad tendency, Dr. Welldon, do you discover in education to-day?"

"I think the tendency should be freedom, variety, elasticity. I think a schoolmaster should try, within certain broad limits, to ascertain what a boy can do best and let him do it. No doubt, there must be a backbone of compulsory subjects in all education; but the secret of educational success lies not so much in rigidity as in the sympathetic study of dispositions and abilities."

EDUCATION FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA.

BY A LATE MEMBER OF THE BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE.

As Charles Lamb used to say that his real works were to be found in the old India Office in Leadenhall-street, so might one say of Macaulay that his best and most enduring work (even beyond the History) is to be found in the present constitution of the British Government in India. It is to him that India owes her wonderful Penal Code, unmatched for clearness, and so well suited to its purpose that the amendments which the experience of nearly forty years has shown to be necessary may almost be counted on one's fingers. How great and exceptional is this praise will be best known to those who have seen how the two other great Indian Codes—those of procedure—have been added to, modified, and recast within the same period. It is a commonplace to say that most Englishmen know no more of their great dependency than Macaulay has told them in his essays on Clive and Warren Hastings—and it would be well if all knew even so much, for (pace Matthew Arnold) there is great political wisdom, not useless for the present time, to be found therein. Macaulay, too, had a great share in the reform, in 1833, of the East India Company, and it was mainly due to him that the close service was, in 1854, thrown open to competition, and the masterly report of him and his colleagues is the foundation of the system by which the administrators of India have been chosen from that day to this. And by general consent, of foreigners no less than of ourselves, no more able, loyal, and devoted service is to be found in the world now, or has been known in the past.

The principles laid down in the famous minute must be sought there, but are also to be found in outline in the speech of June 23, 1853, which (with his nephew and biographer) we regret was by its author excluded from his collected speeches. The changes that have been from time to time made in the conditions under which Indian civilians enter on their career fall mainly under three heads: first and most important, age of admission; second, period and place of probation; and third, subjects of examination, marks assigned, and matters subsidiary thereto. Most important is the question of age, which is now again very nearly the same as that which was at first fixed, and which many of the best judges think is too high. In my opinion they are right. The age which the candidates selected at the final examination in 1897 had reached at the time of that examination ranged from 23½ to very nearly 25 years. This is too late for young men to enter the Indian Service, for reasons which I shall presently give, since there are other considerations which weigh against that physical maturity which prompted the change, made five years ago, from the low range of age which had been the rule for some ten years previous—and which was as much too low as the present is too high. As there is no danger of a return to that low standard, it will be enough to say here that the change was made at the urgent and repeated instances of the Indian Governments, local and Imperial, it having been found that the mortality among the junior civilians, as among soldiers who went to India under twenty, was alarmingly great. The change made, however, was too sweeping. When the age of candidates was originally fixed (in 1854) the system of examination for public service was new, special training for the contests was unknown, and the advantages of the Indian Service were very much greater than now. Promotion was rapid, the average duration of service considerably less, and the pay (nominally not very different) was really, grade for grade, about double. All these things make the service much less attractive to the older men now proceeding to India, and they will feel the pressure of the changed conditions more as the years pass on, and they find that they cannot claim their pensions till they are nearly fifty years of age (say sixty in our own land), that their service will be mostly spent in comparatively subordinate positions, and that the pecuniary reward of zealous and self-sacrificing work is not very great. All this would, for obvious reasons, be much mitigated if the superior limit of age for admission were again fixed at twenty-one instead of twenty-three; and supplementary to that, probably it would be an advantage to put the lower limit at "over eighteen" instead of "over nineteen." (Of course it would be unfair not to set in the balance for Indian service the increased advantages, in health, liberal leave rules and much more; but no one interested is likely to overlook or moderate these.) Another thing that must be mentioned is, the first competition-wallahs went out to India at once, and served their probation in Calcutta, &c., after their period of service had begun. The present one year's probation in this country is too short for its purpose, and it seems a mistake to have only one examination for selected candidates (in Riding there are no less than three in the same period). Progress in the compulsory subjects should be tested at least once before the Final Examination; this might prevent such a disaster as befell one candidate on the last occasion. This leads me to notice the case of the candidate, a native of Bengal, who heads the lists both at the entrance and for seniority—and who has utterly failed in the essential qualification of riding. Under the regulations, this gentleman will proceed to Calcutta, and, if he still fail to qualify, the responsibility and injustice of retaining him (being unfit), or the odium of ejecting him from the service, will be thrown on the Bengal Government—which is neither fair nor politic.

In regard to the subjects of examination, I should like to see several changes. The range embraced was originally, is now, and should always be, very wide—so as to reap from among the best intellects of the country of all bents. But the reasons which in 1892 led the Commissioners to strike Italian out of the list are not convincing. It should be restored, and both Spanish and Russian should be added. No one who really considers will maintain that any one of the three is easy, is useless, or can be crammed. The last objection does apply, in large measure, to the various divisions of history, and to mental and political science, all of which are highly marked, and are, of course, great favourites with the candidates. It is just the opposite with law, with natural science, with languages thoroughly studied, and, above all, with mathematics. Having regard to this, the table of marks might with advantage be reconsidered.

Again, under the system that has ruled since 1892, the education of the Indian civilians has been falling more and more into the hands of Oxford and Cambridge, from which have come 210 out of 283 successful candidates since 1892, excluding 1896, where the published tables do not allow exact figures confined to the I.C.S. (The numbers were: Oxford 141, Cambridge 69.) In this matter the great English universities have fully earned the reward of their enlightened policy towards education for India, and before the change they had already secured a practical monopoly of the training of selected candidates, for whom both colleges and universities did their utmost. On the contrary, the universities of Ireland and Scotland have practically thrown away their share in preparing candidates, and still more in training probationers. The arrangements made by the Scotch universities, as the official paper in the reports shows, are ludicrously inadequate; no teaching is offered in any of the vernaculars, or law, or history of India. Barren all! It is not for the best advantage of the Empire that this should continue. Each of our three nations excel the others in some valuable points, and each should give of its best (as in olden days they all did) to the rule of India. Why should the part played by Scotland and by Ireland in the Army, Public Works, and other Government departments be so great, and in the Civil Service so small? In both countries are plenty of fit candidates, plenty of able teachers; why do they not find one another out? But if they are falling behind, not so the natives of India. The latter, passing, of course, through Oxford or Cambridge, furnish a steady proportion of successful candidates; and as their years of service, being passed in their own land, will be larger, the initial proportion will always tend to increase. In this many will see political danger: it seems clear that we are not entitled, except by superior capacity, to rule India, and that when we have enabled them to set up equally good—and safe—government for themselves, we should leave, as we are pledged to go from Egypt. This paper is long already, so I will notice only one more point. The names of examiners at the Open Competition are not given, but for the Final they are, though the same reasons would seem to operate in both cases, and in neither need the names be known beforehand. It does, however, seem strange that year after year the teachers of Persian and Hindustani in Oxford should be examining one another's pupils—also, no doubt, their own: there are many other competent and willing examiners, and the arrangement is, to say the least, not seemly, and, if noticed, would give German and French scholars many a good laugh at us!

WHAT THE PEOPLE READ.

VIII.—A SCHOOLBOY.

HE walked slowly round my room, whistling gently, and affecting to examine the contents of my bookshelves. But now and again he looked wistfully towards a pile of boys' books in the corner. The pile was diminishing daily; for rumours of it had got abroad among my more youthful friends. I told him he might choose three for himself; and he selected The Camp of Refuge, Paris at Bay, and Afloat with Nelson. Why had he not chosen The Boys of Huntingley, which was a public school story, since he was a public schoolboy himself? Well, he didn't much care about stories of schoolboys; the boys were generally such "rotters." Yes, they had Eric; or, Little by Little, in the library at school, and he called it rank piffle, what he had seen of it. But Tom Brown's Schooldays wasn't half bad; of course, everybody read that. Poetry? No, he hadn't read much poetry. Oh, yes! he had read The Bab Ballads, also The Barrack-room Ballads; Burnup had lent them to him—Burnup was his house tutor—and they, too, weren't half bad; but they weren't poetry. Poetry, I elicited finally, was the stuff you had to turn into Latin verses—Milton, for choice.

On the whole, the best book he had ever read was Harry Lorrequer, though he had been reading Oliver Twist these holidays, and found it not half bad. Robinson Crusoe? No, he hadn't read that, though he knew the work in pantomime form; nor yet the Swiss Family Robinson, which he had been told was rather footling. Should a book have a girl in it? or did girls spoil books? The question seemed to make him a little uneasy. But, when we had threshed the matter out, we agreed that a girl does not necessarily ruin a book, that she often improves it, and that, in fact, the best kind of book is the book which has a good deal of fighting, and just a little bit of girl. Like the Prisoner of Zenda? Yes; a chap had brought it back to school last term, and it wasn't half bad. He liked Princess Flavia.

Had I any of Stevenson's books? Yes, I had, but not to give away. And was he an admirer of Stevenson? Well, he had read Treasure Island, and it wasn't half bad; but it wasn't that so much as Burnup—the house tutor, you know. Burnup, you see, was awfully keen on getting the chaps to read good books, and Burnup thought no end of Stevenson. Burnup always wanted to know what you had been reading during the holidays, and it wouldn't be half a bad idea to read one of Stevenson's books—for the benefit of Burnup. Burnup could do a lot for you if you did get into a hole. So Kidnapped was added to the other three—as a loan. Yes, taking them all round, books about the sea were the best—Westward Ho! for instance, and Midshipman Easy. Whence it would seem that no quite recent writer has quite got the grip of Marryat and Kingsley on the schoolboy. But he had never heard of Sandford and Merton.

Still, when you have to play football and go in for house runs and do prep., to say nothing of spending some hours a day in form, you don't get very much time for reading. Besides, it's rather smugish to read much out of school. The thing to do is to read in form, which is quite easy when your form master is short-sighted. Just stick your book in the lid of your desk, under your construe and you can read away as much as you like. Only it has to be a thin book. The best for this purpose is the Red Rovers of Mexico, because it is printed on very thin paper, and has a paper cover. Besides it only costs a penny, and even this expense may be diminished by tearing out the pages and passing them round as you read them. Every chap in the upper fourth has read the Red Rovers of Mexico. Its—well—rather steep, you know; you can't believe all of it; but it really isn't half bad. And then he departed to read Kidnapped for the benefit—primarily of Burnup, but to his own ultimate profit.

THE TRADE IN SCHOOL BOOKS

STRONG PROTESTS FROM BOOKSELLERS.

WE have thought it interesting to ascertain the position which school books occupy in the esteem of booksellers. The result of our inquiries has surprised us. We had supposed that the profit on school books was good, and that the sale of this class of literature was one of the bookseller's compensations. We now know better. From every part of the country we have reports written in a tone of almost bitter complaint. The trade in school books is appropriated by wholesale firms, who obtain school books on terms which make it impossible for the bookseller to compete. Incidentally, our bookseller correspondents make various shrewd suggestions, which we commend to all who are interested in educational matters.

A large London bookseller leads the way with the following statement:

"This is undoubtedly the worst feature of what has to be considered 'a bad business.' The bookseller comes into competition with almost the whole of the publishers of school books, with disastrous results to himself; and trade is going from bad to worse. All the largest schools buy direct: orders are booked by publishers' travellers, and the terms are frequently (if not always) better than those given to booksellers. In addition, fashions in school books are constantly changing, and the stock room gets clogged with 'overs.' These remarks do not, however, apply to technical books or books for evening classes, &c., which are constantly increasing in number and excellence, thus compensating one for the loss (?) of the school trade."

A Brighton bookseller writes:

"We do not consider the sale of educational books by any means a profitable one, for the following reasons:

(1) Educational books are always wanted quickly, which necessitates the keeping of a large stock in order to do any trade in this department.

(2) The purchasers of school books always require the utmost discount obtainable.

(3) The publishers' terms are more strict over these books than on any other class of literature.

(4) Much dead stock is inevitably made by frequent issue of new editions, rendering old ones unsaleable, and by change of text-books in the schools.

We think that all school books should be exchangeable for new editions when issued, and better terms given on educational books all round."

Bristol is the educational metropolis of the West of England, but a Bristol bookseller writes in no jubilant strain about the profits of the school book trade in that city:

"The school book trade is so cut, the profits are so small, and the changes of books so frequent, that it is dangerous to stock school books. By the way, are not booksellers very foolish to always tell the public the cost price of these goods? Does any other trade act thus foolishly?"

A Birmingham correspondent sends us a message which confirms, from a bookseller's point of view, some of the opinions expressed by Dr. Welldon in the interview which appears in another column:

"The trade in school books and educational books generally is very risky: the frequent changes, the modern plan of using books for one term only, the modest price at which they are published, and the short life of so many school books, make the business a most hazardous one. Notwithstanding, it is fairly profitable. We supply all the colleges and high schools in Birmingham, but we avoid the elementary schools. There are too many school books. We wish it were possible to punish the next person who writes, prints, or publishes a new Greek, Latin, French, or German 'System,' 'Course' or 'Reader.'"

This report is not contradicted by another emanating from Birmingham:

"I have for years avoided the school trade as far as school books, &c., are concerned. The discounts to the customer are larger, and the terms from the publisher to the trade smaller, than in any other department of the book trade. £1,000 of the turnover in school books are sold at a loss to the retailer when working expenses are calculated. The net system is better applied to school books than many other classes of literature."

An Oxford bookseller's experience is this:

"I cannot speak as to ordinary school books, but those used in the 'Schools' are always in brisk demand, and a book that has something in it of real value to Oxford men, even though the price be high, is bought ungrudgingly.

But is it not a waste of energy and scholarship, to say nothing of money and booksellers' brains, that so many chips from the Classics should be duplicated and quadruplicated as they are nowadays?"

From a Chester firm of booksellers we have this report:

"Fortunately, we have not a large business of the class indicated. We doubt very much if it can be profitably conducted, unless on a very large scale, and with travellers. The infinite detail, the cut prices, and deferred payments—not to mention bad debts—render the bulk of such customers unprofitable, though there are, in our connexion, one or two large accounts which we value highly."

A Cardiff bookseller writes:

"I have never attempted to do business in school books and educational works. I find that wholesale houses, who get special terms from publishers, take advantage of this privilege to obtain orders against the retail bookseller. I think it is too bad that traders, who obtain special discount for the purpose of supplying retailers, should go direct to the retailers' customers—the schools."

Our Cheltenham correspondent is not enthusiastic:

"I supply most of the high-class schools here with books. The class of books used constantly changes, so that it is unwise to stock school books, as the profit realised is small at the best. The reduction in price, and reissues of cheap editions, such as the 'Penny Poets,' &c., tells much against the returns."

A Harrogate bookseller brings an indictment against Leeds:

"My experience of school-book trade is that the less I stock of school books and sell the better under present conditions. This class of trade is most unprofitable. A certain Leeds firm has obtained the contract for our School Board at one-third off. I offered 25 per cent. Now 8½ difference means a lot to the Board and absolutely nothing to the contractor. Bear in mind that carriage on the books has to be paid to Leeds. Then the books must be overhauled and sent out again, carriage paid to Harrogate. Can you show me where the profit comes in? This applies not only to the School Board but to most, if not all the private schools as well. All the publishers are sending out travellers now in all directions, waiting upon the teachers, and supplying their wants. Our experience is unmistakably this—to keep off all school books and material for schools. Prize books only we cultivate, for Sunday and day schools."

From a Norwich bookseller:

"The only opinion I can offer is that it is little use trying to do a school and educational trade unless one is able to offer large discounts and employ canvassers to solicit orders. This district is well covered by large wholesale houses who can offer exceptional terms, against which a retail bookseller is unable to compete."

A bookseller of Darlington writes:

"Our experience of school books is the same as of books in general, only worse. A powerful monopoly, in the shape of a limited company consisting mainly of school teachers, have the matter in their own hands in a radius of over 100 miles. Booksellers are powerless. It is quite hopeless to attempt to compete with such an organisation. They have, therefore, to look for other branches of trade to eke out a living. The second grade schools take a few books; but the frequent changes they make entail a loss on books left over and unsaleable. Yet we are obliged to keep up the fiction of selling school books for the sake of keeping the connexion together. An unprofitable class of trade!"

A leading firm of Edinburgh booksellers echoes the universal complaint, and adds a suggestion:

"The enormous increase in the number of educational books published, and the consequent rapid changes in those used in any given school or college, render this department the most difficult to deal with in the whole business of bookselling. The stock increases, and books which one year sell well may next year be worthless. Could booksellers not invent a system of exchange which might be for mutual advantage?"

A DUBLIN bookseller writes favourably of the trade in school books, but with strong reservations:

"After a long experience in every branch of education books—from the most abstruse subject in mathematics and science to the elementary school book—we still look upon it as an important department in bookselling, and a fairly remunerative one.

It is a department which requires constant attention; and great care must be exercised in ordering stock, as a book in demand to-day may be superseded by another next week, and become dead and useless stock.

We are strongly of opinion that where this class of business cannot be done without accepting contracts at 'cutting' prices, it had far better be left severely alone."

Lastly, a Belfast bookseller writes in vehement strain:

"Educational books are now made up for cram, not education, and they are a great nuisance to the bookseller, who must be wide awake if he wishes to keep soul and body together."

NEWSPAPER ENGLISH.

In a recent issue Mr. Earl Hodgson found fault with certain turns of phrase that are met with in current English. His list was not a long one. He could, no doubt, have extended it considerably, and if he had done so I should probably, for my part, have been able thoroughly to disagree with him on many points. As it is, I could not, with a clear conscience, subscribe to his protest in all particulars. But that is neither here nor there. I merely cite our divergence of view as typical. Hardly any two writers of English are at one in their ideas as to idiom or construction, and if they were they would still be liable to be bowled out by the printer's reader, who has his views on the subject too. At present it is the printer's reader who rules the roost—or is it roast? If he were always of one mind that would not greatly matter, since what we want above all things is uniformity or rule. Unfortunately every

MACMILLAN & CO.'S BOOKS FOR SPECIAL EXAMINATIONS (1898-9).

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1898.

A Class-Book of the Catechism of the Church of England. By Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 1s. 6d.
A First Class-Book of the Catechism of the Church of England. By Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 6d.
An Elementary Introduction to the Book of Common Prayer. By Rev. F. PROCTER and Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 2s. 6d.
A Class-Book of Old Testament History. By Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 4s. 6d.
A Class-Book of New Testament History. By Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 5s. 6d.
The Gospel according to St. Luke.—The Greek Text. With Introduction and Notes. By Rev. J. BOND, M.A. 2s. 6d.
The Acts of the Apostles.—Authorised Version. With Notes. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
THE GREEK TEXT. With Notes. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Plato.—Euthyphro, Apology, Crito, and Phædo. Translated by F. J. CHURCH. 2s. 6d. net.
Demosthenes.—Philippic I. and Olynthiacs I-III. Edited by J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D. 5s.
Molière.—Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme. With Notes by L. M. MONTAGNY, B.A. 1s. 6d.
Lessing.—Minna von Barnhelm. Edited by Rev. C. MEAK. 2s. 6d.
Shakespeare.—The Merchant of Venice. With Introduction and Notes. By K. DRIGTON. 1s. 9d.

Macaulay.—Essay on Warren Hastings. With Introduction and Notes. By K. DRIGTON. 2s. 6d.
Lamb.—Tales from Shakespeare. With Introduction by Rev. A. AIRGR, LL.D., Canon of Bristol. 2s. 6d. net.
Virgil.—Æneid. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Cæsar.—De Bello Gallico. Books II. and III. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. W. G. RUTHERFORD, M.A., LL.D. 1s. 6d.
Horace.—The Odes. Books II. and IV. With Notes and Vocabulary. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. each.
Edited without Vocabulary. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 2s. each. (Classical Series.)
Livy. Book V. With Notes and Vocabulary. By M. ALPOD. 1s. 6d.
Tacitus.—The Histories. Books I. and II. Edited by A. D. GODLEY, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Xenophon.—Anabasis. Book III. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Euripides.—Medea. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Edited by A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D. 2s. 6d.
Homer.—Iliad. Books I., IX., XI., XVI., XXIV. The Story of Achilles. Edited by J. H. PRATT, M.A., and WALTER LEAF, Litt.D. 5s.

OXFORD LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1898.

A Class-Book of the Catechism of the Church of England. By Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 1s. 6d.
An Elementary Introduction to the Book of Common Prayer. By Rev. F. PROCTER and Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 2s. 6d.
The Gospel according to St. Matthew.—The Greek Text. With Introduction and Notes. By Rev. A. SLOMAN. 2s. 6d.
The Acts of the Apostles.—Authorised Version. With Notes. By T. E. PAGE, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
THE GREEK TEXT. With Notes. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 3s. 6d.
A Short History of the English People. By J. R. GREEN, LL.D. With Analysis. Part II. 3s.
Edward I. By T. F. TOTT, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Shakespeare.—The Merchant of Venice. With Introduction and Notes. By K. DRIGTON. 1s. 9d.
Scott.—Marmion. With Introduction and Notes. By M. MACMILLAN, B.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.
Class-Book of General Geography. By H. R. MILL, D.Sc. 3s. 6d.
Commercial Geography. By E. C. K. GONNER, M.A. 3s.
Civil Service Essay Writer. By T. E. JACOB. 1s. Companion. 1s. 6d.

Cæsar.—The Invasion of Britain. Being Selections from Books IV. and V. of the "De Bello Gallico." Adapted for Beginners. With Notes and Vocabulary. By W. WELCH, M.A., and C. G. DUFFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Cæsar.—Gallic War. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Virgil.—Æneid. Book V. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. A. CALVERT, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Horace.—Odes. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Cicero.—De Senectute. With Notes and Vocabulary. By E. S. SACKENBAG, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Xenophon.—Anabasis. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d. With Exercises. By E. A. WELLS, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Euripides.—Hecuba. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Plato.—Euthyphro, Apology, Crito, and Phædo. Translated by F. J. CHURCH. 2s. 6d. net.
Hauff.—Die Karavane. Edited by H. HAGEE, Ph.D. 3s.
Commercial German. By F. C. SMITH. 3s. 6d.
The English Citizen, his Life and Duties. By C. H. WYATT. 2s.
Introduction to Political Science. By Sir J. R. SEELEY. 5s.

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE SCHOOLS EXAMINATION, 1898.

Cicero.—Pro Murena. Edited by J. H. FARRER, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Horace.—Odes. Books I., III., and IV. With Notes and Vocabulary. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. each.
Livy. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Books II. and III. Edited by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Terence.—Phormio. Edited by Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Virgil.—Æneid. With Notes and Vocabulary. Book IV. By Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d. Book V. By Rev. A. CALVERT, M.A. 1s. 6d. Book VI. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Euripides.—Medea. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d. Edited by A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D. 2s. 6d.
Alcestis. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d. Edited by M. L. EARLE, Ph.D. 3s. 6d.
Plato.—Euthyphro, Apology, Crito, and Phædo. Translated by F. J. CHURCH. 2s. 6d. net.

Thucydides. Book II. Edited by E. C. MARCHANT, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Molière.—Les Precieuses Ridicules. Edited by G. E. FASNAUGHT. 1s.
Lessing.—Minna von Barnhelm. Edited by Rev. C. MEAK. 2s. 6d.
The Gospel according to St. Luke.—The Greek Text. With Introduction and Notes. By Rev. J. BOND, M.A. 2s. 6d.
The Acts of the Apostles.—The Greek Text. With Notes. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 3s. 6d.
THE AUTHORISED VERSION. With Notes. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Shakespeare.—With Introduction and Notes. By K. DRIGTON. The Tempest. 1s. 9d. Julius Cæsar. 1s. 9d.
Bacon.—Essays. With Introduction and Notes. By F. G. SELBY, M.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.
Milton. With Introduction and Notes. Comus. By W. BELL, M.A. 1s. 3d.; sewed, 1s. L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, Lycidas, Arcades, Sonnets, &c. By W. BELL, M.A. 1s. 9d.
Samson Agonistes. With Introduction and Notes. By H. M. PROIVAL, M.A. 2s.

CAMBRIDGE HIGHER LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, JUNE, 1898.

Shakespeare.—King Lear. With Introduction and Notes. By K. DRIGTON. 1s. 9d.
Milton.—Paradise Lost. With Introduction and Notes. By M. MACMILLAN, B.A. Books I. and II., 1s. 9d.; Books I., II., III., and IV., separately, 1s. 3d. each; sewed, 1s. each.
Bacon.—Essays. With Introduction and Notes. By F. G. SELBY, M.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.

Virgil.—Æneid VI. With Notes and Vocabulary. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Horace.—Odes. Book II. With Notes and Vocabulary. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Cicero.—Second Philippic. Edited by J. E. B. MAYOR, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Plato.—Euthyphro, Apology, Crito, and Phædo. Translated by F. J. CHURCH. 2s. 6d. net.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON, 1898.

MATRICULATION (JUNE, 1898).
Virgil.—Æneid. With Notes and Vocabulary. Book I. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d. Book II. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. Book III. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Æschylus.—Persæ. Edited by A. O. PROCKARD, M.A. 2s. 6d.
MATRICULATION (JANUARY, 1899).
Ovid.—Metamorphoses. Books XIII. and XIV. Edited by C. SIMMONS, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Xenophon.—Anabasis. Book IV. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. E. D. STONE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
MATRICULATION (JUNE, 1899).
Cicero.—Catiline Orations. Edited by S. WILKINS, Litt.D. 2s. 6d.
Homer.—Iliad. Book XXIV. With Notes and Vocabulary. By W. LEAF, Litt.D., and Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.

INTERMEDIATE (1898).
Horace.—Epistles. Edited by A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D. 5s.
Herodotus.—Book III. Edited by C. G. MACAULAY, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Shakespeare. With Introduction and Notes. By K. DRIGTON. King John. 1s. 9d. The Tempest. 1s. 9d.
Spenser. With Introduction and Notes. The Faerie Queene. Book I. By H. M. PROIVAL, M.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d. The Shepheard's Calendar. By C. H. HERFORD, Litt.D. 2s. 6d.
Elizabethan Literature. By Prof. G. SAINTSBURY. 7s. 6d.
General Sketch of European History. By E. A. FREEMAN. 3s. 6d.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON B.A., 1898.

Tacitus.—Histories, III.-V. Edited by A. D. GODLEY, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Juvenal.—Thirteen Satires. Edited by E. G. HARDY, M.A. 5s. Translated by A. LEPPER, LL.D. 3s. 6d.
Plato.—Phædo. By R. D. ARCHER-HIND, M.A. 8s. 6d.
Æschylus.—Septem Contra Thebas. Edited by A. W. VERRALL, Litt. D., and Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Bacon.—Essays. With Introduction and Notes. By F. G. SELBY, M.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.
Milton.—With Introduction and Notes. Comus. By W. BELL, M.A. 1s. 3d. L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, Lycidas, Arcades, Sonnets, &c. By W. BELL, M.A. 1s. 9d.
Shakespeare.—King Lear. With Introduction and Notes. By K. DRIGTON. 1s. 9d.

COLLEGE OF PRECEPTORS EXAMINATION, JUNE, 1898.

Shakespeare.—The Merchant of Venice. With Introduction and Notes. By K. DRIGTON. 1s. 9d.
Scott.—Marmion. With Introduction and Notes. By M. MACMILLAN, B.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.
Marmion, and The Lord of the Isles. By F. T. PALGRAVE. 1s.
Macaulay.—Horatius. Lays of Ancient Rome. Edited with Introduction and Notes by W. T. WEBB, M.A. 1s. 9d.
Cæsar.—Gallic War. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Virgil.—Æneid. Book V. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. A. CALVERT, M.A. 1s. 6d.

Horace.—Odes. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Cicero.—De Senectute. With Notes and Vocabulary. By E. S. SACKENBAG, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Phædrus.—Fables. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Eutropius. Books I. and II. With Notes and Vocabulary. By W. WELCH, M.A., and C. G. DUFFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Xenophon.—Anabasis. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Euripides.—Hecuba. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S
Special List of Text Books
 FOR
CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS,
 1898.

ENGLISH.

- ARNOLD'S SCHOOL SHAKESPEARE. Under the General Editorship of J. CHURTON COLLINS, M.A.
The Merchant of Venice. Edited by C. H. GIBSON, M.A., Assistant-Master at Merchant Taylors' School. Cloth, 1s. 3d.
The Tempest. By W. E. URWICK, M.A., Lecturer on English Literature at the Durham College of Science, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Cloth, 1s. 3d.
As You Like It. By S. E. WIMBOLD, B.A., Assistant-Master at Christ's Hospital. Cloth, 1s. 3d.
Twelfth Night. By R. F. CHOLMELEY, M.A., Assistant-Master at St. Paul's School. Cloth, 1s. 3d.
King Lear. By the Rev. D. C. TOVEY, M.A., late Assistant-Master at Eton College. Cloth, 1s. 6d.
Hamlet. By W. HALL GRIFFIN, Professor of English Literature at Queen's College, London. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

HISTORY AND GEOGRAPHY.

- A HISTORY OF ENGLAND. By C. W. C. OMAN, M.A., Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, Author of "Warwick the King Maker," &c. Fully furnished with Maps, Plans, and Genealogical Tables. 760 pp., cloth, 5s. THE SAME IN TWO PARTS. With separate Indices, 3s. each.
 Part I. From the earliest times to A.D. 1603.
 Part II. From 1603 to 1885.
THE SAME IN THREE DIVISIONS.
 Division I. To A.D. 1307. 2s.
 Division II. From 1307 to 1688. 2s.
 Division III. From 1688 to 1885. 2s. 6d.
In ordering, please state the period required to avoid confusion.
A HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY. By the late Dr. MORRISON. New Edition, revised and largely rewritten by W. L. CARRIE, English Master at George Watson's College, Edinburgh. Cloth, 3s. 6d.
A SHILLON GEOGRAPHY. By the late Dr. MORRISON. Revised by W. L. CARRIE. Cloth, 1s.

FRENCH AND GERMAN.

- FRENCH WITHOUT TEARS. By Mrs. HUON BELL, author of "Le Petit Théâ re des Enfants." A Graded Series of French Reading Books, carefully arranged for young pupils beginning French. With Humorous Illustrations, Notes, and Vocabulary. Book I., 9d.; Book II., 1s.; Book III., 1s. 3d.
A FIRST FRENCH COURSE. By JAMES BOÏELLE, B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Senior French Master at Dulwich College. With Grammar Exercises and Vocabulary. Cloth, 1s. 6d.
A FIRST FRENCH READER. By W. J. GREENSTREET, M.A. With Exercises for Re-translation and Vocabulary. Cloth, 1s.
LESSONS IN GERMAN. By L. INNES LUMSDEN, Warden of University Hall, St. Andrews. A Graded Course with Exercises and Vocabulary, forming a Complete Introductory Manual of the Language. Crown 8vo, 3s.

LATIN.

- CÆSAR DE BELLO GALICO.
Books I. and II. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Hints for Composition, and Vocabulary, by G. C. HARRISON, M.A., Assistant-Master at Fettes College and P. W. HADDON, M.A., Assistant-Master at the City of London School. With Map, Plans, and numerous Illustrations to the Section on the Roman Army. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.
Books III.—V. Uniform with the above. Edited by M. T. TATHAM, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.
A FIRST LATIN COURSE. By G. B. GARDINER, M.A., D.Sc., formerly Assistant-Master at the Edinburgh Academy, and ANDREW GARDINER, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.
A LATIN TRANSLATION PRIMER. With Grammatical Hints, Exercises, Conversations, and Vocabulary. By G. B. GARDINER, M.A., 1s.

MATHEMATICS.

- THE ELEMENTS OF ALGEBRA. By R. LACHLAN, Sc.D., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, cloth, with or without Answers, 2s. 6d. Answers separately, 1s.
AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF MECHANICS. By R. WORMELL, M.A., D.Sc., Headmaster of the Central Foundation Schools of London. With numerous Illustrations and Diagrams. Cloth, 3s. 6d. Solutions to Problems, for Teachers only, 3s. 6d.
THE MERCANTILE ARITHMETIC. By R. WORMELL, M.A., D.Sc.
 Part I. Including Rule of Three, Practice, Fractions, and Decimals. 2s.
 Part II. Interest, Proportion, Percentages, Stocks, &c. 2s.
 Complete, with Answers, 4s.; without Answers, 3s. 6d. Answers separately, 1s.

EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, Bedford Street, Strand, London.

BLACKIE & SON'S
NEW AND RECENT EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

- The Warwick Shakespeare. Under the General Editorship of Prof. HERFORD.
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. Edited by H. L. WITHERS, B.A. 1s. 6d.
CORTOLANUS. Edited by E. K. CHAMBERS. 1s. 6d.
HENRY THE FIFTH. By G. C. MOORE SMITH, M.A. 1s. 6d.
TWELFTH NIGHT. Edited by A. D. INNES, M.A. 1s. 6d.
AS YOU LIKE IT. Edited by J. C. SMITH, M.A. 1s. 6d.
RICHARD THE SECOND. Edited by C. H. HERFORD, Litt. D. 1s. 6d.
MACBETH. Edited by EDMUND K. CHAMBERS, B.A. 1s. 6d.
JULIUS CÆSAR. Edited by A. D. INNES, M.A. 1s. 6d.
HAMLET. Edited by E. K. CHAMBERS, B.A. 1s. 6d.
RICHARD III. Edited by G. MACDONALD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. Edited by E. K. CHAMBERS, B.A. 1s. 6d.
CYMBELINE. Edited by A. J. WYATT, M.A. 1s. 6d.
THE TEMPEST. Edited by FRED. S. BOAS, M.A. 1s. 6d. [Others in preparation.]

HISTORY.

- The Oxford Manuals of English History. Edited by C. W. C. OMAN, M.A., Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford. 1s. each.
 No. 1. THE MAKING OF THE ENGLISH NATION, B.C. 55-A.D. 1135. By G. C. ROBERTSON, B.A., Fellow of All Souls' College.
 No. 2. KING AND BARONAGE, A.D. 1135-1323. By W. H. HUTTON, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of St. John's College.
 No. 3. THE HUNDRED YEARS' WAR, A.D. 1323-1485. By C. W. C. OMAN, M.A. [In preparation.]
 No. 4. ENGLAND AND THE REFORMATION, A.D. 1485-1603. By G. W. POWERS, M.A., formerly Scholar of New College.
 No. 5. KING AND PARLIAMENT, A.D. 1603-1714. By G. H. WAREING, M.A., Lecturer in History at Wadham College.
 No. 6. THE MAKING OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE, A.D. 1714-1832. By ARTHUR HASSALL, M.A., Student and Tutor of Christ Church.

The Warwick History of England: a Simple and Picturesque Account of the National History from Early Times to 1896. With many Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

A History of the British Empire. By the Rev. EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

GEOGRAPHY.

- Man on the Earth: a Course in Geography. By LIONEL W. LYDE, M.A., Examiner in Geography to the Oxford Local Examination Board and the College of Preceptors. Fully Illustrated. 2s.
Blackie's Descriptive Geographical MANUALS. By W. G. BAKER, M.A. Illustrated.
 No. 1. REALISTIC ELEMENTARY GEOGRAPHY. 1s. 6d.
 No. 2. THE BRITISH ISLES. 2s.
 No. 3. THE BRITISH COLONIES AND INDIA. 2s.
 No. 4. EUROPE (except the British Isles). 2s.
 No. 5. THE WORLD (except Europe and the British Empire). 2s.

A Synoptical Geography of the World: a Concise Handbook for Examinations, and for General Reference. With a Complete Series of Maps. 1s.

MATHEMATICS.

- Layng's Euclid.—Euclid's Elements. With Notes, Examples, and Exercises. Arranged by A. E. LAYNG, M.A. BOOKS I. to VI., with XI., and Appendix; and a wide Selection of Examination Papers. 3s. 6d.
 BOOKS I. to IV., in 1 vol., 2s. 6d.; BOOK I., 1s.; II., 6d.; III., 1s.; IV., 6d.; V. and VI. together, 1s.; XI., 1s. 6d.
Layng's Arithmetic. By A. E. LAYNG, M.A. In Two Parts. Part I. now ready, extending to Decimals and the Unitary method. 2s. 6d., with or without Answers.
Layng's Arithmetical Exercises, for Junior and Middle Forms (6,000 Exercises). 1s.; with Answers, 1s. 6d.; Answers alone, 6d.

LATIN.

Cæsar's Gallic War. Books I., II., IV., V., and VI. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Exercises, and Vocabulary, by JOHN BROWN, B.A. With Coloured Map, Pictorial Illustrations, and Plans of Battles. 1s. 6d. each. Book III., 1s.

Virgil's Æneid. Book I. Edited, with Introduction, &c., by Rev. A. J. CHURCH, M.A. 1s.

Latin Unseens: Graded Specimens of Prose and Verse. Junior Section, 3d.; Senior, 6d.

First Steps in Continuous Latin Prose. By W. C. FLAMSTEAD WALTERS, M.A. 2s.

Hints and Helps in Continuous Latin PROSE. By W. C. FLAMSTEAD WALTERS, M.A. 2s.—KEY, 2s. 6d. net.

FRENCH.

A First French Course. By J. J. BEUZE-MAKER, B.A., late Examiner to the College of Preceptors, &c. 1s. 6d.

A Second French Course. By J. J. BEUZE-MAKER, B.A. 2s. 6d.

A Complete Course of French Composition and Idioms. By HECTOR REY, French Master in the Church of Scotland Training College. 3s. 6d.

A Comprehensive French Manual. For Students reading for Army and other Examinations. By OTTO C. NAF, M.A. Lond. 3s. 6d.

A Manual of French Prose Construction. By J. G. ANDERSON, B.A., Assistant Master at Merchant Taylors' School. 5s. [Nearly ready.]

SCIENCE.

A Text-Book of Geology. By W. JEROME HARRISON, F.G.S., Chief Science Demonstrator for the Birmingham School Board. Fourth Edition, much Enlarged. 3s. 6d.

Hygiene and Physiology. By H. ROWLAND WAKEFIELD. 2s. 6d.

Elementary Physiology. By Professor AINSWORTH DAVIS. 2s.

Elementary Botany. By JOSEPH W. OLIVER, Lecturer at the Birmingham Municipal Technical School. 2s.

A Text-Book of Heat. By CHARLES H. DRAPER, B.A., D.Sc. Lond., Headmaster of the Boys' High School, Woolwich. 4s. 6d.

Hydrostatics and Pneumatics. By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A., Balliol College, Oxford. 4s. 6d.

Elementary Text-Book of Dynamics AND HYDROSTATICS. (Theoretical Mechanics, Elementary and Advanced.) By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A. 3s. 6d.

Deschanel's Natural Philosophy. Translated and Edited by Professor J. D. EVERETT, D.C.L., F.R.S. Thirteenth Edition, thoroughly Revised and much Enlarged. Medium 8vo, cloth, 19s.; also in Parts, limp cloth, 4s. 6d. each.

Part I. MECHANICS, HYDROSTATICS, &c.
 Part II. HEAT.
 Part III. ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM.
 Part IV. SOUND and LIGHT.

BLACKIE & SON'S Complete Catalogue of Educational Books post free on application.

London: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 50, Old Bailey.

great printing establishment has methods of its own, both of spelling and phraseology. The great London newspapers ought to be wells of English undefiled. As every critical reader knows, they are very far from earning that distinction. In one of our leading journals, for instance, you will never find the good old Saxon phrase "five and twenty." The writer may write it, but the printer's reader, acting upon some rule or tradition of the office, turns it into "25." Now "five and twenty," I submit, is not exactly 25. It is a more indefinite number. The writer who says five and twenty does not mean to be as precise as an accountant or a bank clerk. Consider what would be the effect of expressing Tennyson's poem, "The Charge of the Light Brigade," as "the charge of the 600." Some of the delicate suggestiveness of the line would at once fade out of it. For many years the Times tried to introduce "holyday" as the spelling of "holiday." It has given it up, and very properly, because holiday has long ceased to be holy-day. Another questionable idiosyncrasy of the daily press may be mentioned. Finale, in music, is given in italics—thus, finales. This is wrong, because "finale" is an entirely English word. The italicised form would be right if the word were French. But it is not French. We take it from the Italian, pronouncing it in three syllables—fin-ale—and give it an English plural. To be italicised it ought to be given the Italian plural, finali. As pronounced and written it is English and nothing else, and therefore ought to be printed in the ordinary Roman character. On the same principle "impresarios" ought not to be italicised, as it usually is.

The other day I read in an eloquent article: "Everybody is entitled to their opinion." This is very bad, of course, but "everybody" and "everyone" are bothering words. Ought we to say "everybody is entitled to his or her opinion," or is "his" opinion enough? Everybody on this question is not agreed. Then consider the various ways of saying the equivalent of on peut: "one "You can," "they can," "we can," "can," "people can." Is there any great language but English lacking in the impersonal pronoun represented by "on"? And couldn't it be supplied, or, rather, restored, for it existed in Anglo-Saxon? "Mon seal God lufian," said the Englishmen of the eleventh century, the "mon" being a near relative of the German "man," as in "man sagt." Perhaps the "mon" has become impossible; but of the various equivalents in use which is the best? "No one was there but I" is a very common phrase. I think it, nevertheless, wrong. The "but" seems to me to have the same force as "except," and to be entitled to carry an objective with it—i.e., "me." This word "me" brings up a crucial point. In answer to the question, "Who is there?" nine English people out of ten say "Me." The Latin-minded grammarians contend for "I" on the strength of the rule of Latin that the verb "esse" takes the same case after it as before it. But there is something to be said for the popular usage. The modern English expression is borrowed from the French,

"C'est moi," and is at best a hybrid. In Old English they had a distinctively English form: "I am it," corresponding to the German, "Ich bin es"; and we still say in analogous circumstances, "Who is it?" Could we have "I am it" restored, or at least "It's me" sanctioned?

Many purists condemn such a phrase as "no sort or kind" on the ground of tautology. I should be sorry, however, to see it disappear, because it is a landmark in English philology; it is a relic of the fusion of Saxon and Norman-French. At that period many phrases of a bi-lingual character crept into use, and this is one of them. "Truth and honour" is another, truth being "troth," or honour, as in "by my troth." "Voice" as a verb is much objected to, coming to us moderns as it does from American sources—e.g., to "voice" the public sentiment. I don't like it, and never use it, but it occurs in Shakespeare. Notoriously many so-called Americanisms are old English provincialisms. The purists threaten, indeed, to become insufferable pedants. It is now the custom of the printer's reader—our great authority—to treat "none" as invariably singular, a contraction for no one. But it is useful as a plural, and is so used in Shakespeare—e.g., "Speak daggers, but use none." Why may we not continue to say, "I spoke to no women at the meeting because there were none present"?

More objectional still is the growing practice of treating a collective phrase as a plural. The printer's reader no longer allows us to say: "His life was marked with a goodness and truth that was undeniable." We are now expected to use "were." Presently we shall be saying "Thirteen and fourpence are the price." Already some people say "Five pounds are a large sum"; and we are losing, if we have not already lost, the right to speak of "five foot ten." The podant, too often ignorant of the Saxon idiom, will have it "feet." Our plurals certainly want regulating. Macaulay speaks of "a shambles," but it gives me a shudder to read of "a gasworks." Why not "a gaswork" or "a soapwork"? "Politics" and "news" are becoming established as singular nouns; but the newspaper scribe is still bothered with "lock-out," the plural of which is given both as locks-out and lock-outs. To my mind "locks-out" is not defensible because "lock" there is not a noun but a verb. Of "author" and "authoress" as applied to a woman, which is the better? There appears to be no rule. Miss Braddon on her title-pages always calls herself an "author." Again, is it Whitsun Day or Whit Sunday? We say "Whitsuntide," but then we also say Whit Monday. I should say Whitsun was correct. For years that exasperating phrase "Parcels Post" obtained official sanction. It is now happily changed to "Parcel Post," which is truer to English idiom, though "Telegraphs Department" remains to vex our souls; and, of course, there is still the "London Parcels Delivery Company" flying in the face of philology. Possibly "Parcels Post" was suggested by such phrases as "heart's desire" or "money's worth," but there is no real analogy between them.

One abomination is no sooner got rid of than another (to my thinking) grows up. We say "Macmillans are publishing a book," or "Longmans." Indeed, the latter firm adopt "Longmans" as their style and title, though everybody knows the members of the firm are the Messrs. Longman. This does not appear to me to be good English. The analogy is "the baker's" or "the greengrocer's," but it is once more a false analogy. "Later on" is objected to by Mr. Earl Hodgson, and it strikes me, too, as a vulgarism. But it has its analogy in "further on," which is perfectly good English. It is a coming-on phrase. "Later" is rather a bald expression; the "on" helps it somehow, and I imagine "later on" has come to stay. We badly need an authoritative declaration with respect to it. Also on the question of the "split infinitive." I don't like "to greatly increase," preferring "greatly to increase"; but I am not prepared to say that it is un-English. Pretty much the same remark applies to what is called the flat infinitive. "Come and help us kill the fatted calf" instead of "to kill" has something in its favour; but I draw the line at the Americanism, "to help persons appreciate the scenery."

I have by no means exhausted the debatable points of idiom or construction. Every writer of experience could add to the list. Only the more obvious have I touched upon. Many of a subtle character remain. What reporter, for instance, knows how to render correctly, in the third person, such a qualifying phrase as "I dare say"? I have seen "he dared say" and "he durst say," but both fail to render the sense—which is, "he rather thought." Again, in such a sentence as, "This has had the more effect that many of the speeches were," &c., which is the better word after "effect"—"that" or "because"? Both are used. Again, is "bluff" good English or slang? I say nothing of a general reform of English spelling. That is never likely to come now. It could not be attempted without the adoption of a greatly extended alphabet to render the many half-sounds that occur in English. We should never accustom ourselves to saying that an article was "mād in Jermani" or "mād in Frans." Nor is it necessary that we should. I have always thought the spelling reformers mistook the conditions of the problem. Our spelling may be erratic, but the printed word is a kind of visual counter. We learn to recognise it, and to spell it, by the eye. How often do we feel that a word looks wrongly spelt? Words have to be taken en bloc, and it would be exactly the same with the "fonetic" monstrosities proposed as their substitutes. In reading, we never get at the sense of a word by spelling it, and "cough" and "plough," although theoretically anomalous and incongruous, present no practical difficulty. Still, spelling might in certain cases be simplified with advantage. "Program" and "jewelry" are better than the accepted forms "programme," "jewellery."

At present English is like a luxuriant garden running wild. It needs trimming and weeding.

REVIEWS.

SCIENCE.

MATHEMATICS AND MECHANICS.

An Elementary Treatise on the Metric System of Weights and Measures. By J. Hamblin Smith. (Longmans, Green, & Co.)

UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES.—Euclid: Books I.-IV. By Rupert Deakin. The Tutorial Trigonometry. By William Briggs and G. H. Bryan. (W. B. Clive.)

Elementary Geometrical Statics. By W. J. Dobbs. (Macmillan & Co.)

Applied Mechanics. By John Perry. (Cassell & Co.)

Steam Boilers. By George Halliday. (Edward Arnold.)

IF the recommendations of the Parliamentary Committee appointed in 1895 to consider our system of weights and measures had been accepted, the use of the Metric System would now be compulsory. But though Parliament passed an Act to legalise this system for the purposes of trade, the Government very wisely decided not to ask for powers to enforce the use of metres, grams, and litres, upon a nation which had learned to think in yards, ounces, and quarts. Nothing but good can result, however, from a wider acquaintance with the metric system than is possessed at present by commercial men. But familiarity with the system must be obtained by actual measurements rather than by abstract arithmetical exercises on its various units. We are therefore of the opinion that Mr. Hamblin Smith's treatise will not be nearly so useful in extending the knowledge of metric units of measurement as the penny rules and tape measures which are now sold, marked in both centimetres and inches.

Several excellent editions of Euclid's Elements have been published in recent years; and Mr. Deakin's rendering of the first four books takes its place among them. The propositions are clearly set down, both in figure and text, and many most helpful notes are given upon the methods of proof. Moreover, special care has been taken with the exercises; and if the student pays attention to the hints given, he will soon find as much pleasure in working riders as he does in solving puzzles.

Another book in which the student is given every assistance which it is possible for a text-book to render is the Tutorial Trigonometry, by Prof. Bryan and Mr. Briggs. Believing—and rightly so—that "a thorough grasp of the nature and general properties of trigonometric functions is just as essential as facility in manipulating trigonometric expressions," general definitions referring to angles both greater and less than a right angle are introduced at an early stage. Rather more than a half of the book is devoted to functions, formulæ, and equations referring to one or more angles, while the remainder deals with logarithms and the solution of triangles. The introduction of a chapter describing the methods of representing trigonometric functions by diagrams is much to be commended. Graphical methods of representing facts and relationships not only aid the student, but are of the utmost value to the practical man.

Mr. Schooling has shown how statistics can be made intelligible by means of diagrams, and science teachers are rapidly learning that geometrical constructions appeal much more forcibly to the mind than mathematical formulæ. In Mr. Dobbs's Elementary Geometrical Statics the subject of graphic statics is dealt with in a systematic manner. It is easy to understand that any force acting upon a body can be represented by a line, both as regards the point at which it is applied, the direction in which it acts, and the strength or magnitude. Taking this as a fundamental principle, Mr. Dobbs shows how the resultants and conditions of equilibrium of forces having various lines of action can be represented by geometrical figures. True it is that the rods and strings involved in the problems are assumed to have neither weight nor thickness, and that the frameworks to which attention is given are indeformable; nevertheless, the principles described may be applied to stresses generally, and should form an essential part of the education of every engineer.

In contrast with the purely geometrical aspect of forces presented in Mr. Dobbs's work, we have Prof. Perry's aggressively practical views expressed in his Applied Mechanics. Prof. Perry holds very strong opinions upon the manner in which mechanics should be taught, and he airs his views in his text-book in a way which a candid critic might describe as egotistic. But when he descends to gibes at academic teaching, he irritates the reader and spoils his students. Surely a student must have received a fair amount of academic training before he can use the differential and integral calculus, yet the calculus is introduced on p. 15 of Prof. Perry's book. However, the students who use the book may, and probably will, evade the paragraphs in which the calculus is used. There will still remain a practical course on general principles which should be known by every student of mechanical engineering.

For apprentices and workmen who have not had a preliminary training such as the book affords, but who wish to learn something of the scientific principles involved in the construction of boilers, Mr. Halliday's manual on Steam Boilers is admirably suited. The practical knowledge gained in the workshop or factory finds an adequate supplement in this manual, which is intermediate between the abstract text-book of heat or steam and the highly specialised treatise. The volume is a very valuable addition to technological handbooks, and may profitably be read by everyone who has to do with the construction, trial, or management of steam boilers of any type.

ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM.

Theory of Electricity and Magnetism. By Charles E. Curry. (Macmillan & Co.)

The Theory of Electricity and Magnetism: being Lectures on Mathematical Physics. By Arthur G. Webster. (Macmillan & Co.)

First Principles of Electricity and Magnetism. By C. H. W. Biggs. (Biggs & Co.)

The Principles of Alternate Current Working. By Alfred Hay. (Biggs & Co.)

DR. CURRY'S treatment of the Theory of Electricity and Magnetism is based upon a work by Prof. Boltzmann, who contributes a preface to it. The treatise could have been appropriately entitled a philosophy of electricity and magnetism, and is a good example of the manner in which electric and magnetic theory is studied on the Continent. As a rule, British men of science (mathematicians excepted) like to deal with phenomena first and theory afterwards, but the philosophical German mind reverses this order and considers how the facts fit the theory rather than how the theory explains the facts. In Dr. Curry's book the deductive method of reasoning is strictly followed, the aim being "to show that Maxwell's theory, with its recent modifications and developments, suffices to explain all phenomena of electricity and magnetism, and on the other hand, that all electric and magnetic phenomena follow directly from it."

To students already familiar with modern views of electricity, the treatise will be of service in showing how electric and magnetic phenomena may be derived from Maxwell's fundamental equations.

Prof. Webster's work also deals with the mathematical theory of electricity, but from a different standpoint, being an introduction to Maxwell's classical treatise rather than a brief to show the soundness of the Maxwellian theory. The first half of the book is devoted to the treatment of departments of mathematics and theoretical mechanics bearing upon mathematical physics, and not until p. 243 is reached are electrostatics, electromagnetics, and magnetism brought into consideration. It may be doubted, however, whether such an inordinate amount of introductory matter is desirable in a work intended for University students; for even granting that a student should be well provided with tools for his mental work, the value of the tools can best be understood by using them at once upon concrete material. If the theorems which occupy the first half of the book are "simply matters of geometry and analysis," the title should have made this fact clear. Putting this aside, there is no doubt that Prof. Webster's treatise will assist students who intend to devote attention to the more difficult works of Maxwell, Helmholtz, Hertz, and Heaviside.

Very little mathematical knowledge is needed to understand Mr. Biggs's book on Electricity and Magnetism. The book contains a clear statement of the principles underlying the construction and use of apparatus employed in the laboratory and in simple electrical installations. The treatment is original in many respects, and the information given is often of a practical kind, not found in similar elementary works. The free use of the first person singular is not unpleasing, though here and there it jars upon the reader. For instance, the expression "This is the fifth time I have had a shot at this preface" is not altogether happy.

Mr. Hay's book on Alternate Current Working brings us right into the domain of electrotechnics. It is a very helpful little volume upon a difficult branch of electrical engineering, and as a stepping-stone to the more advanced treatises of Fleming and Jackson is much to be commended. We doubt if there is another book which will serve that purpose better than Mr. Hay's does.

CHEMISTRY.

A Course of Practical Chemistry. By M. M. Pattison Muir. Part I.: Elementary. (Longmans.)

Chemistry for Photographers. By Chas. F. Townsend. (Dawbarn & Ward.)

Agricultural Chemistry. By R. H. Adie and T. B. Wood. 2 vols. (Kegan Paul.)

MR. PATTISON MUIR has so freely criticised the methods of teaching chemistry set forth in various text-books that we opened his own book with a certain amount of curiosity; and we confess to a feeling of disappointment at the result. The book is good in some respects, but it does not possess those original qualities which, wrongly perhaps, we have been led to expect. It is now generally conceded that a student should begin the study of chemistry by a course of practical work on the properties of substances and by investigations of simple physical and chemical changes. This is the method followed by Mr. Muir, nearly one-half the book being taken up with experiments on important inorganic substances. The student is thus trained to use his reasoning powers before he reaches qualitative analysis proper. The first part of the book has, therefore, a distinct educational value, but in our opinion qualitative analysis has none, and only those students who intend to become analysts ought to give time to it. The analysis of simple salts is, however, usually an obligatory part of a course in chemistry, and this being so, Mr. Muir's book is as good as any other to work from. The book is built upon a definite plan, and the information given is sensible as well as sound.

It differs entirely from Mr. Townsend's Chemistry for Photographers, which aims at being serviceable rather than educational. Amateur photographers, and professionals as well, are as a rule content to be profoundly ignorant of the chemical processes involved in the production of negatives and prints. Let them read Mr. Townsend's book and they will find that they will be able to extend their work considerably, even though in a few cases the descriptions of chemical reactions are more forcible than accurate.

The Agricultural Chemistry, of Messrs. Adie and Wood, is by no means a success, either in plan or execution. The pages are uncut (a distinct drawback to an elementary work), the figures are bundled together at the commencement of the first volume, and numerous paragraphs and sentences are placed in square brackets without any reason being assigned. The only good points about the volumes are simplicity of treatment and a progressive series of experiments, but we are sure these are not sufficient to attract the teachers and students for whom the work is intended, or to divert attention from the many deficiencies.

BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES.

A Text-book of Physiology. By M. Foster. Assisted by C. S. Sherrington. Part III. "The Central Nervous System." (Macmillan.)

Lectures on Physiology. First Series: "Animal Electricity." By Augustus D. Waller. (Longmans.)

Elements of the Comparative Anatomy of Vertebrates. Adapted from the German of Dr. R. Wiedersheim, by W. N. Parker. (Macmillan.)

The Vertebrate Skeleton. By Sydney H. Reynolds. (Cambridge University Press.)

Lessons in Elementary Biology. By T. Jeffery Parker. (Macmillan.)

A Text-book of General Botany. By Carlton C. Curtis. (Longmans.)

PROF. MICHAEL FOSTER'S Text-book of Physiology is a classic. It is a book which must be read by the earnest student of physiology, and which every practitioner should keep by him for reference. More than twenty years have elapsed since the work first appeared, but throughout that period it has occupied the foremost place among books dealing with the science of vital machinery. The present edition—the seventh—of the part of the book devoted to the central nervous system has been largely revised to bring it into line with the remarkable advances which the study of the brain has made within the past few years.

After reading Prof. Waller's lectures on Animal Electricity we are more than ever sorry that he has resigned his chair at the Royal Institution, where they were delivered; for they constitute a most important contribution to the physics of living matter. Animal electricity is considered to have had its origin in the observation by Galvani of spasmodic movements in the legs of freshly-killed frogs suspended on copper hooks. The nerves in the legs were receiving a weak current of electricity and they expressed their feelings in spasms. Dr. Waller's experiments consist in removing the nerve from its natural organ and exciting it electrically to see how it responds. The isolated nerve thus treated produces an effect upon a galvanometer connected with it, and the effect can be proved to be an exact measure of its physiological activity. Only living nerves produce these electrical effects when stimulated; dead nerves having no excitability whatever. The activity of a nerve under various influences, such as anæsthetics, heat, acids, alcohol, tobacco smoke, &c., can, therefore, be found by observing the change in the character of the normal electric response when the nerve is stimulated under the different conditions. That is what Dr. Waller has done, and the results of his interesting inquiries are described in lucid language in the present volume.

The third edition of Dr. Wiedersheim's standard work on Comparative Anatomy forms the basis of Prof. W. N. Parker's text-book, which differs, however, so much from the original that it is practically a new book. By treating the German edition freely, abridging it in some parts and adding new material to others, the work is made far more suitable to English readers than if the text had merely been translated. The plan of the book is to compare the organs of animals and to show how they individually have suffered evolution. A general knowledge of zoology is necessary before the book can be usefully studied, but the illustrations are so numerous and instructive that they alone provide the means for a liberal education in comparative anatomy. Medical students, and workers in vertebrate morphology, should certainly add the book to their libraries. The skeleton comes in for a large share of attention, and in Mr. Sydney Reynolds's Vertebrate Skeleton it is treated in detail. For each group of animals the general skeletal characters are first described; then the skeleton of the selected type is taken, and this is followed by the treatment of the skeleton as developed in the group organ by organ. The book covers a wide field, some animals which are not strictly vertebrate being included; but Mr. Reynolds has dealt with them all in a satisfactory manner.

The course of general biology contained in the late Prof. T. J. Parker's Lessons in Elementary Biology (third edition) serves to give students who have studied zoology and botany separately a connected view of organic life from the simple blobs of protoplasm known as amœbæ to the more complex organisms. The types described illustrate all the more important modifications of structure, and the chief physiological processes, in plants and animals. Prof. Parker was singularly successful as a teacher, and his lessons stand as a memorial of his exceptional powers.

The Text-book of General Botany of Dr. Curtis is a laboratory manual and class-book combined. The practical exercises contained in the book are many in number and in some cases difficult of execution, but the student who performs them will not only gain considerably in knowledge, but also in self-reliance and intelligence; and the development of these faculties is, after all, the most important aim of scientific work. The book is, however, too elaborate to be of service in the colleges below university rank.

GEOLOGY AND PHYSIOGRAPHY.

A Text-book of Geology. By W. Jerome Harrison. (Blackie.)

Physiography for Advanced Students. By A. T. Simmons. (Macmillan & Co.)

Elementary Practical Physiography. By John Thornton. (Longmans.)

GEOLOGY cannot be learnt from books, but books can be of immense service in directing observation, and showing how observed facts may be co-ordinated. This is done admirably by Mr. Harrison in his Text-book of Geology. The book is a connected statement, clearly printed and well illustrated, of the lessons taught by the rocks. It is intended more especially for students in classes under the Science and Art Department, but it deserves, and will doubtless receive, recognition from the general reader.

Another Departmental text-book is Mr. A. T. Simmons's Physiography for Advanced Students, and it is even better than Mr. Harrison's. The book is really a concise encyclopædia, in which the earth, the sea, the air, and the sky are dealt with in all their varying aspects. The illustrations—there are more than two hundred—are the best that have ever appeared in a volume designed for use by physiography students of the Science and Art Department, and the information given puts the reader in touch with the researches and views of the foremost authorities in the various branches of science comprehended by physiography. It would be difficult to produce a volume which better facilitates the work of the teacher, or is better adapted to the wants of the student.

Mr. Thornton's Practical Physiography is also deserving of praise, but, being more elementary in character and less comprehensive in scope, it lacks the numerous descriptions of recent work which give life to Mr. Simmons's book. This notwithstanding, the book provides a good course of lessons and experiments in elementary mechanics, physics, and chemistry.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

Light, Visible and Invisible. By Silvanus P. Thompson. (Macmillan & Co.)

The Induction Coil in Practical Work. By Lewis Wright. (Macmillan & Co.)

The Story of Germ Life. By H. W. Conn. (Newnes.)

PROF. SILVANUS THOMPSON'S book on Light, based upon a course of lectures delivered at the Royal Institution, should be in the possession of everyone who takes an intelligent interest in science. The book is a model of what a scientific work intended for general readers should be. It is attractive in appearance, profusely illustrated, and an accurate statement of the present state of knowledge of the subject. There is no descent to buffoonery, such as one finds in some popular books of science, and no florid language. The reader is shown clear pictures of the science of optics from the best aspects, and he can obtain intellectual enjoyment by contemplating them. Röntgen rays, and their relationships to other rays, form the subject of a very interesting chapter of the book.

The apparatus for producing Röntgen rays, and for studying the phenomena of the electric discharge in partial and in high value, is ably described by Mr. Wright in his book on the Induction Coil in Practical Work. All the information required to understand and manipulate an induction coil, and to obtain the best results from it, is given in this unpretentious handbook. For persons who wish to take up Röntgen-ray work, either as a scientific recreation or with surgical applications in mind, the volume is particularly suitable.

Mr. Conn's Story of Germ Life will assist in correcting erroneous impressions concerning bacteria, and in extending the knowledge of the functions of bacterial life in nature. Whoever reads the book with attention will profit by it.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Humane Science Lectures. By various Authors. (George Bell & Sons.)

Psychology. An Introductory Manual for the Use of Students. By F. Ryland. (George Bell & Sons.)

The Mathematical Psychology of Gratry and Boole. By Mary E. Boole. (Swan Sonnenschein.)

Model Drawing. By William Mann. (Nelson.)

UNDER the auspices of the Humanitarian League and the Leigh Browne Trust, a series of Humane Science Lectures were delivered last winter, and are here reprinted. The main object of the lectures seems to be to bring sentiment into the domain of science. Men of science have feelings as well as others mortals; but just as art students leave their passions in the ante-room with their hats and coats when they are studying the nude, scientific investigators are in the habit of locking up their emotions in a cupboard when they are studying the habits of Dame Nature. The Humanitarian League would alter this strictly intellectual mode of procedure, and make all vital phenomena anthropomorphic.

As a means to its end the League might usefully encourage the study of a course of psychology, such as is provided in Mr. Ryland's manual, now in its seventh edition. The phenomena of sensation, memory, conception, emotion, and will are there presented in a way which gives the reader clear and connected ideas on the relations between mind and matter. That is more than can be said of Mrs. Boole's Mathematical Psychology. A more incoherent production it has rarely been our lot to read. The mathematics are often shaky, and the psychological conclusions are not above reproach, while the whole is nebulous in structure.

What Mr. Mann considers to be the true principles of model drawing are set forth in his book. Under the system at present used, all objects are represented by the draughtsman as they would appear on a vertical plane. The picture plane is thus always kept at right angles to the ground, whereas Mr. Mann pleads that objects should, in most cases, be represented upon oblique planes. To the universal use of the vertical plane he ascribes most of the difficulties met by students of model drawing, and all the distrust of the fundamental maxims. The purpose of his book is to put the matter on a more scientific basis.

ENGLISH.

First Book of Physical Geography. By Ralph S. Tarr, B.S., F.G.S.A. (New York: The Macmillan Company; London: Macmillan & Co.)

THIS is a valuable book, on a branch of science in which Prof. Tarr is a recognised master. He aimed, he tells us, at producing an elementary work, suited to introduce the subject into high schools; he has done that, and a great deal more. If any large proportion of school-books in the States be of this high quality, we at home may well envy them. But if the usual way of teaching science be "to assign certain pages to be memorised, and to stop there" (p. ix.), we think our methods are better. (Memorise means, we suppose, to learn by rote.) The book is adorned and illustrated by a profusion of excellent diagrams, maps of large land or water areas, photographs of celestial objects, meteoric appearances, and remarkable terrestrial objects and landscapes. Taking the high modern view of the subject of the science, "the earth as the abode of man, in all its aspects," the writer gives first a most interesting account of the generally accepted modern theory of the stages by which our planet reached its present condition, and the views most prevalent of the constitution of the universe. But he carefully refrains from dogmatising, and dwells strongly on the necessary limitations of human intellect in regard to these problems of infinity. He then deals, in their order, with the conditions of the earth as a satellite of the sun, and its alternations of seasons, climates, day and night. Then are considered the great elemental forces, in their constant interaction—the atmosphere, with its heat, electricity, and magnetism, influence on temperature and climate, winds and storms, and plant and animal life. Next comes the ocean, with its calm depths and ever-moving surface, and its mighty influences for welfare and destruction. Last of all come the phenomena of the dry land, its stages of formation, rocks, and soil; the action of water and fire upon it; its prominent physical features, and the marks it bears of the march of ages past. This is but a brief summary of a few of the most striking points in the book. It is well written, and we can thoroughly recommend it.

On the Choice of Geographical Books. By H. R. Mill, D.Sc., F.R.S.E. (Longmans.)

ALL who have, like ourselves, suffered under the old system of teaching geography will welcome from the pen of the learned secretary to the Royal Geographical Society this clear and full guide to the best literature of his science. He conceives of it on the grandest scale—"the description of the Earth in relation to Man, in all the bearings of that relationship," and points out that only those can fully know its value who will, to some extent at least, study it in all its branches. The first chapter, on the "Principles of Geography," is masterly, as a statement both of the claims he makes for his subject, and the interest that attaches to it. Then come chapters on methods of teaching, text-books, atlases, works of reference; on geography in special relation to physical conditions, flora and fauna, and races of men; and lastly, what is to most of us the whole subject—natural and political divisions of the globe. Only a specialist could properly judge of Dr. Mill's work, but its value will be tested in actual use by teachers and students. An index should have been added, for at present it is not easy to say whether a particular book has been registered. We should have liked to see included Spencer St. John's delightful work on Borneo, Palgrave's Central Arabia should be named in the standard (2 vols.) edition, and we miss Elisée Reclus's great work. Dr. Mill's style sometimes halts: "advancement to high civilisation" (p. 12), "plenty books" (p. 112), "displacement of standpoint," and the like, needlessly offend the eye.

Geography of Africa. By Edward Heawood, M.A. (Macmillan & Co.)

FOR many reasons the Dark Continent claims our very earnest attention; yet we know almost nothing of it save a little that concerns the coast-lands and Egypt. Here it is treated under every aspect. Physical features, climate, ethnology, political relations are all in turn presented in clear, precise language. An excellent sketch-map introduces the book, and it is completed by an exhaustive summary and full index. We may note as worth particular attention the pages dealing with the Races of Men, French Activities, Tunis, Madagascar, and the Dutch Republics.

XIX.-Century Prose. By J. H. Fowler, M.A. (A. & C. Black.)

THIS new "Literary Epoch Series,"—to be complete in six volumes—deserves praise for its aim, but we fear the conditions laid down make success difficult. English prose during the century now closing is too vast, rich, and varied in its excellence to be critically presented even to a schoolboy in a large-type volume of 120 pages only. We think, too, that an author is better represented by several short pieces than by one long one. The choice here made does not seem to us the best possible, either of authors or of typical extracts from their writings. For the present purpose we should have preferred "George Eliot" and "Elia" to Coleridge and Thackeray; and De Quincey's prose should be illustrated rather from the Opium-Eater—say, by the gorgeous dream. From Macanlay we should choose part of the Trial of Warren Hastings or of the Seven Bishops; from Carlyle, some pages of the French Revolution; and from Ruskin, flowers and gems out of Sesame and Lilies. It is due to Mr. Fowler to say that his criticism, though rather formal, is painstaking and generally correct; but with some of the views in his Introduction we cannot agree.

XIX.-Century Verse. By A. C. McDonnell, M.A. (A. & C. Black.)

OUR remarks on Mr. Fowler's "Prose" apply mutatis mutandis to this book also. And why was the long criticism of Tennyson included, since extracts could not be given from his works? Browning, more masculine and, to our thinking, more truly representative of the age, would have served the purpose equally well. Here, again, we are not satisfied with the work chosen as typical. Wordsworth's Laodamia is splendid, though some would prefer Ruth or the Intimations of Immortality; but surely some of the sonnets, the noblest since Milton's, should have been included—and Goody Blake should have been excluded by one who holds that "it shows Wordsworth at his worst" (p. 16). Scott wrote higher poetry, in Marmion and The Lady of the Lake, than the stirring tale of Deloraine's Quest; the latter part of the long extract from Don Juan is in Byron's worst vein; and Shelley would have been better shown in his Cloud and Arethusa. From the views in the Introduction we wholly dissent. England had not to learn from the French Revolution that men are free (p. 6); the years which preceded, which embraced the whole life of Burns and the poetic life of Cowper, should not be described as "remarkable for their barrenness" (p. 2); and we should be puzzled to find where Tennyson "goes deeply into the spirit of evolution" (p. 9).

Selections from Wordsworth. By W. T. Webb, M.A. (Macmillan & Co.)

WE have here an excellent addition to an excellent series, and another witness to that revival of Wordsworth's fame which was initiated by Palgrave and enhanced by Matthew Arnold. The poems chosen are all worthy of the poet, and show him at his best; but, of course, every lover of Wordsworth will wish that more had been included, especially of the "Sonnets." We are glad to find, most appropriately close to the "Ode to Duty," the "Happy Warrior," than which there are few nobler short poems in the language. Mr. Webb's introduction is a careful piece of work, and shows insight into his author's spirit. In particular, his comparison of Wordsworth's "Sonnet to the Skylark" with Shelley's Ode is admirable, and it is well in these days to be reminded, from the lives of Wordsworth and of his great forerunner Milton, of the duty of patriotism and the need of a lofty, unbending love of freedom, combined with obedience to moral law. We believe we could show good cause against Mr. Webb's judgment on "She was a phantom of delight," and we think he has not said enough of the evenness of Wordsworth's poetry, the absence of fire and passion, qualities so marked in Byron. The notes are full and instructive, almost too full, and at times just a little prosy. In another edition, which, we hope, may soon be called for, Mr. Webb will no doubt correct (p. xix.) "Common Law" to "Civil Law."

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS' EDUCATIONAL LIST.

FOR SECONDARY SCHOOLS AND LEAVING CERTIFICATE EXAMINATIONS, &c.

Higher Latin Unseens.

Selected, with Introductory Hints on Translation, by H. W. AUDEN, M.A., Assistant Master at Fettes College, late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge, and Bell University Scholar. [In a few days.]

Higher Greek Unseens.

Selected, with Introductory Hints on Translation, by H. W. AUDEN. [Immediately.]

Lower German.

Reading and Supplementary Grammar, with Exercises and Material for Composition. By LOUIS LUBOVIOUS. [In a few days.]

Latin Verse Unseens.

By G. MIDDLETON, M.A., Lecturer in Latin, Aberdeen University; late Scholar of Emmanuel College, Cambridge; Joint-Author of "Student's Companion to Latin Authors." Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. [Ready.]

Latin Historical Unseens.

For Army Classes. By L. C. VAUGHAN WILKES, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. [Ready.]

Greek Verse Unseens.

By T. R. MILLS, M.A., late Lecturer in Greek, Aberdeen University; formerly Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford; Joint-Author of "Student's Companion to Latin Authors." Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. [Ready.]

History of English Literature.

By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A., Senior English Master, Edinburgh Ladies' College. With Introduction by Professor MASSON. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s.

Outlines of English Literature for Young Scholars.

With Illustrative Specimens. By the same Author. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

English Verse for Junior Classes.

By the same Author. Part I. Chaucer to Coleridge. Part II. Nineteenth Century Poets. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. net each.

Elementary Grammar and Composition.

With a Chapter on Word-building and Derivation. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.

Working Handbook of the Analysis of Sentences.

Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

Paraphrasing, Analysis, and Correction of Sentences.

By D. M. J. JAMES, M.A., Gordon Schools, Hundy. Crown 8vo, 1s.

Practical Arithmetical Exercises.

Containing upwards of 8,000 Examples, and 750 Extracts from Examination Papers. New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, 364 pages, 3s.; with Answers, 3s. 6d.

Handbook of Mental Arithmetic.

Large crown 8vo, 264 pages, with Answers on the Margin, 2s. 6d. Also in 6 parts, with Answers on the Margin. Cloth limp, 6d. each.

Exercises in Mensuration.

128 pages, cloth, 1s. Also in two parts, 64 pp., paper, 4d.; cloth, 6d. each. Answers, in Two Parts, price 2d. each.

Elementary Algebra.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 294 pp., 2s. With Answers, 2s. 6d. Answers sold separately, price 9d. Also in Four Parts:—Parts I., II., III., 6d. each; Part IV., 9d. Answers to Parts I., II., III., each 2d.; Part IV., 3d.

Edinburgh's Dictionary

OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Etymological, Pronouncing, and Explanatory. The pronunciation revised by Rev. P. H. PHELP, M.A., Camb. Thirteenth Edition with Supplement. Crown 8vo, 800 pp., 7s. 6d.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

DAVID NUTT'S EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

WELLINGTON COLLEGE SERIES FOR THE STUDY OF FRENCH AND GERMAN.

The following Works have been issued in this Series, which comprises what is universally acknowledged to be the best School Grammar of the French Language ever published in this country. All crown 8vo, cloth.

The Wellington College French Grammar.

By H. W. EVE and F. DE BAUDISS. Twelfth Edition. 4s. Exercises separately, 1s. 6d. Exercises to accompany the above (by H. W. EVE and the Rev. J. H. D. MATTHEWS), 1896. 1s. 6d. Key, 5s. Third Edition, 1893. 3s. 6d.

A Key to the above Exercises. 5s. net.

Exercises on the Accidence and Minor Syntax. By A. J. CALAIS. 1888. 1s. 6d.

French Reader. Selected and Annotated. By A. J. CALAIS. Second Edition. 1892. 2s. 6d.

A School German Grammar. Uniform with The Wellington College French Grammar. By H. W. EVE. Fourth thoroughly Revised Edition. 4s. 6d.

Exercises to accompany the preceding. By H. W. EVE and A. ZIMMERN. 1899. 2s.

German Accidence and Minor Syntax. By H. W. EVE. 1888. 2s.

First German Exercises. By H. W. EVE and F. DE BAUDISS. 1895. 2s.

Second German Exercises. By H. W. EVE and F. DE BAUDISS. [In the press.]

French and German Selections for Translation at Sight. By J. H. D. MATTHEWS and H. A. BULL. Two Vols. Second Edit. 1890. Each 1s. 6d.

Baumann, O.—The Junior French Composition BOOK for all PUBLIC EXAMINATIONS. 1892. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

The Senior French Composition BOOK for all PUBLIC EXAMINATIONS. 1892. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Public Examination French Class BOOK. Being Materials for Reading and Translation, specially arranged for Advanced Pupils and Candidates for Public Examinations. By M. DESHUMBERT. Second Edition. Enlarged and Revised. 1897. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

Deshubert (M.)—Dictionary of Difficulties MET WITH IN SPEAKING and WRITING FRENCH. Fifth Edition. 1894. 12mo, cloth, 112 pp., 2s. 6d.

Payen-Payne.—French Idioms and ProVERBS. 1893. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

Mullins (W. E.)—Elementary German EXERCISES. Fifth Edition. 1894. 12mo, cloth, net, 2s. Key, to Teachers only, net, 10s.

Goethe (J. W. von) Faust. Part I. Edited, with a Literal Prose Translation and Notes for English Students, by "Beta." 1895. Crown 8vo, cloth, pp. viii+384, 3s. 6d.

A Practical Grammar of the Portuguese LANGUAGE (on Dr. Otto's System). By C. H. WALLACE. Key, 3s. 6d.

PHONETIC SERIES.—By H. SWAN.

1. Colloquial French. A Handbook for English-Speaking Travellers and Students. With the Exact Pronunciation. Fourth Edit. 1894. 1s.

2. Colloquial German. 1897. 1s. 6d.

3. Colloquial Italian. 2nd Ed. 1894. 1s. 6d.

A. von Bohlen.—Declension of the German SUBSTANTIVE. 1s.

Hallifax.—A Table of German Declensions. Printed in Three Colours on Folding Card, mounted on linen. 9d.

Niebuhr's Heroen-Geschichten. With Notes, Vocabulary, &c. By Dr. O. A. BUCHHEIM. Thirty-second Edition. 12mo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

Petersen (Marie).—Prinzessin Ise. A Tale of the Harz Mountains. Edited, with a Vocabulary, by A. von BAVENBERG. 32mo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

Schiller's Neffe als Onkel. With Literary Introduction, Notes, and Vocabulary, by Dr. C. A. BUCHHEIM. 12mo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

NUTT'S CONVERSATION DICTIONARIES. Already Issued.

Jäschke (R.)—English-French Conversation Dictionary. With French-English Vocabulary. 1892. Cloth, pp. 490+xxxiv, 2s. 6d.

English-German Conversation Dictionary. With German-English Vocabulary. 1893. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

English-Italian Conversation Dictionary. With an Italian-English Vocabulary. Cloth, pp. 424+iii, 2s. 6d.

Lyra Heroica. An Anthology selected from the best English Verse of the 16th, 17th, 18th, and 19th Centuries. By WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY. Author of "A Book of Verse." "Views and Reviews." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.; or, School Edition, 18mo, cl., 2s.

Attic Greek Vocabulary for Schools and COLLEGES. Arranged according to Subjects, with the Words in English Alphabetical Order. By E. DAWES, M.A. Post 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

Latin Vocabulary for Schools and COLLEGES. Arranged according to Subjects. By E. DAWES, M.A. Post 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

London: D. NUTT, 270 and 271, Strand.

B. H. BLACKWELL'S LIST.

In a few days, large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net, a new and enlarged edition of

A STUDENT'S MANUAL OF ENGLISH CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY. By DUDLEY JULIUS MEDLEY, M.A., Tutor of Keble College, Oxford.

Some Press Notices of the First Edition.

"Admirable in arrangement, full of facts, and sober in judgment."—The Times.

"Mr. Medley may be praised for his modesty, good sense, judicious brevity, business-like style, and keen eye to the practical wants of the class of student to whom his book seems to be addressed. . . . The mass of Mr. Medley's facts are carefully and accurately brought together."—Athenæum.

"It covers the entire subject within convenient space and in a style thoroughly commendable. Not often does one find a book packed so full of facts and judicious deductions therefrom. Not a line, scarcely a word is wasted. Every page is filled with well-classified material."—Political Science Quarterly, Dec., 1896.

Third edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

FEILDEN'S SHORT CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF ENGLAND. Thoroughly Revised by W. GRAY ETHERIDGE, M.A., Keble College.

"The editor, Mr. Etheridge, has done his work well. In its new form the manual has been carefully re-edited, fresh matter introduced, and the work brought more or less up to date."—Oxford Magazine.

Foolscap 8vo, pp. xxxii.+104, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

THE JOURNAL of JOACHIM HANE.

Containing his Escapes and Sufferings during his Employment by Oliver Cromwell in France from November, 1653, to February, 1654. Edited from the MS. in the Library of Worcester College, Oxford, by C. H. FIRTH, M.A.

"All who are interested in the history of the seventeenth century will be grateful to Mr. Firth for giving this MS. to the world. The introduction is excellent."—Saturday Review.

78 pp., crown 8vo, limp art linen, 2s. 6d. net.

SIR WALTER RALEGH. The Stanhope Essay, 1897. By JOHN BUCHAN, Exhibitioner of Brasenose College.

"Mr. Buchan's singularly patient and suggestive study of Raleigh's chequered career strikes us as an admirable and discriminating piece of work."—Academy.

"A conscientious and, indeed, vigorous bit of work."—Speaker.

"The style is bright and readable."—Manchester Guardian.

"An exceptionally meritorious performance."—Times of India.

"It is in excellent literary form, and it deals very fully and lucidly with those points which best present the man."—Dundee Advertiser.

Just published, foolscap 8vo, Roxburghs binding, 5s. net. (250 copies printed.)

LAZARILLO DE TORMES: An exact line for line Reprint from the Chatsworth Copy of the Burgos Edition of 1554, with Facsimile Title-page. Edited by H. BUTLER CLARKE, M.A.

"The thanks of all interested in Spanish literature are due to Mr. Butler Clarke . . . for the trouble he has taken in publishing a reprint of the first Spanish edition of this, the earliest of picaresque stories."—Oxford Magazine.

"It will be highly welcome to students of Spanish literature."—Athenæum.

Just published, 70 pp., crown 8vo, sewed, 1s. 6d.; limp cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

NEOHELLENIC LANGUAGE and LITERATURE: Three Lectures delivered at Oxford in June, 1897, by PLATON E. DRAKOULES.

"Their rich store of facts will prove their best prized gifts to English Hellenists, but they are written with a philosophic spirit and with a regard for culture that make them suggestive and readable in no ordinary degree."—Scotsman.

"A good account of modern Greek literature . . . well written . . . very serviceable as an introduction to the study of modern Greek."—Glasgow Herald.

"A clear sketch of the stages in the development of modern Greek out of the ancient language. The lectures are sound and scholarly; the specimens of the various stages of the language well chosen."—Manchester Guardian.

"Deeply interesting; should be read by all who take an interest in the history of the world."—Whitehall Review.

"Beaucoup de méthode et de clarté."—Journal des Débats.

Ready shortly, 169 pp., large fcap. 8vo, cloth.

A SHORT HISTORY and EXPOSITION OF THE APOSTLES' CREED and of the First Eight of the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion. By ERIC JAMES BODINGTON, M.A., late Scholar of Brasenose College, and Vicar of Oxtington, Dorset. With a Preface by the LORD BISHOP OF SALISBURY.

50 AND 51, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S SCHOOL BOOKS.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE.

DELBOS.—THE STUDENT'S GRADUATED FRENCH READER, for the use of Public Schools. I. First Year:—Anecdotes, Tales, Historical Pieces. Edited, with Notes and a complete Vocabulary, by LEON DELBOS, M.A. late of King's College, London. Eleventh Edition. 166 pp., crown 8vo, cloth 2s.

"This is a very satisfactory collection from the best authors selected with great care and supplied with adequate notes. A thoroughly good book of this kind should, in fact, be calculated to inspire a taste for literature in the student's mind. The volumes edited by M. Delbos fairly meet this requirement."—Journal of Education.

DELBOS.—LITTLE EUGENE'S FRENCH READER. For Beginners. Anecdotes and Tales. Edited, with Notes and a complete Vocabulary. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

VICTOR HUGO.—LES MISERABLES. Les Principaux Episodes. Edited, with Life and Notes, by J. BOELLE, Senior French Master, Dulwich College. 2 vols. Crown 8vo, cloth, each 3s. 6d.

"A worthy addition to our stock of French reading books which will be welcomed by numberless masters. . . M. Boielle's notes are full and to the point, his philology is sound, and his translations idiomatic."—Journal of Education.

VICTOR HUGO.—NOT E DAME DE PARIS. Adapted for the use of Schools and Colleges. By J. BOELLE, B.A., Senior French Master, Dulwich College. 2 Vols. Crown 8vo, cloth, each 3s.

"Equipped in the same excellent manner as the same author's Miserables. . . Makes an admirable school book."—Scotsman.

EUGENE'S THE STUDENT'S COMPARATIVE GRAMMAR OF THE FRENCH LANGUAGE, with an Historical Sketch of the Formation of French. For the use of Public Schools. With Exercises by G. EUGENE FASSACHT, late French Master, Westminster School. Fifteenth Edition, thoroughly Revised. Square crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. Or separately, Grammar, 3s.; Exercises, 2s. 6d.

"In itself this is in many ways the most satisfactory grammar for beginners that we have as yet seen."—Athenaeum.

EUGENE'S FRENCH METHOD. Elementary French Lessons. Easy Rules and Exercises preparatory to the "Comparative French Grammar." By the same Author. Eleventh Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

"Certainly deserves to rank among the best of our elementary French exercise books."—Educational Times.

EUGENE'S COMPARATIVE FRENCH-ENGLISH STUDIES, GRAMMATICAL AND IDIOMATIC. Being an entirely re-written Edition of the "French Exercises for Middle and Upper Forms." Tenth Edition. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

FRENCH COMPOSITION THROUGH LORD MACAULAY'S ENGLISH. Edited, with Notes, Hints, and Introduction, by JAMES BOELLE, B.A., Univ. Gall, Senior French Master, Dulwich College. 2s. 6d. Crown 8vo, cloth, Vol. I, FREDERICK THE GREAT, 3s. Vol. II, WARREN HASTINGS, 3s. 6d. Vol. III, LORD CLIVE, 3s.

"This, we may say at once, is an exceedingly useful idea, well carried out, and one of the best things of its class that we have seen. . . We can pronounce the equivalence of the idioms recommended to be quite unusually just."—Saturday Review.

THE GERMAN LANGUAGE.

WEISSE'S COMPLETE PRACTICAL GRAMMAR OF THE GERMAN LANGUAGE. With Exercises on Conversation, Letters, Poems, and Treatises, &c. Fourth Edition, aim at entirely re-written. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. Crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"We have no hesitation in pronouncing this the fullest and most satisfactory German Grammar yet published in England."—Journal of Education.

WEISSE'S SHORT GUIDE TO GERMAN IDIOMS. Being a Collection of the Idioms most in use. With Examination Papers. Second Edition. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

MOLLER (A.)—A GERMAN READING BOOK. A Companion to Schlitter's "German Class Book." New Edition. Corrected to the Official German Spelling. With a complete Vocabulary. 12mo, cloth, 2s.

HEIN'S GERMAN EXAMINATION PAPERS. Comprising a Complete Set of German Papers set at the Local Examinations in the four Universities of Scotland. By G. HEIN, Aberdeen Grammar School. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

GOSTWICK AND HARRISON.—OUTLINES OF GERMAN LITERATURE, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By JOS GOSTWICK and ROBERT HARRISON. Second Edition, enlarged and improved. 654 pp., 8vo, cloth, 10s.

A SHORT HISTORICAL GRAMMAR OF THE GERMAN LANGUAGE. Old, Middle, and Modern High German. By ALBERT J. CRIP, M.A., First Senior Moderator and Large Gold Medalist in Medieval Literature, Trinity College, Dublin. Part I.: Introduction and Phonology. 4s.

GERMAN, FRENCH, AND LITERATURE PRIMERS. SHORT SKETCH OF GERMAN LITERATURE. Prepared for the Scottish Leaving-Certificate Examinations. By VIVIAN PHILLIPS, B.A., Fettes College. Second Edition, Revised. Felt 8vo, price 1s.

PRIMER OF FRENCH PHILOLOGY AND LITERATURE. By E. TH. TRUE. Felt 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d.

WILLIAMS AND NORGATE, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON; 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH; AND 7, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY OF CASSELL'S Educational Works.

"A HISTORY OF ENGLAND, by Mr. H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER, M.P., which Messrs. Cassell have just issued at 5s., has all the ingredients which go to the formation of a universally popular work. While it is certain to become a standard history book in schools, it is at the same time most conveniently arranged for use in the home as a dependable book to be referred to in all matters of historical fact, and it is also written so clearly and attractively that it may be read right through merely for its interest as a straightforward and comprehensive narrative."—Daily Mail. (Fully Illustrated, price 5s.)

"CASSELL'S FRENCH DICTIONARY is at once the cheapest, the most complete and extensive, the only thoroughly accurate book of the kind in this country."—The Record. (497th Thousand, price 3s. 6d.)

"CASSELL'S GERMAN DICTIONARY is the best in the field, and were it not for the special merits of one or two, we might say that this is first and the rest nowhere."—Journal of Education. (207th Thousand, price 3s. 6d.)

"CASSELL'S LATIN DICTIONARY is the handiest, the most useful, and certainly the very cheapest to be met with."—The Rock. (112th Thousand, price 3s. 6d.)

"CASSELL'S LESSONS IN FRENCH have had a circulation exceeding 140,000, and are more and more in demand. They are cheap, handy, well-bound, and nicely printed."—Educational News. (Parts I. and II., 1s. 6d. each; complete 2s. 6d.—Key, 1s. 6d.)

"THIS WORLD OF OURS, by H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER, we do not hesitate to say should be in the hands of every teacher of geography, and of every schoolboy or girl of thirteen and upwards whose parents can afford to buy it."—Guardian. (Cheap Edition, 2s. 6d.)

"A FIRST SKETCH OF ENGLISH LITERATURE, by Prof. HENRY MORLEY, is full of admirable matter, carefully and consecutively arranged, accurate in detail, simple and manly in style, judicious and appreciative in criticism."—Spectator. (Price 7s. 6d.)

"THE STORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE has been told by Miss Anna Buckland with great taste, judgment, and skill.—Literary World. (Price 3s. 6d.)

"SCARLET AND BLUE is a capital collection of songs by JOHN FARMER, Musical Director of Balliol College, well printed and otherwise tastefully got up."—Westminster Gazette. (Words and Music, 5s.; Words only, 6d. and 9d.)

"GAUDEAMUS, Edited by JOHN FARMER, consists of over 100 well-known favourite songs which have resounded in school-rooms and college-halls for many generations."—The Times. (Words and Music, 6s.; Words only, 9d. and 6d.)

"DULCE DOMUM 134 Rhymes and Songs for Children, is all fun and high spirit, with here and there a dash of sentiment and pathos."—School Board Chronicle. (Words and Music, 5s.; also in Two Parts, Tonic Sol-Fa, 6d. each.)

"ROUND THE EMPIRE, by G. R. PARKIN, entirely captivates the imagination from the Preface by the late Prime Minister of the Empire to the final quotation from the greatest poet of the Victorian era, and this none the less for the simplicity of style and treatment."—School Board Chronicle. (85th Thousand, fully Illustrated, 1s. 6d.)

"A COMPLETE MANUAL OF SPELLING, by J. D. MORELL, has had a wonderful success as a systematic key to the mysteries, irregularities, and inconsistencies of English orthography."—School Board Chronicle. (108th Thousand, price 1s.)

Cassell's Educational Catalogue will be sent post free on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C.

FROM WALTER SCOTT'S LIST. THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

Edited by HAVELOCK ELLIS.

- EVOLUTION OF SEX. ELECTRICITY IN MODERN LIFE. THE ORIGIN OF THE ARYANS. PHYSIOGNOMY AND EXPRESSION. EVOLUTION AND DISEASE. THE VILLAGE COMMUNITY. THE CRIMINAL. SANITY AND INSANITY. HYPNOTISM. MANUAL TRAINING. SCIENCE OF FAIRY TALES. PRIMITIVE FOLK. EVOLUTION OF MARRIAGE. BACTERIA AND THEIR PRODUCTS. EDUCATION AND HEREDITY. THE MAN OF GENIUS. THE GRAMMAR OF SCIENCE. PROPERTY: ITS ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT. VOLCANOES: PAST AND PRESENT. PUBLIC HEALTH PROBLEMS. MODERN METEOROLOGY. THE GERM-PLASM. THE INDUSTRIES OF ANIMALS. MAN AND WOMAN. MODERN CAPITALISM. THOUGHT-TRANSFERENCE. COMPARATIVE PSYCHOLOGY. THE ORIGINS OF INVENTION. THE GROWTH OF THE BRAIN. EVOLUTION IN ART. ILLUSTRATIONS AND ILLUSIONS. PSYCHOLOGY OF THE EMOTIONS. THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY. SLEEP. By Dr. M. DE MEYER.

THE SCOTT LIBRARY.

Cloth, uncut edges, gilt top, price 1s. 6d. per Volume.

Each Volume carefully edited, with Introduction. The Collection now numbers 103 Books.

- ROMANCE OF KING ARTHUR. THORAU'S WALDEN. THORAU'S "WEEK." THORAU'S ESSAYS. ENGLISH OPIUM-EATER. LANDOR'S CONVERSATIONS. PLUTARCH'S LIVES. SHELLEY'S LETTERS. PROSE WRITINGS OF SWIFT. MY STUDY WINDOWS. THE ENGLISH POETS. THE BIGLOW PAPERS. GREAT ENGLISH PAINTERS. LORD BYRON'S LETTERS. ESSAYS BY LEIGH HUNT. LONGFELLOW'S PROSE. GREAT MUSICAL COMPOSERS. MARCUS AURELIUS. TEACHING OF EPICETUS. SENECA'S MORALS. SPECIMEN DAYS IN AMERICA. DEMOCRATIC VISTAS. WHITE'S SELBORNE. DEFOE'S SINGLETON. MAZZINI'S ESSAYS. PROSE WRITINGS OF HEINE. REYNOLD'S DISCOURSES. PAPERS OF STEELE AND ADDISON. BURNS'S LETTERS. VOLSUNGA SAGA. SARTOR RESARTUS. WRITINGS OF EMERSON. LIFE OF LORD HERBERT. ENGLISH PROSE. IBSEN'S PILLARS OF SOCIETY. IRISH FAIRY AND FOLK TALES. ESSAYS OF DR. JOHNSON. ESSAYS OF WILLIAM HAZLITT. LANDOR'S PENTAMERON, &c. POES TALES AND ESSAYS. VICAR OF WAKEFIELD. POLITICAL ORATIONS. AUTOGRAPH OF THE BREAKFAST TABLE. POET AT THE BREAKFAST TABLE. PROFESSOR AT THE BREAKFAST TABLE. CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS. STORIES FROM CARLETON. JANE EYRE. ELIZABETHAN ENGLAND. WRITINGS OF THOMAS DAVIS. SPENCE'S ANECDOTES. MORE'S UTOPIA. SADI'S GULISTAN. ENGLISH FAIRY TALES. NORTHERN STUDIES. FAMOUS REVIEWS. ARISTOTLE'S ETHICS. PERICLES AND ASPASIA. ANNALS OF TACITUS. ESSAYS OF ELIA. BALZAC'S SHORT STORIES. DE MUSSET'S COMEDIES. CORAL REEFS (DARWIN). SHERIDAN'S PAYS. OUR VILLAGE. MASTER HUMPHREYS'S CLOCK. TALES FROM WONDER LAND. JERROLD'S ESSAYS. THE RIGHTS OF WOMAN. "THE ATHENIAN ORACLE." ESSAYS OF SAINTE-BEUVE. SELECTIONS FROM PLATO. HEINE'S TRAVEL SKETCHES. MAID OF ORLEANS. SYDNEY SMITH. THE NEW SPIRIT. MALORY'S BOOK OF MARVELLOUS ADVENTURES. HELPS'S ESSAYS AND APHORISMS. ESSAYS OF MONTAIGNE. THACKERAY'S BARRY LYNDON. SCHILLER'S WILLIAM TELL. CARLYLE'S GERMAN ESSAYS. LAMB'S ESSAYS. WORDSWORTH'S PROSE. LEOPARD'S DIALOGUES. THE INSPECTOR-GENERAL (GOGOL). BACON'S ESSAYS. PROSE OF MILTON. PLATO'S REPUBLIC. PASSAGES FROM FROIS SART. PROSE OF COLERIDGE. HEINE IN ART AND LETTERS. ESSAYS OF DE QUINCEY. VASARI'S LIVES. LESSING'S LAOCOON. PLAYS OF MAETERLINCK. WALTON'S COMPLETE ANGLER. LESSING'S NATHAN THE WISE. STUDIES BY RENAN. MAXIMS OF GOETHE. SCHOPENHAUER. RENAN'S LIFE OF JESUS.

London: WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square.

Greek Vases: Historical and Descriptive. By Susan Horner. (Swan Sonnenschein.)

DEEMING that previous writers on the subject have been accustomed to dwell rather upon the artistic aspect and on the chronological styles of Greek vase-paintings to the neglect of their epical qualities, Miss Susan Horner has conceived the novel idea of compiling an elementary handbook for the benefit of such as may be "unacquainted with the Greek language, history, and legends." For them, indeed, her little treatise is not without its uses. It begins with a tabulated list showing in outline the typical forms of Greek vases, their several names and purposes being clearly and succinctly stated. There follows a descriptive catalogue of some selected specimens from the British Museum and the Louvre collections, in four chapters, devoted one each to the four periods of Greek vases, from the earliest to the best, and ending with the latest period, that of the decadence. The work concludes, in lady-like fashion, with "an expurgated Lemprière" account of the different divinities, heroes, and other mythical beings depicted on Greek vases. How rigidly this version is adapted virginibus puerisque may be understood when it is found that the distinctive feature of the Amazons is not so much as hinted at—they are defined merely as "a race of warlike females"; while of the Satyrs, whose questionable habits were quite proverbial, the authoress, with becoming reticence, says "they were addicted to wine and led a life of wild pleasure."

Harbutt's Plastic Method, and the Use of Plasticine in the Arts of Writing, Drawing, and Modelling in Educational Work. By Wm. Harbutt (Bath). With 56 Illustrations. (Chapman & Hall.)

THE existence of a general proclivity among young children to manipulate mud-pies and to rear tottering fortresses in wet sand is a fact beyond dispute; but such that the significance of it has not hitherto been properly appreciated. For unto whom has it ever been given, until now, to discern in these phenomena the forecast of the gifts of sculpture or architectural constructiveness? But that this is the case Mr. Wm. Harbutt (Bath) bears testimony. Henceforth, therefore, let arbitrary "Olympians" take warning that in repressing the natural talent of infant genius they incur the gravest responsibility. How many potential Pheidiases, Praxiteleses, Abbé Suger, and Williams of Wykeham the shortsighted tyranny of parents and pedagogues has rendered inoperative, to the consequent irrevocable loss of the human race, is awful to contemplate; the number must far exceed that of the silently inglorious Eltons, even reckoning all those of a minor degree! On the other hand, we may reflect on the numbers of P-arsons guiltless of tampering with so many Peterborough façades, and be thankful for that we have escaped. Mr. Wm. Harbutt (Bath) is no mere theorist; he evidently has the courage of his convictions. Determined that for the future means shall not lack of developing innate childish talents, he has provided a modelling material named "Plasticine," the virtues of which, by word and illustration, he celebrates throughout some three score and a hundred pages. This new composition is warranted not to lose its ductibility, at the same time that it requires no wet cloths as does ordinary clay. The practical advantages of using it are many and varied; they range from the acquisition of the accomplishment of reading and writing without tears, to the fashioning of shoe-lasts. So much does the author of Plasticine claim for his invention, that it sounds worthy of adoption, at least as an experiment, in technical and other schools. The result of training up a generation of scholars in the use of Plasticine, if only half the tale be true, ought to be an immense gain; but, if all of it be true, then, indeed, Mr. Wm. Harbutt (Bath) will deserve to rank among the greatest benefactors of the age.

The Training of a Craftsman. Written by Fred. Miller. Illustrated by Many Workers in the Art Crafts. (J. S. Virtue & Co.)

ALTHOUGH we are quite willing to allow that Mr. Fred. Miller is a practitioner of no mean ability in several different departments of art industry, it is clear that the literary gift is not to be reckoned among them; unless, indeed, we may assume that his book on The Training of a Craftsman had to be put together in so great a hurry that the writer was prevented from doing proper justice to his powers. The impression, indeed, that one receives from it is that of an ill-digested work, diffuse, and full of repetitions, as though cuttings from various papers upon similar subjects had been hastily patched together, without method and without revision. The most valuable part of the book consists in the extracts, introduced now and again, from certain recognised authorities on the several crafts. The result, however, becomes not a little confusing when their testimony agrees not together, as in the case of Bookbinding. Thus, whereas Mr. Cobden-Sanderson (whose last name, by the way, is persistently mis-spelt) holds that with just a "few tools endless combinations are possible," and "that the fewer the tools used in book-cover decoration the better," Mr. MacColl is represented as ridiculing the practice as "acrobatic." "There is something amusing," he says, "in the attempt to obtain numerous combinations out of an arbitrarily limited set of forms." These two mutually destructive opinions are quoted by Mr. Miller with apparently equal approbation. There is, no doubt, much to be said for Mr. MacColl's contention, that the wheel tool need not be confined exclusively to the ruling of straight lines; yet the illustrations intended to establish the point are distinctly unconvincing. On the contrary, the vagaries of the wheel seem to be as wild and irrational as those of "Planchette," and go to prove, if anything, that the tool in question is apt to run away with the hand that employs it, unless it be kept under most rigorous control. For the rest, the book is plentifully illustrated, though a large number of the blocks are only resuscitations of those that have already appeared in the Art Journal.

The Building of the Intellect. By Douglas M. Gane. (Elliot Stock.)

THIS "contribution towards scientific method in education" is rather bewildering. The author has given us a wealth of quotations from men of all ages and degrees of authority, but his own doctrine is, so far as we can gather it, neither rigorously deduced nor plainly stated. It is impossible, we hold, to educate a child as if he were an Athenian of the Periclean age, and the product, morally, was not of the best. Nor does it help us much to have a little bit of embryology introduced. We regret that we cannot speak more favourably of what is evidently an honest attempt to grapple with a problem of the highest importance.

Selections from Sir Thomas Malory's Morte d'Arthur. By W. E. Mead, Ph.D. (Leipzig). (Boston, U.S.A.: Ginn & Co.)

THIS volume is introduced most appropriately to the English market by Mr. Nutt, who has himself done so much for our early classics. It adds to the already large body of good work that has been done by our American brethren in many departments of English literature, particularly in its origins, for the publications of which Messrs. Ginn are so well known. It is very pleasant to have a scholarly reproduction of about one-fourth of Malory's noble romance finely printed, carefully edited after Caxton's original, and equipped with a learned (and not too long) introduction, copious notes, a vocabulary of obsolete and unusual words, and full indexes. Mr. Mead treats his romance as a monument of literature, not as a philological exercise-ground; and he examines its origin, its worth as literature, and its influence on later authors—especially the poets of our own age—Tennyson, Morris, Swinburne, and Spenser. The portions selected are those of most interest to modern readers, and in the notes the connecting links of the whole story are given.

A History of Rome for Beginners. By Evelyn S. Shuckburgh. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE author gives in a single small volume a good outline of the growth and development of Rome, from its small and obscure beginning to the culmination of its glory under the first Augustus. The story of nearly eight hundred years is told with admirable brevity and due sense of proportion. The steps by which the city first consolidated its own local power, then gradually extended its sway over Italy, grappled with, and at last crushed, the great maritime power of Carthage; and, finally, under Lucullus, Sulla, Pompey, Caesar, Antony, and Augustus, subdued all the countries east and west, north and south, around the great central sea, are clearly traced. Nor are the awful stories of the civil wars forgotten, those recurring storms of savage violence that raged with only short lulls from Marius to the victory of Actium, and swamped the Republic in waves of blood. But the best and most instructive part of the book is that in which Mr. Shuckburgh traces Rome's internal development, the march of freedom among the citizens, the progress of law and abolition of privileges, and the gradual perfecting of that tremendous engine of conquest—the Roman army. Several chronological and other tables, illustrations, and maps, enhance the value of the book.

England Under the Later Hanoverians, 1760—1837. By A. J. Evans, M.A., and C. S. Fearenside, M.A. (Clive.)

THIS text-book of English history is a good piece of work—brief without obscurity, clear and impartial, giving with fulness enough for all ordinary readers the story of a very involved and momentous period in the annals of our country. The style is pleasant and generally correct, and the constant references to and comparisons with the most recent events lend vividness and interest to the narrative. Designed first of all as a text-book for students for London University degrees, the necessities of the case have forced the authors to publish this, the second part of vol. iv. (1714—1837), before the first, which is a disadvantage; but the constant references to the unpublished chapters show that they must be nearly, if not quite, ready for the press, and we hope, therefore, soon to see the historical chain completed. The book is illustrated by some clear maps and plans—especially that showing the partitions of Poland (p. 236)—and by full chronological and other tables; and a feature most praiseworthy is the array of authorities quoted, thus referring the reader to the best sources for further study. One or two small defects we notice. Why say that Charles II. "lay low" instead of "dissembled" (p. 11)? What is "clerical Presbyterianism" (p. 16)? Is Ireland a "colony" of England (p. 17)? and "given out" is not good English for "exhausted" (p. 326).

King Lear. Edited by A. W. Verity, M.A. (Cambridge: University Press.)

MR. VERITY has here given us a model edition of the tragedy which Hallam ranked with "Othello" and "Macbeth" as Shakespeare's supreme work. Introduction, notes, glossary, and index—all are good. Nothing that bears on his subject-matter seems to have escaped the editor, and—which is even more rare—his wise self-restraint has imported nothing alien into his work. What we like best in the introduction is the analysis of the chief characters in the play, the careful way in which the meaning and development of the plot are traced, and the criticism on the play's tragic ending. The glossary is full and painstaking. Unfamiliar words and phrases in any way strange are carefully registered and explained, with etymology sufficient for schoolboys, and that etymology always accurate; and the frequent grammatical notes are excellent. In a word, this edition seems to us to contain in short compass all that it should—and nothing else. Cambridge has done noble work for Shakespeare's text and for the extension of his fame, and the book before us is a substantial gain. Mr. Verity's style is clear, simple, and elegant: few better books could be chosen for class use.

Milton's Paradise Lost. Book II. Edited by F. Gorse, M.A. (Blackie & Son.)

WE have here a careful and instructive edition. Intended for less advanced pupils than Mr. Verity's, it is less elaborate. The introduction is a good bit of work, containing an interesting sketch of Milton's life, illustrated from the "Sonnets," and by a suggestive table of great contemporary events. The theme of the poem is then analysed, and its cosmogony and metre explained. The text is well printed, divided into sections with explanatory headings.

The Talisman ("Sir Walter Scott" Continuous Readers). By W. Melven, M.A. (A. & C. Black.)

WHAT Constable did as pioneer of cheap good books in 1825, when The Talisman was first published, Messrs. Black are now doing over again in a form better suited to the needs of the present day. It was the first of Scott's novels which we ourselves read, and ranks with Kenilworth and Ivanhoe, we think, as the best of them all for boys who are not Scotch. Mr. Melven has done the work of abridgment well, preserving the main story in the author's words, and his introduction is scholarly and interesting.

The Illustrated Teacher's Bible. (Eyre & Spottiswoode.)

THIS new and revised edition of Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode's Teacher's Bible will be found admirable for private and class study. Nearly half the volume is occupied by "Aids to the Student." These are arranged in twenty-four chapters, and consist of short, but fairly exhaustive, articles on Biblical subjects. The history of the Bible, as a whole, is written by the Rev. H. B. Swete, D.D. Such lesser subjects as the plants of the Bible, the animal creation in the Bible, weights and measures of the Bible, and Biblical chronology, are also the subjects of special treatment. Room is found for a concordance containing over 40,000 references. Not the least important part of the work is the long series of plates, placed together at the end of the volume. In these the attempt has been made "to outline the entire field of Biblical archaeology and to stimulate the growing taste for a knowledge of the results of modern discovery in Babylonia, Egypt, and Assyria." There are also numerous photographic reproductions of ancient writings and monuments.

THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

WE have received a batch of new publications belonging to this series which we can commend to the attention of schoolmasters. In Greek we have The Mælea of Euripides, edited by Mr. Clinton E. S. Headlam, who has based his interpretations on those of Wecklein, Lenting, Verrall, Paley, and others, and has followed Prinz in his method of designating the MSS. tradition. Mr. E. S. Shuckburgh edits those of the Lives of Nepos which were not included in the three volumes of Nepos's texts, published by him previously. Ample notes and vocabularies are added, as in the other volumes. Cæsar's De Bello Gallico, Book II., is also edited by Mr. Shuckburgh on the same lines as the Nepos, but with the additions of a map and a few useful illustrations.

In Modern Languages we have The Fairy Tales of Master Perrault. It has not been the object of the editor, Mr. Walter Rippmann, to furnish a critical text, but "one that will be suitable for children who would like to enter the garden of French literature, hand-in-hand with their old friend Cinderella and little Red Riding Hood." For older students the Pitt series now offers La Fortune de d'Artagnan, edited by Mr. Arthur R. Ropes, and Remi et ses Amis, edited by Margaret De G. Verrall. The first is an episode from Dumas' Le Vicomte de Bragelonne. Mr. Ropes sums up Dumas, the man and the writer, in a pithy introduction, not sparing to point out his frequent historical inaccuracies as distinct from allowable anachronisms. He remarks that while "Dumas wept when he had to kill Porthos, it would seem as if he had to depute the death of d'Artagnan to one of his assistants." Miss Verrall's book is an abridgment of Hector Malot's Sans Famille, a work which was crowned by the Académie Française in 1878. Miss Verrall details the story sufficiently to make her abridgment of it clear, and to whet the appetite. Notes and a vocabulary are duly added. For German students two new reading books are Lessing's Minna von Barnhelm, edited in a very thorough and scholarly manner by Mr. H. J. Wolstenholme. Mr. Walter Rippmann, whose Perrault's Fairy Tales is noticed above, has also prepared Eight Stories from Andersen for the youngest learners of the German language. Grammatical points are left for the teacher to clear up, but notes and a vocabulary are supplied.

Turning now to the Pitt Press English Readers we have A Selection of Tales from Shakespeare, by Charles and Mary Lamb. This volume is edited by Mr. J. H. Flather as a useful book for study or practice in reading, and as a pleasant introduction to Shakespeare himself. It was a happy idea to prepare an edition of that curious work Earle's Micro-Cosmographie; or, a Plea of the World Characterised for school use. Not only does it, as the editor, Mr. Alfred S. West, says, "abound in allusions to features of English social life at the beginning of the seventeenth century," but it is packed with pithy observations, such as one is glad to think may sink into young minds. Here are a few of Earle's quaint remarks picked at random from various character sketches:

"A CHILD.—The elder he growes, hee is a staire lower from God.

"A MEERE FORMALL MAN.—He apprehends a jest by seeing men smile, and laughs orderly himselfe when it comes to his turne.

"A MEDLING MAN.—He will take you aside, and question you of your affaire, and listen with both eares, and looke earnestly: and then it is nothing so much yours as his."

Such observations are a profitable study in that school which we only quit when we quit life.

FRENCH.

Quand j'étais Petit. Par L. Biart. Edited by J. Boiëlle, B.A. Part II. (Cambridge: University Press.)

THIS delightful reading-book gives us the story, told by himself in later years, of that eventful twelvemonth in the life of a little Versaillais, when—in his eleventh year—his parents are compelled to migrate to Paris. The writer follows admirably, in clear, simple, idiomatic language, the workings of a child's mind, more mature, however, than would be that of an English boy of the same age. The scene is laid in 1838, "sixty years since," when Louis Philippe was king; and chap. ii. contains an interesting picture of a bygone Paris, with its mingling of magnificence and squalid filth, where the public vehicles, Halles, pillory, rag-pickers, &c., pass in strange panorama before the little rustic's eyes. School life, with its ambitious, literary and other; boyish friendships, and first introduction to polite society, as "Jack among the maids" at a girl's birthday-party (chap. iv.) are charmingly told. The chief gem of the book, however, is the father's lesson to his son on the dignity of work, a pendant to Mr. Caxton's famous lesson to Pisistratus on the broken flower-pot; while another is the death of Léontine, with which the boy's transition-year closes. The book is admirably got up, and the notes are usually clear and good, especially on points of grammar. But there are slips, both in Notes and Vocabulary. Savoir-faire, sauvage in partibus, agir à l'ébourdie (all on p. 3) should be explained; avant-goût (74), point de repère (benchmark), érrailés, and other words are not in the Vocabulary; and grincheus (73) is in Littre and in Hatzfeldt, grincheur. Surely witty Scapin is not a mere "buffoon"; a will-o'-the-wisp that "dogs one's footsteps" would be highly comical, and the note on the Buddha (p. 115) is nonsense that should not have come from a countryman of Burnouf.

A Complete Course of French Composition and Idioms. By Hector Rey. (Blackie & Son.)

MR. REY'S title challenges criticism, for he is a bold man who undertakes, in a single post octavo of 214 pages, to give a complete course of French composition and idioms. Apart, however, from a little exaggeration in the claim, the book is a thoroughly good one; the idioms are abundant, carefully chosen, and well rendered into good English, and the pieces set for composition are varied on an ascending scale of difficulty, and each made the subject of real, thorough study. The pupil who goes honestly through M. Rey's book with a good teacher, and (what the author rightly insists on) careful and exact reading of the best French, classical and modern, will not offer find himself at fault, either before an examiner or even in French society. The table of comparative idioms, with which the book opens, might well be learnt by heart, and at all events deserves very close study. (It is a slip of course, to render se couper le doigt by cut one's finger; it means cut off one's finger, the other being . . . au doigt, p. 15.) The arrangement by which the use of the preliminary exercises is to be postponed till after later one have been mastered does not seem very good. Would it not have been simpler to put them in the order in which they were to be taken? The phrase "translate in accordance with French grammar," sometimes used and more often omitted, suggests a paradox. "On the spot" (p. 134) is generally "sur-le-champ." We don't recognise "scribble-book" as correct English, and boys should not be encouraged to write of being "mixed-up" (p. 156). However, these are but small defects in a very useful book, which we heartily recommend.

Histoire de la Langue et de la Littérature Française des Origines à 1900. Par L. Petit de Julleville. Tome IV. (1600-1660). (Paris: Armand Colin et Cie.)

WE cannot in our limits do justice to this valuable section of a valuable work. We can only mark one or two outstanding features, and strongly advise our readers to get the book. The first half of M. de Julleville's great task is now ended, and the final volume, dealing with contemporary writers, is, most fittingly, to appear during the course of the proposed great Exhibition of 1900. Like the earlier volumes, this also is made up of chapters on the literary history of the period, each by a specialist in his subject, with a concluding section on the state and progress of the language. The sixty years of which it treats, splendid with the names of Corneille, Descartes, and Pascal, and boasting many a great writer besides, were as an overture to the full orchestral music of France's Augustan Age. The language, regularised, pruned, and chastened from the somewhat rank luxuriance that followed on the Renaissance, became that polished instrument of precise thought which is the pride of every Frenchman. Malherbe as an individual, and as a body the Académie, child of Richelieu's genius, contributed mainly to this result—they by precept, and the three great men of genius already named by their practice.

The sections which will probably prove of most interest to English readers are that on the Académie and the three which treat of the rise and progress of the drama to its culmination in Corneille. The former is by the editor, who also deals with the poets of the age—Malherbe, Racan, Rénier, &c.; his chapter on whom is admirable and most informing criticism. As one reads how a little social club, formed in 1629, took root, and grew up into the literary Senate of France, one is driven to wonder whether Johnson's Club, founded a century later in circumstances not unlike, could have rendered analogous service to our language and literature, if (say) Chatham had thought as Richelieu did. The story of the Académie, its constitution and development, and the worthy spirit in which from the first it understood its duties, is deeply interesting; yet there is to us, as well as to Frenchmen, something very comical in its formal condemnatory pronouncement on the Cid, which Corneille contemptuously left to its mercy. The chapter is further adorned with the portrait of Chapelain, one of the founders, and the shield bearing the names of the first forty "Immortals." Mention of the Cid naturally introduces the drama. The story of its first stage is told with learning, critical skill, and minuteness by M. Rigal, who shows how it prang from the Mysteries and Moralities of the Middle Ages. The earliest playwright was Alexander Hardy, whose first plays, crude and artistic, but living productions, were put on the stage about 1610, just as Shakespeare was losing his wonderful literary career. It is curious to see how long and chequered was the fight to establish the "Unities," and how complete was the victory, till Victor Hugo arose (most in our own day). Everyone will remember with what skill Voltaire defended them—and also how he justified his choice in Bejuzet of a contemporary plot, whereas Hardy had dramatised both the execution of Mary Queen of Scots and the murder of Henri IV. The best of the book is quite as valuable as what we have noticed. Full and impartial justice is done to the great leaders of thought and masters of style who were the glory of France in the first half of the seventeenth century.

Comprehensive French Manual. By Otto C. Näf, M.A. (Blackie & Son.)

The author frankly states, this is a book assigned to help the examination candidate to defeat the subtle attacks of the crafty examiner, and for its purpose it will be found very serviceable. That is to say, it should be used after, and supplementary to, a thorough grounding in grammar and a pretty extensive course of reading and easy composition. The plan adopted is that of a varied selection of fifty passages of standard French prose, each of which is made the subject of thorough study—through grammatical notes, vocabularies, imitation composition, and retranslation. Then follow some representative pieces of poetry, and then a few passages of English prose for translation into French, equipped with useful vocabularies. In the appendices will be found very brief outlines of French political and literary history, grammatical notes, commercial language, examination papers, and some notes on etymology, with a useful list of military terms. The two last are excellent, especially the former—a piece of thoroughly good work. We have examined the book with great care, as it deserves, and will add that its usefulness would be much increased by making the index fuller: the grammatical matter is so scattered as to require this. A few things we should like changed. If Sinbad the Sailor was to open the ball, he should have appeared as dear old Galland dressed him, and not masquerade as from De Fivast; and the prose extracts should have been arranged in chronological order. We do not think that "neuter" should be used in the grammar of modern French, with the one possible exception of ce; and Mr. Näf really should not talk of "female persons," grammar being concerned with gender not sex. It is improper to write Fénelon, and rash to speak of Télémaque as "his only great work." But the book as it stands is useful and practical, and could easily be made even more so.

A New Grammatical French Course. By Albert Barrère. Vol. I. (Parts 1 and 2); Vol. II. (Part 3). (Whittaker & Co.)

M. BARRÈRE is an experienced teacher, and his position and titles mark him out as a distinguished man. We have before us two small volumes, forming the elementary and intermediate parts of his French course, and we are compelled to say that we expected from him something better. There are already in the field so many good French grammars and exercise books that a new one must have very high qualities to justify its appearance. Those qualities we do not find here. The work is good, accurate as a whole, and eminently simple and easily progressive. But some of the rules are stated too absolutely—as, for instance, that on the position of adjectives; the difficult question of the plural of compound nouns is not treated at sufficient length, and the crucial case of compounds of garde is not mentioned. Similarly, the agreement of the past participle and the use of the subjunctive are too summarily dismissed. The foregoing remarks apply to the second volume (intermediate). In regard to the elementary section, it is divided into two parts, in the first of which the pupil is taught to use words and phrases without any rules at all, these coming only in the second part. We confess to doubting whether this is a plan likely to be successful. On the other hand, we like the arrangement by which the rules are placed (as here) on one page and the examples on the opposite. The pronouns and possessive adjectives, and the verbs especially, are fully and clearly treated, and this is a great advantage to pupils. One oversight we must correct. M. Barrère says twice (pp. 40 and 42, vol. i.) that "adjectives agree with the pronoun subject"—by inference, therefore not with the pronoun object. Would he not say—"Je la veux noire" ("I want it black), the pronoun standing for encre or the like?

THE CLASSICS.

GREEK.

Sophocles. The Text of the Seven Plays. Edited, with Introduction, by R. C. Jebb. (Cambridge: University Press.)

PROF. JEBB'S Sophocles will be welcomed by many as supplying a real want. Fifty years ago well-printed texts of the Greek dramatists appear to have been fairly common; but of late the would-be reader has had to take his choice between some mean little text, usually German, and a larger volume, usually English, consisting for the most part of notes. Even Prof. Jebb's own editions of the plays of Sophocles, though their excellence is proverbial, will seem to some lovers of the poet almost a less boon than this simple text. We only wish the fragments had been included. There is a short introduction dealing with the MSS., &c., and at the bottom of each page are printed the varie lectiones. Are we mistaken, or can it be really true that neither the Oxford nor the Cambridge press is quite as accurate in matters of printing as was once the case? At any rate, at the very outset we come across an irritating blunder for which the printers are alone responsible (Œdipus Rex, l. 46):

ἴσ' ὃ βροτῶν ἄριστ', ἀνθρώπων πόλιν.

The Works of Xenophon. Translated by H. G. Dakyns, M.A., late Assistant Master, Clifton College. (Macmillan & Co.)

THIS so-called third volume, which is really two volumes, serves as a welcome reminder to the critic that the compilation of school books and popular manuals is not the be-all and end-all of scholarship. What Jowett did for Thucydides and Plato, Mr. Dakyns is doing for Xenophon. He follows the late Master of Balliol, as he says in his preface, non passibus equis: but he would be a bold man indeed who attempted to do more, and it is a pleasure to catch even an echo of the old familiar accents. But in this book we have no mere echo: every page that Mr. Dakyns writes testifies to his own sterling scholarship and to his intimate acquaintance with the subjects of which he treats. The first volume (published in 1890) contained the Hellenica, Books I. and II., together with the Anabasis; the second (1892) included the Hellenica, Books III. to VII., the Agésilais, the Polity of the Athenians, the Polity of the Lacedæmonians, and the Ways and Means. Part I. of the present "volume" embraces the Memorabilia, the Apology, the Economist, the Symposium, and the Hiero: Part II. is devoted to the treatises "On the Duties of the Cavalry General," "On Horsemanship," and "On Hunting." The Cyropædia is reserved for the fourth volume, "which will," Mr. Dakyns hopes (and all English scholars must share the hope), "see the light of day before the century has ended." Sauppe's text is followed, but with discrimination. The translations are furnished with ample introductions, in which the arguments are analysed in detail, and the various questions connected with the several treatises are carefully discussed.

The remarks on ancient and modern cavalry in the introduction to "The Duties of a Cavalry General" are especially interesting. The most reasonable treatise, however, is that entitled "On Hunting: a Sportsman's Manual," which has a direct bearing on current controversies. We almost wonder that Mr. Dakyns did not leave untranslated such sentences as these, sentences that will make some recent writers on Public School Athletics shudder: "Among the many pleasures to which youth is prone, this one alone (hunting) is productive of the greatest blessings. . . . Of such stuff are good soldiers and good generals made." "Some people tell us it is not right to indulge a taste for hunting, lest it lead to neglect of home concerns, not knowing that those who are benefactors of their country and their friends are in proportion all the more devoted to domestic duties. If lovers of the chase pre-eminently fit themselves to be useful to the fatherland, that is as much as to say they will not squander their private means; since with the state itself the domestic fortunes of each are saved or lost. The real fact is, these men are saviours not of their own fortunes only, but of the private fortunes of the rest, of yours and mine. Yet there are not a few irrational people among these cavillers, who, out of jealousy, would rather perish, thanks to their own baseness, than owe their lives to the virtue of their neighbours." "These are the youths who will prove a blessing to their parents, and not to their parents only, but to the whole state; to every citizen alike and individual friend. Nay, what has sex to do with it? It is not only men enamoured of the chase that have become heroes, but among women there are also to whom our Lady Artemis has granted a like boon—Atalanta, and Procris, and many another huntress fair." Xenophon, thou should'st be living at this hour!

The Troades of Euripides. Edited by R. Y. Tyrrell. (Macmillan & Co.)

THIS is avowedly an edition for the use of schoolboys. Schoolboys are extremely fortunate in commanding the services of such a commentator as Prof. Tyrrell, whom the sad removal of Prof. Palmer now leaves almost at the head of that brilliant galaxy of Dublin scholarship which happily, despite that loss, still shows no signs of fading lustre—"uno avulso, non deficit alter." The conjecture (l. 1188) ἀπροι τε κλίαι (MSS. ὄπροι τ' ἐκείνοι) is particularly ingenious. In line 700, however, why assume that the optative aorists κατοικίσειαν and γένοιτο are attracted (from the aorist subjunctive)? Even were the possibility of such a construction granted, would it not be far more natural to take the two words in question as "pure" optatives of wish? Translations, by the editor and others, into English poetry of many of the most striking passages are embodied in the notes.

An Historical Greek Grammar, Chiefly of the Attic Dialect, as Written and Spoken from Classical Antiquity Down to the Present Time: Founded upon the Ancient Texts, Inscriptions, Papyri, and Present Popular Greek. By A. N. Jannaris. (Macmillan & Co.)

THIS work, a volume of 737 large pages, the labour of five years, is well indexed, and is evidently full of matter, but it is hardly, we fear, suited to the English reader. A quotation from p. xi. of the preface will illustrate our meaning: "To enumerate here all the new features of the work, or seek to justify them as well as some novel terms (e.g., phonopathy, metaphony, trisyllabotany, tonoclisism, synelisis, antectasis, revection, secondary subjunctive for optative, &c.) introduced for the sake of precision or convenience, would lead to an unduly long excursus and serve no practical purpose." The book is far too long and cumbersome. All the classical paradigms ought to be omitted, and an intelligible nomenclature should be adopted. Such remarks as (§996, with reference to the future of πίνω) "πίομαι (impert. πιδ.)" are an offence against the traditions of two thousand years of scholarship. It is impossible to treat both ancient and modern Greek with any fulness in one and the same book; they are as unlike as, say, Thermopylae and Domoko.

Pylos and Sphacteria, from Thucydides, Book IV. (Rivingtons), edited by Mr. W. H. D. Rouse, contains a simplified Greek text, with notes, a geographical introduction, and eight pieces of English prose for translation (or one might almost say "retranslation") into Greek. The book is intended for fifth-form use, but might perhaps be read with advantage a form lower. The note on § 1, 2 is a little misleading. The article is surely only omitted when the Persian king is spoken of in his representative and public capacity. Thus, in the sentence "Persia declared war against Greece," "Persia" would be Βασιλεύς; but "the Persian king is at dinner" would be ὁ Βασιλεύς δεῖπνεῖ. The English distinction between "the Queen" and "the Crown" is somewhat parallel.

The Anabasis of Xenophon, Book III. (Cambridge: University Press), edited, in the Pitt Press series, by Mr. G. M. Edwards, is furnished with an excellent introduction, useful notes, and a good vocabulary. The remarks on εἰ γενόμεθα (§ 1, 13) need revision. Surely the commonplace of the class-room is quite correct—viz., that the future indicative (or in oratio obliqua, after past tenses, the future optative) is used with εἰ, instead of the subjunctive with ἔάν, when the speaker regards the hypothesis as (1) highly improbable, or (2) highly distasteful.

Mr. C. C. Tancock's Story of the Ionic Revolt and Persian War as told by Herodotus (Murray) consists of "selections from the translation of Canon Rawlinson, revised and adapted to the purposes of the present work." It was a happy inspiration of Mr. Tancock's to undertake this task of selection and revision, and the thanks of many readers will be due to him.

Mr. W. B. Donne's Euripides (Blackwood & Sons), in the series of "Ancient Classics for English Readers," under the general editorship of the Rev. W. L. Collins, consists of a brightly written survey of the life and times of Euripides, together with a very sensible account and appreciation of his plays. The author, however, for one presumably acquainted with the Greek language, seems strangely unfamiliar with the Greek text of his poet. On p. 5 he refers to Athens as "the new centre of Hellas," and then adds: "'Hellas,' although a word unknown in the time of Euripides, and, indeed, of a much later date, is used here and elsewhere in these pages as a convenient and comprehensive term for Greece. . . ." "A word unknown in the time of Euripides, and—indeed, of much later date"!!! What of Pindar's Ἑλλάδος ἔρεισμα, κλεινὰ Ἀθῆναι? What of Euripides' own frequent use of the word—e.g., Hecuba, 330; Helen, 882; and the first line of the famous fragment of the Autolycus?

Mr. W. C. F. Walter's Hints and Helps in Continuous Greek Prose (Blackie & Son) will, in the hands of a good master, be useful for fifth-form work. The idioms in the appendix are well chosen; but a considerable portion of the information given will be superfluous in the case of boys properly grounded in their Greek exercises in the lower forms.

GREEK AND LATIN.

Mr. G. B. Green's Notes on Greek and Latin Syntax (Methuen & Co.) is written in the hope that it "may prove useful in the higher forms of schools, and to candidates for university and public examinations." The examples of constructions, which fill twenty-three pages out of 197, are excellently chosen, and the student who is set to answer a "critical paper" will find them of value. In the syntax proper Mr. Green has essayed a difficult task. It is impossible to treat the subject of Latin and Greek conditional sentences satisfactorily in twelve pages, or to deal with the Oratio Obliqua (in both languages) in nine. But the attempt has not been altogether a failure. Perhaps it would be almost better in such a book to sacrifice theoretical completeness by taking for granted a knowledge of the elements of syntax.

LATIN.

Mr. F. W. Hall's The Fourth Verrine of Cicero (Macmillan & Co.) is the model of a good school edition. The introduction is careful, adequate, and interesting. The text, where doubtful, has been chosen with sound judgment. The notes are always useful and sometimes brilliant. At the end of the book are to be found an archaeological appendix, a short discussion of the chronology of the trial of Verres, and a very complete index. The edition is altogether one that may be confidently recommended for sixth-form use.

Mr. H. W. Auden's Cicero Pro Plancio (Macmillan & Co.) is also a good school book, but less careful than Mr. Hall's. For instance, in the note on § 59, 22, Mr. Auden writes: "Nusquam erant 'never really existed,' but were mythological" (of Agamemnon and Menelaus!). This note overlooks the word jam in the text ("Que scripsit gravis et ingeniosus poeta, non ut illos regios pueros, qui jam nusquam erant, sed ut nos et nostros liberos ad laborem et ad laudem excitaret.") The true translation is obviously: "who had already passed from the earth."

Macmillan's Elementary Latin-English Dictionary (Macmillan & Co.) is handy and serviceable. If, however, the schoolboy attempts to use it for the purpose of verse-making he will find that, as is the case with many other recently-printed books, its value is impaired by a serious typographical defect—viz., that at a little distance from the eye the mark over a short syllable is hardly to be distinguished from the mark over a long syllable. From practical experience, we would suggest that both marks ought to be made much larger and more distinct.

Mr. S. E. Winbolt's Exercises in Latin Accidence (Methuen & Co.) are "intended to lead up to Latin Syntax by Mr. Botting." The book is well adapted for use in Preparatory Schools. It follows the lines of the Latin Primer.

Mr. J. A. Stevens's Junior Latin Syntax (Blackie & Son), a little volume of 56 pages, is meritoriously compiled, but it is difficult to see of what use it will be to the boy who possesses an ordinary grammar and an ordinary exercise-book.

First Latin Exercises (Longmans), by the Rev. J. Went, who appears from the title-page to be headmaster of two schools at the same time (a little joke, we suppose, of the Charity Commissioners), are "avowedly designed to lead young boys, as rapidly as possible, by means of very simple exercises, to some easy reading book." "In ordinary Grammar Schools only a limited amount of time can be given to Latin. . . ." "It is hoped that the exercises may prove useful to a considerable number of boys who enter Grammar Schools at the age of thirteen or fourteen, and who wish to obtain some knowledge of Latin in a comparatively short time. These boys necessarily cause a certain amount of difficulty in a class. They are usually quite up to the average of their age in other subjects, but being beginners in languages they have a difficulty in maintaining in the class the position which properly belongs to them." These extracts donnent à penser. But, granted the object in view, the book is well conceived and well executed.

Passages from Latin Authors for Translation into English (Macmillan & Bowes), by Mr. E. S. Shuckburgh, have been "selected with a view to the needs of candidates for the Cambridge Previous, Local and Schools Examinations." Parts II. and III. have been familiar for years to schoolmaster and examinee: Part I. is new, and contains forty-two somewhat easier pieces.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—"ARUNDEL SOCIETY'S PUBLICATIONS."

Arrangements have been made with the "Arundel Society" by which the whole stock of its publications has become the property of the "Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge."

This stock includes many thousands of superb reproductions in colours and monochrome of masterpieces by Giotto, Masaccio, Fra Filippo Lippi, Fra Angelico, Botticelli, Ghirlandaio, Perugino, Michael Angelo, Raffaele, Memline, Durer, and numerous other great artists.

Hitherto, these publications have, on account of their price, been beyond the reach of persons of moderate means. The Society proposes to issue them at greatly reduced rates, and thus to facilitate their introduction into the homes of the people.

A priced Catalogue may be had on application. With but few exceptions these pictures deal with religious subjects. These Works of Art can now be seen at the Society's Depôts in London and Brighton.

London: Northumberland Avenue, W.C.; 43, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

Brighton: 129, North Street.

THIRD EDITION. REVISED AND ENLARGED.
THE DAWN OF CIVILIZATION (Egypt and Chaldea) By Professor MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Professor SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE. With Map and over 470 Illustrations, including Three Coloured Plates. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 24s.

[The Author has brought this Third Edition up to date, embodying in the Volume the recent discoveries of Mr. Flinders Petrie in Egypt and some of the results of recent researches of M. Heuzey in Mesopotamia. Notwithstanding the addition of new matter (as pp 453, A, B, &c.) the pagination has been retained throughout and is parallel with that of the French original.]

HISTORICAL CHURCH ATLAS. Illustrating the History of Eastern and Western Christendom until the Reformation, and that of the Anglican Communion until the Present Day. By EDMUND McCLURE, M.A. Containing 18 Coloured Maps, besides some 50 Sketch Maps in the text. 4to, cloth boards, leather back, 16s.

This Atlas is intended to indicate some of the stages of the Church's expansion, and at the same time to show briefly the interdependence of ecclesiastical and secular history. The information given on the maps has been necessarily limited by their size and number, but the main features of the spread of the Christian faith have been, it is hoped, broadly traced, and the allied changes in political geography sufficiently depicted.

"Both the readers of Ancient Church History and of Modern Missionary Records will find abundant materials in it for their assistance."—Guardian.

"Every Student of the Church History in the past or of her world-wide work in the present should make haste to add this handsome volume to his books."—Record.

"A great deal of labour and sound scholarship has gone to the making of this Atlas."—Academy.

THE ANCIENT HEBREW TRADITION as illustrated by the MONUMENTS. A Protest against the Modern School of Old Testament Criticism. By Dr. FRITZ HOMMEL, Professor of Semitic Languages in the University of Munich. Translated from the German by EDMUND McCLURE, M.A., and LEONARD CROSSLE. With Map. Large post 8vo, buckram boards, 5s.

"Under the weight of Dr. Hommel's cumulative evidence the latest fortrees of the 'Higher Criticism' will have to be promptly evacuated or surrendered at discretion. The book has been admirably translated by Mr. McClure and his condutor."—Daily Chronicle.

"As a protest against the modern school of Old Testament Criticism we cordially commend the work as one of the most valuable yet published."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"We are profoundly grateful to Dr. Hommel for work whose results will do much to reassure many a timid and distressed believer."—Record.

"We can recommend Dr. Hommel's well-argued and deeply interesting book to the careful consideration of all Biblical students."—Oxford Review.

EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE'S New ILLUSTRATED TEACHER'S BIBLE

WITH
Revised Aids to Bible Students.
 With Antotypes of Antiquities, and Views of Biblical Sites and Cities, and over 170 ILLUSTRATIONS, Printed upon Eyre & Spottiswoode's special fine-art process paper.

EDITOR—Rev. C. J. BALL, M.A.,
 Chaplain to the Honourable Society of Lincoln's Inn,
 Member of the Council of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, &c., &c.

Some of the Plates which have been produced by Patent Process in our "Woodbury" Works.

- Portrait of Stone Doorway, with Hitite Inscription
- Fragment of Bas-relief from Gerab, the Ancient Carchemish
- Babylonian Boundary Stones
- Assur-nasir-pal II Besieging a City
- Jerusalem from the N.E.
- Jerusalem from the South
- Distant View of Damascus and its Oasis
- Mount Hermon
- Mount Tabor
- Cedars in Lebanon
- Robinson's Arch
- Black Obelisk of Shalmaneser II.
- Scene from the Black Obelisk
- Assault of a City by Tishath-Pileser II. (III), the Pul of 2 Kings xv. 19
- Broken Cylinder, with Inscription of Sargon
- Cylinder containing the Account of Senoocherib's Invasion of Judah
- The Storming of Lachish
- Cylinder with Inscription of Nebuchadnezzar II, the Great

- Cameo Portrait of Nebuchadnezzar II.
- Clay Cylinder of Nabonidus, King of Babylon, mentioning his Son Belshazzar
- Portrait Sculpture of Cyrus
- Tribugal Cylinder-Seal of Darius
- Monumental Names of Babylonian, Assyrian, and Persian Kings mentioned in Old Testament
- Bethlehem
- Nazareth, where our Lord was brought up
- Cana of Galilee, the Hills of Galilee in the Distance
- Jacob's Well
- Pool of Capernaum
- Elbeius
- Combining with a Yoke of Oxen
- Women Grinding Corn
- Banias (Caesarea Philippi)
- Bethany
- Pool of Siloam
- Wall of Herod's Temple
- "Diaoa of the Ephesians"
- One of the Bas-reliefs of the Arch of Titus
- Coins of the New Testament Period

The Illustrations selected and described by the EDITOR, assisted by F. G. KENTON, M.A., of the Manuscript Department of the British Museum; with Concordance, Subject-Index, Dictionary of Scripture Proper Names, and Indexed Bible Atlas.

Prices from 2s. 6d. to £2 2s.

A Prospectus, with Specimen Plates of the New Illustrated Teacher's Bible, and List of EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE'S SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS, including the well-known "VARIORUM TEACHER'S BIBLE," may be had gratis and post free.

EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE,
 Her Majesty's Printers,
 London: GREAT NEW STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.
 Edinburgh, Glasgow, Melbourne, Sydney, and Cooper
 Union, New York.

MR. F. E. ROBINSON'S LIST.

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE.
Illustrated Popular Histories of the COLLEGES. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. net per volume.

LINCOLN COLLEGE, OXFORD By Rev. ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Rector of Great Leighs, Chelmsford; late Fellow of Lincoln. [February.]

CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE By Rev. H. P. SPOKES, LL.D., Vicar of St. Paul's, Cambridge; Harms Prizeman 1877. [February.]

Other Volumes to follow.

Selections from the British Satirists.

With an Introductory Essay by CECIL HEADLAM, late Demy of Magdalen College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

Athenaeum.—"His book was a decidedly good idea, which has been well carried out. The introductory essay is a scholarly performance."
Times.—"The introduction is long and elaborate: it proves that the writer is a sound student of our literature."
Scotsman.—"Mr. Headlam has done a good service to a special department of British literature."

The Guardian's Instruction; or, The

Gentlemen's Romance. Written for the Diversion and Service of the Century. A Reprint from the Edition of 1885.

This quaint little book contains a defence of the University of Oxford, interesting details of life there, and advice to parents of position on the education of their sons.

With a Biographical Introduction. Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

Times.—"All who care for the literature and social history of the seventeenth century will be greatly obliged to the editor for the reprint. . . . His [Stephen Penton's] educational maxims are really worth reading by the side of Locke's short treatise."

Manchester Guardian.—"The book is valuable as showing the views of a moderate and learned man on the education of the children of the well-to-do classes, and as giving details about the life and teaching at the University of Oxford two centuries ago."

The Counsels of William de Britaine.

A Volume of Seventeenth Century Precepts and Aphorisms. Revised by HERBERT H. STURMER. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

Queen.—"It is cut out for a school prize."
Daily News.—"It is full of wise saws and no more instances."
Pall Mall Gazette.—"Mr. Sturmer has accomplished his 'toil' well and carefully; his introduction is excellent. . . . The author, whoever he was, knows how to turn an aphorism with so neat a touch that he must have been ancestor of Mr. George Meredith."

Record.—"Probably many of our readers will be glad to be told that the book is a treatise for young men, much like Lord Chesterfield's Letters in some respects, but superior in moral tone, while equally shrewd and more philosophical."

London: F. E. ROBINSON, 20, Great Russell Street' Bloomsbury.

THE LIBRARY OF USEFUL STORIES.

PRICE ONE SHILLING EACH. TWO NEW VOLUMES.

THE STORY of the POTTER. Being a Popular Account of the Rise and Progress of the Principal Manufacturers of Pottery and Porcelain in all parts of the World, with some Descriptions of Modern Practical Working. By CHARLES F. BINNS, late of the Royal Worcester Works. With 57 Illustrations of Ancient and Modern Pottery.

THE STORY of BRITISH COINAGE. By GETRUDE B. RAWLINGS. With 103 Illustrations from Coins in the British Museum.

PREVIOUS VOLUMES.

THE STORY of GERM LIFE—Bacteria. By H. W. CONN. With 34 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the EARTH'S ATMOSPHERE. By DOUGLAS ARCHIBALD, M.A. With 44 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the WEATHER. By G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S. With 47 Illustrations.

THE STORY of FOREST and STREAM. By JAMES RODWAY, F.L.S. With 27 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the CHEMICAL ELEMENTS. By M. M. PATISON-MUIR, M.A.

THE STORY of EXTINCT CIVILISATIONS of the EAST. By R. E. ANDERSON, M.A., F.A.S. With Maps.

THE STORY of ELECTRICITY. By J. MUNRO. With 100 Illustrations.

THE STORY of a PIECE of COAL. By A. E. MARTIN, F.G.S. With 38 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the SOLAR SYSTEM. By G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S. With 28 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the EARTH in PAST AGES. By Prof. H. G. SEELEY. With 40 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the PLANTS. By GRANT ALLEN. With 49 Illustrations.

THE STORY of PRIMITIVE MAN. By Edward CLODD. With 88 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the STARS. By G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S. With 24 Illustrations.

THE STORY of LIFE in the SEAS. By SYDNEY J. HICKSON, F.R.S., Professor of Zoology in the Owens College, Manchester. With 42 Illustrations. [In February.]

To be followed by other volumes, of which due notice will be given.

LONDON: GEORGE NEWNES, LTD., Southampton Street, Strand.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, DECEMBER, 1898.

PITT PRESS SERIES.

THE PITT PRESS SHAKESPEARE FOR SCHOOLS.

Guardian:—"The notes are the most successful Mr. Verity has ever given us; we find nothing in them that we could wish awsy."

The Merchant of Venice. With Introduction, Notes, Glossary, and Index. By A. WILSON VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College. 1s. 6d.

Table listing various Shakespeare plays and authors like Malot, Molière, Michelet, Andersen, Raumer, Lessing, Macaulay, Milton, and Lamb with their respective prices.

NEW ENGLISH GRAMMARS.

The Elements of English Grammar ..... A. S. West ..... 2 6
Guardian:—"It is far and away the best of its class hitherto published for boys of thirteen to sixteen years of age, and, if we mistake not, will soon become a standard text in secondary schools, and mark a new epoch in the teaching of English Grammar."
An English Grammar for Beginners ..... A. S. West ..... 1 0
Schoolmaster:—"It is a capital little work, which we can heartily recommend."

Table listing various English grammars and authors like Cæsar, Cornelius Nepos, Vergil, Horace, Livy, Tacitus, Xenophon, Homer, Euripides, Plato, and Demosthenes with their respective prices.

NEW CLASSICAL TEXTS.

SOPHOCLES.—THE TEXT OF THE SEVEN PLAYS. Edited, with an Introduction, by R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., M.P., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Times:—"Professor Jebb's recension will now be the standard text for English scholars."

THE REPUBLIC OF PLATO. Edited, with Critical Notes and an Introduction on the Text, by J. ADAM, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

THE SMALLER CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS. New Volume.

THE BOOKS OF EZRA and NEHEMIAH. Edited by Rev. Professor H. E. RYLE, D.D., President of Queens' College, Cambridge. With Map. 1s.

PITT PRESS SERIES.—New Volumes.

NEW EDITION NOW READY.

SOPHOCLES—OEDIPUS TYRANNUS. School Edition. With Introduction and Commentary by R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., LL.D. Second Edition, Revised. 4s

DUMAS—LA FORTUNE de D'ARTAGNAN. Edited by A. R. ROPES, M.A., late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. 2s.

PERRAULT—THE FAIRY TALES OF MASTER PERRAULT. Edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by W. RIPPMMANN, M.A. 1s. 6d.

EARLE'S MICROCOSMOGRAPHY. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by A. S. WEST, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge. 3s.

THE PITT PRESS SERIES.—BOOKS SUITABLE FOR VARIOUS EXAMINATIONS, 1898-9.

GREEK.

Table listing Greek authors and works like Aristophanes, Euripides, Herodotus, Homer, Plato, Plutarch, and Xenophon with their respective prices.

LATIN.

Table listing Latin authors and works like Cæsar, Cicero, Horace, Livy, Tacitus, and Vergil with their respective prices.

FRENCH.

Table listing French authors and works like About, Cornelle, De Bonnechose, Delavigne, and De Stael with their respective prices.

FRENCH—continued.

Table listing French authors and works like Molière, Ponsard, Racine, Souvestre, and Voltaire with their respective prices.

GERMAN.

Table listing German authors and works like Grimm, Hauff, Kohlrausch, Riehl, and Schiller with their respective prices.

ENGLISH.

Table listing English authors and works like Bacon, Macaulay, The Cambridge Milton for Schools, The Pitt Press Shakespeare for Schools, and Scott with their respective prices.

COMPLETE LISTS ON APPLICATION.

London: C. J. CLAY & SONS, Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 15, 1898.

No. 1341, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| Obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .                  | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. . . . .                | 0 15 3  | 0 7 6        | 0 3 10     |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices : 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

Ireland, an admirable collection of material, a monument of self-sacrificing and disinterested energy, and a permanently valuable contribution to knowledge. May I urge, however, that you should not limit your field of selection so rigidly. The fund which the ACADEMY proposes to establish is practically the only one in the country available for the encouragement of works which do not make a direct appeal to the average book-buying public. I would place the claims of the following works upon your consideration : Prof. Ker's Epic and Romance, an achievement of constructive critical scholarship; Dr. Jevon's Introduction to the Science of Religion; Mr. Crooke's North-West Provinces of India; Miss Garnett's Greek Folk-Poesy; and Dr. Sigerson's Bards of the Gael and Gall. These two last works have the merit of interpreting to the English reader two alien and highly interesting bodies of romantic literature."

SIR DOUGLAS STRAIGHT, the editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, selects The Nigger of the "Narcissus," by Mr. Joseph Conrad, and Miss Kingsley's Travels in West Africa.

MR. ANDREW LANG is a bold man. He has compiled ('tis true a little late) an English Academy, AND HE HAS INCLUDED THE NAME OF MR SWINBURNE. So much has been said about our humble attempt to "play the old Academy game" that we feel we are entitled to ask just one question of Mr. Lang—who might the Macchailean Mohr be? Here is Mr. Lang's forty, as printed in Longman's Magazine. They are not his personal choice, "but the forty who would, perhaps, have a good chance on the French principle":

- |                        |                        |
|------------------------|------------------------|
| Mr. Gladstone.         | The Macchailean Mohr.  |
| Dean Farrar.           | Mr. James Knowles.     |
| The Bishop of Ripon.   | Mr. Herbert Spencer.   |
| The Bishop of London.  | Sir Henry Irving.      |
| The Bishop of Chester. | Mr. George Meredith.   |
| Mr. Ruskin.            | Mr. Leslie Stephen.    |
| Lord Acton.            | Dr. J. A. H. Murray.   |
| Prof. Masson.          | Mr. Binning Monro.     |
| Prof. Butcher.         | Mr. Francis Galton.    |
| Prof. Bryce.           | Dr. Fairbairn.         |
| Prof. Jebb.            | Mr. Alfred Austin.     |
| Prof. Mahaffy.         | Mr. Swinburne.         |
| Prof. Courthope.       | Mr. Lecky.             |
| Lord Rayleigh.         | Mr. Thomas Hardy.      |
| Sir W. Crookes.        | Mr. Morley.            |
| Lord Kelvin.           | Mr. Max Müller.        |
| Sir Robert Ball.       | Sir George Trevelyan.  |
| Mr. Robert Bridges.    | Mr. A. J. Balfour.     |
| Mr. S. R. Gardiner.    | Prof. Sidgwick.        |
| Mr. E. B. Tylor.       | Mr. Frederic Harrison. |

"There is not a literary gent. among them, unless Mr. Stephen and Mr. Harrison may accept the title," is Mr. Lang's comment on his list. What sort of "gents.," we wonder, are Mr. Meredith and Mr. Hardy?

MR. LANG continues: "Imagine the pleasure of going canvassing! I think of presenting myself, for instance, before Lord Kelvin—or Mr. Max Müller—or a bishop, unless he were an old friend of unregenerate days. Long-haired poets would get little encouragement out of Mr. Herbert Spencer, and the clergy would soon dispose of your emancipated novelists. Mr. Henley soliciting the vote and interest of a bishop would be an example of unappreciated greatness, and it would be pleasing to see Mr.—'s call on Mr. Swinburne."

MR. LANG's doubts, implied above, concerning Mr. Max Müller's friendliness to himself will perhaps be set at rest by learning that that gentleman's forthcoming book of reminiscences is to be entitled Auld Lang Syne. The volume so named will, we fear, run risks of enjoying a Kailyard reputation.

P.S.—Following this section of Mr. Lang's Longman's gossip on Academy-making, is a paragraph concerning ghosts, which, of course, we did not read, and then a paragraph about ants, which we also were disregarding until the last sentence caught the eye. Alas! it compels us to withdraw the compliment to Mr. Lang on his boldness. For it says: "This reminds me that Sir John Lubbock was left out of my Academy. I therefore scratch Mr. Swinburne, who does not love such laurels."

MR. WILLIAM NICHOLSON'S Almanack of Twelve Sports is being issued in a French edition, with a preface by M. Octave Uzanne, the most entertaining dilettante now writing. It is amusing to find the panegyrist of the fan and other boudoir trifles standing as the apologist of pictures celebrating le cricket and le box. Mr. Kipling's verses, we suppose, have not been translated.

AMERICAN critics are becoming unpleasantly accusative. Two charges of plagiarism against English authors have just crossed the Atlantic. One paper attacks Sir Edwin Arnold; another accuses Mr. Anstey for having in his Baboo Jabberjee "stolen or obviously paraphrased many expressions from the celebrated Memoir of Onocool Chandee Mookerjee, the classic in Baboo-English, and from a pamphlet by the Honourable T. Hart-Davies on the Ilbert Bill; both extremely humorous, but of a sort of humour of which a little goes a long way." This is a serious charge to base lightly upon a necessary similarity of diction. No living writer has less occasion than Mr. Anstey to borrow the work of others. Reviewers ought to be very careful how they employ so dangerous and damning a word as plagiarism.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. write that they are surprised to find in this month's Contemporary Review an article by Mr. W. T. Stead based upon the Countess of Warwick's forthcoming Life of Joseph Arch, M.P., since the book is not really published until to-day, the 15th. "We think it," they add, "due to ourselves to explain to you that not a single copy of the book has yet been sent out by us, and that the advance review has not appeared under any arrangement made by us." Certainly an irregularity has been committed; but we cannot see that the publishers are much to be pitied. No paper is likely to refuse to notice the book because an advance copy

NOTES AND NEWS.

IN connexion with the awards which we have made, it might be useful to say for the benefit of readers who have not yet seen Mr. Henley's essay on Burns, that the publishers, Messrs. Jack, of Edinburgh, have just issued it in a shilling edition. In its original form it is to be found at the end of the four-volume edition of Burns—The Centenary Burns—edited by Mr. Henley and Mr. T. F. Henderson, a work which, we might remark, is not easily to be met with. The request for it one day this week at three of the leading London bookshops yielded no result whatever; and at Mudie's the edition, quite naturally, has not been put into circulation at all.

In addition to the replies to our request for the names of books suitable for "coronation," which were printed last week, we have received others. Among these is one from Prof. Dowden, running as follows:

"I have read too few books of 1897 to be able to express an opinion of their comparative merits. But I think some of the most beautiful blank verse written in recent years is to be found in Mr. Stephen Phillips's Poems, published at the close of the year, though dated 1898."

Prof. Dowden should be gratified to learn our decision in this matter.

MR. ALFRED NUTT writes: "If choice is to be rigidly limited to two works, one of which is to receive 100 guineas and the other 50, I think the first prize should go to the edition of Burns by Mr. Henley and Mr. Henderson, the first adequate edition of the poet from the standpoint of literature, and one which really does reflect honour upon our national scholarship. The second I would award to Mr. Borlase's Dolmens of has fallen, probably by way of the author, into the hands of a Contemporary Reviewer.

FIRST, the Nelson celebration of 1896, and the consequent interest in the navy, and second, Mr. Kipling's Seven Seas, and Mr. Newbolt's Admirals All, and Mr. Rennell Rodd's Ballads of the Fleet, together or separately, may be held responsible for the naval poetry that we now see in so many places. Even the American Chap-Book prints a "Song of the Spanish Main" of which these are stanzas:

"Out in the south, when a twilight shroud
Hangs over the ocean's rim,
Sail on sail, like a floating cloud,
Galleon, brigantine, cannon-browed,
Rich from the Indies, homeward crowd,
Singing a Spanish hymn.

There comes a song through the salt and spray,
Blood-kin to the ocean's roar:
'All day long down Florez way
Richard Grenville stands at bay.
Come and take him if ye may!
'Then hush, for evermore."

AND even a Member of Parliament attunes his mind to poesy, for in the Newcastle Daily Chronicle is a nautical song by Mr. William Allan, M.P., one stanza of which runs:

"The flag that cowed the roving Dane,
And shattered Gallia's might,
Tho' leagued with proud and haughty Spain,
Waves still in glory's light.
As in triumphant days of old,
Its laurels bright appear,
While from the hearts of seamen bold
This song salutes the ear:
The soldier may be lord on land,
And brave in battle be,
While Britain's sons man British guns
Jack shall be King at Sea!
Hurrah! Hurrah!"

THE Chap-Book's poetry is not, however, entirely naval. We find in it also the following elegiac gem, copied from a child's grave in an Australian bush town:

"Our Emily Frances was so fair
That the Angels envied Her,
And Whispered in her Ear
We will take you Away on Tuesday night."

By the death of Mr. Stacy Marks we lose a clever painter and a genial Bohemian of the old school. Mr. Marks was the Royal Academy's jester; no other painter used pigments as humorously as he. If he has a successor it is Mr. Dendy Sadler. Mr. Marks was not a great artist, but he made the quainter side of bird-life his own, and worked there without a rival. His later colour studies of macaws and cockatoos, parrots and adjutants, are more highly prized by their owners than even his oil-paintings will be. Mr. Marks turned author a year or so ago, and produced the necessary volume of reminiscences. It is marked rather by good spirits than good literary style. Socially Mr. Stacy Marks will be greatly missed.

AMONG the latest results of Mr. Gladstone's leisure is the invention of a screen constructed to hold, like the cases in St. Deiniol's library, "the maximum of books in the minimum of space." The screen is easily movable. It is made of light wood, enamelled white. The front consists of shelves for four hundred books, the back is covered with tapestry. On the top may be placed ornaments. The Gladstone screen should be put on the market.

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "It is a curious fact, due, no doubt, to the limited knowledge of Dutch in this country, that a remarkable linguistic blunder in Mr. Bryce's valuable Impressions of South Africa [which we review this week elsewhere] has passed undetected, although the book is now in a second edition. On p. 509 the author says the Boers' 'usual term (when they talk among themselves) for an Englishman is "rotten egg." The other common Boer name for an Englishman is "red neck," drawn from the fact that the back of an Englishman's neck is often burnt red by the sun. This does not happen to the Boer, who always wears a broad-brimmed hat.' Mr. Bryce has unconsciously done the Boers an injustice. They never call an Englishman a 'rotten egg' at all. What they say is roode nek, popularly rooie nek or rooinek—i.e., 'red neck.' As the oo is the same as our long o (as in old, door, yeoman, &c.), the phrase, when pronounced quickly, sounds to English ears not unlike 'rotten egg.' This is, no doubt, what has given rise to the misunderstanding which has imposed on so careful a traveller as Mr. Bryce."

MR. W. L. ALDEN is writing the London literary letter for the New York Times Saturday literary supplement. Beginnings are notoriously difficult, and therefore we may justly expect better communications than his first, which chronicles only the proceedings of a school of inferior novelists who are already too much written about.

THE verses written by Mr. Bliss Carman for the unveiling of the Robert Louis Stevenson memorial at San Francisco ran as follows:

"THE WORD OF THE WATER.

I.

God made me simple from the first,
And good to quench the body's thirst.
Think you He has no ministers
To glad that way-worn soul of yours?

II.

Here by the thronging Golden Gate,
For thousands and for you I wait,
Seeing adventurers' sails unfurled
For the four corners of the world.

III.

Here passed one day, nor came again,
A prince among the tribes of men.
(For man like him is from his birth
A vagabond upon this earth.)

IV.

Be thankful, friend, as you pass on,
And pray for Louis Stevenson,
That by whatever trail he fare,
He be refreshed in God's great care."

The Canadian poet has here caught some of Stevenson's own spirit.

It is announced that Lady Murray has purchased, near Antibes, in the Riviera, a large house, which she proposes to convert into a home of rest for authors and artists in poor health and circumstances. The home will be opened from February 1 next to May 31, and henceforward from November 1 to May 31. Particulars may be obtained of Lady Murray, Villa Victoria, Cannes. Meanwhile the following rules are made public by the Daily Mail:

"1. That the health of the applicant is such as to make a winter in a mild climate necessary, or at least advisable.

2. That he is unable to obtain this without such assistance as he will find here.

3. That his medical advisers are able to give a fair hope that with the benefit of a winter abroad he will be able to return to his work.

4. That those admitted pay their journey out and back, and £1 a week for board and lodging. Personal washing, extra fires and lights, and wine, will be charged extra. No dogs allowed."

MR. JOHN MORLEY will open the Passmore Edwards Settlement on Saturday evening, February 12. Lord Peel will take the chair. Among the arrangements for the spring term are a course of eight lectures, by Miss Jane Harrison, on Delphi. M. Homolle, Director of the French School at Athens, has kindly lent Miss Harrison photographs of some of the recent discoveries, which will accompany her lectures as lantern illustrations.

MR. LE GALLIENNE, who is about to visit America, will stay there at least a year, and he may reside permanently in New England.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL announce a work by Mr. Alfred T. Story, entitled The Building of the Empire, which purport to be the story of England's growth from Elizabeth to Victoria. The book will have more than a hundred illustrations from contemporary prints.

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish immediately a work entitled The Niger Sources by Colonel J. K. Trotter. The work will contain a route map and illustrations.

WE understand that Mr. Elliot Stoddard will be the London publisher of the New Birmingham Ruskin Society's magazine Saint George.

THE author of Liza of Lambeth, Mr. W. S. Maugham, has written a second novel of a very different character, the principal even of which is a revolution in an Italian town in the fifteenth century. This looks like versatility with a vengeance.

THE date for the publication of the biography of the Prince of Wales, which Mr. Grant Richards has long had in preparation, is now definitely fixed for Monday next.

THE Queen has accepted a copy of Mr. Craigie's romance The School for Saints.

REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED.

IV.—MATTHEW ARNOLD.

IN a slight but interesting contribution to Lord Tennyson's biography Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton draws a sharp contrast between two kinds of poetry: one, which he calls popular, "appealing to the uncultivated masses"; the other, artistic and appealing only to those "who are sensitive to the expression of deep thought and the true beauties of poetic art." But in carrying out his argument he unwittingly shows that to be "artistic" in his sense is to be limited, for the greatest poets appeal both to the many and the few. He instances Shakespeare, who is "the most popular," and yet transcends all others in beauty of expression. Homer, Dante, Molière—all the supreme poets might have been added. Among those who do not win attention from all sorts and conditions of men, but whose poetry commands a select and intelligent audience, Mr. Watts-Dunton would probably number Keats, Shelley, Rossetti, Winburne, and Mr. Arnold. No one who loves what is beautiful and appreciates the expression can fail to be attracted to them, and yet they are not popular in the sense in which Tennyson or Burns or Mr. Rudyard Kipling is popular.

To find the reason it seems to me we must dive a little deeper than Mr. Watts-Dunton has done. Popularity or unpopularity has nothing to do with the question. The coarse, ill-equipped modern novelist, running his "big human passions" as if they were "the greatest show on earth," appeals to a huge multitude; but so did Scott, Dickens, and George Eliot. It tells nothing, therefore, to say that a writer is widely read. He may, as Tennyson did, attract all that is best in the several grades of society, or he may only collect a crowd of ignorant admirers from the under sections. But, on the other hand, that readers are few is no guarantee that they are fit. In these days of cliques and schools it is not very difficult for a versifier of very moderate attainments indeed to gain the ear of a small band of admirers, and be a little Pope to them. Such a one is almost certain to call himself "artistic," and feel, or affect, a disdain of popular approval. Like Montaigne, he abhors "to preach to the first passer-by, to become a tutor to the ignorance of the first I meet." Let this air of superiority be not of itself lent. Popularity or unpopularity tells nothing about a poet.

And still, although Mr. Watts-Dunton is not happy in the choice of terms, he has evidently been brooding over a very real distinction. There is a class of poets, at the head of which stands Burns, whose interest is wholly in the workaday world, whose strongest note is a love of life, and who appeal almost wholly to pity and fun, tenderness and passion. Another class, the greatest of whom is Milton, with less warmth and sympathy, have a deeper appreciation of the more august and remote beauty of life, the sense of the sublime, the glory and music of words. They do not make a very strong appeal to those simple elementary instincts that Burns grouped compendiously into one expression, "the hairet," but speak to the æsthetic, the cultivated sense. It was to the order of Milton that Matthew Arnold belonged.

To make this apparent it is only necessary to take a fine verse from him and compare it with a typical one from Burns. The familiar "Dover Beach" gives us exactly what we want, a stanza representing Arnold's art at its highest, and also expressing his mental attitude:

"The sea of faith
Was once, too, at the full, and round earth's shore
Lay like the folds of a bright girdle fur'd.
But now I only hear
Its melancholy, long withdrawing roar,
Retreating to the breath
Of the night-wind down the vast edges drear
And naked shingles of the world."

It needs no saying that the part of man which responds to this is very different from that which gives back an echo to "Ae fond kiss," or "Had we never loved so kindly," or "My love is like a red, red rose." A thousand hearts will leap at a cry of personal regret or passion for one imagination that will be stirred by this large sadness and the sustained and dignified metaphor by which it is expressed.

I am not instituting a comparison between the two poets in point of greatness, but only trying to make clear the difference of temperament, a difference that sufficiently explains why Arnold failed to appreciate Burns truly. The next point is that a mind of the very highest rank embraces both. One finds it even in those passages which embody the impassioned dejection to which the greatest poets are subject—

"Tears from the depth of some divine despair."

In the Odyssey and the Purgatorio, in the Book of Job, and Macbeth a despondency more profound than Arnold's is over and over again expressed. But the difference between a Homer or a Shakespeare, even a Tennyson, and those minor "artistic" poets who have not succeeded in becoming popular, is that the former connects the facts of life directly with its mysteries, while the latter appeal to a secondary sentiment. The ordinary wayfaring man has no difficulty in grasping what Shakespeare meant when he makes Macbeth exclaim:

" . . . Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more."

But no one can fully appreciate the fine lines quoted from Arnold without understanding the religious doubts and controversies of the period in which they were written. And this brings us to the great weakness of him and his kind. Dealing as they do with themes and sentiments lying apart from daily experience, and appealing to those emotions which are not like love and grief, elemental, but are fostered into an artificial shape by reading and cultivation, they are ever tempted to refine and refine, to assume more and more of special preparation in the audience, to widen the distance between art and ordinary life, till in the end they find themselves separated from all but a small selection of their fellows. That this was so with Mr. Arnold does not admit of doubt. He had not that tremendous will and self-confidence that kept Tennyson steadfast to his purpose in face of many early discouragements. For twenty years before his death he had practically ceased to write poetry. Either he was not sure of himself, or not sure that great art is bound to conquer in the end—bound to conquer even the Philistine.

Yet in one sense he has won the battle. The much maligned British public is really not so bad as it is called. Its worst fault is a kind of easily imposed upon good nature, which is apt to deify humbugs and charlatans on their first appearance, and to neglect all merit that is not pushing and clamant; but this worship is never of long duration; sooner or later the grain is winnowed from the chaff. Merit will always have a few honest admirers, and these steadily increase as time goes on, while mere empty pretentiousness, whatever its momentary vogue, is pricked and tossed aside; and Matthew Arnold's poetry has quietly and surely emerged from the neglect of those early years, and is probably esteemed more to-day than it was in the author's lifetime. It is seen now that he filled an important place in his generation, that he expressed as no other has done the wide imaginative aspect of the flux and change of the period in which he lived; and if he had dared to be a little bolder, and to think less of what Goethe or Milton would have said, and more of his own impressions, his place would have been higher still. However, the slim volume of selections from him published by Macmillan is a book the lover of nineteenth-century poetry would not composedly lose. If we except "Balder Dead," it omits very little of his essential work.

It is curious that while the neglected verse is emerging from obscurity, his prose which attracted so much attention when published appears to be losing ground. Yet it must always command at least an historical interest, as marking a stage in the evolution of style. There are four writers of the century who dealt with kindred topics and who represent as many sides of life. In the first place came Macaulay with a manner of his own, indeed, yet no new voice. Rather the last of the old voices—brilliant, well-informed and full, dwelling mainly on the superficial and external, not aware of those deeper currents of thought that were to characterise the time that was coming. He has wielded an influence out of all proportion to his strength, mainly because his prose was at once extremely striking and very easily imitated. But, as a recent critic has said, his thought all ran in "orderly Dutch dykes." Next we have Carlyle flooding these narrow channels with a sea of new ideas, but rugged of language and careless of form, making a complete alteration in the point of view, yet influencing mere style to a very small extent, because his language was so peculiarly his own, so mannered, and so flushed with personality, that it was simply impossible for anyone else to adopt it without producing the most grotesque effect. At his heel followed Ruskin, loving grace and music and beauty, and rendering them with a kind of sweet formality and ceremoniousness: a taste for purity of words and classic models—a descendant, in short, of De Quincey. Finally, we arrive at Matthew Arnold, and his perception that something still was lacking. Of the three styles alluded to, it may be said that all of them lacked flexibility. The very architecture of Macaulay's work excluded it. His rounded sentence and antithetic construction are fatal to the play of light and shade; they are not meant for laughter and tears, and all that lies between. Carlyle's harsher periods, though not unfitted to the display of a grim humour, are as much lacking in suppleness as Macaulay's; and Mr. Ruskin, especially in his first period, was too earnest and stately to express a variety of moods. Matthew Arnold was able to do what the others had not done. His verse is almost painfully melancholy, but his natural buoyancy and playfulness, his archness and vivacity, were exquisitely displayed in his prose. He could, as none of his contemporaries did, pursue an argument steadfastly and yet with all the liveliness of spirit and laughing resources of a particularly keen and well-furnished mind. To find his equal in this respect we must either go to France or our own excellent prosemen of the eighteenth century, to Addison and Fielding. And he has wielded an influence scarcely second to Macaulay's. The best features in the prose of to-day, its aim at clearness, its intolerance of the formal and pompous and obscure, are very largely due to him.

But if this be so, it may well be asked, is it not inconsistent to say that he is going out of favour? Well, if an honest answer be returned to that it must be personal. No one can really reply for his fellow men. He can only say: "I read Matthew Arnold once with pleasure and delight, he taught me much for which I am grateful, but whether it is that he can be sucked dry, or that a change has come over the spirit of things, very languidly now do I return to him." The reply will no doubt appear unsatisfactory to those who still find an inspiration in his pages, and yet it is capable of defence. Mr. Arnold answered to a need of his generation, the century is vastly better for his having lived and spoken, but that may be so, and yet his influence may have ceased to be direct. And his was not one of those supremely rich and full natures at which one can, so to speak, cut and come again, as you return, for instance, to Charles Lamb or Sir Thomas Browne. That he was true to one of his doctrines, that he was lucid, is to say all; he offers no second banquet. In thinking of his prose I often contrast it with that of another poet, Heinrich Heine. Arnold apprehended the qualities, the finest qualities, of French prose, its clearness, logic, and vivacity, and reproduced them with success. So did the other, but to French lucidity Heine added German dreaminess and poetry. Language in his hands is as supple and changeable, but it exhibited a larger variety of moods, passing with the easiest grace from fun and satire to a deep pathos or a glowing fancy. To be a master of prose one must have not only a right theory and a full command of material, but a richly endowed mind.

And, finally, the part Arnold played in his chosen rôle of critic was bound to be temporary. The method of his time, as is the case in all periods of original work, was to refer direct to nature. "Is this life as I know it?" was substantially the question by which the claims of art had to stand or fall. Carlyle knew no other test; Ruskin delighted in applying it. But Arnold's function was to insist on the value of tradition and the classical models. His own judgment was perpetually guided by the principle laid down in a famous passage beginning:

"There can be no more useful help for discovering what poetry belongs to the class of the truly excellent, and can therefore do us most good, than to have always in one's mind lines and expressions of the great masters, and to apply them as a touchstone to other poetry."

A most excellent device for expelling the banal and pretentious from current literature, but one that may lead the judgment far astray in regard to any new and original work, which is as likely as not to go, or appear to go, in the teeth of old models! No, the true touchstone is supplied by those exquisite moments in which poems have been "lived but left unsung," and if you substitute for them the memories of those of other people as expressed in verse, then you are deliberately breaking contact with nature.

It was worth while reviving this view of criticism, however, because it brings Arnold's prose into harmony with his verse, and shows the weakness of one to spring from the same cause as that of the other. Yet, although it would be against the spirit of his own teaching not to look frankly at his limitations, let us not forget his merits as a great educative influence, a teacher of clear thinking and precise statement, a singer whose imagination was entranced by the great spiritual change that in his day swept over "the naked shingles of the world."

P.

A FORGOTTEN NOVEL BY JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE.

WHEN "Zeta" first published his little volume of three hundred pages, called Shadows of the Clouds, the world of 1847 was duly impressed, both with the general ability which the book displayed and the force and vigour with which it preached some rather heterodox doctrines. When it leaked out, as it soon did, that Zeta was none other than James Anthony Froude, Fellow of Exeter College in Oxford, brother of Hurrell Froude of Oriel, the zealous High Churchman, public interest waxed greater. It waxed, perhaps, greatest of all when not long afterwards its author bought up all the copies he could lay his hands on and destroyed them. The suppression seems to have been singularly thorough and successful, for the book is now almost unknown.

It never figures in the catalogues of second-hand booksellers, and is very rarely to be seen even in private libraries. The British Museum, of course, has a copy, for there, if anywhere, is the proverb proved true, Litera scripta manet. An author may buy up or call in his book, but the Museum will never restore what has once fallen into its clutches.

The reason generally assigned for Froude's suppression of the book, is that it was too autobiographical, or at least appeared to the outer world to be so. The relations of the hero with his father were thought to reflect somewhat closely the quarrel between Froude's father and himself, and there are other possibly accidental resemblances between the careers of hero and author which might lend colour to the idea that the book was, in fact, though not in form, an autobiography. Another possible motive for withdrawing Shadows of the Clouds is supposed to be found in the hero's heretical views on certain points. The heresy, viewed by the standards of to-day, is of a mild character; but orthodox readily took offence in the Fifties. Indeed, the story runs that when Froude's next book, The Nemesis of Faith, appeared Sewell, Fellow of Exeter and ardent High Churchman, who afterwards founded Radley School, solemnly burnt it in the middle of the Quadrangle! Public feeling ran high in those days on matters of faith and religion in Oxford, and it is quite likely that the orthodox Churchman of that time would have found much to reprobate in Shadows of the Clouds. But if this had been the reason for its withdrawal, would Froude so very shortly afterwards have published (not anonymously, but under his own name) the far more heterodox Nemesis of Faith? A curious story about Froude's election to the Exeter Fellowship used to be told in Oxford in the Fifties. Hurrell Froude, the High Churchman, was, of course, Fellow of Oriel, and the Provost of Oriel, Hawkins, a man of small capacity and little wisdom, hated the High Church Party cordially. When J. A. Froude tried for the Oriel Fellowship he was not elected. When he subsequently tried at Exeter, or the other hand—a pronouncedly High Church college in those days—he was elected, as reported, under the misapprehension that he had been rejected by Oriel as a High Churchman and friend of Newman! If there is any truth in this old story it is not difficult to understand the rage of the Exeter Common Room and men like Sewell when Froude proceeded to publish heterodox, or Latitudinarian, works.

Shadows of the Clouds, or at least the longer of the two stories it contains, is an extremely interesting book to read, even at this time of day, and as an example of the "psychological novel" was considerable in advance of its day. It may be admitted that it is at times "heavy" reading. It has scarcely any plot, no "incident," very little "action," and next to no dialogue. This gives it a certain monotony inseparable from that kind of fiction. But that much of it is tremendously impressive cannot be denied. Briefly, it is a character-study of an unhappy boy, Edward Fowler, the of a hard, gloomy Church dignitary, deprived of a mother's care, and surrounded by utterly uncongenial brothers and sisters, who, after a miserable existence at home and at school, pulls himself together with a great effort of will, and at length develops into something of a man, only to die of consumption before his efforts have had time to bear fruit in any noteworthy achievement. The interest of the story is wholly in the character of the boy, in the mental phases through which he passes, and in the picture which is incidentally drawn of the ideas and the manners of the 30-40. In technique, of course, and as a rare example of how to tell a story, the book fails. Froude was not a great novelist in the romanesque, but merely a man of deep insight into character and wide sympathy with human frailty, who has left behind him one of the most interesting studies of a human mind. Artistically, indeed, the book comes far from being an actual failure. The events do not follow one another in satisfactory order and sequence, there is a shade too much of the author in the book, and too little of the characters :

Never dares the man put off the Prophet."

Froude is perpetually at his reader's elbow, jogging him lest he should miss any point or fail to draw from it its legitimate conclusion. But with all these disadvantages Shadows of the Clouds remains to this day a book that well repays reading. It contains many vivid pictures of the life of the great majority of respectable God-fearing English people lived in the second quarter of the nineteenth century. There is, for example, a terrible picture of life at an English public school (Westminster) in those days; but of much more real and permanent interest than these are the often profound and original views on life which the author puts forward in the course of his narrative. Here, for example, is a singularly apt utterance on the subject of education :

I take it to be a matter of the most certain experience in dealing with boys of an amiable and good disposition, that exactly the treatment they receive from you they will deserve. In a general sense it is true of all persons of unformed character that when they come in contact with you as your inferiors; though with men it cannot be relied on with the same certainty, because their feelings are more powerful, and their habit of moving this way or that under particular circumstances more indeterminate. But with the very large class of boys of a yielding nature who have very little confidence, are very little governed by a determined will or judgment, but sway up and down under the impulses of the moment, if they are treated generously and trustingly, it may be taken as an axiom that their feelings will be always strong enough to make them ashamed of what they do not deserve it."

Here is the father's view of his unfortunate son :—

As to the character of the entire boy, his temper, disposition, health of tone in heart and mind, all that was presumed. It made no difference at school exhibitions, and, at least indirectly, assumed no form of positive importance as regarded after-life. So this was all for itself. Of course, if a boy knew half as much as he did at ten and had construed the world through at eleven, all other excellences were a matter of course. . . . He was naturally timid, and shrunk from all the amusements and games of other boys. So much the better, he would keep to his books."

The boy goes to Westminster and is placed on the Foundation, "where for one year, at least, to all boys, and to some for every year, the life was as hard, and the treatment as barbarous as that of the negroes in Virginia."

The lad's character at school is thus summarised :

"The defect in Edward's nature, as I understand it, was that he was constitutionally a coward. Constitutionally, I say. It was not his own fault. Nature had ordered him so just as she orders others constitutionally brave. One may like these the best, but one must be cautious how one praises them for what they have earned by no merit of their own. Courage of this kind—animal courage—is a gift, not an accomplishment. . . . Neither animal courage nor animal cowardice result from any principle, they are merely passions . . . so different from moral courage and moral cowardice that they seem to me to have nothing in common except the name. . . . What Fowler had not was animal courage, he was subject to the passion of timidity, in the same way as other boys are subject to the passions of anger, jealousy, cruelty, or gross appetites; and it ought to have been understood that he was falling before a constitutional weakness instead of being supposed that he had a formed, settled character of meanness and cowardice."

After this powerfully subtle analysis of the boy's character the rest of the story follows on the whole with logical necessity. He is removed from Westminster, and after a miserable year or two at home, sent to a private tutor, where he is happy enough, and afterwards to Oxford, where he is generally popular. It seems questionable whether a youth who had passed through such a boyhood would have thus blossomed out into the possession of attractive social qualities; but probably had the story been worked out with greater care, this would have been accounted for. As it is, both in style and in construction the book is often slipshod. While at Oxford he falls in love and into debt. He is engaged for a brief space, and the engagement is broken off on the debts being made known. He takes to dissipation to drown care, and is rusticated from Oxford. From this stage begins the work of his redemption, and by sheer force of will and hard work he ultimately blossoms out into a decent member of society. The girl to whom he had been engaged marries someone else in a rather fantastic manner, though her love for Fowler remains unchanged. Fowler pulls her son out of the water at Torquay, which gives an opportunity for reconciliation and mutual explanations, and finally he dies in a highly unorthodox frame of mind. This in itself must have fluttered the doves of 1847 somewhat, though the author exerts considerable ingenuity to make it appear that he is himself quite as much shocked as his readers at the heretical views of his hero. Indeed, this attitude is kept up, throughout the book. Altogether, Shadows of the Clouds is a noteworthy book, and is worth reissuing, if only as a literary curiosity.

A GERMAN MARE'S NEST.

THE problem of Shakespeare's Sonnets is yet unsolved. The literary arena is dusty with the onsets of rival jousts, champions of Pembroke, champions of Southampton. The publication of Mr. Sidney Lee's Dictionary of National Biography article, and of Lady Newdegate-Newdigate's Gossip from a Manuscript Room, have aroused the controversy in an acute form. Mr. William Archer has flung himself into the fray with a magazine article. Nor are the lists yet closed. Herr Georg Brandes has yet to run his course; Mr. George Wyndham has to run his. To the impartial observer it would seem as if this were the one question on which no scholar could be trusted to keep his head or to refrain from the delightful but illegitimate sport of mare's-nesting. The spoils of a chase recently undertaken have come into our hands. Herr Gregor Sarrazin is a student of no mean repute, though with an unhappy penchant for seeing the verbal parallel standing where it ought not. On Hamlet, on Thomas Kyd, he has done good and suggestive work. His contributions to the speculative biography of Shakespeare are not to be despised. He has made the long-rejected hypothesis of an early Italian journey by the poet seem plausible. Nevertheless, in his recent William Shakespeare's Lehrjahre, he most undeniably puts his foot in it over the Sonnets. With his general standpoint on the matter we have no quarrel. Following Hermann Isaac he reiterates the point, which Mr. Tyler and his fellow upholders of the Pembroke theory have yet to meet, that the style and thought of the Sonnets, or at least of the Dark Woman and Jealousy Sonnets, are the style and thought of the plays and poems written before 1595, and not those of the plays written between 1598 and 1601. Herr Isaac holds the Friend of the Sonnets to be the Earl of Essex. In this, however, Herr Sarrazin does not follow him, but is content with Drake and Gerald Massey to believe that Southampton was the person addressed. Incidentally, he makes a very sensible observation for the benefit of those who think that the whole question does not signify a brass button. "It is not," he says,

"a matter of indifference to our judgment of Shakespeare's character whether these poems were addressed . . . to a weak-headed sensualist like William Herbert, or to one who, like Southampton, was, for all his faults and acts of rashness, a chivalrous, brave, and high-minded gentleman."

But we are not concerned with the general question as between Southampton and Pembroke. Herr Sarrazin, in support of his thesis, ventures upon the dangerous ground of textual emendation. He is troubled by the 143rd Sonnet, which runs as follows :

"So, as a careful housewife runs to catch
One of her feather'd creatures broke away,
Sits down her babe, and makes all swift dispatch
In pursuit of the thing she would have stay;
Whilst her neglected child holds her in chase,
Cries to catch her whose busy care is bent
To follow that which flies before her face,
Not prizing her poor infant's discontent :

So runn'st thou after that which flies from thee,
 Whilst I thy babe chase thee afar behind;
 But if thou catch thy hope, turn back to me,
 And play the mother's part, kiss me, be kind:
 So will I pray that thou mayst have thy Will,
 If thou turn back and my loud crying still."

It has been held that there is a pun in the last line but one, and, on the face of it, as Pembroke's name was William Herbert, while Southampton's was Henry Wriothesley, this tells for Pembroke. But what if this pun should somehow have displaced another, an earlier pun? and if this earlier pun could be shown to be somehow significant of Southampton? So should the righteous come to his own again, and Pembroke, "the man of sin," be ousted. Can we reconstruct, divine the original state of the text? What is the root-metaphor of the sonnet? What is all this about the poultry-yard? Aha! Eureka! Hoch! Let Herr Sarrazin announce his incomparable discovery in his own words:

"As in a palimpsest I read the original text of the closing lines, thus:

'So will I pray that thou mayst have thy "Hen,"

If thou turn back, and my loud crying pen.'

For 'pen,' cf. Lucrece, 681: 'He pens her piteous clamours in her head'; and 'Hen' is an abbreviation of Henry, not, indeed, so common as Harry or Hal, but still not altogether unusual. Henry Wriothesley was the name of Shakespeare's friend, who would seem, also, to have been his rival."

The reader will think, as we thought, that the learned German, with that impassive Teutonic humour of his, is joking with us. But no! you may search in vain for a sign that he regards his suggestion in any other light than that of the most serious complacency. Well, well! as the tragic poet says, πολλὰ τὰ θεῖα καὶδὲν ἀνθρώπου δευρότερον πέλει.

But surely this is the biggest mare's-nest upon which unhappy quester after the problem of the "Sonnet" has ever lighted, and contains the most stupendous wind-egg of them all.

THE DISCOUNT QUESTION.

A DESPERATE REMEDY.

WE have received a rather remarkable communication from a London bookseller of good position, who assures us that he seriously contemplates taking the measures proposed in the draft circular of which we give a copy below. We offer no comment on this communication, which, however, cannot, at all events, be described as dull reading. Messrs. ———'s circular is addressed and the following is its text:

TO BOOKSELLERS,

"During 1897 the condition of the book trade has been a subject of anxious discussion among publishers, booksellers, and authors. It is recognised by all that, except for those booksellers who, in consequence of vast sales, are able to buy in large quantities on special terms, bookselling, as now conducted, affords a ridiculously insufficient net return for the capital and energy which the calling demands. The legitimate profits are, in fact, deliberately handed over to the public, while the 'intelligent' bookseller toils all the year round for the benefit of his landlord, and for the getting of a bare living profit for himself by the sale of fancy articles, stationery, and other auxiliaries. Briefly, and in other words, the bookseller demonstrates himself to be what the immortal Mr. Bumble once denominated the law. The futility of appealing to anything in the shape of esprit de corps has been proved ad nauseam, and, instead of combining for the common welfare, each bookseller fights only for his own individual hand, and all agree to pursue the suicidal policy of the 'happy dispatch' by cutting each other's commercial throats. Every suggested remedy has, so far, failed, and we believe that only one other now remains—viz., the reductio ad absurdum of making it unprofitable to sell books at all. With this object in view we have decided to sell, in future, all new books published at any price whatever, from one shilling upwards, at the actual prices at which they are supplied by the publisher to the bookseller, and we shall use every means in our power to make the public acquainted with this fact. When the time arrives, if it ever should arrive, that booksellers revert to a policy of common sense by agreeing to sell their goods at the full published price, and only at that, we pledge ourselves to fall in line, and do as they do; but not until then. This course has been decided upon in no spirit of antagonism to booksellers, but, on the contrary, for their own benefit, in the hope that it may succeed, where other experiments have failed, in restoring bookselling to the status of a profitable and self-respecting calling, instead of one that leads (facilis descensus Averno) to the wide-open doors of the Court of Bankruptcy. ■

It is to be assumed that this combative bookseller expects that a short, sharp fight on these lines will result in victory—or that the moral effect of his attempt to solve the discount question will be worth a large sacrifice.

THE WEEK.

THERE has been a curious little rush of books of travel during the last week.

Mrs. Bishop's (Isabella L. Bird's) Korea and her Neighbours, in two volumes, makes a particularly timely appearance. The book is based upon observations made in four visits to Korea, between January, 1894, and March, 1897, and Mrs. Bishop's interest in the country was aroused only gradually. She writes:

"My first journey produced the impression that Korea is the most uninteresting country I ever travelled in, but during and since the war, its political perturbations, rapid changes, and possible destinies, have given me an intense interest in it; while Korean character and industry, as I saw both under Russian rule in Siberia, have enlightened me as to the better possibilities which may await the nation in the future. Korea takes a similarly strong grip on all who reside in it sufficiently long to overcome the feeling of distaste which at first it undoubtedly inspires."

Mrs. Bishop adds that the two best books on Korea have become obsolete, and that the traveller must now find his own facts. Accuracy has been her greatest aim, and her success in this particular is vouched for by Sir Walter C. Hillier, who was until recently the British Consul-General for Korea. The book is illustrated with views of national types; and a map of Korea and the neighbouring countries is supplied.

A book for big-game sportsmen is Mr. Arthur H. Neumann's Elephant Hunting in East Equatorial Africa. Mr. Neumann claims that he has penetrated into regions not hitherto trodden by the British sportsman. The book is admirably produced and the illustrations are exciting. In one Mr. Neumann is discovered on the ground being attacked by a furious cow elephant. "Kneeling over me," he writes, "she made three distinct lunges, sending her left tus through the biceps of my right arm, and stabbing me between the right ribs; at the same time pounding my chest with her head and crushing in my ribs."

A THIRD volume of travels is Mrs. Mary Walker's Old Tracts and New Landmarks. Here we have wayside sketches in Crete, Macedonia, Mitylene, &c. Mrs. Walker has written of Eastern Europe in several previous works. Here she opens an old portfolio and chats pleasantly on the experience which her sketches recall.

THE edition of Boswell's Life of Johnson in the "Temple Classics" is completed the issue of the fifth and sixth volumes.

A WORK of importance is Mr. Edwin Jenks's Law and Politics in the Middle Ages. The writer's first aim is to show that Law in the Middle Ages was not "the arbitrary command of authority, but something entirely different."

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

STUDIES OF THE MIND IN CHRIST. By the Rev. Theobald Adamson. T & T. Clark. 4s. 6d.
 THE CLERICAL LIFE: A SERIES OF LETTERS TO MINISTERS. By Dr. John Watson, and Other Writers. Hodder & Stoughton. 5s.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON THE THIRD. By Archibald Forbes. Chatto & Windus. 12s.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

THE PORTUGAL WORKS OF AUBREY DE VEEB. Vol. I. Macmillan & Co. 5s.
 TWENTY-FIVE CANTOS FROM THE DIVINA COMMEDIA OF DANTE. Translated into English Verse. Digby Long & Co.
 THE OPIUM-EATER AND ESSAYS. By Thomas De Quincey. Edited by Richard Le Gallienne. Ward, Lock & Co.

FICTION.

THE GOWNS AND THE MAN. By Prester St. George. Digby Long & Co.
 QUEENS AND KNAVES. By Celia Nash. Digby, Long & Co. 3s. 6d.

NATURAL HISTORY.

BUDS OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE. By Dr. W. T. Greene, F.R.S. The Imperial Press, Ltd. 5s.
 THE FERN WORLD. By Francis George Heath. Eighth edition, revised. The Imperial Press, Ltd. 5s.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

AND FORMOSA: THE STORY OF A SUCCESSFUL MISSION. By the Rev. Jrs. Johnston. Third edition. Hazell, Watson & Viney, Ltd.

MEMORIES OF AN INDIAN WINTER. By Sara H. Dunn. Walter Scott, Ltd. 6s.

AFRICA OF TO-DAY. By Captain Francis Younghusband, C.I.E. Messillan & Co.

AND HER NEIGHBOURS: A NARRATIVE OF TRAVEL. By Mrs. Bishop. 2 vols. John Murray.

TRACES AND NEW LANDMARKS: WAYSIDE SKETCHES IN CRETE, MACEDONIA, MITYLENE, &c. Richard Bentley & Son.

PREY-HUNTING IN EAST EQUATORIAL AFRICA. By Arthur H. Neumann. Rowland Ward.

CATHEDRAL SERIES: THE CATHEDRAL CHURCH OF EXETER. By Percy Addleshaw, B.A. George Bell & Sons. 1s. 6d.

EDUCATIONAL.

UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES: THE TUTORIAL CHEMISTRY. PART II.: METALS. By G. H. Briley, D.Sc. Edited by William Briggs, M.A. W. B. Clive. 3s. 6d.

KEY FOR BEGINNERS. By George M. Minchin, M.A. The Clarendon Press. 1s. 6d.

FIRST YEAR'S COURSE OF EXPERIMENTAL WORK IN CHEMISTRY. Edward Arnold. 1s. 6d.

PERCEPTORS' SERIES: THE PERCEPTORS' FRENCH COURSE. By Ernest Weekley, M.A. W. B. Clive. 1s. 6d.

VICTORIAN ERA SERIES. John Bright. 2s. 6d.

PRESS SERIES (Cambridge University Press): LA FORTUNE DE D'ARTAGNAN. By Alexandre Dumas. Edited by Arthur R. ropes, M.A. A SELECTION FROM SHAKESPEARE'S TALES FROM SHAKESPEARE. Edited by J. H. Plather, M.A. MINNA VON BARNHELM. By G. E. Lessing. Edited by H. J. Wolstenholme, M.A. EIGHT STORIES FROM ANDERSEN. Edited by Walter Rippmann, M.A. THE MEDUSA OF EURIPIDES. Edited by Clinton E. S. Headlam, M.A. REMI ET SES AMIS. By Hector Malot. Edited by Margaret De G. Verrall. EARLE'S MICROCOSMOGRAPHY. Edited by Alfred S. West, M.A. THE FAIRY TALES OF MASTER PERRAULT. Edited by Walter Rippmann, M.A. CAI JULI CESARIS DE BELLO GALLICO. Liber II. Edited by E. S. Shuckburgh, M.A. CORNELIUS NEPOS. Edited by E. S. Shuckburgh, M.A.

MISCELLANEOUS.

YEAR'S ART, 1898. Compiled by A. C. R. Carter. J. S. Virtue & Co. 3s. 6d. REMINISCENCES OF AN INDIAN OFFICER. By Arthur Crawford, C.M.G. Second Edition. The Roxburgh Press. A VINIFICATION OF THE BULL "APOSTOLICŒ CURŒ." By the Cardinal Archbishop and Bishops of the Province of Westminster. Longmans, Green & Co. SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY TO THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR: 1895-96. By Charles D. Walcott. Parts I. and II. Government Printing Office (Washington). LETTERS FROM JULIA; OR, LIGHT FROM THE BORDERLAND. By W. T. Steward Richards. 2s. BELL'S READER'S SHAKESPEARE, CONDENSED FOR SCHOOL, PARLOUR, AND PLATFORM. By David Charles Bell. Hodder & Stoughton. 3s. 6d. PRINCIPLES OF POLITICAL ECONOMY. By J. Shield Nicholson, D.Sc. Vol. II.: Book III. A. & C. Black. BOOK PRICES CURRENT. Vol. XI. Elliot Stock. £1 1s. THE FAR EASTERN QUESTION. By Valentine Chirol. Messillan & Co. THE WEALTH OF ACHILLES; OR, THE STORY OF THE ILIAD. Retold by Lillian Goadby. Swan, Vaughan & Co. HORA NOVISSIMA. By Charles Lawrence Ford, B.A. Houlston & Sons. 1s. 6d. LAW AND POLITICS IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By Edward Jenks, M.A. John Murray. 12s. UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY: THE GLACIAL LAKE AGASSIZ. By Warren Upham. THE FLORA OF THE AMBOY CLAYS. John Strong Newberry. GEOLOGY OF THE DENVER BASIN IN COLORADO. By Samuel Franklin Emmons. GEOGRAPHY OF THE UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY. Government Printing Office.

DRAMA.

THE literary man fares none too well at the hands of the dramatist. He is, indeed, rarely to be seen on the stage at all, which, by him, may be accounted a blessing, since it is chiefly as a caricature that he is of any dramatic utility. Mr. L. N. Parker has introduced a popular novelist into "The Happy Life," and what is the type? A yellow-haired, curled (and probably scented) dandy, who works two hours a day—a fit companion for the amiable lady novelist, "too popular to need reviews" and an ever welcome guest at the houses of the great, who flitted through the curious melodrama, manufactured not long ago out of Miss Marie Corelli's Sorrows of Satan. But surely the most unrecognisable gendeleitre (as the French humorist has it, basing himself upon the etymology of gendarme) is the "David Holmes" of Miss Martha Morton's play, "A Bachelor's Romance," in which Mr. John Hare makes his welcome reappearance on the London boards. Mr. David, as he is affectionately called by his familiars, is an "eminent literary critic." The chief contributor to a weekly paper of repute, vaguely named The Review. He has a den of books with an outlet upon the roof, to which he occasionally betakes himself to escape bores. In what city or even what country? impossible to say; but presumably London. Here, as old bachelor, in the autumn of life, our literary recluse has spent many years—so absorbed in his books that he has had no time to see his ward—a young lady of seventeen, to whom he continues to send dolls and rocking-horses. Mark you! he is not the editor of The Review, but a contributor to that organ. Nevertheless, he keeps on the premises a couple of hungry young literary lions, to whom he tosses an occasional bundle of books for review with the intimation that they may or may not sign the "notices" of the same— notices which they scribble off there and then on their knee, without, so far, as one can see, even glancing at the contents of the volumes. Also, there is an aged retainer, or literary hack, who "potters about" (in the classical idiom of "Peter the Great") at a side table. The status of Mr. David's young assistants may be inferred from the fact that they share a dress suit with each other. Yet the eminent critic is not ungenerous. He is ever ready to buy an old Plato for a guinea, or put his hand in his trousers pocket (where he carries his gold loose), to help a deserving case. The aged retainer, who, by the way, in his doddering senility writes a realistic novel, must be an almost unique example of the literary critic's bounty, since he is an acknowledged failure in life, and of no possible use to his patron. In what city, in what country, one wonders, have such literary types been observed?

The truth is, that they have never been observed at all. They are not even "made in Germany," as the structure of Miss Martha Morton's play itself may have been—for "A Bachelor's Romance," which is not described on the playbill as original, is curiously suggestive of the old-world romance of Adolph L'Arronge or his period before the realism of Sudermann invaded the German stage. Miss Martha Morton, of whom one does not remember to have heard as a dramatist, may have done this play off her own bat, as the saying is; but I should not be surprised to learn that it had a German original, and that the literary critic who practises his craft in such strange surroundings was in his previous state of existence a professor of some kind with disciples or assistants in his laboratory. Such a literary workshop as Mr. David's is certainly inconceivable at the present day, and it is a curious commentary upon the pretensions of the stage to be "exact" and educative that a picture of this kind should not only pass muster, but receive a certain measure of popular applause.

HERE criticism may end and admiration of Mr. Hare's work begin. The production of "A Bachelor's Romance" at the Globe adds appreciably to the pleasures of the theatre-going public. Providing one accepts the eminent literary critic as an indispensable postulate—and the public have no difficulty about that—the story of the withered old bachelor's new-found love for his youthful ward, who brings a ray of sunshine and an atmosphere of buttercups and daisies into the musty old den of books, is fraught with a rare charm. Mr. David is one of Mr. Hare's most delightful impersonations. What a finished "character" actor he is to be sure, albeit a trifle sharp and decisive in manner for so unworldly a recluse as this aging bookworm. When the young lady of seventeen looks up her guardian in his study he does not know who she is, nor does she immediately tell him. She is merely, he thinks, one of the competitors for the thousand-pound prize offered by The Review, and of which he is appointed adjudicator, for a story. Indeed, everyone around him is a competitor; so that between his honesty and his good nature there is a sore struggle for predominance. But the ordeal of the prize adjudication is, after all, a lighter one than that he is unwittingly called up to face when he falls head over ears in love with the artless and winsome Sylvia, young enough to be his granddaughter.

Not only would it be improper to avail himself of his official position to captivate the young lady's affections; but he hardly knows whether he is in love. Like Mr. Barrie's Professor Goodwillie, he is merely conscious of some new influence having come into his life like a strain of melody into a great silence. But Sylvia is thrown upon his hands and something must be done with her. He thinks to marry her to a youthful admirer—the successful competitor for the other prize; but Sylvia herself is unwilling. He is blind to what everybody else sees clearly, that the young lady's affections are fixed upon himself. How it came to be so is the author's secret. I confess, I do not understand Sylvia's primary infatuation.

Mr. David is the last man in the world that one would pitch upon as the beau idéal of an emancipated schoolgirl already attending concerts and dances. But the dramatist is an autocrat within his own domain. He says a thing is, and provided he and the actor succeed between them in rendering it acceptable, it forthwith assumes the complexion of truth. This marvel is accomplished in Mr. David's case. The schoolgirl's caprice becomes a delightful motive for the play, whose development the house follows with undisguised satisfaction. It is a pure fairy-tale, but Mr. David is so simple, so unselfish, so kind, so deserving, that no one has it in his heart to grudge him his good fortune.

Is it in very truth good fortune for a man of middle age to win the love of a schoolgirl? For the purposes of this play, no doubt. These may in a special sense be described as amours sans lendemain. We do not trouble to follow them beyond the fall of the curtain. The sound of wedding bells has always been accepted as a satisfactory climax on the stage, and Miss Martha Morton gives us not one wedding, but two, if not three. One of the young lions captures a fascinating widow, David's sister, charmingly impersonated by Miss May Harvey. The other, it is true, having set his affections upon Sylvia, is left lamenting. He has been spoilt, we are told, by his success in the literary competition, having by this time procured no fewer than twelve suits of clothes. But this drawback, to the satisfaction of the audience, is speedily redressed by a brother of Mr. David's—a sad dog to begin with—who wears a sporting overcoat and helps himself too freely to the brandy-bottle, but ultimately a reformed character, thanks to a little rustication in a rose-decked cottage and a course of milk and turnips, which he adopts in preference to alcohol and tobacco. He, too, causes the wedding bells to ring by making up some long-standing difference with his innamorata.

AFTER being harassed by the problem drama of Mr. Pinero and the fashionable cynicism of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, it is curious with what relish the public turn to this simple diet. To be sure, the acting of Miss Martha Morton's rather conventional romance is all that could be desired. Mr. Hare's part as Mr. David I have mentioned as one of his best. He has had the luck to discover a most winning little actress in Miss Nellie Thorne, who looks the heroine to the life. Miss Nellie Thorne has the charm of youth and simplicity unspoilt as yet by the artifices of the stage which make French and American ingénues so mannered and insufferable. Miss May Harvey as the widow brightens the scenes in which she appears, and Mr. Frederick Kerr shows a commendable adaptability first as the dissipated young man about town, and afterwards as the reformed candidate for matrimony. Quite a remarkable study of "pottering" old age is given by Mr. Gilbert Hare. There is senility not only in his voice and manner, but in his very clothes.

J. F. N.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE AUTHOR'S FIGURES — A CHALLENGE.

SIR,—Sir Walter Besant is unfortunate. Why does he not give in and admit himself mistaken? One can't shine at all points of the compass, and it is no disgrace to him that he writes better than he reckons. If you are a master at one thing, why show yourself a ridiculous blunderer at another? And it is no excuse for him that in most other things the Amateur is "on the town." He cannot distinguish between three-and-a-half and six—this dilettante of arithmetic; calls his bungling a "small error of detail" (as if a "small error of detail" could not upset a nation's budget), and would, nevertheless, establish himself our "Comptroller of Figures."

Sir Walter is equally unfortunate in his playful allusion to myself. His psychological nose should have made him scent the difference between my feelings towards the Literary Agent and my feelings towards his Magazine. For the one, as I know him, I have the same natural shrinking that one has from contact with a maquerreau; for the other, in moments of malice, a smile—in moments of good-nature, surprise at its blundering ignorance—yet never a suspicion of intentional deceit.

I thank Sir Walter all the same; and I wonder if in his genial humour he will withdraw his Catonian jest: "Heinemannus delendus est!"—I am, dear Sir, very truly your (and Sir Walter's) obedient servant,

WM. HEINEMANN.

P.S.—We publishers are anxious—no class more so—to purge our ranks of black sheep, if they exist. I hereby challenge Sir Walter to prove his assertions, and to name the person who pretends to have spent "£14 on advertising, when £5 is nearer the mark." I further undertake, in case of a libel action, to pay all his out-of-pocket expenses (and let him engage the best counsel), if he can prove his assertion to the satisfaction of a jury. If he cannot, let him admit it, and at all costs let us get rid of these unseemly innuendoes.

W. H.

SIR,—It would, I think, be discourteous to Sir Walter Besant to take no notice of his last letter, and yet I do not see that I can say anything fresh. So far from fixing upon this or that detail, I stated, in the broadest way, a charge, which Sir Walter Besant makes absolutely no attempt to meet. Let me restate it—finally, I hope. A publishing proposal is submitted to the Author; whether that proposal be fair or not obviously depends upon the special circumstances of the case—extent of the work, presence or not of illustrations, quality of paper and binding, amount expended in advertising, &c. Instead of ascertaining definitely what these circumstances were, the Author, so far, at least, as the outsider can judge, imagined what they were likely to be, and, upon the strength of its imaginings, proceeded to criticise the proposal. I showed that these imaginings were contrary to probability, and involved grave error. In defending them Sir Walter Besant made further and even graver errors (e.g., his statement that a nominal edition of 1,000 would yield enough "overs" to supply press and presentation copies). I had, of course, to point out these errors, but I do not wish to insist upon them. Even if the Author's imaginings were probable, instead of being, as I contend, improbable; even if they were free from error, as I contend they are demonstrably not, I should still maintain that it is wrong to criticise another man's conduct upon the basis not of what he knows to be the facts, but of what he thinks are likely to be the facts. That is the question, and until Sir Walter Besant addresses himself to it I think I may fairly neglect all side issues.—I am, yours, &c.,

ALFRED NUTT

THE BITTER CRY OF A SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER.

SIR,—How the publication of the price of books at sales works may be illustrated thus: Three years ago a book was marked in a bookseller's catalogue at £4. For various reasons I was probably the only man alive who would have given £4 for that copy: I had another of the same edition. I paid £4; and then, in Bookseller's Prices Current, or some such manual, found that the bookseller had bought the copy for £1, probably at the Auchinleck sale, as I remember. I don't grudge the bookseller his success, nor do I want to sell my book for £4: the price was a matter of sentiment. But I cannot join in the lamentations of your aggrieved second-hand bookseller. Whether £4 for a £1 book is a "fair price" is a question of metaphysics, but, as the Yankee said of eternal punishment, "our people would never stand it." I am, yours, &c.,

ANDREW LANG

Jan. 8: St. Andrews, N.B.

A "LANG CATALOGUE."

SIR,—Your notice of my "Lang Catalogue" surprised me, as I sent out copies to the press.

It is a catalogue of books in my private library, and does not profess to be complete, far less to be a bibliography. It has been sent to friends who are in a position to help me to complete my set of Mr. Lang's books, and already I have got valuable assistance.

It expressly excludes Mr. Lang's periodical and journalistic work, though I have a very large collection of articles, leaders, &c.

Thanking you for your kindly notice, and regretting I have no copy to send you—am, yours, &c.

C. M. FALCONER.

Dundee, Jan. 10, 1898.

People's Edition, price 6d., with Portrait. (Special for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V. with Two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS ON DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES OF MAN."

"E. A. V.'s Memoir of Mazzini is, we are glad to see, issued at sixpence, so that it can be procured and read by everyone interested in the development and growth of Democracy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD, FURNIVAL Street, E.C.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Demy 8vo, 2 vols., cloth, 21s. net.

INDU MANNERS, CUSTOMS, and CEREMONIES.

By the Abbé J. A. DUBOIS. Translated from the Author's later French MS., with Notes, Corrections, and Biography by HENRY K. BEAUCHAMP.

With a Prefatory Note by the Right Hon. F. MAX-MÜLLER, and a Portrait.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Mr. Beauchamp gives us a grand translation of the revised MS., notes of a helpful and up-to-date character, and a useful index. The Abbé's work is undoubtedly now offered to the English public in its full and final form."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Deeply interesting and lively."

BRIEF HISTORY of the INDIAN PEOPLES.

By Sir W. W. HUNTER, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., Twenty-first Edition. Eighty-Second Thousand. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LEEDS MERCURY.—"No other manual on India covers so wide a field with equal breadth and knowledge: everywhere complete mastery of the subject is apparent."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"We know of no work that gives, within reasonable compass, such a complete outline of the history of the peoples of our great Eastern dependency."

With Maps and Illustrations, royal 8vo, linen, 21s. net.

ETOLIA: its Geography, Topography, and Antiquities.

By W. J. WOODHOUSE, M.A., F.R.G.S.

SCOTSMAN.—"Will be thought very considerable indeed in the eyes of students of classical history and antiquities."

Edited by the Right Hon. F. MAX-MÜLLER.

SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

Vol. XLIII.—THE SATAPATHA-BRĀHMANA.

Part IV., Books VIII.-X. According to the Text of the Mādhyandina School. Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. 12s. 6d.

*. A minute account of the sacrificial ceremonies of the Vedic Age.

THE OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

Dedicated by special permission to Her Majesty.

NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY on HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.

Founded mainly on the Materials Collected by the Philological Society.

New Section, FRANK-LAW—GAIN-COMING. Edited by Mr. HENRY BRADLEY. Stiff covers, 6s.

8vo, paper covers, 1s. 6d. net.

TWO LECTURES ON THE

SAYINGS of JESUS. Recently discovered at Oxyrhynchus. Delivered at Oxford by the Rev. WALTER LOCK, D.D., and the Rev. WILLIAM SANDAY, D.D., LL.D.

LITERATURE.—"These Lectures are particularly valuable not only as presenting reviews of two very able critics, but as summing up the results of the large mass of criticism and suggestion already published."

Part XV., now ready, price 3s. 6d. net per Part.

HISTORICAL ATLAS of MODERN EUROPE

from the DECLINE of the ROMAN EMPIRE. Comprising also Maps of Parts of Asia and of the New World connected with European History. Edited by R. LANE POOLE, M.A., Ph.D., Lecturer in Diplomatic in the University of Oxford.

6 vols., medium 8vo, half-bound, price £3 3s.

SWELL'S LIFE of JOHNSON. With the Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides. Edited by G. BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., Pembroke College.

ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.—"The definitive edition of an important English classic.....A worthy monument of English scholarship."

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

THE ODES of KEATS. With Illustrations,

Notes, and Analyses, and a Memoir. By ARTHUR C. DOWNER, M.A., Brasenose College, Oxford.

ESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"It bears throughout the impress of thorough knowledge on the part of its author, and will be exceedingly useful to all serious students of the literature."

Third Edition. 32mo. (a) On Writing Paper for MS. Notes, paper boards, 3s. 6d.; (b) On Oxford India Paper, roan, 5s.

DRACE: the COMPLETE WORKS of. Edited

by the Very Rev. E. C. WICKHAM, D.D., Dean of Lincoln.

Post 8vo, pp. viii.-52, stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

ARISTOTELIS DE ARTE POETICA LIBER.

Recognovit brevique adnotatione critica instruit. I. BYWATER, Litterarum Græcarum Professor Regius.

HENRY FROWDE, London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and New York.

PHILIPS' IMPERIAL SERIES OF ATLASES FOR SCHOOL AND HOME USE.

Entirely New and greatly Enlarged Editions of these favourite Atlases have been prepared at considerable expense, in order to render them the most complete works of the kind in existence. The principal new features are the Introduction of Physical Maps the Diagrams, whilst important Commercial information in the form of Steamship, Railway, and Caravan Routes has been added to the Political Maps, and entirely new Indexes have been prepared.

1. PHILIPS' COMPREHENSIVE ATLAS OF PHYSICAL, POLITICAL, AND ANCIENT GEOGRAPHY.

Comprising 74 Maps (58 Modern and 16 Ancient), with a Consulting Index. Imperial 8vo, strongly half-bound, price 10s. 6d.

2. PHILIPS' STUDENT'S ATLAS.

Comprising 56 Physical and Political, and 4 Ancient Maps. With a Consulting Index. Imperial 8vo, bound in cloth, price 7s. 6d.

3. PHILIPS' SELECT ATLAS.

Comprising 43 Physical and Political Maps of the Principal Countries of the World. With a Consulting Index. Imperial 8vo, bound in cloth, price 5s.

4. PHILIPS' INTRODUCTORY ATLAS.

Comprising 31 Maps of the Principal Countries of the World. With a Consulting Index. Imperial 8vo, bound in cloth, price 3s. 6d.

5. PHILIPS' YOUNG STUDENT'S ATLAS.

Comprising 51 Maps of the Principal Countries of the World. With Index. Imperial 4to, bound in cloth, price 3s. 6d.

The above Atlases are in general use in Schools and Colleges both at home and abroad. The Maps are clearly printed in colours, and are constantly being revised. The Binding is extra strong, and specially adapted for School use.

Phillips' Illustrated Catalogue of Atlases will be sent gratis on application.

GEORGE PHILIP & SON, 32, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Liverpool: PHILIP, SON, & NEPHEW, 45-51, South Castle Street.

HARPER & BROTHERS' New and Forthcoming Publications.

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS'S NEW BOOK.

A YEAR FROM A CORRESPONDENT'S

NOTEBOOK. By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Author of "Gallegher," "Soldiers of Fortune," &c. With about Forty Full-Page Illustrations by R. Caton Woodville and others. 8vo, cloth, ornamental, 6s. [Next week.]

THE GREAT STONE OF SARDIS. A New

Novel. By FRANK R. STOCKTON. Illustrated by Peter Newell. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

THE KENTUCKIANS. A Novel. By JOHN FOX,

Junior. Illustrated by W. T. Smedley. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

"It is interesting to note that fine novel, 'The Kentuckians,' is the most popular book in the States at present."—The Academy.

SPANISH JOHN. An Historical Romance. By

WILLIAM McLENNAN. Illustrated by Myrbach. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

LIN McLEAN. By OWEN WISTER, Author of "Red

Men and White," &c. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth, ornamental, 6s.

"The book is as good as a breeze."—The Academy.

HARPER & BROTHERS, London and New York.

NOW READY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

HARPER'S ROUND TABLE.

JANUARY.

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

"This is the magazine to buy. It is a bountiful sixpennyworth of first-class juvenile literature."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Harper's Round Table' is well designed to delight young readers, containing as it does stories of adventure, instructions about stamps and coins, puzzles, and other attractions, together with plenty of illustrations."—Morning Post.

CASH PRIZES. CASH PRIZES.

HARPER'S ROUND TABLE offers Cash Prizes for Competitions in Short Stories, Camera Clubs, Comic Sketches, &c. The particulars and conditions governing these contests are given in the November Number.

COUPON.—Cut this out and send it with your Name and Address to "Round Table," HARPER & BROTHERS, 45, Albemarle Street, London, W., and you will receive a Specimen Copy of "Harper's Round Table" by return, free of cost. [Acad.]

W. THACKER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Printed on antique-wove paper, and handsomely bound, cloth, gilt top, 6s. Tenth Edition, completing 20th thousand.

Dedicated by special permission to Field-Marshal the Right Hon. Lord Roberts, V.C.

DEPARTMENTAL DITTIES, and Other Verses. By RUDYARD KIPLING. With illustrations by Dudley Cleaver.

"If only some of the minor poets whom the 'Yellow Book' exploits showed anything like as much vigour as Mr. Rudyard Kipling did in extreme youth in his 'Departmental Ditties,' of which the Ninth Edition has just appeared, there might be some hope for them. Better far these roughly humorous sketches of Indian life written in verse that had already many of the qualities which afterwards made its author famous, than the morbid self-communings of little souls striving with ill-success to appear great. Even when he was subjective as in some of these ditties—those, for instance, which put into bitter words the longing of the exile for home—it is a subjectivity that is wholesome, and manly and clean, and has nothing in common with morbid introspection of the kind that aroused the anger of Walt Whitman. 'Facet, M.P.' is in this volume, and the fine lines called 'The Song of the Women,' written in praise of Lady Dufferin for her noble efforts to send medical aid to the women of India, and many another piece familiar to Mr. Kipling's admirers. Some of his parodies are exceedingly happy, notably those of Mr. Swinburne and of Omar Khayyam; and there is quite enough 'stuff' in the book to make it pretty certain that the Ninth Edition will not be the last."—Times.

NOTE.—"Departmental Ditties" is issued in the following Editions:—12 Copies on Japanese Paper, demy 8vo, £2 2s. net (all sold); 150 Copies on Handmade Paper, demy 8vo, 21s. net (all sold); 6s. crown 8vo; and Colonial Editions in cloth and paper, and is not included in any other Edition of the Author's writings.

NEW EDITION OF AN IMPORTANT WORK.

THE ROUND TOWERS OF IRELAND; or, The History of the Tuath-de-Danuans for the First Time Unveiled. By HENRY O'BRIEN.

With all the Original Illustrations, to which will be added a Portrait of the Author, reproduced from Macleise's well-known drawing. The new edition will contain all that is to be found in the previous editions, including the curious preface, together with valuable supplementary matter comprising an Introduction, a minute Synopsis of the Work, and a copious Index. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

* The early editions having long been out of print, copies of the work are very scarce, and when they occur for sale usually fetch from 55s. to 40s. As only a limited number is printed, early application is requested. Prospectus on application.

HUNTING REMINISCENCES. By A. E. Pease, Esq., M.P. With Portraits and Illustrations.

CONTENTS: The Greatest Run I ever saw. The Cambridge Drag and the House of Commons. Woodcock-shooting. The Life of a Hunter. Hounds—Hare—outing. Fox-hunting, Badger-hunting, &c. An Interesting Record of Hunting Experiences, written by a well-known sportsman. [In the Press.]

THE BEST BREEDS OF BRITISH STOCK: a Practical Guide for Farmers and Owners of Live-Stock in England and the Colonies. By J. P. SHELTON and JAMES LONG. Edited by JOHN WATSON, F.L.S. Medium 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d. [In the Press.]

* Written by well-known authorities who are men of science and practical farmers.

MR. KEENE'S SUCCESSFUL BOOK.

A SERVANT OF "JOHN COMPANY" (The Hon. East India Company). Being the Recollections of an Indian Official. By H. G. KEENE, C.I.E., Hon. M.A., Author of "Sketches in Indian Ink," &c. With Portrait. Illustrated by W. Simpson, from the Author's Sketches. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s.

"Mr. Keene has written an instructive book... This book presents a novel view of Common life. It is the genial record of a man whose boyhood seems to have been bent on extracting the largest possible amount of pleasure from his surroundings."—Times.

THE CAVE DWELLERS OF SOUTHERN TUNISIA. Translated from the French of DANIEL BRAUN by Miss DUMMOND HAY and Mrs. LUCIA BURGESS. With numerous illustrations. [In the Press.]

THACKER'S POPULAR SIX-SHILLING SERIES.

Crown 8vo, uniform binding, cloth, gilt tops. A very handsome series of illustrated standard works, comprising:

LAYS OF IND. Comic, satirical, and descriptive Poems illustrative of Anglo-Indian Life. By Major W. YELDHAM ("Aliph Cheem"). [Tenth Edition.]

"'Aliph Cheem' presents us in this volume with some highly amusing ballads and songs, which have already in a former edition warmed the hearts and cheered the lonely hours of many an Anglo-Indian, the pictures being chiefly those of Indian life. There is no mistaking the humour, and at times, indeed, the fun is both 'fast and furious.' One can readily imagine the merriment created round the camp fire by the recitation of 'The Two Thumpers,' which is irresistibly droll."—Liverpool Mercury.

A NATURALIST ON THE PROWL. Excursions into the Districts around an Anglo-Indian Home. By E. H. ATKIN. Second Edition.

"A charming record of wild life in the jungle... Science and entertainment are happily allied in 'A Naturalist on the Prowl.' It is full of curious 'out-of-the-way' observations, set forth in an unconventional style. The illustrations by Mr. E. A. Sterndale are in excellent accord with the book."—Saturday Review.

THE TRIBES ON MY FRONTIER. An Indian Naturalist's Foreign Policy. By E. H. ATKIN. Describing with much humour and scientific accuracy the nature and ways of the animals and insects frequenting a bungalow and its surroundings. [Sixth Edition.]

"We have only to thank our Anglo-Indian naturalist for the delightful book which he has sent home to his countrymen in Britain. May he live to give us another such. The book is cleverly illustrated by Mr. F. C. Macrae."—Chambers's Journal.

BEHIND THE BUNGALOW. Describing the Native Servants in an Anglo-Indian Bungalow. By E. H. ATKIN. [Fifth Edition.]

"There is plenty of fun in 'Behind the Bungalow,' and more fun for those with eyes to see. These sketches may have an educational purpose beyond that of mere amusement; they show through all their fun a keen observation of native character and a just appreciation of it."—The World.

OTHER VOLUMES IN PREPARATION.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS,
2, CREED LANE, LONDON, E.C.
Established 1816.

FROM JOHN LANE'S LIST.

POEMS. With which is incorporated "Christ in Hades." By STEPHEN PHILLIPS. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

Under the heading "A New Poet," Mr. W. L. Courtney writes in the Telegraph:—"The man who with a few graphic touches can call up for us images like these, in such decisive and masterly fashion, is not one to be rated with the common herd, but rather as a man from whom we have the right to expect hereafter some of the great things which will endure."

"This poem, called 'The Wife,' tells, with an intensity and power which is fearful, nay intolerable, a story of perverted love."—Spectator.

"How should language, without the slightest strain, express more? It has an almost physical effect upon the reader, in the opening of the eyes, and the dilation of the heart."—Academy.

"This book.....contains much grave, serious, admirable verse, certainly of extremely poetical character."—Saturday Review.

"'Marpessa' has an almost Shakespearean tenderness and beauty."—Globe.

"Its style in verse is admirable, and worthy of a dignified and lofty theme. 'Christ in Hades' contains a passage which Keats might have written."—Standard.

"In blank verse, at least, Mr. Phillips stands unrivalled among the younger generation. 'Marpessa' and 'Christ in Hades' should be the first-fruits of a rich harvest of noble poetry."—Echo.

Third Edition. Now ready.

MR. WILLIAM WATSON'S NEW BOOK.

THE HOPE of the WORLD, and other Poems
Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. Also, a limited Large Paper Edition, at 12s. 6d. net.

"We may almost call him the one upholder of classical tradition.....The critics to whom poetry means a white wind of words are put out by the calm dignity of Mr. Watson's style. Time will show whether the exquisite graven cameo or the flagrant phantasmagoria be the more enduring thing of beauty."—Daily Chronicle.

"He stands for a great tradition—the tradition of our classic school."—Daily News.

"Here is Mr. Watson at his best—touching sentiment, musical words, and scholarly form delight the critical reader. No lover of poetry can afford to be without it."—Westminster Gazette.

"We seldom turn his pages without finding some pages of almost classical perfection."—Standard.

Now ready. Second Edition.

THE COMING of LOVE, and other Poems. By THEODORE WATTS-DUNTON. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"Mr. Watts-Dunton has, in the 'Coming of Love,' struck not a new note only, but a new and complex chord of literature."—Literature.

"On account of the haunting magic of 'The Coming of Love,' Rossetti intended to use one of the scenes for picture—that depicted in a sonnet called 'The Stars in the River,' which he pronounced to be the 'most original' of the versions of the 'Doppelgänger' legend."—Athenæum.

"Superb writing; it has its chances for all time. Marked by the poet's strongest characteristics, his rare art of describing by successive images of strength and beauty."—Daily News.

"'The Coming of Love' will be among the enduring poetic work of the century."—Star.

LULLABY LAND: Songs of Childhood. By

EUGENE FIELD. Edited, with Introduction, by KENNETH GRAHAME. With 200 Illustrations by Charles Robinson. Uncut, or gilt edges, crown 8vo, 6s.

"A book of exceeding sweetness and beauty. No more original and no sweeter singer of childhood ever breathed. Mr. Robinson's drawings are more exquisite, if possible, in execution, and as abundant as ever in humour and pleasant. Any child who gets this book now will love it as long as he lives."—Daily Chronicle.

"It requires the genius of a Eugene Field to write such a book, and we hail with delight a volume which bears the American poet's honoured name on its title-page. We all know snatches of Eugene Field's children's poems, and it is there that has read unmoved 'Little Boy Blue,' 'Buttercup, Poppy, Forget-me-not,' and has net dreamt and laugh and frolicked with the children of his songs? Mr. Kenneth Grahame, himself a past master in the art of writing about children, writes the preface to this beautiful volume, which every lover of real poetry ought to possess. Mr. Robinson, the illustrator, has admirably caught the spirit of the poems in his numerous delicate drawings."—Westminster Gazette.

THE HAPPY EXILE. By H. D. Lowry, Author of "Make Believe" and "Women's Tragedies." With 6 Etchings by E. Philip Pimlott. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Every page is instinct with the joy of rustic sights and sounds. Mr. Lowry has a good deal of the poet in his composition, and his feeling for Nature and his keen appreciation of her in all her moods evokes an answering thrill in the heart of the reader as only a poet's can. The best of the sketches is very near akin to Stevenson. Mr. Lowry's note quite individual and distinctive, even when his style is most reminiscent of another. There are many delightful passages of description in this volume, many charming touches of character."—Academy.

"This is a book to read, and to read again; a volume not to be got for a couple of days and skimmed through, but kept by your side and dipped into at odd moments. The dip will seldom fail to refresh. It takes the reader into veritable Arcadia. Here we have Mr. Lowry in an open-hearted mood of contentment with things pleasant and good report. The sketches—joyful and realistic—which make up the book seem to have been written en plein air within sound of the waves, and close to the 'warm-scented beach.' The moods of Nature are interpreted with many pretty touch, and in the light of close and constant observation. Nor are the men and women less happily drawn, and ideal both. Of the faithfulness as well as the charm of the portraits of old and young Cornish folk there can be dispute. The book altogether is a notable piece of work, and has a genuine charm to take rank as literature."—Literature.

THE BODLEY HEAD, VIGO STREET, LONDON, W.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1342.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 22, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

ON RECEIPT OF A POST-CARD

M. T. FISHER UNWIN will send, post-free to any address, a set of his Prospectuses, Catalogues, and Lists, containing descriptive details of Books in every class of English Literature. In most cases he can arrange for any Book to be seen by possible purchasers at the local Booksellers.—Address: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 118, for DECEMBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Goods purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum). Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices. CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 28 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing, and other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast binding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments connected.
Telephone 63121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

FOR THE AUTOGRAPH COLLECTOR—A NEW MANUAL by Dr. Sooty, 1s. post free, 17, Cranford Road, Ilham. Autographs purchased; a large variety for sale; lists free.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Gal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Dressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Misses & J. PUTZ, 435, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. English, 10d. per 1,000 Words. French and German in Roman characters, 1s. 3d. per 1,000. French Translated. Samples and references.—Miss E. M., 16, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

NO WEALTHY PATRONS of ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilized world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. His work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs. Sadman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.
Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply Academy Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER—PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

QUAIN PROFESSORSHIP OF PHYSICS.
This CHAIR will be VACANT by the resignation of Prof. Carey Foster at the close of the present Session. APPLICATIONS, accompanied by such Testimonials as Candidates may wish to submit, should reach the Secretary by TUESDAY, MARCH 1, 1898. Further information will be sent on application. The new Professor will enter on his duties next October.
J. M. HORSFORD, M.A., Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.

PROFESSORSHIP OF GREEK.
APPLICATIONS are invited for the GLADSTONE CHAIR OF GREEK now vacant in the above College, the applications, with twenty copies of testimonials, to be in the hands of the Registrar not later than MARCH 5th, 1898. Stipend, £275 per annum, with two-thirds of Fees from Students.—For all information concerning terms and conditions of tenure, apply the Registrar, University College, Liverpool.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways. For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

CANTERBURY SCHOOL of ART.

WANTED, a HEAD MASTER, holding an Art Master's Certificate, and qualified to teach the Formule of the Science and Art Department, and to undertake the supervision of Technical Education. The Head Master will be required to reside at Canterbury, and to devote his whole time to his duties, with the exception of one whole day and one half day a week. Salary, £250 per annum. Applications, with copies of not more than three testimonials, to be sent to the undersigned on or before the 1st day of February, 1898. Candidates the members of the Committee will disqualify, but information will be given by the Town Clerk.
HENRY FIELDING, Town Clerk.
15, Burgate Street, Canterbury.
January 8, 1898.

CAMBRIDGE TRAINING COLLEGE for WOMEN TEACHERS.

Principal—Miss E. P. HUGHES, Associate Newham College. Lecturers—Miss STEEDMAN, Girton College—Miss HURBACK, Holloway and Oxford—Miss FRODSHAM, Holloway College. Several SCHOLARSHIPS, open only to Graduates, will be awarded in June.—Full particulars can be obtained from the PRINCIPAL.

FRENCH IN THREE MONTHS—FRENCH IN THREE MONTHS.—DAMIENS' NEW SYSTEM. Privately or by post. Any age. Success certain. Commended by the Press.—10, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

LITERARY ASSISTANT WANTED, who, in addition to other literary work, is competent to act as Editor of Fiction and Juvenile Literature. Must have a good scheming head.—Reply, stating age, salary required, and giving the fullest particulars as to experience and qualifications, address "LITERATURE," care of Wilkes's Advertising Offices, 29, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 5, Farnival Street, London, E.C.

Just published, price 1s. 1 per post, 1s. 4d.
THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY CALENDAR FOR THE YEAR 1898.

London: MACMILLAN & Co. Manchester: J. E. CORNISH.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANSTENAUER, of Munich. The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROOF BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Proofs in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

REMAINDERS A SPECIALITY.

WILLIAM GLAISHER,

REMAINDER AND DISCOUNT BOOKSELLER, 265, HIGH HOLBORN, and 57, WIGMORE ST. LONDON.

MARKS (Henry Stacy, R.A.)—Pen and Pencil Sketches, with 4 fine photogravure plates, and 126 illustrations, 2 handsome 8vo volumes (pub. 32s.). . . . . Chatto 7 6

MERMAID SERIES (The).—The Best Plays of the Old Dramatists, Literal Reproductions of the Old Text, in photogravure volume containing about 500 pages, and an etched frontispiece (pub. 3s. 6d. per vol.) . . . . . each vol. 1 11

Christopher Marlowe. . . . . Webster and Tourneur.
Thomas Middleton, 2 vols. . . . . Thomas Middleton, 2 vols.
John Ford. . . . . James Shirley.
Thomas Massinger, 2 vols. . . . . Thomas Dekker.
Thomas Heywood. . . . . Ben Jonson, 3 vols.
William Wycherley. . . . . Richard Steele.
Nero, and other Plays. . . . . George Chapman.
Beaumont & Fletcher, 2 vols. . . . . Sir John Vanbrugh.
William Congreve. . . . .

PORTAL (G. H.).—My Mission to Abyssinia, by the late Sir Gerald H. Portal, K.C.M.G., C.R., Her Majesty's Consul-General for British East Africa, with photogravure portrait, map and numerous illustrations, demy 8vo (18s.). . . . . Arnold 3 0

—The British Mission to Uganda in 1893, by the late Sir Gerald Portal, K.C.M.G., edited by Rennell Rodd, C.M.G., with an Introduction by the Right Hon. Lord Cromer, illustrated from photographs taken during the Expedition by Colonel Rhodes, with a portrait by the Marchioness of Granby, demy 8vo (pub. 21s.). . . . . Arnold 4 0

BONVALOT (G.).—Through the Heart of Asia, over the Pamir to India, by Gabriel Bonvalot, translated by C. B. Pitman, with 250 illustrations by Albert Pépin, 2 vols., royal 8vo (32s.). . . . . Chapman & Hall 7 6

—Across Thibet, many illustrations and map of route, 2 vols., royal 8vo (32s.). . . . . Cassell 10 0

HARRISON & MACCOLL.—Greek Vase Paintings, a Selection of Examples, 43 very large and fine plates, comprising a great variety of subjects, with Preface, Introduction, and descriptive letterpress to each plate, by J. E. Harrison and D. S. MacColl, size of vol. 18 by 14 inches, strongly bound in cloth (31s. 6d. net) . . . . . Unwin 10 0

DUMAS (A.).—The Three Musketeers, translated by Wm. Robson, with 250 illustrations by M. Leloir, 2 vols., super royal 8vo, in appropriate fancy wrappers, each copy in cardboard box (42s.). . . . . Routledge 15 0
This magnificent Edition of Luxe of Alexander Dumas's immortal novel, containing 250 Original Designs by Maurice Leloir, engraved on wood in the finest style of art by J. Huysot, was purchased for the English language by Messrs. George Routledge & Sons from M. Calmann Levy, the French Publisher by whom it was produced at an outlay of more than Six Thousand Pounds.

STEELE (Richard) Life of, by G. A. Aiken, with numerous portraits, 2 handsome volumes, demy 8vo (32s.). . . . . Isister 6

SHERARD (R. H.).—Alphonso Daudet, a Biography and Critical Study, with illustrations, 8vo, (pub. 18s.). . . . . Arnold 3 0

—Emile Zola, a Biographical and Critical Study, with portraits, illustrations, and facsimile letter, demy 8vo, (12s.). . . . . Chatto 3 6

MACKNIGHT.—Ulster As It Is; or, Twenty-eight Years' Experience as an Irish Editor, by Thomas Macknight, author of the History of the Life and Times of Edmund Burke, The Life of Lord Bolingbroke, and Thirty Years of Foreign Policy, &c., in two volumes 8vo. (21s. net) . . . . . Macmillan 3 9

SMALLEY (Geo. W.). London Letters, and some others, 2 vols., 1,130 pp., 8vo (pub. 32s.). . . . . Macmillan 4 6
"For the most part he tells of English life and English public men; and what he has to tell is told in the best manner of what Matthew Arnold used to call the 'New Journalism.' . . . He has a keen eye for the salient points of character and individuality, a vivid way of presenting great scenes and memorable occasions, and a wide acquaintance with English social life, its ways and its personalities." Times.

GARIBALDI.—Autobiography of Giuseppe Garibaldi, authorised Translation by A. Werner, with Supplement by Jessie White Mario, steel portraits, 3 vols., 8vo (pub. 31s. 6d.). . . . . W. Smith & Jones 6 0 LIBRARIANS and BOOKBUYERS generally are invited to write for CATALOGUES, either to 265, HIGH HOLBORN, or 57, WIGMORE STREET, CAVENTISH SQUARE, LONDON.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

Demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 12s.
THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON III
 By ARCHIBALD FORBES.
 With Photogravure Frontispiece and 36 Full-Page Illustrations.
 "The task of writing a popular biography of this kind could not have fallen into more capable hands than those of Mr. Archibald Forbes. Partisanship is a fault that certainly will not be charged against the author of this volume."—Daily News.
 "A fluently written and easily read account."—Manchester Guardian.
 "When he leads us up to the threshold of the sixties Mr. Forbes is quite himself—quite the forcible, descriptive writer whom we all admire.... Mr. Forbes is singularly accurate in all his details."—Daily Chronicle.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.
MISS BALMAINE'S PAST. By B. M. CROKER. Author of "Diana Barrington," "Beyond the Pale," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
TALES IN PROSE and VERSE. By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY. With a Frontispiece by Arthur Hopkins.

CHEAPER EDITION.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
IN THE MIDST OF LIFE: Tales of Soldiers and Civilians. By AMBROSE BIERCE.
 "Mr. Bierce portrays the most appalling scenes with a deliberation and force and precision that are rarely seen. The realism of Walt Whitman's "Specimen Days" is pale compared with that of "In the Midst of Life." It is a book that one reads breathlessly and shudderingly.... A remarkable literary feat."—Scottish Leader.

On May 27.—CHEAPER EDITION.
 Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
The MACLISE PORTRAIT-GALLERY of ILLUSTRIOUS LITERARY CHARACTERS—55 Portraits by DANIEL MACLISE. With Memoirs—Biographical, Critical, Bibliographical, and Anecdotal—by WILLIAM BATES, B.A.

CHEAPER ISSUE.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
THACKERAYANA: Notes and Anecdotes. With Coloured Frontispiece and Hundreds of Sketches by WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY, from his School-Books, &c.

THREE NEW SIX-SHILLING BOOKS.
MORE TRAMPS ABROAD. By Mark TWAIN.

"Mr. Albert Chevalier used to sing a song in which occurs a line, 'Laugh if I thought I should have died!' and that line might fairly be quoted in reply to any question as to whether Mark Twain's latest book was funny.... All who appreciate humour or can enjoy laughter should make haste to procure 'More Tramps Abroad.' A more effective remedy for the blues has not been offered in England for many a day."—Publishers' Circular.

THIS LITTLE WORLD. By David CHRISTIE MURRAY.
 "Mr. Murray has never done anything better than this fine story."—Birmingham Post.
 "Eminently bright, pleasant, and amusing."—Glasgow Herald.

BY the RISE of the RIVER. By AUSTIN CLARE.
 "They are as true to nature as the heather-crested fells and granite boulders of the Cumbrian border from which they hail. Humour and pathos and tragedy jostle each other in this group of Tynedale tales."—Bookseller.

TALES from the VELD. By Ernest GLANVILLE. With 12 Illustrations by M. Nisbet.
 Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
 "A unusually strong volume of sport and adventure."—World.

THE EXPRESS MESSENGER, and other Tales of the Rail. By CY WARMAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
 "It is not at all necessary to be an engine-man in order to appreciate the singular fascination of these tales—some weird and horrible enough to challenge Poe, and some rude and strong and technical enough to rival Kipling's."—Morning Leader.

THE THREE DISGRACES, &c. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P., Author of "Dear Lady Diddain." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
 "Mr. Justice McCarthy's fiction is always welcome. There is such a world of good-humour about it, he sees things through such a benevolent glass, that his books are soothing as a good cigar or a harmless narcotic."—Daily Chronicle.

CHEAPER EDITIONS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.
CHARLES LAMB'S COMPLETE WORKS, including "Poetry for Children" and "Prince Dorus." With 2 Portraits and a Facsimile.
THOMAS HOOD'S CHOICE WORKS in PROSE and VERSE. With Life, Portrait, and 200 Illustrations.
RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN'S COMPLETE WORKS. With Life, Anecdotes, and 10 Full-Page Illustrations.
DEAN SWIFT'S CHOICE WORKS in PROSE and VERSE. With Memoir, Portraits, and Facsimiles.
ARTEMUS WARD'S COMPLETE WORKS. With Portrait and Facsimile.
BRET HARTE'S CHOICE WORKS in PROSE and VERSE. With Portrait and 40 Illustrations.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

Now ready, royal 8vo, with 41 Plates, 12s. 6d. net.
A CATALOGUE of the GREEK VASES in the FITZWILLIAM MUSEUM, CAMBRIDGE. By E. A. GARDNER, M.A., late Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Yates Professor of Archaeology at University College, London.

Now ready, imperial 4to, with 6 Facsimiles, 10s. 6d. net.
FRAGMENTS of the BOOKS of KINGS according to the TRANSLATION of AQUILA. From a MS. formerly in the Geniza at Cairo, now in the possession of C. Taylor, D.D., Master of St. John's College, and S. Schecter, M.A., University Reader in Talmudic Literature. Edited by F. C. BURKITT, M.A., with a Preface by C. TAYLOR, D.D.

Second Edition, now ready.
SAYINGS of the JEWISH FATHERS: comprising Pirke Aboth in Hebrew and English, with Notes and Excursions. Edited by C. TAYLOR, D.D., Master of St. John's College. Second Edition. With additional Notes and a Cairo Fragment of Aquila's Version of the Old Testament. Demy 8vo, 10s.

THE PARALLEL HISTORY of the JEWISH MONARCHY in the TEXT of the REVISED VERSION, 1885. Part I. The Reigns of David and Solomon. 1 Samuel 31 to 1 Kings II. 1 Chronicles 10 to 2 Chronicles 9. Arranged by R. SOMERVELL, M.A., Assistant Master and Bursar of Harrow School. With an Introduction by S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. Demy 8vo, 2s.

TEXTS and STUDIES: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature. Edited by J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, D.D., Norrisian Professor of Divinity.
 Vol. V. No. 2. Clement of Alexandria: Quis Dives Salvetur. Re-edited, together with an Introduction on the MSS. of Clement's Works, by P. MORDAUNT BARNARD, M.A., Christ's College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 3s. net.
 Vol. V. No. 3. The Hymn of the Soul, contained in the Syriac Acts of St. Thomas. Re-edited, with an English Translation, by A. A. BEVAN, M.A., Lord Almoner's Reader in Arabic. Demy 8vo, 2s. net.

ONOMASTICON ANGLO-SAXONICUM. A List of Anglo-Saxon Proper Names from the Time of Bede to that of King John. By W. G. SEARLE, M.A., late Fellow of Queens' College, Cambridge. Royal 8vo, 20s. net.
 Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

THE STEAM ENGINE and other HEAT ENGINES. By J. A. EWING, M.A., F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E., Professor of Mechanism and Applied Mechanics in the University of Cambridge. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s.

Second Edition, now ready.
ELEMENTS of the MATHEMATICAL THEORY of ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. By J. J. THOMSON, M.A., Cavendish Professor of Experimental Physics. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s.

PITT PRESS SHAKESPEARE.—New Volume Subject for the Cambridge Local Examinations, Dec. 1898.
SHAKESPEARE.—THE MERCHANT of VENICE. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, by A. W. VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College. 1s. 6d.

PITT PRESS SERIES.—New Volumes. Subjects for the Cambridge Local Examinations, Dec. 1898.
LAMB'S TALES from SHAKESPEARE Tempest, As You Like It, Merchant of Venice, King Lear, Twelfth Night, Hamlet. With Introduction and Notes by J. H. FLATHER, M.A., Emmanuel College. 1s. 6d.

MALOT.—REMI et ses AMIS. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Vocabulary, by M. de G. VERRALL, Newnham College. 2s.

ANDERSEN, EIGHT STORIES. Edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by W. RIPPMANN, M.A., Gonville and Caius College. 2s. 6d.

LESSING.—MINNA von BARNHELM oder Das SOLDATENGLÜCK. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by H. J. WOLSTENHOLME, Hon. M.A. of the University of Cambridge. 3s.

EURIPIDES.—MEDEA. Edited by C. E. S. HEADLAM, M.A., Fellow and Classical Lecturer of Trinity Hall. 2s. 6d.

CORNELIUS NEPOS.—LIVES of TIMOTHEUS, PHOCION, AGESILAUS, EPAMINONDAS, PELOPIDAS, TIMOLEON, EUMENES, DATABES, HAMILCAR. Edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A., late Fellow of Emmanuel College. 1s. 6d.

CÆSAR.—DE BELLO GALLICO. Book II. Edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A. 1s. 6d.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO'S LIST.

ALLEGORIES. By Frederic W FARRAR, D.D., Dean of Canterbury. With 2 Illustrations by Amelia Bauerle. Crown 8vo, 6s.

FALKLANDS. By the Author of "The Life of Sir Kenelm Digby," &c. With 8 Portraits, &c. Svo, 10s. 6d.

"A special study, and one which throws a strong side light on the period of the Romanist revival in England under James I. and Charles I."—Athenæum.

HARVARD HISTORICAL STUDIES.—New Vol. 8vo, 12s.

A BIBLIOGRAPHY of BRITISH MUNICIPAL HISTORY, including Gilds and Parliamentary Representation. By CHARLE GROSS, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of History in Harvard University.

THE FIRST PART of the TRAGEDY of FAUST in ENGLISH. By THOS. E. WEBB I.L.D., sometime Fellow of Trinity College, Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Dublin, &c. New and Cheaper Edition, with THE DEATH OF FAUST, from the Second Part. Crown 8vo, 6s.

In Three Parts, with Maps and Plans, crown 8vo.
HISTORY of ENGLAND. For the Use of Schools. By F. YORK POWELL, M.A. Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford; and T. F. TOUT, M.A., Professor of History at Owens College, Manchester.

Part II. FROM the DEATH of HENRY VII. the ACCESSION of WILLIAM and MARY. I. T. F. TOUT, M.A. 2s. 6d.

WEeping FERRY, and other Stories By MARGARET L. WOODS, Author of "Village Tragedy." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mrs. Woods has a literary style whose purity and freshness are merited by very few writers to-day."—Daily Mail.

THREE NEW VOLUMES OF THE SILVER LIBRARY.

THE STARK MUNRO LETTER. By A. CONAN DOYLE. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A MONK of FIFE: a Tale of the Days of Joan of Arc. By ANDREW LANG. With 13 Illustrations by Selwyn Image. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LECTURES on the COUNCIL of TRENT. By JAMES A. FROUDE. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 383. JANUARY, 1898. Svo, price 6d.
 1. VALMY and AUERSTADT. 6. THE HARLEY PAPERS.
 2. THE ANNALS of a PUBLISHED HOUSE. 7. THE BIRDS of LONDON.
 3. DONOOLA. 8. THE WORKS of MR. RICHARD KIPLING.
 4. THE IRISH UNIVERSITY QUESTION. 9. MR. BRYCE on the FUTURE of SOUTH AFRICA.
 5. THE SUCCESS of the ANGLO-SAXONS. 10. INDIAN FRONTIER POLICY.

A SEQUEL to VANITY FAIR. In Mr. STRONG'S Article, "THE KINDHEARTED of the GREAT," will be printed for the first time a Letter from Thackeray to the sixth Duke of Devonshire, in which he sketches the early fortunes of the leading characters of "Vanity Fair" after the close of the story.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

FEBRUARY, 1898. Price Sixpence.
 THE DUENNA of a GENIUS. By M. E. FRANCIS. Chapters 3-5. PREPARATORY SCHOOL ASSISTANT MASTERS. ERIC PARKER.
 THE KINDNEARTED of the GREAT. By S. ARTHUR STRONG. THE THIRTEENTH ANIVERSARY. By HOS HUTCHINSON.
 THE TRUE SUBLIME of BOILING. By St. JOHN E. HANBAIN.
 A FINN POACHER. By FRED WHISHAW. AT THE SIGN of the SHIP. ANGELO LANG.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., London, Bombay, and New York.

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS:  | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Ill-fated Fergusson ... ..                              | 87   |
| Christina Rossetti ... ..                               | 88   |
| Peter the Great ... ..                                  | 89   |
| A Book about Dungeons ... ..                            | 90   |
| A Trades Unionist CyclopædiaIn Southern Seas ... .. | 91   |
| BRIEFER MENTION ... ..                                  | 92   |
| FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..                               | 93   |
| NOTES AND NEWS ... ..                                   | 95   |
| "LEWIS CARROLL" ... ..                                  | 98   |
| "LEWIS CARROLL" AT OXFORD ... ..                        | 99   |
| THE "EDINBURGH" ON MR. KIPLING ... ..                   | 100  |
| PARIS LETTER ... ..                                     | 100  |
| THE BOOK MARKET ... ..                                  | 101  |
| The Titles of Newspapers ... ..                         | 102  |
| The Future of the Idler ... ..                   | 102  |
| THE WEEK ... ..   | 103  |
| New Books Received ... ..                               | 103  |
| CORRESPONDENCE .. ..                                    | 108  |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..                            | 105  |

REVIEWS.

ILL-FATED FERGISSON.

Robert Fergusson. By A. B. Grosart. "Famous Scots" Series. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

THE merits of Dr. Grosart as a biographer are such as spring from a lifelong admiration of his hero. Nearly fifty years ago he wrote a life of Fergusson, and ever since he appears to have kept up the study, adding fact to fact till, what with searching libraries, examining records and importuning correspondents, it may be assumed that he has collected all that is likely to be known of a singularly interesting and attractive figure. Dr. Grosart's demerits are, firstly, that he is too controversial; what was needed was a bold, ample portrait, not a series of attacks on David Irving and the obscure critics who see in Fergusson only an example justly punished vice and profligacy. The second drawback is the more serious one, that despite his zeal Dr. Grosart lacks judgment and imagination. For example, his hunt for such petty facts as make up his "ell of pedigree" is a mere waste of energy; of what earthly use is it to show that if you go back to his great grandfather, the impecunious bard had respectable connexions, "wadsetters," kirk ministers, and such like? And, on the other hand, not enough pains has been taken to reproduce the environment of the poet, to reconstruct the St. Andrews and Edinburgh of a hundred and fifty years ago.

It is not till he gets to the University that we can form any picture or idea of Fergusson as an individual. His father and mother were honest, worthy people, who evidently made great sacrifices to educate their children. Among the documents filed up by Dr. Grosart is a little budget showing how William Fergusson made a miserable income of twenty pounds a year cover the family expenses. It was characteristic that less was paid for the house in Canby and Feather Close than for the school-fee of the bairns. Robert acquitted himself well at his books, eventually winning a bursary or scholarship that carried him first to Dundee Grammar School, and then to St. Andrews. It is here that Dr. Grosart should have gone outside the lines on which he had been previously working to obtain material for helping us to realise what Scotch University life was in the sixties of last century. We do begin to catch sight of the boy—a slim, delicate youth, with a sweet voice, and wide, black, laughing eyes, full of spirit and devilment, already beginning to rhyme and hand round bits of his witty, satirical verse. What were his companions like? Dr. Grosart has got together a list of the more distinguished names; but it is the impecunious and reckless unknown we are curious about. The professors, too, must have been very different from what their successors are. There was Wilkie, who appears to have taken a warm liking to Fergusson, made him a sort of amanuensis, and carried him off to his farm at week-ends. He is little more than a name in Dr. Grosart's book; yet in good sooth he was one of the most extraordinary of professors, and it would help us much to know what was the bond between him and "Rab."

Let us try to realise him. Externally he certainly was not attractive. A lumbering, Parson Trulliber sort of man, with bushy eyebrows, a clay tobacco-pipe in his mouth, ill-dressed, unwashed—it is related, among other items of true or untrue contemporary gossip, that he could not sleep except in foul sheets. He was miserly to a degree; and when not lecturing at the University, toiled like a day labourer on his farm, and was most unsocial and unpopular. Nevertheless, this pig-dealing professor was every inch of him a man. And his mind must have been nigh as versatile as Mr. Gladstone's. He was a subtle theologian, a natural philosopher, one of the most advanced agriculturists of his time, and a voluminous author and poet; his "Epigoniad" is a long (and frightfully dull) poem in nine books. At bottom, nevertheless, he was simple and strong and kindly. "I have skaken hands with poverty up to the elbow," was his eloquent apology for being miserly, but he set aside twenty pounds a year for charity; and (let this, too, be set to his credit) he was regularly cheated at market, and his high farming did not pay. Now, is it not extraordinary that this singular professor should have singled out young Fergusson as a favourite? The eclogue in which the poet lamented the death of Wilkie shows that the esteem was warmly returned.

To make a life of Fergusson convincing it would be necessary to recall not only professors and students, but old collegiate usages and customs, and all that which made up the university life of his time. The mere anecdotes retailed in succession by Irving, Sommers, Chambers, and the rest, and now repeated by the present author, lose their air of reality unless we can imagine their "setting." We fully agree with Dr. Grosart that the freaks and follies at St. Andrews, though they ended once in a short rustication, were not really vicious, but only the outcome of a very merry, high-spirited temperament, combined with unusual audacity. In fact, this St. Andrews period is the one bit of unclouded sunshine in a very touching history.

The clouds soon gathered round him. His father died the year before he left the University and he was obliged to look about not only for his own livelihood but means to support his widowed mother. An ill-starred visit to an uncle in the North was disappointing in itself and brought on a serious illness. On recovery the lad drifted into a position similar to that held by his father, that of a copying clerk, the worst paid and most irksome task to which he could be put. The natural result followed. All day Fergusson was "a base mechanic drudge"; he only began to wake up when the office closed. It was the hey-day of tavern life. Dr. Grosart might have found excellent illustrative material for this period in Ramsay of Ochtertyre's Scotland in the Eighteenth Century, as well as in Guy Mannering and Redgawtlet. Fergusson was probably no worse than his time, but he was no better, and the best of his hours were spent at Luckie Middlemist's or Johnny How's. He was very welcome, for people soon began to look upon him as a celebrity, his poems in Ruddivven's Magazine achieving an immediate success. In addition he had a fund of "auld Scots crack" and was a fine singer. One of his biographers describes him as "the best singer ever heard of 'The Birks of Indermay.'" Indeed, his name is very closely associated with Mallet's small lyric. He chose it for unique praise in his "Elegy on the Death of Scots Music":

"Can lav'rocks at the dawning day,
Can linnies chirring frae the spray,
Or toddling burns that smoothly play
O'er gowden beds,
Compare wi' Birks of Indermay?"

It was pre-eminently his favourite song. When out of his wits the poor mad poet sang it in Bedlam "with such exquisite melody that those who heard the notes can never forget the sound." Our tastes have changed since then, and no anthology of to-day includes "The Birks of Indermay"; yet words that have so charmed a true poet should not be forgotten, though the first four lines do contain the jewels "smiling morn," "breathing spring," "tuneful birds" which "warble from each spray," and "universal lay." Still, there is a lingering charm like some half-exhausted fragrance about

"Let us, Amanda, timely wise,
Like them improve the hour that flies,
And in soft raptures waste the day
Among the Birks of Indermay."

Fergusson was doing better work than that if he had known it. He was, as Stevenson called him, "the poet of Edinburgh," and not even Sir Walter has given us livelier pictures of its streets and causeways, its law-courts and races and amusements. Not by any means that we claim him to have been a Scott or Burns, he lacked the pith and grip. Yet a clever, sly humour, a keen observation, and a something of freshness, reminding one of the gleam of grass when the sun comes out after rain, entitle him to a high place among the minors. His "Farmer's Ingle" will compare even with "The Cotter's Saturday Night," and when Burns imitated the following verses he did not altogether surpass his original :

"In July month, ae benny morn,
When nature's rokelay green
Was spread owre ilka rig o' corn
To charm our rovin' een,
Glowrin' about, I saw a quean,
The fairest neath the lift;
Her een were o' the siller sheen,
Her skin like snawy drift,
Sae white that day.

I dwell amang the cauler streams
That weat the land o' cakes,
And aften tune my canty strings
At bridals and late-wakes.
They ca' me Mirth. I no'er was kenned
To grumble or look sour,
But blythe would be a lift to lend
Gif ye would sey my power
And pith this day."

One cannot help doubting Dr. Grosart's wisdom in trying to whitewash the reputation of Fergusson. R. L. Stevenson had abundant grounds for using the terms "drunken" and "vicious" towards him. Biography is worthless if it be not true, and surely there are few so weak that they cannot look the good and the ill frankly in the face. Not the least pathetic of the many stories about Fergusson is that which tells how he tried to get the Knights of the Cape—the jovial society that once every seven years celebrated the "jubilee" of Jemmy Thomson—to limit their expenditure to sixpence a night. He was sorry for and ashamed of his indulgence. He drank, he said, "to forget my mother and my poor aching fingers." It is pity and not blame that this calls forth. One other point deserves to be alluded to :

"In a time of license," says Dr. Grosart, "and fast living no so-called love-liaisons ever came up against him, no 'woman's skaith' was ever laid at his door, no such salutations with defiance of illegitimate offspring as we mourn over in the greater Robert."

This is whitewash pure and simple. Stevenson, in his Edinburgh, has frankly stated the truth: "Love was absent from his life, or only present, if you prefer, in such a form that even the least serious of Burns's amourettes was ennobling by comparison."

We have no desire to enlarge upon the point. It was a cold caught while (after he had dosed himself with "a searching medicine") he was electioneering that brought on Fergusson's madness and death at the age of twenty-four, a death not altogether unlike that of Burns himself. The fact that a hundred pounds came from his friend Burnett while he lay a corpse in an institution for paupers was but one of many circumstances enhancing the pathos of the end. Dr. Grosart may well claim for his hero "the meed of a melodious tear"; but it will come the more honestly from those who refuse to gloss anything over or adopt the recent Scotch fashion of crediting a favourite with virtues to which he himself makes no claim. It was foolish in the case of Burns; it is more foolish in that of Fergusson.

Fergusson's reputation does not need to be bolstered up. He will continue to have readers were it only because critics so difficult to please as Burns, Wordsworth, and Carlyle unite in his praise. Lovers of R. L. Stevenson have a still deeper reason for studying Fergusson. What it is will best be explained by a remarkable letter printed by Dr. Grosart in his introduction. It was addressed to Mr. Craibe Angus, of Glasgow. Stevenson writes :

"When your hand is in, will you remember our poor Edinburgh Robin? Burns alone has been just to his promise; follow Burns. He knew best; he knew when to draw fish—from the poor, white-faced, drunken, vicious boy who raved himself to death in the Edinburgh madhouse. Surely there is more to be gleaned about Fergusson, and surely it is high time the task was set about.

I may tell you (because your poet is not dead) something of how I feel. We are three Robins who have touched the Scots lyre this last century. Well, the one is the world's. He did it, he came off; he is for ever; but I and the other, ah, what bonds we have. Born in the same city, both sickly, both vicious, both pestered—one nearly to madness and one to the madhouse—with a damnatory creed; both seeing the stars and the moon, and wearing shoe-leather on the same ancient stones. Under the same pends, down the same closes, where our common ancestors clashed in their armour, rusty or bright. . . . He died in his acute, painful youth, and left the models of the great things that were to come; and the man who came after outlived his green-sickness, and has faintly tried to parody his finished work.

If you will collect strays of Robert Fergusson, fish for material—collect any last re-echoing of gossip; command me to do what you prefer: to write the preface—to write the whole, if you prefer; anything so that another monument (after Burns') be set up to my unhappy predecessor, on the Cansey of Auld Reekie. You will never know, nor will any man, how deep this feeling is. I believe Fergusson lives in me. I do. But 'tell it not in Gath.' Every man has these fanciful superstitions coming, going, but yet enduring; only most men are so wise (or the poet in them so dead) that they keep their follies for themselves."

Among the unwritten books it is probable that one of the greatest was Stevenson's life of Fergusson. No man is living (or likely to live) who is equally qualified by knowledge and sympathy. Of the self-revelation it would almost be desecration to speak. Dr. Grosart attempts to weaken the comparison; but he did not know Stevenson, and he has penetrated but a short way into the inner recesses of Robert Fergusson, whereas the author of the letter understood both. A biographer with young and modern sympathies might yet achieve a great success by taking the letter as the basis of a new study.

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

Christina Rossetti: a Biographical and Critical Study. By Mackenzie Bell. (Hurst & Blackett.)

HERE is a volume inspired by sympathy and personal friendship, and executed with unsparing conscientiousness; yet sympathy and friendship would desire it undone, or done otherwise, and it would have been better had it been less conscientious. Some biography of Christina Rossetti was needed and advisable, but this biography was inadvisable, and would not have been missed. We are sorry to say so, for the author's sincerity, and unassuming desire to do his best, are conspicuous on every page. There is no aggressive fault of taste; it does not rank with those biographies which are sins against the dead by their sins against the living; there are no "painful exposures," and so forth. Christina Rossetti, indeed, offers no chance for such offences. The difficulties of her life are quite in a contrary direction. Externally, she lived the life which our forefathers laid down as proper and typical for women—quiet, uneventful, unmarked, drab, conventional. She departed from the law of our forefathers in only two respects: she published books, and she did not marry. (It was, of course, de rigueur with our forefathers that a woman should be neither an old maid nor a blue-stocking.) We are not blaspheming against our forefathers. With the modifications mentioned, the life worked well enough for Christina, who never in the least degree put on the new woman, however much she strove to put off the old man. But it is clear that such a life offers little foothold for the biographer. His one chance is to get a grip on that internal life which must be the total life of such a woman.

But, unfortunately, Christina Rossetti's present biographer is in thorough harmony with her external life; he is drab to the soul, drab in all his methods. (Of course, we speak of his book.) And yet he means so well! His faults result from a too indiscriminate insistence upon detail. Convinced, quite rightly, that the lightest detail about a genius may be full of importance, he records everything, without observing perspective. But because a light detail may have importance, it does not follow that every light detail has importance. It is true we have had impressionists who acted upon the principle that an assemblage of seemingly trifling details constituted a character, though they might not be able to discover the law by which this was so; trusting to the veracity of Nature for the result. But these impressionists were geniuses, who were guided by inward instinct to the right selective traits. It is a mistake to suppose that the mere painstaking setting down of every trivial trait that one can observe will constitute a picture and evolve a meaning. This is Mr. Bell's mistake; and it is with most honest intention we counsel him that a judicious selection is necessary, in order to make trifling details significant and characteristic.

This mistake of principle—or, rather, want of principle—flows through the whole book, and is responsible for its defects. It shows itself in the minute inventory of Christina Rossetti's house at Torrington-square. It shows itself in the selections from her letters—if we can call them selections for they are reported with pertinacious fidelity, irrespective of their importance. Absolutely, in connexion with one letter, we are given an inventory of lodging-houses, with such soul-stirring details as—“Bed and sitting room in one, 25s. per week.

Gas, 1s. 6d. . . . . do.
Boots, 1d.”

The reminiscences of her youth and of her conversation are related with the same painful want of scale: how she sat a long time in a garden by a piece of ornamental water, until she saw a water-rat or a water-haunting bird, and how she was much gratified by it, with a neat little moral reflection to follow. It is true that she herself published this anecdote, but it might well have been omitted from her biography.

Yet, of course, amid so much conscientious reporting, there are interesting details, from which it is possible to get an idea of her personality. Born in 1830, at Charlotte-street, Portland-place, she was the youngest of a family of four. Except the eldest, Maria Francesca, all have become publicly known. She was not very precocious, and is said to have read less than the other members of the family. There is really very little of interest chronicled in this book about her early years. She was always delicate, and in youth serious, reticent, and given to melancholy—as her poems show. Moreover, she was essentially a city girl, and essentially a religious girl. Therefore her outward life was quiet and humdrum; and, for a girl brought in contact with so many eminent people, singularly unromantic. It is a great contrast to the life of her brother Dante. She had no desire to run glittering in the open sun, or if she had, she suppressed it. She had no fanciful love-affairs, it would seem. Twice she was asked in marriage, and refused both offers from religious scruples. But what romance there may have been in these affairs must be sought in her poetry, it does not appear on the surface. Mr. Bell merely says that she had a “regard” for both her suitors, and that she was much addened by the necessity of rejection, especially in the case of the second. It may be doubted whether passionate love was in her nature, although one is liable to be mistaken in regard to these reserved characters.

Her religion, which helped to crush external romance, supplied little romance in its place. She was a poet, and in a certain way and measure a mystic; yet there is nothing of the St. Teresa about her devotion. She was of the “pensive nun” kind, “sober, steadfast, and demure.” But the “pensive nun” in a dark London house, amid the mosaic details of Anglican parish organisation, is apt to be a discouraging subject for biography. Moreover, she set herself to overcome her outward reserve and pensiveness; and settled down into a cheery, chatty old lady. It was bravely done; but the romance of it lies behind the veil which she never lifted, from within which came at rarest intervals suggestions of pain and silent strife. The glimpses of her personal appearance in girlhood which Mr. Bell gives are taken from readily published memorials. Bell Scott’s is one:

By the window was a high narrow reading-desk, at which stood writing a slight girl, with a serious regular profile, dark against the pallid wintry light without. This most interesting to me of the two inmates turned on my entrance, made the most formal and graceful curtsey, and resumed her writing.”

That is a suggestive outline: fill it in from Mr. Watts-Dunton’s account:

“She had Gabriel’s eyes, in which hazel and blue-grey were marvellously blent, one hue shifting into the other, answering to the movements of the thoughts. And her brown hair, though less warm in colour than his during his boyhood, was still like it. When a young girl, she was, as both her mother and Gabriel have told me, really lovely, with an extraordinary expression of pensive sweetness.”

Mrs. Freund, again, speaks of her as “a dark-eyed slender lady . . . in appearance Italian, with olive complexion and deep hazel eyes.” She mentions, also, “the beautiful Italian voice all the Rossettis were gifted with.” Many friends noticed this peculiar charm in Christina, and the melodious, un-English distinctness with which she articulated her words, “making ordinary English words and phrases fall upon the ear with a soft, foreign, musical intonation, though she pronounced the words themselves with the purest of English accents.” She read poetry exquisitely, as both Mr. William Sharp and Mr. Bell declare, and as, with such a voice and the poet’s mind, she ought to have done.

Let us add a few correcting touches to this clear and charming picture. It is open to doubt the assertion of her mother and brother that she was ever strictly “lovely.” Her brother’s portraits bear out the description; but he was too idealising to be quite trustworthy. Other portraits suggest a different version; and even in Dante Rossetti’s pictures there is a marked difference between the face in the “Assumption” and that in the “Ecce Ancilla Domini” (both painted from Christina). In the latter the face is hardly beautiful from a strict physical standpoint; and it happens to be borne out by James Collinson’s portrait of Christina given in Mr. Bell’s book. In the same way we gather hints that, to some people, the young Christina may have been a little repellent. “A certain degree of restraint and pride” was observed in her. A lady told her (as she herself confessed) that she “seemed to do all from self-respect, not from fellow-feeling with others, or from kindly consideration for them.” We get a pretty clear idea of a girl hardly pretty or attractive, not very sympathetic, reserved, quiet, melancholy, shy, and appearing proud from her shyness and defect of ready sympathy. When she had to struggle with natural sadness, reticence, and self-consciousness, no common strength and sense of duty was it which converted her into a sweet, cheerful, self-forgotten woman.

Her life was inward. Outwardly, there seems really nothing to record but that she nursed ailing relations, was foremost in religious and charitable duties, was ever ready to sacrifice her time to visitors, went little (in her latter years) out of doors, put forth some prose-works, mainly religious, not of the very highest literary quality, and published from time to time poetry of high rank. She had, naturally, little sympathy with the movement for female rights, being herself so undesirous of external activities. Of her talk it is impossible to judge from the not well-chosen specimens given by Mr. Bell. She could utter—and indeed write—platitudes like other women; that is made evident. But her best poetry is work of genius, and upon that rests her name. She wrote, her brother says, with great spontaneity, and seldom revised what she wrote. Yet she was artist to her fingertips, and not the less so because her art was an inward shaping spirit, not outward pruning and paring. But this is not the occasion for an essay on Christina Rossetti as poet. We have dealt with an attempt at a difficult, perhaps a hardly possible, biography of a woman who lived the inner life. And with regret we must pronounce it a chronicle of small beer.

PETER THE GREAT.

Peter the Great. By Oscar Browning, M.A. (Hutchinson.)

MR. OSCAR BROWNING has no particular fitness to write a history of Peter “the Great,” or, if he has, we were not aware of the fact. Indeed, in the brief preface attached to his life of that worthy, he confesses that, in gathering material for his book, he has confined himself for the most part to one or two well-known and generally accessible authorities. He has made no exhaustive researches among historical archives and unpublished documents, as M. Waliszewski did when preparing his magnificent study; and Waliszewski’s work itself, he tells us, “did not come into his hands until half the present book was in type.” This is at once our loss and Mr. Browning’s, for his biography would certainly have gained in vividness and interest if Mr. Browning had been able to lighten its very sombre pages with some of the curious details which were unearthed by M. Waliszewski. Lovers of Russian history, by the way, will learn with pleasure that a cheap edition of that gentleman’s work in one volume has just been issued by Mr. Heine-mann.

Mr. Browning comes, then, to his task as a compiler only. His object is merely to sum up in brief for the general public the principal facts of Peter’s life as they have been brought to light by the researches of earlier students. Judged by this standard, is the book valuable? That is the question we have to ask ourselves. On the whole, we think it is. It is written in a clear, readable style. It is not overloaded with details—indeed, some interesting matters are omitted—and the principal characters and events are described with straightforwardness and a certain ability. It is in no sense a brilliant book, but it is workmanlike and, on the whole, sound. Of course Mr. Browning has been unable wholly to avoid the modern quasi-reverential attitude towards Peter as the “maker of modern Russia,” and the rest, and he respectfully eulogises his “genius” and "force of character," but he admits at times that his wisdom may be questioned. With regard to Peter's services to Russia and his determination to Europeanise his country, he points out frankly what may be said against his Baltic policy:

"The foundation of St. Petersburg was paid for by the disasters upon the Pruth and the loss of Azof. Some compensation was found in the attacks upon Central Asia and Persia, which have ever since remained a principal object of Russian ambition. Undoubtedly Peter owed his first prominence in Europe to the fact that he was regarded as the principal European bulwark against the Turks, and as the leader of the Vanguard of the Cross against the dangerous barbarism of the Crescent. It may be questioned whether it would not have been better to have sustained this part with more tenacity and to have sought an outlook into Europe rather through the Black Sea and the Mediterranean than through the Baltic and the North Sea."

Mr. Browning attributes the course which Peter actually took to "fate and perhaps accident"; but that verdict has an unscientific ring about it, and it may more reasonably be affirmed that it was Peter's defective judgment, and not fate or accident, which caused him to devote his country's energies to expansion towards the north rather than towards Constantinople.

No historian has ever managed to paint Peter as an amiable character, though many (Waliszewski among them) have warned to enthusiasm over his "greatness." Mr. Browning takes the common-sense view—admits Peter's many-sided activity, accepts him as a man of large ideas and great will-power, but makes no attempt to disguise the fact that he was a coarse and brutal ruffian. He is inclined to deny the charges of cowardice that have been brought against him (Waliszewski considers them proved), but his other vices are too patent and glaring to be worth disputing:

"The story of his life and works is his best monument. Most remarkable is the energy of his vitality, the passion which he put into everything he did—work and play, humanity and cruelty. . . . One might say that he was European in his intellect, Asiatic in his sport, Savage in his wrath."

This is perhaps a somewhat unflattering estimate of the intellect of Europe. Peter was a monster, but a monster gifted with a considerable intelligence and a gigantic activity. He was not quite sane, but no one could call him imbecile. His madness is the madness which is found in the gigantic schemes of Caligula, and traces of which are found, by some, in the restless activity of William II. of Germany. There seems little doubt that he was epileptic. In his physical peculiarities he resembled another Emperor of Rome, Claudius, for we read of his swaying head and clumsy, shuffling walk, his constant nervous twitchings and endless grimaces. In his personal cowardice, too, he resembles Claudius, but there all resemblance with that amiable weakling ends. He was not a man of commanding intellect, but made up for this by a certain intellectual nimbleness which enabled him to throw himself heart and soul into half-a-dozen things at once. In this his resemblance to the present

German Emperor is certainly striking. His schemes for his country were grandiose in the extreme, and he was, perhaps, wise in his determination to sever Russia from her Past and "turn her face Westward"; but his methods of doing it were never judicious, and occasionally were disastrous, and he had a madman's inability to count the cost or adapt the means to the end. Moreover, looking at the Russia of to-day, in so far as it is his creation no one can pretend that the result is altogether satisfactory. The virtues of the nation are still Oriental, while its vices are largely the vices of Europe. It is impossible to forgive Peter's treatment of the mutinous Streltsi.

A word may be said of his relations with his son Alexis, especially as these form the subject of Mr. Laurence Irving's play at the Lyceum. As to the death of Alexis, Mr. Browning is indisputably right, Mr. Irving entirely wrong. It may be said that a dramatist need not be true to history, but no one denies that he must be true to character, and the Lyceum reconciliation between Peter and his son requires a different Peter and a different Alexis. The true facts of the story of the son's death appear to be that after his conviction he was repeatedly tortured with the knout by Peter's orders and in his presence. Whether the Tsar actually struck the fatal blow himself is of no importance and cannot be ascertained now. But his treatment of his son stamps him with indelible infamy, and was unworthy even of the worst of those ancient kings of Persia who also claim for themselves the title of "Great," perhaps with equal justice. Peter, in fact, was an Oriental despot, not of the first ability. He had the true despot's indifference to the lives, the comfort, the dignity of his subjects. He grafted upon his country a civilisation which she was not fitted to receive, and attempted to force upon her from without a development which, to be valuable, could only have come by slow process of years from within. But his reign was long, and he was utterly devoid of scruples. Naturally, therefore, he "left his mark" on his country, but his influence has been greatly exaggerated, and any attempt to whitewash him as a moral character is quite preposterous.

A BOOK ABOUT DUNGEONS.

The Dungeons of Paris. By Tighe Hopkins.
(G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

In this book Mr. Tighe Hopkins tells the stories of the old prisons of Paris in a series of episodes. In succession he takes us to the Conciergerie, the Bicêtre, Chaletet, Sainte-Pélagie, the Bastille, and others. The survey is mainly confined to the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Indeed, the marrow of the book is Mr. Hopkins's accounts of the operation of lettres de cachet in the years that preceded the French Revolution. We look on Paris from the gates of the Paris prisons. At Vincennes, in the dead of night, a coach draws up. Who now? For whom do the turnkeys assemble and the lanterns gleam on gallery and stair?

It is the good Abbé Prieur, state prisoner of Louis XV.

"The Abbé had invented a kind of shorthand, which he thought would be of some use to the ministry. But the ministry would none of it, and the Abbé made known his little invention to the King of Prussia, a patron of such profitable things. But one of his letters was opened at the post-office by the Cabinet Noir, and the next morning Monsieur Abbé Prieur awoke in the dungeon of Vincennes. He inquired the reason, and in the course of months his letter to the King of Prussia was shown to him.

'But I can explain that in a moment,' said the Abbé. 'Look, here is the translation.'

The hieroglyphs, in short, were as innocent as a verse of the Psalms; but the Abbé Prieur never quitted his dungeon."

Here is another story—racy of the time:

"A venerable and worthy nobleman, M. Pompidan de Mirabelle, was imprudent enough to repeat at a supper party some satirical verses he had heard touching Mme. de Pompadour and De Sartines, the chief of police. Warned that De Sartines had filled in his name on a lettre de cachet, M. de Mirabelle called at the police office, and asked to what prison he should betake himself. 'To Vincennes,' said De Sartines.

'To Vincennes,' repeated M. de Mirabelle to his coachman, and he arrived at the dungeon before the order for his detention.

Once a year De Sartines made a formal visit to Vincennes, and once a year punctually he demanded of M. de Mirabelle the name of the author of the verses. 'If I knew I should not tell you,' was the invariable reply; 'but as a matter of fact I never heard it in my life.' M. de Mirabelle died in Vincennes a very old man."

It is impossible to read of such arrests and incarcerations without a sort of admiration for the tremendous power of the king to imprison, and the security with which a prisoner, lodged on a word, might be retained all his life. In the matters of security and hopelessness of escape Mr. Hopkins awards the palm to Vincennes, whose architect, he says, "was up some half-hour earlier than the architect of the Bastille." Impenetrable walls, door after door sheathed in iron, galleries from which sentries overlooked every avenue of escape, towers that commanded miles of country—such were the equipments of this last home of "audacity in high places," this foul witness to the murder of the Duc d'Enghien. The solitude within Vincennes extended outside its walls.

"The sentries had orders to turn the eyes of every passer-by from the dungeon towers. No one might stand or draw breath in the shadow of Vincennes. It might be a relative or a friend seeking to learn in what exact cell the captive was lodged. From light to dusk the sentry reiterated his changeless formula: 'Passer votre chemin!'"

And yet within the walls there was an odd freedom. Prisoners could give trouble could get their own way. Mirabeau was a match—considering the odds—for the most brutal of the governors of Vincennes De Rougemont. "Night or day he gave his gaoler no peace." He wanted a table-knife. You would think it was a question of Yes or No. But Mirabeau spent "four months in altercation with De Rougemont" about that table-knife, and got it at last

He clamoured for his trunk, his clothes, his linen. Refused paper, he tore fly-leaves from prison books, and wrote his quivering sentences on Lettres de Cachet, and hid them in his coat, and not all the king's horses nor all the king's men kept them from being printed. He wrote a letter of many pages to De Rougemont demanding a looking-glass for his toilet, and got it. He roared for freedom itself, and won it.

If Vincennes excels all the other old French prisons in strength, Bicêtre for horror! It was half a lunatic asylum, half a gaol for beggars and "young men worn out by debauchery." A third element was not long wanting. Granted a roomy prison, political prisoners were sure to be provided—the lettres de cachet were innumerable as flies in August. Horrible shades! where "now and again the warders and attendants amused themselves by organising a pitched battle between the 'mad side' and the 'prison side'"; the wounded were easily transferred to the infirmary, the dead were as easily packed into the trench beneath the walls." So awful were the tales that leaked through the chinks and doors of the Bicêtre that this Paris prison, round which free men and women circulated, under whose walls little children danced in the street, became peopled, in the popular imagination, with "imps, evil genii, sorcerers, and shapeless monsters compounded of men and beasts." The Bicêtre's blackest day dawned on Sunday, September 2, 1792, when, says Carlyle, "all France leaps distracted like the winnowed Sahara waltzing in sand colonnades." Each prison of Paris had its massacre, but the accounts of the massacre at the Bicêtre are contradictory. The fog of slaughter was too thick and foul for anything clear to emerge. One turns with relief to the far different scene at the Sainte-Pélagie on this same Sunday of blood and bell-ringing. "Citizens," cried the heroic governor Bnchotte to the pike-bearing mob, "you arrive too late. My prisoners are gone. They got warning of your coming, and after binding my wife and myself as you see us, they made their escape." It was one of the noble lies of history. The prisoners were all in their cells. The binding was a ruse. But the mob had not time to doubt, and it swept on its way.

Sainte-Pélagie swarmed with debtors. Among these was a kindly hearted Croesus, who had refused to pay a certain debt for conscience' sake. This was the American, Colonel Swan, the good genius of the place. His little remembered acts of kindness and of love make Sainte-Pélagie fragrant. Many a small debtor left the prison, free, after five minutes' talk with Colonel Swan. To one such man, who asked to be his servant for six francs a month, the Colonel replied: "That will suit me very well, here is five years' pay in advance." It was the amount of the man's debt, and he went weeping back to freedom.

But such relieving touches are as little squares of sunlight on the paved floor of a cell where hope dies daily. One horror links all these prisons together, till they form a bad dream of humanity. In some cells of the Conciergerie the prisoners had to shield their faces, leaving their bodies to the rats. Fevers stalked the wards, aided by drunken turnkeys and careless doctors. Vincennes had abysses for those whose lettres de cachet were inscribed "Pour être oublié." The cells of the Châtelet were infested with reptiles, and received air only from above; "there was no current, but only, as it were, a stationary column of air, which barely allowed the prisoners to breathe." But enough. It is well to read of such things once in a way. But if you lay down Mr. Hopkins's book late in the evening—take a walk before you sleep, prove your liberty; else your dream-land may be the Question Chamber of the Conciergerie.

A TRADES UNIONIST CYCLOPÆDIA.

Industrial Democracy. By Sidney and Beatrice Webb. (Longmans, Green, & Co.)

AN immense amount of wild and random speaking and writing on the Engineers' Strike would have been saved if this book had been published six months ago. Such an inside view of the aims and methods of modern Trades Unionism has never before been furnished to the public. The authors have spared no pains in the collection of their facts. By the study of documents, by interviewing employers, Trades Union officials, and workmen, and by personal observation—in Mrs. Webb's case as a "rent-collector, a tailoress, and a working-class lodger in working-class families"—they have accumulated a mass of authentic information which renders the book indispensable to the legislator, the journalist, and the social student.

Save for the too frequent sneers at the "middle-class man," whom Mr. and Mrs. Webb appear to regard as a soulless creature, incapable even of understanding their arguments, much less of appreciating them, the tone and temper of the book are excellent. Naturally it is written with a strong Trades Unionist bias; but there is no endeavour to suppress inconvenient facts. Indeed, a clever advocate, using no other data than are to be found in it, might construct a very powerful indictment against the principles and practices of modern Trades Unionism.

The very interesting chapter on "The Higgling of the Market" would provide such an advocate with one of his points. The authors point out that the tendency towards a reduction of wages in certain trades is due to the pressure exercised upon the retail trader—and through him upon the wholesale trader, the manufacturer, and, finally, upon the workman—by the consumer who desires to buy in the cheapest market. But they do not point out, even if they perceive it, that consumer and workman are in reality one, and that it is his desire qua consumer to buy cheaply which causes his wages qua workman to fall. The decline and ultimate disappearance of the hand-loom weavers is contrasted with the survival and aggrandisement of the hand-made-paper maker and the hand-made-boot maker. Mr. and Mrs. Webb attribute it to the fact that the hand-loomers cut down their prices to compete with the new machines, while the boot-makers and papermakers insisted on maintaining theirs. That, no doubt, is partly the reason, but may it not also have been due to the fact that the papermakers and shoemakers produced something which the machine could not imitate, while the hand-loomers did not? The authors, indeed, appear to hold that the higher the wages asked for by the workman the more workmen will be employed; which is quite contrary to the view of the despised middle-class man, who is under the impression that it is not so much what a man earns as what he produces that encourages the employment of others.

Every man, however, who reads the book can form his own conclusions on this and other vexed questions. The important thing is that the authors have provided such an ample array of facts, so carefully collated and arranged, that even the general reader can find interest in a subject which has hitherto been attractive in inverse proportion to its importance. In so doing Mr. and Mrs. Webb have deserved well of their generation.

IN SOUTHERN SEAS.

Wild Life in Southern Seas. By Louis Becke. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

THIS is a book of sketches, written with that intimate knowledge and humorous expression of life in the South Sea Islands which have made the reputation of the author, and you will not read them without a longing to "exceed, evade, erump" at once to one of those enchanted islets where it is always afternoon; where a man need not toil or spin, and may look back on a fair day's work when he has sat on the beach with hibiscus flowers in his hair, smoking cigarettes and playing the concertina. For exercise you may fahahelle, which is Samoan for surf-swimming, the game which "takes possession of your innermost soul like unto cycling and golf"; and when you read Mr. Becke's sketch of "A Noble Sea Game" you will want to fahahelle very much indeed. They are absurd, irresponsible people, these South Sea Islanders; good-natured too, for even a cannibal may be a pleasant companion between meals; and their language is delightful. A little girl is a tama-fafine-toatsi.

As a specimen sketch, take the paper on "My Native Servants." Mr. Becke, landing on Niué—which has rightly lost its former name of Savage Island—stepped into his new house, and

"there, sitting on the floor in solemn silence, with their backs to the wall, were about fifty women. They had come to seek the post of nurse to the white man's tama-fafine-toatsi. On being requested to clear out, they said 'they would come again in the morning with some friends, and talk the matter over.'

Moemoe, the cook, was a promising young man. When shown the kitchen "he said 'All right,' sat down on a stool, and, asking me for my tobacco pouch, began to fill his pipe." Left to himself, Moemoe appears to have forgotten that he was a cook, but remembered that he was a man :

"At noon I went out to the cook-house to see how my chef was getting on. He had taken off his coat and shirt, but was still sitting down, playing an accordion to an audience of a dozen young women, all more or less in a state of deshabille—even for Niué women."

Niué women! The phrase sounds familiar even on this side of the world.

Hakala was engaged as head nurse, because she was a widow. But it was soon found that Hakala had two children, to say nothing of a husband, all of whom she wished to share her mat in her master's house. But Hakala was nothing to Hakupu, the nursemaid, who tied the white man's tama fafine-toatsi on her back, and balanced herself on the edge of the coral reef. Hakupu was soundly whipped, but she had her consolations :

"We heard the murmur of voices from the cook-house. Walking softly over, I peeped in through the window. The place was in semi-darkness, but there was still enough light to fill me with wrath at what I saw. There, stretched upon the floor, face down, was the under-nurse, supporting her chin upon her hands, a cigarette in her mouth, and that villain of a Moemoe lubricating her glossy brown back with a freshly opened tin of my Danish butter, into which he now and again thrust his fingers."

But this island of innocent, deceitful, genial, and altogether delightfully improper people, has its drawbacks. Literally, as well as metaphorically, there are flies on the Niué natives.

"You meet a native. He looks like a perambulating figure composed of flies. As he passes he gives himself a vigorous brush with a branch he carries. You do the same. Two black clouds arise and assimilate, and then divide forces. If the native is a bigger man than you, he gets most."

Missionaries, too, have not been an un-mixed blessing to the South Sea Islanders. Mr. Becke has many good words to say for individual missionaries; but he is very severe on them in one matter. They insist that their converts shall wear clothes. Compulsory clothing has begotten consumption and other pulmonary disorders which have almost depopulated some of the islands. Wild Life in Southern Seas is not exclusively humorous. "Hino the Apostate" is as pathetic as anyone could wish. And here and there the author has inserted slabs of information—geographical, geological, and otherwise. These may be skipped by the judicious reader in search of amusement. But of amusement he will find plenty. For no one has written with such knowledge and humour of the Southern Seas since "The Earl and the Doctor" wrote South Sea Bubbles, and that must be a quarter of a century ago.

BRIEFER MENTION.

The Prince of Wales: An Account of his Career, including his Birth, Education, Travels, Marriage, and Home Life; and Philanthropic, Social and Political Work. (Grant Richards.)

AS this elegant tome has been reviewed at length in the daily papers, we presume it has a popular interest: literary merit it has none. It is a conscientious but tiresome narrative reconstructed from old newspaper articles, paragraphs and memoirs, interspersed with venerable pictures and portraits. Here is a specimen sentence, a portentous announcement, taken at random. "When dinner is over His Royal Highness gives a signal for smoking to begin, then an adjournment is made to the large drawing-room." The cover of the book is rather pretty. It would make a nice present for—say, a lady who keeps a Berlin-wool shop.

A Dictionary of English Authors. By R. Farquharson Sharp. (Redway.)

THE design of this book of reference is a happy one. Mr. Sharp treats of 700 living and dead British authors, and to each devotes from one to three columns of space, in which he gives as tersely as possible the leading facts of their biographies, and a chronological list of their works and of the most important works about them. But the value of such a compilation must, of course, depend upon its absolute accuracy, even in minor details, and we regret to find that, judged by such tests as we have applied, Mr. Sharp is not, so far at least as literary history is concerned, absolutely accurate. Let us look, for example, at two sixteenth century writers. The first is Henry Vaughan. Mr. Sharp, in a half-column notice, spells the poet's birthplace as Skethiog instead of Skethrog, and states that he matriculated at Jesus College, Oxford, in 1628. Probably he did not matriculate at Jesus at all; but if he did, it was certainly not in 1628, as he was then only six years old. Slips, perhaps, but then a slippery biographical dictionary is not of much use. We turn to John Donne, and the errors become more magnificent. Mr. Sharp attributes to Donne two works which were not his. The Donne's Satyr of 1662 was by his son, who was inconvenient enough to have the same Christian name; and The Collection of Letters of 1660 was edited by the same son and made by Sir Toby Matthews. A few only of the letters in it are of Donne's writing. Then Isaak Walton cannot have edited an edition of Donne's Poetical Works in 1779, for he had been dead the greater part of a century; and we have some doubt whether Dr. Hannah did so in 1843 or Sir John Simeon in 1858. At any rate, those editions are not in the British Museum, nor have we come across them elsewhere. So far as living writers are concerned, Mr. Sharp appears to have obtained most of his information from themselves: his list is fairly complete, but considering who are included, Mr. Stopford Brooke, Mr. A. H. Bullen, Mr. Sidney Lee, Mr. Francis Thompson, Dr. Grosart, and a good many others ought not to have been left out. We suppose that Mr. George Meredith did not authorise Mr. Sharp to include among his novels one called Mary Bertrand which a Mr. Francis Meredith published in 1860.

Chambers's Biographical Dictionary. Edited by David Patrick, LL.D., and Francis Hindes Groome. (W. & R. Chambers.)

THE sub-title of this book—"The Great of All Times and Ages"—had been better omitted. Too many small men of the present time are included—men who have no pretensions to greatness. The volume contains eccentricities and flippancies which are frankly claimed as virtues by the editors :

"The world's Upper Ten Thousand, these mainly; still, the lower, even the lowest, have not been wholly neglected. For we include assassins like Abd-ul-Hamid and Ravachol, knaves like Arthur Orton and Jabez Balfour, madmen like Herostratus and Nietzsche, impostors like Joseph Smith and Mme. Blavatsky, traitors like Pickle the Spy and Benedict Arnold, tagrag and bobtail—every other page offers examples."

But with all its faults, if these be faults, this Biographical Dictionary strikes us as being very well done. It is wonderfully comprehensive; and after testing a great many of the articles we can pronounce them both useful and accurate. Shakespeare receives 4½ columns—the longest notice. Napoleon I. gets a quarter of a column less. Wordsworth has 3½ columns. Nelson has 2½ columns, Wellington the same. Voltaire 2 columns, Milton the same, Cowper the same, Mohammed the same. Cardinal Newman 1½ columns, Ruskin the same. The entries are well up to date, though in their desire to make them so the editors describe Mr. Bernard Shaw's Plays as having been published in 1897, whereas we still await them. On the other hand, it is gratifying to find under the name of George Thomson, the friend of Burns, the reference, "See his correspondence, edited by Cuthbert Hadden, 1898." Mr. Hadden's book has just been published. Great families, as well as individuals, are treated; thus three useful and informing columns are given to the house of Stuart. Difficult notices which we have examined strike us as very justly written. Such a man as George Fox, the founder of Quakerism, affords a good test, and we find his career summarised sanely and fairly. We note that Mr. Jerome K. Jerome is described, without further explanation, as "the founder of the 'New Humour.'" This is a meaningless statement even to his intelligent contemporaries; what will it be to posterity? If Mr. Jerome had really founded a new humour in the serious sense of the words, we should not have expected his notice to be shorter than that of the saint of the same name.

Of course there are omissions. Mr. B. W. Leader was as eligible for mention as scores of other living men who are given a place. We note also that John Thomas Smith, whose biography of Nollekens and topographical works on London entitled him to mention, is ignored.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 22, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

THE WAR OF THE WORLDS.

BY H. G. WELLS.

HERE in volume form is Mr. Wells's narrative of the terrific attempt made by certain of the inhabitants of Mars to conquer this little world of ours. The story, as everybody knows, ran through Pearson's Magazine last year, where, indeed, many read it who usually find serial fiction tiresome. Since then Mr. Wells has altered and re-written much of the story. The dedication runs thus: "To my brother Frank Wells, this rendering of his idea." (W. Heinemann. 303 pp. 6s.)

THE TRIUMPH OF DEATH.

BY GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO.

A TRANSLATION by Georgina Harding—the first English translation of this remarkable example of d'Annunzio's genius. Certain passages have been toned down where the author's point of view was a little too fresh for English readers. The Triumph of Death has had a great vogue in Italy and France. (W. Heinemann. 315 pp. 6s.)

DR. DUMÁNY'S WIFE.

BY MAURUS JÓKAI.

A TRANSLATION, by F. Steinitz, from the Hungarian. This is that bugbear of some readers—a story within a story. It begins with a railway accident, luridly described, in which the narrator saves the life of a millionaire's son. The boy is carried to his father's arms in Paris, and the same evening the millionaire tells the rescuer the history of his life. It begins on page 68 and continues until page 308, and is sufficiently surprising. But we do not care for this indirect method of making romances. (Jarrold & Sons. 312 pp. 6s.)

JOHN GILBERT, YEOMAN.

BY R. G. SOANS.

A ROMANCE of the Commonwealth. It is also a romance of Sussex; as much, we fancy, because its exemplar, Lorna Doone, was a romance of Exmoor, as for any other reason. John Gilbert, Yeoman, writes the story in the first person, and is pleasantly archaic the while. "Hath" for "has" and "wi" for "with" and "o" for "of" and "'tis" for "it is"—these are among his verbal tricks. His bailiff was one Alfred Mynns, which good Kentish cricketers may resent. There are plenty of hard knocks, both in battle and out of it, in the book; aye, marry, and there are comely wenches too. A pretty enough piece of Wardour-street romance for those that have leisure. (Warne & Co. 488 pp. 6s.)

THE CONFESSION OF STEPHEN WHAPSHARE.

BY EMMA BROOKE.

A NEW novel by the author of A Superfluous Woman is not lightly to be set aside. Here we have a woman who was more than superfluous—a positive hindrance—"a woman with a dead soul." Her husband (who tells the story) endured her for seven years, and men could endure her no longer; for another woman—a woman with a Hill-top soul—had come into his life. So he administered a double dose of chloral and spent the rest of his life in good works. (Hutchinson & Co. 297 pp. 6s.)

MISS BALMAINE'S PAST.

BY B. M. CROKER.

A STORY of love, misunderstanding, sorrow, re-understanding, and love again. The hero is at first an engineer and ultimately a lord. The heroine is Rosamund of Romney Marsh. They are brought together not by a mad bull, but by a tramp, who does just as well. A facile, glib holiday book. According to one of the fly-leaves of the volume Mrs. Croker's novels now total sixteen. (Chatto & Windus. 325 pp. 6s.)

THE FOURTH NAPOLEON.

BY CHARLES BENJAM.

A long-winded but very dexterous romance of modern political life in France. The hero is Walter Sadler, a young barrister, with a phenomenal resemblance to the first Napoleon. In the year 189—, weary and dispirited, he seeks Paris, and is there taken for a veritable Buonaparte and elevated to the dignity of king. The story gives his adventures among a company of unscrupulous intriguers. One needs a week's holiday to read the book, but there will be entertainment on the way. (Heinemann. 600 pp. 6s.)

THE GOWN AND THE MAN.

BY PRESTON ST. GEORGE.

AN historical novel. The period, it is scarcely necessary to say, is Stuart. John Hampden's denunciation of ship-money begins it, and the execution of Charles comes at the end. There is also one Colonel Cromwell. In the interim Puritanism is discussed as fully as any reader can want. A quiet, serious story. (Digby, Long & Co. 345 pp. 6s.)

THE CEDAR STAR.

BY MARY E. MANN.

A STUDY of a wilful temperament. The heroine is Betty, who begins by having her own way as a child, and continues to have it until sorrow and suffering are hers. A charming book, beginning with good chapters of child life, and containing memorable figures, notably Billy the curate and Betty herself. Betty is, indeed, quite a discovery. (Hutchinson & Co. 347 pp. 6s.)

QUEENS AND KNAVES.

BY CELIA NASH.

HERE we have modern life with a vengeance. The transpontine stage offers nothing more chromatic. It is the story of a wicked Jew, drawn strictly on accepted melodramatic lines, and his victims. Could his name be anything but Steinsen? There is the usual run of triumphant villainy, and then the downfall. What need to say more? (Digby & Long. 212 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE MAN IN THE CHECK SUIT.

BY T. W. H. DELF.

A WORK which, according to the publisher, "will be found to appeal to the masculine rather than the feminine reader"; because, "for once in a way, 'LOVE' plays but a small and subordinate part." In place of "LOVE" we have provincial humours, the punishment of fraud, and the restitution of rights. The man in the check suit is an unknown benefactor, of a kind familiar to the readers of Dickens. If there is no distinction of style or thought in the book, there is plenty of compensating high spirits. (Jarrold & Sons. 317 pp. 6s.)

A CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

BY MRS. HUGH FRASER.

A SMART, worldly story of a widow's infatuation for a young man whose debts and discretion bid fair for a long time to forbid him marrying either well or badly. In the end, or rather in the middle of the story, the worldly widow realises the hopelessness of her suit. "I've made a mistake; but I'll never make any more. I'll leave you alone to your heart's content in future, and we'll put up the shutters in the sentiment shop." And they do, but meanwhile the author has started another love affair of a more idyllic kind, and in this case the shutters remain down. (Macmillan & Co. 251 pp. 6s.)

THE STORY OF THE BEAUTIFUL GIRL

WHO WAS HATED BY HER OWN

FATHER. AND OTHER TALES.

BY A BARRISTER.

SIX stories of wrongful conviction, quashed wills, attempted murder, conspiracy, &c. We do not know why "a Barrister" gives the stories such needlessly long titles. They are all named on the pattern of the first. (Horace Cox. 109 pp. 1s.)

DEVIL'S APPLES.

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON.

THIS is a simple, moving story by the author of In a Grass Country and A Soul Astry. The headings of the four parts of the story—Renunciation, Temptation, Degradation, Expiation—tell much. And it is all foreordained that Jenny Maxwell's hair shall be sprinkled with grey, and that "no hospital in London," "no poverty-stricken slum," shall be without her "gentle presence" when the "lover of her youth" returns "very quietly one wet afternoon in November." (F. V. White & Co. 302 pp. 6s.)

REVIEWS.

Derelicts. By William J. Locke.
(John Lane.)

THIS is a really fine novel. Its theme is mainly the sad one of two lives—one wrecked by crime, the other by illness and misfortune—finding, rescuing, and protecting each other. Stephen Joyce is a man of education who has given way to the temptations of debt. He has committed fraud, and has suffered two years' imprisonment. The story takes him upon his emergence from prison—hopeless, full of the profoundest self-contempt. It follows him in his painful quest for employment, and shows him in the direst straits of poverty befriended, to his amazement, by a little warm-hearted concert-singer. She coaxes up the dormant fires of ambition and self-confidence by the mere breath of her child-like and happy sympathy. Yvonne's relations to Stephen throughout the book are touched with the most delicate and gentle feeling. She is all pity, all trust, to this outcast, the struggles of whose weak will are so arduous. She becomes little by little the light of his eyes, yet in the most natural way in the world never looks on him as a lover. Thus she slips into marriage with his cousin, a dignified and worthy ecclesiastic, consenting she scarce knows why:

"Yvonne would give any man her head, if he whimpered or clamoured for it," continued Geraldine, rising to her feet, "and then tell you in her pathetic way, 'But he wanted it so, dear.' And there isn't a man living who would be good enough to Yvonne."

What strikes one as of peculiar excellence is the skill with which Mr. Locke, in portraying the soft and sympathetic nature of Yvonne, has avoided the facile error of conveying that she is all an amiable passivity. When the final crisis arrives (the supreme crisis that calls for determinate action in all of us sooner or later in our lives), Yvonne, tender, yielding-natured as a child, takes her courage in both hands, and with not a quail goes forth to inflict deadly pain on behalf of the man she loves. When she did not love, but merely liked and respected, she was passive, and allowed herself to be married to a man in whose society, after six months, she felt herself small, wicked, and bored. O to exchange the dull routine of a cathedral town and rectory for a month of the old, easy, irregular Bohemianism of a concert-singer's flat in town! "And, oh, Dina," she confides to her intimate friend, "I should so much like to hear a man say 'damn' again!"

A quotation from an interview with this friend will best illustrate Mr. Locke's manner, and the situation at the rectory after Yvonne's marriage with the Canon.

"I don't think you would do very well married, Dina," says Yvonne. "You are too independent. A woman has to give in so much, you know, and do so much pretending, which you could never do."

"And why pretend?"

"Oh, I don't know. You have to—in lots of things. I suppose we women were born for it. Men have all kinds of strange feelings, and they expect us to have the same, and we haven't, Dina; and yet they would be hurt and miserable if we told them so—so we have to pretend."

Geraldine looked at her with an expression of pain on her strong face, and then she bent down—Yvonne was on a low stool at her side—and flung her arms about her. "Oh, my dear little philosopher, I wish to God you could have loved a man—and married him! That is happiness—no need of pretending. I knew it once—years ago. It only lasted a few months, for he died before we announced our marriage—no one has ever known. Only you, dear, now. Try and love your husband, dear; give him your soul and passion. It is the only thing I can tell you to help you, dear. Then all the troubles will go. Oh, darling, to love a man vehemently—they say it is a woman's greatest curse. It isn't; it is the greatest blessing of God on her."

"You are speaking as men have spoken," replied Yvonne, in a whisper, holding her friend's hand tightly. "I never knew before—but God will never bless me—like that."

Nevertheless, Yvonne is blessed in the end.

* * * *

Weeping Ferry, and Other Stories. By Margaret L. Woods.
(Longmans.)

IN Weeping Ferry Mrs. Woods returns to the pastoral motive of her first powerful book, A Village Tragedy. That she quite succeeds in recapturing the note of that poignant and uncompromising bit of realism we should hesitate to say; yet the present story is certainly, neither in structure nor setting, unworthy of its writer. Like its predecessor, the tale passes in the quiet Midland country near Oxford, with its sluggish river, and its elms, and its water-meadows. Long Marston, with its famous ferry, is the precise locality chosen. The landscape and the life it shrouds are treated in the delicately observant way so characteristic of Mrs. Woods. There is little or none of that atmosphere of mingled antiquity and pagan sensuousness which Mr. Hardy loves to throw about his peasants, the characters are plain country men and women, natural and life-like, full of the practical common sense so inevitable in a life where bread is won quite literally by the sweat of one's brow. Both points of view are true; it is merely that one is Mr. Hardy's, the other Mrs. Woods'. A touch of the uncanny is introduced in the old deaf Catherine, said to be a witch by the villagers, and resorted to for charms and spells. She it is who supplies Bessie with a so-called "love-charm" whereby to win back her lost gentleman lover. We confess that we should have liked the book better without the bit of superstition, a thing so difficult to render plausible in a novel, and surely at best disputable art. The love-story itself is well enough, although the hero, Geoffrey Meade, the young man lodging at the farm, and ostensibly "reading," is somewhat colourless. But to our mind the charm in the book is Bessie's mother, the shrewd, tender-hearted, bustling, market-woman, with her capable hand and secret heart. Her colloquy with Tryphena, a child of whom we would gladly know more, is irresistible:

"Mrs. Vyne," said Tryphena imperiously.

Elizabeth measured the dough on the board with her eye and pulled a bit off before she replied:

"Yes, Miss Tryphena."

"Why is blue cheese blue?"

Mrs. Vyne deposited the superfluous dough in the big red pan at her side, and powdered the remainder with flour. Then she answered mildly:

"Some folks do say it's the stuff that's put in it."

"But you don't put stuff in yours, do you?"

"Oh, dear, no, Miss," and Mrs. Vyne smiled.

"Then why is it blue?"

Mrs. Vyne passed the rolling-pin over the dough several times.

"Other folks say it's the land," she replied at length, with the same mild impartiality.

"But you made it the same when you were at the Meades, didn't you? So what makes it blue?"

"There's folks do say 'tis the season of the year," returned Mrs. Vyne, carefully shaping the two balls of her loaf; then clapping the smaller one firmly on to the larger, she added with sudden frank contempt: "But they none of 'em knows what they're talkin' about."

Bessie Vyne's story is a sad one. Her love-charm proved to be a poison, and she is found dead one wild night at the door of the witch's cottage. She is well and patiently drawn throughout, yet we feel that the charm of the book is less in the narrative or the characters than in the background—the sentiment of the external things that gird in life. The scene where Bessie's body is carried back to the farm is a fine bit of writing:

"At break of day they brought her home across the fields. The floods were no longer vapourously still under a grey sky. A fresh breeze bent the willows and hurried the surface of the water along in tiny crests that caught the light. An orange sunset shot up its ragged edges half-way to the zenith, and reflected itself on the distant water in obscure yellow. The body was laid on a low truck, which was just long enough for it, and covered with a sheet. Elizabeth dragged it and Catharine assisted with her hand on the shaft of the handle. Sometimes she looked back, sometimes peered in Elizabeth's face, with a look half sympathetic, half terrified."

The three shorter stories which make up the book call for little comment. "An Episode" has most stuff in it. "Miss Brighteyes and Mr. Queer" is on the verge of silliness.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 22, 1898.

No. 1342, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. |    |    | HALF-YEARLY. |    |    | QUARTERLY. |    |    |
|---|---------|----|----|--------------|----|----|------------|----|----|
|   | £       | s. | d. | £            | s. | d. | £          | s. | d. |
| If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .                   | 0       | 13 | 0  | 0            | 6  | 6  | 0          | 3  | 3  |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .                   | 0       | 15 | 6  | 6            | 7  | 8  | 0          | 3  | 10 |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0       | 18 | 0  | 0            | 9  | 0  | 0          | 4  | 6  |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W. C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

A METHODICAL correspondent who has a passion for preserving literary odds and ends, and a capacity for finding them when needed, sends us the following advertisement. It was forwarded wholesale through the post by Lewis Carroll at the end of the year 1893:

"For over twenty-five years I have made it my chief object, with regard to my books, that they should be of the best workmanship attainable for the price. And I am deeply annoyed to find that the last issue of Through the Looking-Glass, consisting of the Sixtieth Thousand, has been put on sale without its being noticed that most of the pictures have failed so much in the printing as to make the book not worth buying. I request all holders of copies to send them to Messrs. Macmillan & Co., 29, Bedford-street, Covent Garden, with their names and addresses; and copies of the next issue shall be sent them in exchange.

Instead, however, of destroying the unsold copies, I propose to utilise them by giving them away to mechanics' institutes, village reading-rooms, and similar institutions where the means for purchasing such books are scanty. Accordingly, I invite applications for such gifts, addressed to me, 'care of Messrs. Macmillan.' Every such application should be signed by some responsible person, and should state how far they are able to buy books for themselves, and what is the average number of readers.

I take this opportunity of announcing that, at any future time I should wish to communicate anything to my readers, I will do so by advertising in the 'agony' column of some of the daily papers on the first Tuesday in the month.
LEWIS CARROLL.

Christmas, 1893."

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "I read with interest your 'Book Reviews Reviewed' columns every week; and it may interest some of your readers to know how Alice in Wonderland was received on its first appearance. I cannot discover that its merits were fully perceived, or its success predicted, by any critic. The Times, reviewing the book among a dozen other Christmas books, gave high praise to Mr. Tenniel's drawings, but concerning Lewis Carroll's text only remarked that it was 'an excellent piece of nonsense.' The Spectator did not, I think, review the book at all on its first appearance. The Athenæum indulged, of course, in a little dragon-slaying:

"This is a dream-story; but who can, in cold blood, manufacture a dream with all its loops and ties, and loose threads, and entanglements, and inconsistencies, and passages which lead to nothing, at the end of which Sleep's most diligent pilgrim never arrives. Mr. Carroll has laboured hard to heap together strange adventures and heterogeneous combinations, and we acknowledge the hard labour. Mr. Tenniel, again, is square and grim and uncouth in his illustrations, howbeit clever, even sometimes to the verge of graudeur, as is the artist's habit. We fancy that any real child might be more puzzled than enchanted by this stiff, overwrought story."

In his sermon at Christ Church, Oxford, on Sunday morning, Canon Sanday, Margaret Professor of Divinity, referred to the death of Lewis Carroll. We quote a few words:

"Might they not say that from their courts at Christ Church there had flowed into the literature of their own time a rill bright and sparkling, healthgiving, and purifying wherever its waters extended? . . . They in that place knew how fully the man bore out the promise of his books. . . . They knew his fondness for children and what trouble he took to make them happier and better. But, most of all, they knew what was the fount and spring from which all these varied activities took their direction. They knew how behind them all there lay a deep background of religion—a religion severely quiet and retiring, like his character—a religion almost of the closet after the pattern of the Gospel."

Mr. Dodgson's own manner as a preacher was earnest and slow. For several years he delivered the New Year sermon at St. Mary's, Guildford.

LEWIS CARROLL was as fortunate in his illustrations as any writer could be. Under any circumstances the Alice books would have won tremendous favour, but not a little of their popularity must, none the less, be due to Sir John Tenniel's drawings. Artist and author have rarely been in such perfect accord. Again, in The Hunting of the Snark, Mr. Henry Holiday is the poet's very faithful and admirable ally, catching the spirit of the nonsense to perfection. His beaver, looking "unaccountably shy," is the prince of beavers. And in Sylvie and Bruno, Mr. Furniss did some of his best work. One reason of this high level of excellence is undoubtedly Lewis Carroll's interest and desire to have everything quite "right," and according to his own ideas. Of no man may it more truly be said that until he was satisfied he was dissatisfied.

By one of those curious and not uncommon coincidences, Lewis Carroll's friend, the father of the original Alice—Dean

Liddell—died within four days of the author of the Wonderland books. Dean Liddell's name will ever be associated with that of Dr. Scott, Jowett's predecessor as Master of Balliol, for their invaluable lexicon. The fame of Liddell and Scott is inextinguishable. It may not here be out of place to tell again an old story of Dean Liddell and an undergraduate. "What Sophocles do you know?" the Dean asked. "Oh, I know all Sophocles," was the answer. "Really! I wish I could say the same." The victim began to translate "Where did you get that from?" asked the Dean with reference to a "howler." "Oh, Liddell and Scott." "Then," said Liddell with much gravity, "it was Dr. Scott's doing and not mine."

FRANCE is just now offering the spectacle of M. Zola standing almost alone as the champion of justice. It is a fine thing when a man of age and reputation can place public spirit before private welfare. When the champion is a writer literary men all over the world may justly feel proud.

On this subject Mr. F. Norreys Connell writes: "May I suggest that it would be a graceful act on the part of the literary men of Britain publicly to thank M. Zola for the splendid civic action he has lately taken? Though it be of little moment to us in these islands whether a Semite or Aryan should have sought to enrich himself at the expense of French militarism, surely it comes very near to our professional pride that the one great citizen who dares in the teeth of popular prejudice, at the imminent risk of his commercial ruin, to demand 'more light' should also be one of the greatest living brothers of the pen. Traditionally, I am of the other party, but at this juncture I esteem it an honour to sign myself M. Zola's most Humble Admirer."

MEANWHILE Björnsterne Björnson has written to M. Zola in terms of most enthusiastic approbation:

"Very honoured Master,—How I envy you! How I wish that I were in your place, in order to be able to render to country and to humanity a service like that rendered by you! . . . Be assured that Europe admires what you have done, even if everybody does not assent to everything that you have said. I have always held it as an opinion, for my part, that the work of a romance writer or a poet bears the same relation to himself personally as notes do to the bank whence they are issued, and which should have in hand securities corresponding to its deliveries. We now see that if your works are circulated all over the world to increase courage and enrich the heart of humanity, it is because you are yourself a man of courage and of heart."

MR. DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY writes, from Glan y Dow, Ponsarn, near Abergelle: "By the courtesy of Mr. J. N. Maskelynes who has generously placed the Egyptian Hall and his lantern apparatus at my disposal, I shall deliver a lecture on Sunday evening, the 30th January, on the Dreyfus case. By the aid of highly magnified photographic reproductions of the letter attributed to Captain Dreyfus and of the man's real handwriting, I hope to prove to demonstration that they could not by any possibility have been written by the same hand. This view is endorsed by twelve of the ablest experts now living. May I beg you to publish this letter, and to allow me to say that any person desiring to attend may receive a ticket of admission by sending to me a stamped directed envelope?"

The approaching arrival of Mr. Rudyard Kipling at the Cape—the poet must now be passing the Line—is exciting great interest in South Africa. It is pointed out that there are already many allusions in his works to this part of the world. At St. Simon's Town the "flat iron" described in "Judson and the Empire" in Many Inventions, founded on a famous incident on the Zambesi, is proudly shown. Mr. Kipling's most striking South African verse is perhaps:

"To the home of the floods and thunder,
To her pale dry heaty blue—
To lift of the great Cape combers,
And the smell of the baked Karoo.
To the growl of the sluicy stamp-head—
To the reef and the water-gold,
To the last and the largest Empire,
To the map that is half unrolled!"

In another place he speaks of the Cape's vineyards, of its heath and lilies, and of Table Mountain; and in "The Native Born" there is the mention of the "Empire to the northward" and the allusion to the fashion in which the Cape Colony has changed owners—"Snatched and bartered of the free hand to hand." We understand that the present is Mr. Rudyard Kipling's second visit to South Africa.

Apropos of the curious little slip in Dutch in Mr. Bryce's South Africa, mentioned last week, it may be of interest to state that Her Majesty's High Commissioner for South Africa adheres to his determination to master the taal. Sir Alfred Milner is now taking lessons in Dutch with his private secretary twice a week from the Rev. Adrian Hofmeyr, of Cape Town.

THE quaintest comment upon the ACADEMY'S awards comes from Birmingham. A writer in the Birmingham Post refuses to believe in the existence of Mr. Phillips. "Is there," he asks, "a real Mr. Phillips, or is it only the mystic name conferred by the ACADEMY on some ethereal and hopeless ideal? Does it cover a whole theory of 'excellence,' concealed like the darker implications of 'chops and tomato sauce'? Is it a pregnant mode of telling all the others that their work is but as nothingness? It behoves the ACADEMY next to produce Mr. Phillips as a guarantee of good faith." Considering that Mr. Phillips is descended from the Birmingham Quaker family of Lloyd, Birmingham should know more of him. The local booksellers must look to it.

THE following extract from a letter, which we cut from Wednesday's Chronicle, affords an instance of the woes of poets. In this case Mr. Stephen Phillips is the victim:

"SIR,—In a most able and kindly review of my poems, which appears in to-day's Chronicle, there are several misquotations, which I cannot allow to pass. One couplet is quoted thus:

'Fell; and existence lean, in shy dead-gray,
Without steadily, starved it away;'

Thus the second line is not only made into nonsense, but does not even scan. The lines should, of course, read:

'Fell; and existence lean in sky dead-grey,
Witholding steadily starved it away.'

To the foregoing complaint the Editor of the Chronicle appends the following apology: "We greatly regret these misprints, but the fault is wholly our reviewer's. As he is a distinguished critic, his 'copy' was followed by the printer without question, and in every instance it read as the words appeared in our columns." But distinguished critics are precisely the gentlemen who most require to see a proof. They write badly, they do not spell very well, and at making extracts they are——.

MR. WILLIAM GREEN is a bold man. He sends to the Morning Post the following letter:

"How to see all the new books is a question of widespread interest. Readers peruse the criticisms in the papers, and then desire to see the books criticised in order to judge whether to purchase or to order from the library for a leisurely perusal. To see an attractive book is to desire either to read it carefully or to possess it. If readers wish to see all the new books they must unite in a society for this purpose. I should be glad to hear from those interested in the subject."

It is not clear to us why people should be enabled to see all the new books. They had better read the old ones. But if they must see them, why not enter a bookshop for the purpose? Although Mr. Green says that seeing a book is more an incentive to purchasing it than reading a review thereof, we imagine that his Society might not unfitly be named "The Society for Completing the Ruin of Booksellers."

WE cut from the current Dome the following striking little poem by Mr. Laurence Binyon, a young and observant poet of London life:

"THE PARALYTIC.

"He stands where the young faces pass and throng;
His blank eyes tremble in the noonday sun;
He sees all life, the lovely and the strong,
Before him run.
"Eager and swift, or group'd and loitering, they Follow their dreams, on busy errands sped,
Planning delight and triumph; but all day
He shakes his head."

WHEN Sir Walter Besant praises London on a platform—and he does this very often—he generally has the good fortune to provoke distinguished opposition. Not long ago he said that London is beautiful with such emphasis that his own chairman, Lord Rosebery, demurred. Last week, at the College of Preceptors, he claimed so much for London's brain that the Bishop of London rose and declared that London had produced comparatively few distinguished men of her own. The bishop quoted the opinion of Dr. Stubbs that London had always been the purse, seldom the head, and never the heart of England. And now the names of lots of distinguished Londoners are being sent to newspaper offices. London produced:

|           |          |               |
|-----------|----------|---------------|
| Chaucer.  | Canning. | Fox.          |
| Spenser.  | Lamb.    | Beaconsfield. |
| Pope.     | Milton.  | Ruskin.       |
| Keats.    | Gray.    | Byron.        |
| Browning. | Turner.  |               |

It is true that many writers of great ability still elect to be born in the country; but they nearly all come to London to write the moment it is worth their while.

A QUIANT and unexpected glimpse of Mark Twain is afforded in Mr. Alfred P. Hillier's newly published Raid and Reform, in a chapter consisting of extracts from a diary kept by Mr. Hillier when he was a political prisoner in Pretoria. The prison life is minutely described by Mr. Hillier, and it is after describing some of his discomforts that he introduces the following passage:

"Mr. Clemens (Mark Twain) visited us yesterday, and gave us a bright hour of his conversation. . . . He spoke of prison life as in many respects an ideal existence, the one he had ever sought, and never found—healthy, undisturbed, plenty of repose, no fatigue, no distraction—such a life as enabled Bunyan to write the Pilgrim's Progress and Cervantes Don Quixote. . . . For himself, Mark Twain continued, he could conceive of nothing better than such a life; he would willingly change places with any one of us, and, with such an opportunity as had never yet been offered him before, would write a book—the book of his life. Of course, some of us failed to look at it in this philosophic light, and he admitted that it was not always easy to discover the concealed compensation which invariably existed under apparently adverse circumstances. Still, this was such a clear case that he would assuredly, in the interview which he was to have with the President on the following day, endeavour to get our sentences extended. For Clement—one of the prisoners who improperly spelt his name with a 't'—descended, like himself, on the left-hand side from a long papal ancestry, he would endeavour to get thirty years."

IN the new volume of the Edinburgh Edition of Stevenson (to which we shall return later) occurs this memorable sentence, in a letter from the novelist to a friend, concerning his method of work: "I am still 'a slow study,' and sit for a long while silent on my eggs: unconscious thought, there is the only method: macerate your subject, let it boil slow, then take the lid off and look in—and there your stuff is—good or bad." The next volume of the Edinburgh Edition, which will also be the last, will contain St. Ives.

IBSEN'S seventieth birthday will be celebrated on March 20. On that day a complete nine-volume edition of his works in German will be published in Berlin. Christiania, we presume, will adopt methods of its own.

MR. ROBERT BUCHANAN issues from his own depôt in Gerrard-street, Soho, a cheap edition of Saint Abe and His Seven Wives. This poetical tale of Mormonism was written in 1870, "when" (writes Mr. Buchanan in a bibliographical note) "all the Cockney bastions of criticism were swarming with . . . sharpshooters on the look-out for the 'd—d Scotchman' who had dared to denounce Logrolling." Mr. Buchanan recalls the kindly reception given to the book, alike for its poetry and humour, when it appeared anonymously. He writes:

"The present is the first cheap edition of the book, and the first which bears the author's name on the title-page . . . I shall be quite prepared to hear now, on the authority of the newspapers, that the eulogy given to St. Abe on its first appearance was all a mistake, and that the writer possesses no humour whatsoever."

We hope that Mr. Buchanan will have no such experience, but he still protests too much; he is too like the "fretful porpentine." "Printed cackle about books," he writes, "will always be about as valuable as spoken cackle about them." But the best spoken cackle about books is very good, and critics can but cackle their best.

MR. EDWARD HERON-ALLEN's literal prose translation of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam and facsimile of the MS. in the Bodleian (H. S. Nichols & Co.) is before us. After FitzGerald's version this certainly is the most interesting contribution to Omar literature. Mr. Heron-Allen has worked long at his task, and it is presented with perfect order. The poem consists of 158 quatrains, and some idea of how FitzGerald (whom Mr. Heron-Allen always alludes to wrongly as Fitzgerald) worked may be gathered from the two following stanzas—the 149th and 155th:

I desire a little ruby wine and a book of verses, just enough to keep me alive, and half a loaf is needful, and then, that I and thou should sit in a desolate place,
is better than the kingdom of a sultan.

If a loaf of wheaten-bread be forthcoming,
a gourd of wine and a thigh-bone of mutton, and then if thou and I be sitting in the wilderness—that would be a joy to which no sultan can set bounds."

From these twain FitzGerald produced his A Book of Verses underneath the Bough, A Jug of Wine, a Loaf of Bread—and Thou Beside me singing in the Wilderness— Oh, Wilderness were Paradise enow."

MR. W. P. JAMES, in his interesting literary notes in the St. James's Gazette, reminds us that the two most eminent men of letters whose centenaries fall this year are both Italian—Metastasio and Leopardi. The two-hundredth anniversary of Metastasio's birthday is already over, for he was born on the January 6, 1698. An Englishman could hardly be expected to feel much excitement about it; yet Metastasio is well worthy to be had in remembrance, even among ourselves, for the important part he played in the development of opera. Leopardi is a hundred years nearer to us in time, and nearer than that in sentiment. The pessimism, however, which nowadays is a fashionable affectation of young novelists, was a bitter reality to the young Italian of genius, who suffered pain and ill-health all his life and died before he was forty years of age. Yet, sincere as was his pessimism, his poetical appeals to death did not prevent him exhibiting considerable alarm at the approach of cholera. His centenary falls on June 29 next.

MR. T. D. SULLIVAN, writing in the Nation, offers reminiscences of Father Meehan, the author of The Fate and Fortunes of the Earls of Tyrone and Tyrconnell and The Rise and Fall of Irish Franciscan Monasteries, and the friend of James Clarence Mangan. From a humorous poem, contributed by Father Meehan to the Nation many years ago, entitled "The Last Words of Zozimus," we take some lines. Zozimus was an old blind ballad singer, whose stand was on Carlisle Bridge. This is how Zozimus asked to be buried:

"One coffin and one horse iz quite enough,
One mourning jingle will be 'quantum suff.'

I'll have no coronet to go before me
Nor Bucepha-li-us that ever bore me,
But put my hat, my stick, and gloves together
That bore for years the very worst of weather,
And, rest assured, in spirit will be there
'Mary of Egypt' and 'Susannah' fair,
And 'Pharaoh's daughter,' with the heavenly blush
That tuk the drowning goslin from the rushes.

I'll not permit a tombstone stuck above me,
Nor effigy; but, boys, if still yees love me,
Build a nate house for all whose fate is hard,
And give a bed to every wanderin' bard.
If gaynious yees admire, I have yees show it
By giving pipe and porter to the Poet."

The Home University is a new monthly magazine embodying an educational experiment, which has evidently been conceived by a thoughtful mind. The editor declares that The Home University is not a school book nor an encyclopædia, nor a journal of science and literature, but that it partakes of the characters of all three. The general aim is to convey knowledge in such a way that it can be easily assimilated by home students, to whom the magazine is offered as "the best substitute for university residence" which the editor can devise. No particular system in the arrangement of the contents of the magazine is adopted, or the only system is variety—the attempt "to supply intellectual food in somewhat the same fashion as a man takes his daily meals." Hence, in this first number, we have a "Chronology of the First Christian Century," "Memoranda as to Greece," "Schedule of the Life and Times of John Milton," "Ana and the Table-Talk of Distinguished Men," "Our Ambulance Class," and much besides. Illustrations are provided; and, indeed, expense does not seem to have been spared on this interesting publication.

This year we may expect an unusual supply of books dealing with cricket. A little volume of verses and drawings, with a frontispiece of the late Sir Frank Lockwood, has, indeed, already appeared, although it is still winter. The success of K. S. Ranjitsinhji's work and the growing interest in the game are certain to induce other writers to turn to this subject. Mr. W. G. Grace is even now proceeding with his Reminiscences, and Mr. Horace Hutchinson is said to be engaged in compiling the history of the game. So long as young men do not prefer the literature of the game to the game itself, we do not see why books should not be written about it.

A SECOND edition of Mr. Stephen Phillip's Poems will be issued next week. In this edition several misprints which marred the first issue will be corrected, and we understand that Mr. Phillips has revised, and, indeed, largely re-written his poem, "The Wife."

MR. FISHER UNWIN announces for the 29th inst. Sir Charles Gavan Duffy's My Life in Two Hemispheres. Sir Charles, we are informed, tells his story fully from the stormy days of his connexion with the Nation to the time when he became the Governor of a Crown Colony. The letters and conversations are a notable feature of the book. Among the writers of the former will be found Cardinal Newman, Thomas Carlyle, Thackeray, Father Matthew, Leigh Hunt, and Sir Henry Parkes. Interesting matter concerning Browning, John Stuart Mill, and the author of Dark Rosaleen is also given. Sir Charles Gavan Duffy lives now in retirement at Nice, but he still engages in literary pursuits, and is the general editor of the New Irish Library.

MR. UNWIN also announces for the 29th Mr. J. F. Hogan's The Gladstone Colony: an Unwritten Chapter of Australian History.

MESSRS. W. THACKER & Co. inform us that they have purchased from Messrs. Neville Beeman, Ltd. (who are giving up business as publishers), the following publications: The Naval Pocket-Book, by W. Laird Clowes, the next edition of which will be ready on February 7 next; The Captain of the "Mary Rose", by the same author; The Rose of Dutchers Coolly and Wayside Courtships, by Hamlin Garland, and three new books by the same author to be published shortly; and others.

MR. S. A. STRONG, librarian to the House of Lords, will contribute to Longman's Magazine for February an article based on the Duke of Devonshire's papers at Chatsworth, showing the connexion between the sixth Duke and some of the leading writers of his day. In the article will appear for the first time a letter from Thackeray to the Duke, in which he sketches out the further fortunes of the leading characters of Fanny Hill after the close of the story.

A NEW work, called A Departure from Tradition, and Other Stories, from the pen of Miss Rosaline Masson, daughter of Prof. Masson, will be published immediately by Bliss, Sands & Co.

“LEWIS CARROLL.”

BORN, 1833; DIED, 1898.

“IF I have written anything to add to those stories of innocent and healthy amusement that are laid up in books for the children I love so well, it is surely something I may hope to look back upon without shame and sorrow (as how much of life must then be recalled!) when my turn comes to walk through the valley of shadows.”

These words were written in 1876 by Lewis Carroll in “An Easter Greeting to Every Child that loves Alice.” And now his turn has come. Truly, he had no cause to feel anything but satisfaction. The world can show few writers who from first to last have used their talents so joyously, diligently, and to such kindly purpose as Lewis Carroll.

Lewis Carroll's best period lasted, roughly, from his thirtieth to his forty-fifth year. He began Alice's Adventures Underground in July, 1862; he finished converting it into Alice's Adventures in Wonderland (abbreviated in the nursery to Alice in Wonderland) in 1865; he published Phantasmagoria, which contained “Hiawatha's Photographing,” in 1869; he finished Through the Looking-Glass in 1871, and The Hunting of the Snark in 1876. After that came a decline. His wit was as keen, his brain as masterfully intricate, as ever; but simplicity left him. Indeed, he never again quite caught the simplicity of his first book. Alice in Wonderland is an outpouring of inspired nonsense which flowed forth without hindrance and without perceptible impulse. But in Through the Looking-Glass we now and then hear the pump at work. The quality of the nonsense is no whit the worse; but simplicity is endangered. In Through the Looking-Glass, for example, there is the White Queen's exposition of living backwards, and the theory advanced by Tweedledum and Tweedledee that Alice and themselves had no existence apart from the Red King's dream—a perilous approach to metaphysics. Moreover, Through the Looking-Glass is a game of chess, which is the sheer superfluity of cleverness. But Through the Looking-Glass is only a shade less admirable than its companion. Has it not the White Knight and the two Queens, Tweedledum and Tweedledee, Humpty Dumpty, and the Walrus and the Carpenter? Has it not also the following passage, which has always seemed to us the perfect example of the higher foolishness?—

“‘Crawling at your feet,’ said the Gnat . . . ‘you may observe a bread-and-butter fly. Its wings are thin slices of bread and butter, its body is a crust, and its head is a lump of sugar.’

‘And what does it live on?’

‘Weak tea with cream in it.’

A new difficulty came into Alice's head. ‘Supposing it couldn't find any?’ she suggested.

‘Then it would die, of course.’

‘But that must happen very often,’ Alice remarked thoughtfully.

‘It always happens.’”

We may, indeed, feel quite certain of the longevity of the Alice books. They belong to no one period, but to all. They touch nothing actual but human nature, and human nature is continuous and unchanging. Alice is a matter-of-fact, simple-minded child, and the world is full of Alices, and always will be. Hence the assured popularity of her history. Again, in the manner there is no sense of antiquity, although some thirty years have rolled by, each bringing its modification to literary style. Lewis Carroll wrote as plainly and luminously as he could; and we read and read and can think of no emendation whatever. The words are the best words in the best order. Of hardly any other humorist can it be said that in no instance do we ever wish his manner of narration altered. But Lewis Carroll was a merciless critic of himself and a tireless elaborator of his work, and he sent nothing forth until it was perfect.

By his art Wonderland is made not less conceivable than Fairy Land. It is almost impossible to believe that there is not somewhere such a region, where dwell forever the Cheshire Cat and the Mock Turtle, the Gryphon and Humpty Dumpty, the Red Knight and the Duchess. They have each and all an individuality; and they are at once so mad and so reasonable: as real and recognisable as the people in Dickens. Partly it is Lewis Carroll's favourite trick of finding fun in pedantic literalness that persuades us. Again, the illusion is assisted by the abruptness with which the stories open.

Alice in Wonderland has no preamble, there is no laboured description, we are in Wonderland in a moment, before there is time to think about the pinch of salt with which to season the exaggeration. These are the first words: “Alice was beginning to get very tired of sitting by her sister on the bank, and of having nothing to do,” and then, on the third page, Alice has followed the white rabbit down the burrow. Again, in Through the Looking Glass, the beginning is immediate: “One thing was certain, that the white kitten had had nothing to do with it—it was the black kitten's fault entirely,” and so on.

Alice in Wonderland has been translated into at least three European languages—French, German and Italian—but without much success. Each country has its own humour and cares little for borrowing. In the title, at any rate, the German version bears the palm for conciseness: Alice's Abenteuer in Wonderland. The French and Italian are almost forbidding: Aventures d'Alice au Pays des Merveilles and L'Avventura d'Alice nel Paese delle Meraviglie. The two Alice books together were converted to stage purposes some few years ago by Mr. Savile-Clarke, and the little play had an auspicious career both in London and the provinces. Lewis Carroll took the keenest interest in this dramatic version—the stage, indeed, was among his hobbies—and when the company was at Brighton he journeyed thither and played fairy god-father (his favourite rôle in life) to some of the little performers. At that time a discussion was going forward in the papers concerning the proposed movement to make it illegal for children of less than ten years of age to appear on the stage, and Lewis Carroll, in a letter to the St. James's Gazette, referring especially to a meeting of ladies in favour of the movement, contributed to it. The views of a man so fond of children and so passionately zealous for their happiness are peculiarly interesting. Here are extracts from his letter, which was entirely opposed to the projected measure:

“I spent yesterday afternoon at Brighton, where for five hours I enjoyed the society of three exceedingly happy and healthy little girls, aged twelve, ten, and seven. We paid three visits to the houses of friends; we spent a long time on the pier, where we . . . invested pennies in every mechanical device which invited such contributions and promised anything worth having, for body or mind, in return; we even made an excited raid on headquarters, like Shylock with three attendant Portias, to demand the ‘pound of flesh’—in the form of a box of chocolate-drops—which a dyspeptic machine had refused to render. I think that anyone who could have seen the vigour of life in those three children—the intensity with which they enjoyed everything, great or small, that came in their way—who could have watched the younger two running races on the Pier, or have heard the fervent exclamation of the eldest at the end of the afternoon, ‘We have enjoyed ourselves!’—would have agreed with me that here, at least, there was no excessive ‘physical strain,’ nor any imminent danger of ‘fatal results’! . . . A drama, written by Mr. Savile-Clarke is now being played at Brighton; and in this (it is called ‘Alice in Wonderland’) all three children have been engaged. . . . They had been acting every night this week, and twice on the day before I met them, the second performance lasting till half-past ten at night, after which they got up at seven next morning to bathe! That such (apparently) severe work should co-exist with blooming health and buoyant spirits seems at first sight a paradox; but I appeal to anyone who has ever worked con amore at any subject whatever to support me in the assertion that, when you really love the subject you are working at, the ‘physical strain’ is absolutely nil; it is only when working ‘against the grain’ that any strain is felt; and I believe the apparent paradox is to be explained by the fact that a taste for acting is one of the strongest passions of human nature, that stage-children show it nearly from infancy, and that, instead of being, as these good ladies imagine, miserable drudges who ought to be celebrated in a new ‘Cry of the Children,’ they simply rejoice in their work, ‘even as a giant rejoiceth to run his course.’”

From one who could write and believe:

“Ah, happy he who owns that tenderest joy,
The heart love of a child!”—

these are striking words.

With The Hunting of the Snark (1876), which, although to most persons it seems more fitted to adult intellects, was dedicated by the author to a child, and frequently presented by him to children, Lewis Carroll's best period came to an end. Of this classic of comic verse it is hard to speak. No one has ever had a dream less coherent, less satisfying. Indeed, it may be said of Lewis Carroll that, above all men, he had the art of dreaming with a pen. His great colleague as a nonsense maker—Edward Lear—could be foolish enough, but always with direction and with responsibility. Lewis Carroll, as does the mind when asleep, took the line of least resistance. From The Hunting of the Snark illustrations have been excavated, by leader writers and politicians, for every kind of purpose; but the meaning of the complete work eludes us, and will elude. Because there is none. It is simply feeling, the best fooling on record. Why, indeed, ok a meaning in a poem, when the preface it can contain such a passage as this, in explanation of the line :

Then the bowsprit got mixed with the rudder sometimes?"

"The Bellman, who was almost morbidly sensitive about appearances, used to have the bowsprit unshipped once or twice a week to be varnished, and it more than once happened, when the time came for replacing it, that no one on board could remember which end of the ship it belonged to. They knew it was not of the lightest use to appeal to the Bellman about—he would only refer to his Naval Code, and read out in pathetic tones Admiralty Instructions which none of them had ever been able to understand—so it generally ended in its being steamed on, anyhow, across the rudder. The Helmsman used to stand by with tears in his eyes; he knew it was all wrong, but, alas! article 42 of the Code, 'No one shall speak to the Helmsman at the Helm,' had been completed by the Bellman himself with the words, 'and the Man at the Helm shall speak to no one.' So remonstrance was impossible, and no steering could be done till the next varnishing day. During these bewildering intervals the ship usually sailed backwards."

The resemblance in one of the illustrations to Dr. Kenealy, the Claimant's advocate, and some people at first to seek for a parable of the Tichborne Case. Others have said that the Snark is popularity—"a boojum you see." But the story that the poem grew out of that line—

"For the Snark was a boojum you see"— which one "day flashed into the author's brain, is the best explanation of all. In workmanship, The Hunting of the Snark is a miracle of dexterity.

After The Hunting of the Snark came a dull. Then there appeared, in 1883, Lyme? and Reason? practically a reprint of Phantasmagoria and the Snark; A Tangled Tale (1885), a mixture of mathematical problems humorously enunciated, which we printed first in the Monthly Packet; The Game of Logic (1886), Sylvie and Bruno (1889), and, later, its second part, a whimsical and droll comedy comprising a story of modern life, a little exquisite nonsense—for example :

"He thought he saw a Banker's Clerk
Descending from the 'bus :
He looked again, and found it was A Hippopotamus.
'If this should stay to dine,' he said,
'There won't be much for us'—" and much theology. Sylvie and Bruno, which grew from a little story contributed to Aunt Judy by Lewis Carroll in 1868, was received with some disappointment, owing to the habit that readers have of demanding a favourite author to cut all his wares from the same piece. The theology was resented, not because it was not good—many of the passages are indeed beautiful and dictated by rare wisdom—but because it was considered to be out of place. Lewis Carroll, however, had grown to be of another opinion, and the two Sylvie and Bruno volumes were his favourites among his work. In the same Easter greeting from which we have quoted at the head of this article he wrote (in 1876) :

I do not believe God means us to divide life into two halves—to wear a grave face on Sunday, and to think it out of place to even so much as mention Him on a week-day. Do you think He cares to see only kneeling figures, and to hear only tones of prayer, and that He does not also love to see the lambs leaping in the sunlight, and to hear the merry voices of the children as they roll among the hay? Surely their innocent laughter is as sweet in His ears as the grandest anthem that ever rolled up from the 'dim religious light' of some solemn cathedral?"

Lastly came, in 1896, the first part of Symbolic Logic, in which the young student is offered quite the most fascinating series of sorites ever propounded, where it is proved beyond all question, among other things, that "No Hedgehog takes in the Times."

Lewis Carroll has had many imitators—some quite shameless, and none worthy to stand beside him. They were, of course, doomed to failure, since they had neither his temperament nor his motive. Lewis Carroll, whose attitude to children was more devotion than mere affection, approaching even to adoration, was not a professional author : he was a kindly playmate of little people, and he wrote Alice in Wonderland to give pleasure to two friends, the little daughters of Dean Liddell, one of whom—the original Alice—is now Mrs. Hargreaves. It was published that others might share that pleasure. Of not many of the diligent writers who have attempted to reap in the same field can it be said that their stories proceeded from a similar impulse. Indeed, the failure of the many imitations of Alice is another proof that good work must come from within, must be born of the author's own individuality. There has been, and can be, but one Lewis Carroll. To borrow his formulae is not to reconstruct himself.

Lewis Carroll in private life was the Rev. Charles Lutwidge Dodgson, of whom we have hitherto said nothing, in accordance with his wish that his two characters should be kept apart. One proof of this desire is to be found in the letter which he wrote when, in 1888, Mr. R. H. Caine, the editor of a collection of humorous verse, asked him for permission to include certain of Lewis Carroll's pieces in that volume. Mr. Caine received this reply :

"Mr. C. L. Dodgson begs to say, in reply to Mr. Caine's letter received this morning, that he had never put his name to any such pieces as are named by Mr. Caine. His published writings are exclusively mathematical, and would not be suitable for such a volume as Mr. Caine proposes to edit."

Against this rebuff might be placed the following letter to a child (written in 1875) wherein the gulf existing between the two personalities is at once emphasised and removed ; but it must be remembered that Mr. Dodgson would do for a child what he would not do for anyone else :

"My dear Magdalen,—I want to explain to you why I did not call yesterday. I was sorry to miss you, but you see I had so many conversations on the way. I tried to explain to the people in the street that I was going to see you, but they wouldn't listen; they said they were in a hurry, which was rude. At last I met a wheelbarrow that I thought would attend to me, but I couldn't make out what was in it. I saw some features at first. Then I looked through a telescope and found it was a countenance; then I looked through a microscope and found it was a face! I thought it was rather like me, so I fetched a large looking-glass to make sure, and then to my great joy I found it was Me. We shook hands, and were just beginning to talk when Myself came up and joined us, and we had quite a pleasant conversation. I said, 'Do you remember when we all met at Sandown?' And Myself said, 'It was very jolly there; there was a child called Magdalen,' and Me said, 'I used to like her a little. Not much, you know—only a little.' Then it was time for us to go to the train—and who do you think came to the station to see us off? You would never guess so I must tell you. They were two very dear friends of mine, who happened to be here just now, and beg to be allowed to sign this letter as your affectionate friends, LEWIS CARROLL and C. L. DODGSON."

Mr. Dodgson was born in 1833, the son of a well-known Churchman, Archdeacon Dodgson. He proceeded to Christ Church, Oxford, and in 1854 graduated with a first class in mathematics. In 1861 he was elected Senior student of his college, and in the same year became Mathematical Lecturer, a post he held until 1881. In 1861 he also took orders. His mathematical works were numerous and valuable, although his championship of Euclid against more modern systems of geometry is held by many to be fantastic. Mr. Dodgson had many of the eccentricities which so often accompany proficiency in his particular science, and many good stories are told of him at Oxford. He was a very watchful guardian of Oxford's honour, and used occasionally to put forth a whimsical pamphlet, in which some phase of the university's well-being was examined. These productions were always witty and marvellously ingenious. Mr. Dodgson was shy and reserved, a resolute celibate, a man of few friends but fit, and the patron saint of children. Incidentally we might mention that he liked them all to be familiar with Lewis Carroll's writings. His hobbies, after mathematics, which he looked upon both as work and play, were photography and the stage. His photographs of children must be well-nigh countless. Mr. Dodgson—as sage, as wit, and as saint—will be mourned by those that knew him, as Lewis Carroll will be mourned by readers all the world over.

"LEWIS CARROLL" AT OXFORD.

My earliest sight of "Lewis Carroll" was when, as a freshman, raw and abashed, I had once the honour of sitting opposite him at dinner. With all a boy's nervousness at dining for the first time at a college "high table," in utter ignorance of the allusions which filled the talk, and tortured by a desire to escape to more congenial society, I found huge consolation in the fact that now I was regarding with my own eyes a god of my childhood. To one fresh from a very different place, and not yet habituated to the real Oxford, he seemed the living embodiment of the old Oxford of a boy's fancy. I desired to attend his lectures till I found that he was a mathematician. Dreary people in his own college, when questioned concerning their great man, confessed to having lived in ignorance that a prophet was among them. To certain he was simply an old mathematical tutor; to others a great name in letters which they had never connected with a local habitation; but to none was his figure noticeable. Few of Oxford's famous men have been so unobtrusive in her midst. Froude was constantly to be observed; even Walter Pater was known by sight to a large part of the undergraduate world; but I scarcely remember to have seen "Lewis Carroll" half a dozen times in the street.

In a sense he was the most old-world of all the elements in the place. The Oxford of ecclesiastical bustle and honest doubt, of Newman and Mark Pattison, of Arnold and Clough, though actually earlier in time, was years later in sentiment. And what shall I say of all that fills the gap between—the days of the new Liberalism, the æsthetic craze, the University Extensionist, the times which have "learnt a stormy note of men contented-tost, of men who groan," and are given over to many new things? The world of "Lewis Carroll" was ages removed from this. Though full of the wide human nature which delights in all things contemporary, his mind, alike in its piety, its ingenuities and its humours, belonged to an earlier and quieter world. His flute never lost "its happy country tone." His Oxford was sleepy and early Victorian, a haunt of people who played croquet and little girls with short frocks and smoothly brushed hair and quaint formal politeness. It seems to me that the exact subtlety of the humour of the "Alice" books could never be caught again, for the sleepy afternoon air, the quaint grace and the mock dignity are all the property of an elder and vanishing world.

In Oxford his works enjoyed a surprising popularity, and formed the storehouse for undergraduate nicknames. In my own day it even became the fashion for a man to set them in foolish paradox by the side of Shakespeare when incautiously questioned on his preferences in letters. The Hunting of the Snark was popularly supposed to contain all the metaphysics in the world. I once heard a distinguished college authority explain his course of lighter reading during one vacation. "The first week," he said, "I read Sylvie and Bruno." "And then?" some one asked. "And then," he said, "I read the Second Part." "And then?" "And then," he murmured in doubt—"then," brightening up, "ah, then, I went back to Through the Looking-Glass."

J. B.

THE EDINBURGH ON MR. KIPLING.

THE most serious and comprehensive criticism of Mr. Kipling that has yet appeared is to be found in the new Edinburgh. The writer has looked with a friendly but discriminating eye upon the twelve books that now stand to Mr. Kipling's name, and has come to certain interesting conclusions. He does not attempt to place their author—that would be too bold—but he says words which he hopes may help Mr. Kipling's fluid state towards crystallisation. Let us look at the article.

The critic begins with a definition of literature, which for ordinary working purposes will suffice. The sum of it is this:

- |  |                               |
|--|-------------------------------|
| 1. Books containing mere records of material facts, valuable only for their accuracy, without regard to form or expression.  | } Not literature.             |
| 2. Books containing records of facts of general human interest, history, observation of life, &c. either drawn up with some regard to form, or pervaded by interest of expression.   |                               |
| 3. (a) Books dealing with facts or ideas of general and permanent human interest, in which form and expression are essential qualities; and (b) books dealing with subjects of little inherent interest, but which are remarkable for perfection of form and expression. | } Inner circle of literature. |

The bulk of Mr. Kipling's work, it is then decided, comes within the outer circle, the clause "observation of life" having been inserted for his benefit.

"For of the many remarkable qualities in Mr. Kipling's publications, the most remarkable of all is the extraordinary faculty of observation which they display. . . . Nothing he comes in contact with seems to escape his notice; and, while still a young man, he gives one the impression in his books of having lived two or three lives, and lived them pretty thoroughly. 'Choses Vues' might be the general title for a great deal of his work; with the important addition that he not only sees things himself, but he makes the reader see them."

The critic turns then to the examination of some of the stories which best illustrate this gift of observation; finding much praise to give them, although never allowing them to win to a higher place than the outer circle.

The Light that Failed and Captains Courageous are next disposed of, and the Jungle Books reached. We agree with the critic in considering these Mr. Kipling's most wonderful accomplishment, and his two works most likely to retain a permanent place in literature. Says the reviewer:

"He has attempted nothing less than to project himself, in imagination, into the beast mind, to put things as beasts might put them had they the faculty of intelligible expression. The imaginative power which he has brought to this task is really extraordinary; how extraordinary we do not become fully aware till we come to those passages, here and there, in which human speakers intervene in the story, as the father and mother and child do in the narrative of Rikki-tikki-tavi, the mongoose. . . . The individuality of the animals is admirably kept up; the author has stamped their characters and names on them; we shall always think of the tiger as 'Shere Khan,' and of the black panther as 'Bagheera.' The rules and laws among the animals as to hunting and killing impress one as what might really exist in some crude but understood form among them; and, indeed, the 'water truce,' when the drought became such as to nearly dry the river and make water scarce, may almost be said to be founded on fact. The animal idea of fire as 'the red flower,' of the rifle-bullet as 'the stinging-fly that comes out of the white smoke,' of spring as 'the time of new talk,' are all remarkable instances of the author's power of putting himself, in imagination, in the place of the brute mind."

Against much of the poetry is brought the charge of hasty, slap-dash writing—though we cannot agree that "McAndrew's Hymn" and "Tomlinson" suffer in this way—and its slang is also deprecated. This is the sum of the matter:

"That Mr. Kipling can rise to the higher level of poetry he has shown us every now and then in such poems as 'L'Envoi,' and 'Kabul Town,' and 'The Legend of Evil' (first section), and 'Mandalay,' and that grand little poem, 'Lest we forget,' which a short time since sent a thrill through the length and breadth of England. And perhaps the glorious racket of 'The Bolivar' and chivalrous climax of 'East and West' may avail to keep alive such comparatively short poems, in spite of roughness of style and execution. But, taking his verse compositions altogether, one may say that the author has just let us see that he might be a poet if he would, but has done but little yet towards a serious achievement of the position."

And so we reach the conclusion of this inquiry. The critic is of opinion that almost anything is within Mr. Kipling's power if he will cease to "play to the gallery." In short:

"If he wishes for future fame, for a permanent place in the world's library, we believe he has it within his choice, if he would go to work seriously and aim at giving us his best, instead of being content to please and interest us for the moment. If he prefers the latter way of expending his genius, his own generation may have no reason to complain—it is a most brilliant Variety entertainment, and never seems to flag for a moment; but in that case future generations will not hear much of him, unless it may be in this way—that with his varied interest in life and his ubiquitous habits he has, perhaps, the best chance of all men living of ultimately becoming a Solar Myth."

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

THE "Mercure de France" is the ostentatious protector of minor poets. But in Paris the minor poets have no chance. Nobody reads them, nobody reviews them; they alone take themselves seriously.

M. Pierre Louys adequately displayed the bent of his narrow and distinguished talent in his classical study Aphrodite. One may question the value of such a tour de force, but the achievement is a considerable one. M. Louys is a nineteenth century pagan—oh, but a real pagan such as not even the pagans themselves dreamed of. When a gentleman of modern times turns his back upon eighteen centuries of Christian civilisation, and plunges devoutly into the worship of the gods, he usually makes his confession of faith with an ardour that leaves nothing to be desired. As far as I can see, modern paganism is mere deification of the courtesan. Not that one need journey so far backwards as Greece and the pagan deities for that. The article in latter-day Paris enjoys unlimited consideration. A host of geniuses from the days of Baudelaire to our own are occupied in hymning her praises. Such edifying half-penny papers as Le Journal are maintained exclusively in her interests; to which even middle-aged Academicians like Coppée, to ay nothing of MM. Catulle Mendès, Richepin, Léon Daudet, Marcel Prévost, &c., are proud to contribute, all wielding a pen herein steeped in the same ink for her entertainment.

Four-and-twenty centuries to come another erudite and investigating mind like that of M. Pierre Louys may be tempted to reconstruct for another, and, let us hope, austerer civilisation, a picture of this gallant high life. We may venture to predict that he will hardly, if he sticks to facts and the newspapers and the fiction of the hour, succeed in producing anything so poetical as M. Louys's Chansons de Bilitis. To the mere Philistine, who cares not a jot for the poetry of paganism, and who thinks the world all the better for the introduction of Christian chastity, such literature, however fine and delicate, is both nauseous and monotonous. An entire volume on a single theme indicates a morbidness of concentration of interest few of us, happily, are capable of. If you have read the book through at a single sitting, as I did, you feel you would like to go abroad into the clean woods and play for several days with little children or nice innocent animals, who know neither Latin nor Greek, and have many things else to think of besides an unhealthy revival of pagan sensuality. As if our own were not more than enough!

M. Louys's prose is highly polished, of a simplicity too self-conscious, with a rhythmic wave which is charming, and a delicacy of colour to suit the high perfection of form. In a word, he is an incomparable artist. Lacking in sense of humour and irony, he has not the art of an Anatole France of giving vitality and a personal spell to his erudition. He never rises above the coldly sensuous. The bent of his talent leaves us in some doubt of the utility of a classical education. Indeed, there are times when the troubled andasperated reader is inclined to ask himself if humanity would not be improved by the suppression of all education, or rather the art of reading and writing, for a while.

Of these songs of Bilitis there are but few which are not devoted to the usual details of a courtesan's existence. Perhaps the prettiest is the cradle song:

"The woods are palaces built for thee alone, which I have given thee. The pine trunks are the columns; the high branches are the vaults. Sleep. That he may not awaken thee, I would sell the sun to the sea. The breeze of the dove's wing is not so light as thy breath. Fugitive of mine, flesh of my flesh, thou wilt start when thou dost open thy eyes if thou wouldst the plain or the town, or the mountain or the moon, or the white procession of the girls."

The poet Henri de Régnier also chaunts under the winged protection of the French Mercury. His last volume is in prose, a collection of extravagant tales—La Canne de Jaspe. They are cleverly written, with distinction and some grace. But—and here we may call on the pagan gods for enlightenment, since M. de Régnier is another neo-pagan—what does it all mean? Not that we are before a mystification like Poe's. A writer who can write so boldly and so well of the sea should give us stories of a solid value than these, and even the fantastic can leave a definite impression. But here no impression whatever. Now and then a neat and witty definition. Then the reader hopes. Again, a really fine description in the most elegant prose. The reader expands, and cheerfully turns the page. Lo! neither sense, nor propriety, nor the vaguest semblance of meaning or idea, and the offended reader yawns, and laments with Solomon the excessive production of literature. This is what M. de Régnier can do when he has a mind to make himself understood:

"I have seen all the sea's faces: her morning visage of childhood, her mid-day face streaming with gold, her Medusan mask of the evening, and her formless aspect of night. After the slyness of the temporary lull comes the vehemence of the tempest. A god inhabits the changing waters. Sometimes he rises, clutching the mane of the waves and the long locks of sea-weed, with the rattle of the wind and the roar of the surge. He is fashioned of foam and spray. His mysterious hands contract in claws, and standing with his water-spout torso, his cloak of mist, his visage of cloud, and his eyes of lightning, he raises his prestige from innumerable waves and storms, shattered in the monstrous howling of surge, shouted down by wide jaws, and torn by nails, he succumbs in the crush of his fall, and relives in the spume of his own fury."

Golo, by M. Pol. Neveux, reprinted from the Revue de Paris, is a dull and melancholy country novel, the study of a carpenter's apprentice who is seized for the standing army of France, and goes away to China and elsewhere, in love with an uninteresting peasant girl, who declines to wait five years for his return. He comes back to find her married, breaks his heart, takes to drink, and commits suicide. The book is well-written, but nobody awakens the faintest interest or sympathy.

H. L.

THE BOOK MARKET.

REMAINDERS.

WE published last autumn an article on "Remainders," which excited some interest, and we appended to it a list of books with their original and reduced prices. We now give a fresh list of such prices, taken from the catalogue of a well-known "remainder" bookseller:

BIOGRAPHY AND REMINISCENCES.

|   | Original Price. | Present "Remainder" Price. |
|---|-----------------|----------------------------|
| Bastien - Lepage and his Art ... ..                       | 10s. 6d.        | 4s. 0d.                    |
| Admiral Coligny, by Sir Walter Besant...                  | 2s. 6d.         | 1s. 3d.                    |
| Alphonse Daudet, by R. H. Sherard ...                     | 15s. 0d.        | 3s. 0d.                    |
| Oliver Goldsmith: Forster's Life ...                      | 7s. 6d.         | 3s. 0d.                    |
| John Mitford: Letters and Reminiscences.                  | 3s. 6d.         | 1s. 0d.                    |
| Lord Nelson: Public and Private Life, by G. Lathom Browne | 18s. 0d.        | 5s. 6d.                    |

|  | Original Price. | Present "Remainder" Price. |
|--|-----------------|----------------------------|
| Pepys: Diary and Correspondence, by Lord Braybrooke ...  |                 | 12s. 6d.                   |
| George W. Smalley: London Letters and Some Others, 2 vols.   | 32s. 0d.        | 4s. 6d.                    |
| Fridtjof Nansen, 1861-1893, translated by William Archer ...   | 12s. 6d.        | 7s. 6d.                    |
| Garibaldi: Autobiography, translated by A. Werner, 3 vols.   | 31s. 6d.        | 6s. 0d.                    |
| The Book Lover, by James Baldwin ...   | 2s. 6d.         | 1s. 3d.                    |
| Bancroft's History of the United States, 7 vols. 12mo. ...   | 17s. 6d.        | 9s. 0d.                    |
| The Study of English Literature, by J. Churton Collins ...   | 4s. 6d.         | 1s. 9d.                    |
| Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, 4 vols. ...   | 30s. 0d.        | 14s. 0d.                   |
| Goethe's Faust, with Retsch's Etchings.  | 3s. 6d.         | 0s. 9d.                    |
| Remains of the Earlier Popular Poetry of England, by W. C. Hazlitt, 4 vols. ...  | 20s. 0d.        | 8s. 0d.                    |
| The Town, by Leigh Hunt. Illustrated edition ... ..  | 12s. 6d.        | 5s. 0d.                    |
| The Best Plays of Ben Jonson, edited by B. Nicholson and C. H. Herford, 3 vols., Mermaid Series ... ..                       | 10s. 6d.        | 5s. 9d.                    |
| The Falcon on the Baltic, by E. F. Knight ... ..   | 7s. 6d.         | 2s. 0d.                    |
| Early Popular Poetry of Scotland and the Northern Border, edited by David Laing, and re-edited by W. C. Hazlitt, 2 vols. ... | 10s. 0d.        | 4s. 0d.                    |
| The Voyage and Travels of Sir John Maundeville ...   | 10s. 6d.        | 3s. 0d.                    |
| Shelley's Complete Poetical Works, edited by W. M. Rossetti, 3 vols. ...   | 22s. 6d.        | 10s. 6d.                   |

TRAVEL, TOPOGRAPHY, ETC.

|   |          |          |
|---|----------|----------|
| Memories of Mashonaland, by the Right Rev. Bishop K. Bruce ... ..     | 10s. 6d. | 2s. 0d.  |
| Camden's Remains Concerning Britain (Library of Old Authors) ... ..   | 5s. 0d.  | 2s. 0d.  |
| Capitals of the World, with introduction by H. D. Traill, 2 vols. ... | 63s. 0d. | 25s. 0d. |
| A Comprehensive Scheme for Street Improvements in London ... ..       | 21s. 0d. | 2s. 0d.  |

|  | Original Price. | Present "Remainder" Price. |
|--|-----------------|----------------------------|
| Ormerod's History of Cheshire                          | £30 0s. 0d.     | £4 10s. 0d.                |
| Cruise of H.M.S. Bacchante                      | 52s. 6d.        | 9s. 0d.                    |
| Wissman's My Second Journey Through Equatorial Africa  | 16s. 0d.        | 5s. 0d.                    |
| Boulger's England and Russia and Central Asia, 2 vols. | 36s. 0d.        | 3s. 0d.                    |
| To Gipsy Land, by Joseph Pennell                       | 6s. 0d.         | 2s. 6d.                    |

MISCELLANEOUS.

|   |          |         |
|---|----------|---------|
| Idols of the French Stage, by N. Sutherland Edwards, 2 vols.  | 24s. 0d. | 2s. 0d. |
| History of Newmarket and Annals of the Turf, by J. P. Hore  | 37s. 6d. | 9s. 0d. |
| Lesser Questions, by Lady Jeune   | 10s. 6d. | 9d.     |
| Legal Lore: Curiosities of Law and Lawyers, edited by W. Andrews                                      | 7s. 6d.  | 2s. 0d. |
| Acrobats and Mountebanks, by Hugues le Roux. Translated by A. P. Morton. Illustrated by Jules Garnier | 16s. 0d. | 4s. 6d. |
| The Thousand and One Days, edited by Justin H. McCarthy   | 12s. 0d. | 5s. 0d. |
| Where Art Begins, by Hume Nisbet  | 7s. 6d.  | 2s. 6d. |
| Original Poems, by Anne and Jane Taylor   | 3s. 6d.  | 1s. 0d. |
| Quaker Poets of Great Britain and Ireland, by E. N. Armitage  | 7s. 6d.  | 2s. 0d. |

THE TITLES OF NEWSPAPERS.

WITH the exception of trade journals and some denominational organs—e.g., the Draper's Record and the Presbyterian—the most successful periodicals have titles which fail to express their distinctive character. That this is overlooked is due simply to custom, for we get into the way of using the name of a well-known paper very much as we use an algebraic symbol. For instance, who, by a a priori reasoning from the titles, could get at the difference between the Morning Advertiser, the Morning Leader, and the Morning Post? We all know the leading features of the Daily Chronicle, the Daily Mail, the Daily News, and the Daily Telegraph, but, again, these are not differentiated by their titles. The Times and the Standard are as vague. Nor can the evening papers be quoted as illustrating the principle laid down by the hasty critics who sometimes complain of the title of a new publication that it is not sufficiently "expressive."

Differences of policy and tendency are even more notable in the weekly religious papers, but the title seldom gives any clue. The Christian, the Christian Age, the Christian Commonwealth, the Christian Globe, the Christian Herald, the Christian Leader, the Christian Million, the Christian World—what philosopher could extract their true inwardness with no guide but the name? Within one ecclesiastical organisation alone, we have such variations as the Church Times, the Guardian, the Record, and the Rock.

Not a few magazines bear the name of the publisher. This is a neat way out of the difficulty, but it is quite unenlightening. An acquaintance with the personal idiosyncrasies of Messrs. Cassell, Chambers, Longman, Macmillan, and Pearson would be of little service to an investigator of the periodicals of which these publishers are the patron saints. Of late years the fashion has grown of laying claim to some street or district of London. So we have publications, daily, weekly, or monthly, named after Belgravia, Cornhill, Ludgate Hill, Pall Mall, St. James's, the Strand, the Temple, Temple Bar, Westminster, and Whitehall. The only predictions that one would have ventured to make would have been that the Cornhill would deal with finance, and that there would be a legal flavour about the Temple. These forecasts, however, would have been as unfortunate as the expectation that there would be an especially courtly tone about the Windsor.

In some cases it might be contended that the title not only fails to express the character of the periodical, but, if it were not so well known, would be actually misleading. An intelligent foreigner might easily trip up over the Fortnightly Review. He might naturally suppose that the Tablet was the organ of the craft of monumental masons. The Critical Review might seem to have something to do with first nights at theatres, or possibly with the private view at the Academy, but it is occupied solely with theology. And the Cable is an agricultural journal, and has no connexion whatever with submarine telegraphy.

The study of synonyms yields curious results. The Globe is an evening newspaper, the World is a society weekly, while the Universe is Roman Catholic. Answers, the Inquirer, and Notes and Queries would seem to have a good deal in common; but the first is a collection of anecdotes, the second is serious and Unitarian, and the third is a medium of communication for antiquarians and students of literary oddities. The Guardian belongs to the high section of Anglicanism, the Sentinel is an anti-opium journal, and the now defunct Watchman represented the conservative side of Methodism. Neither Justice, with its advocacy of social democracy, nor the American Judge, with its quips and cranks, is in danger, except from its title, of being mistaken for the Law Times. The Broad Arrow is devoted to the interests of the military and naval services, the Dart is a provincial comic paper, and the Quiver is a decorous religious monthly; and not one paper of the three has anything to do with archery. Brotherhood speaks for Christian Socialism, Chums is a lively paper for boys, and Fellowship (now dead) was started by a Wesleyan minister for the promotion of "the higher life." A club lounge who took up the Leisure Hour by mistake for the Idler could hardly help moralising on the difference of similarities. The Sun and the Star contradict all the usual astronomical phenomena by their habit of appearing simultaneously about ten in the morning; the Morning Star is a millenarian monthly; Sunshine is published "for schools and families"; Moonshine is humorous; and the Meteor is the journal of Rugby School. The Lamp is a Catholic magazine; Light concerns itself with spooks; Light and Leading ministers to Sunday-school teachers; and Lux deals with Christian evidences. There is a considerable actual diversity between the Echo and Public Opinion, and between the Era, the New Age, and the Nineteenth Century. Nor is there any reason in the fitness of things why the difference between the Baptist denomination and the Home Rule movement should not find more striking expression than in the slight variation between the Freeman and the Freeman's Journal.

In choosing a title, then, there is little need to trouble about securing a concentration of the contents bill. It is enough if the name is brief, easily remembered, and likely to "catch on."

THE FUTURE OF THE IDLER.

"Is it true, Mr. Dent, that you have taken over The Idler?" An ACADEMY representative asked the question of Mr. J. M. Dent, whom he found installed in Messrs. Macmillan's old premises in Bedford-street. "Quite true."

"You will, no doubt, transform the appearance of the magazine—give it your own impress?"

"Well, no—not yet, at all events! We have to consider the present readers of the magazine, who perhaps do not want a change."

"And will you maintain the character of the contents?"

"Yes. We shall try to improve them, but on the same lines. The Idler will be light and literary, pleasant and optimistic."

"And humorous?"

"Mr. Anstey and Mr. Barrie Pain will write for it."

"And artistic?"

Mr. Dent waved his arm round the room indicating that many beautiful drawings in black-and-white which I saw about were intended for reproduction in The Idler.

"Have you any other notable contributors in prospect?"

"Oh, yes! Mr. Austin Dobson, for one. But you must not judge us too much by our first number, which we shall issue in a fortnight. It will be a good number, on the old lines."

"Will you keep up 'The Idlers' Club' as a feature?"

"Yes, certainly. And I may add that we shall make country life, scenery, and sports—among the latter fishing in particular—the subjects of many articles and pictures."

THE WEEK.

STUDENTS of Burns cannot complain of any lack of material. Besides Mr. Henley's Burns, a host in itself, there appeared last year Burns and his Times; The Ayrshire Homes and Haunts of Burns; Burns, Excise Officer and Poet; Burns's Clarinda; and Burns from Heaven. Now appears George Thomson, the Friend of Burns: His Life and Correspondence, by Mr. J. Cuthbert Hadden. Thomson's well-known correspondence with Burns is not included in the volume, which is made up of the correspondence of Thomson with Hogg, Byron, Moore, Lockhart, Campbell, and others, including Beethoven, whom he employed to write airs for his Collection of Scottish Songs and Airs. A convincing portrait of Thomson is given by way of rontispiece.

In Tourguéneff and his French Circle we have a record, mainly in the form of letters, of the great Russian novelist's relations with that brilliant band of French writers with which he became connected. We extract the following passage from Miss Ethel M. Arnold's translation of the French edition of the Letters by M. Halpérini-Kaninsky. It tells what Tourguéneff's "French Circle" really was, and how he was introduced to it:

"It was the Viardot family who introduced Tourguéneff to the French world of art and letters. In their house, soon after he arrived in Paris in 1847, he met for the first time Georges Sand, an old friend of Louis Viardot's, with whom she had founded, in 1841, the Revue Indépendante. But it was not till later on that, owing to Flaubert, their intercourse became regular.

About the same time he made the acquaintance of Mérimée, who was already known as the translator of several of the masterpieces of Russian literature; about the same time, also, his friendship with Charles Edmond developed to intimacy. He had first met M. Edmond at Berlin, and came across him again at the house of Mme. Jazykov, one of his compatriots, which was the famous revolutionary Bakonnine, and the exiled Russian author Herzen also frequent.

It was Charles Edmond who, on one single occasion, introduced Tourguéneff to all the men forming the élite of the literary world at this period—Sainte-Beuve, Théophile Gautier, Flaubert, the Goncourt brothers, Taine, Berthelot, Renan, Gavarni, Paul de Saint-Victor, Scherer, Charles Blanc, Adrien Hébard, Fromentin, Bocca, Ribot, Nefftzer, &c.—in a word, to all the guests of the famous dinners at the Magny restaurant. He met them then for the first time, except Flaubert, whom he had known since 1858. In this connexion we read in the Journal des Goncourts, under the date of the 23rd January, 1863:

"Dinner at Magny's: Charles Edmond brought Tourguéneff, that foreign writer with such a graceful talent, author of The Mémoires of a Seigneur Russe, and of The Hamlet Russe. He is a great, big, charming fellow, a gentleman with bleached hair, and looks like the bad genius of a mountain or a forest. He is handsome—magnificently, immensely handsome—with the blue of heaven in his eyes, and with charming Russian sing-song voice, in which there is just something both of the wild and of the negro. Being put at his ease by the ovation that was given to him, he talked in a curious and interesting way about Russian literature, which he declares to be well launched upon the tide of realism, from the novel to the play."

Guizot had already expressed the wish to know the author of Le Journal d'un Homme de trop, which had greatly struck him; and Lamartine describes enthusiastically his first meeting with Tourguéneff. The Russian novelist was also on terms of regular intercourse with Jules Simon, Edmond About, Gounod, Augier, Maxime Ducamp, Victor Hugo, Jules Janin, Francisque Sarcey, and Jules Claretie; and later on he was introduced by Flaubert to the young naturalistic school represented by Zola and Daudet, who, together with Ed. de Goncourt, Flaubert, and Tourguéneff, made up that little 'Company of Five' which met at a monthly dinner, sometimes at Flaubert's, sometimes at the house of the Goncourt brothers. Finally, through Zola, Tourguéneff made the acquaintance of the young writers who collaborated in the Soirées de Madan, and especially of Guy de Maupassant.

The Book of the Year is a new work of reference, and is issued by Messrs. Routledge & Sons. The volume before us is a carefully compiled chronological table of 1897. The events of last year are arranged under their dates day by day, and a copious index enables the reader to discover at once the page on which the race for the Waterloo Plate, or the Opening of the New Gallery, or the Arrival of M. Faure at Cronstadt, or any other event, is recorded. It is extraordinary that such an annual has not been issued before; but surely a better title would be The Book of Last Year.

An event of the week has been the publication of D'Annunzio's The Triumph of Death in an English translation by Mrs. Georgianna Harding. This is the first of D'Annunzio's novels to be rendered into English and to be published in England. There have been American translations of some of his works.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- THE GOSPEL OF COMMON SENSE. By Stephen Clays. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.
- THE BIBLE TRUE FROM THE BEGINNING. By Edward Gough, B.A. Kegan Paul. Vol. VI. 16s.
- ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS. By Charles Gore, D.D. John Murray.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- JOSEPH ARCH: THE STORY OF HIS LIFE. Told by Himself. Hutchinson & Co. 12s.
- RAID AND REFORM. By a Pretoria Prisoner: Alfred P. Hillier. Macmillan & Co. 6s.
- UNDER THE DRAGON FLAG: MY EXPERIENCES IN THE CHINO-JAPANESE WAR. By James Allan. Wm. Heinemann.
- PETER THE GREAT. By K. Waliszewski. Translated from the French by Lady Mary Loyd. Wm. Heinemann. Cheap edition in 1 volume. 6s.
- TOURGUÉNEFF AND HIS FRENCH CIRCLE. Edited by E. Halperin-Karlinsky. Translated by Ethel M. Arnold. T. Fisher Unwin. 7s. 6d.
- SOCIAL ENGLAND SERIES: ALIEN IMMIGRANTS TO ENGLAND. By W. Cunningham, D.D. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 4s. 6d.
- HISTORY OF THE CITY OF ROME IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By Ferdinand Gregorovius. Translated from the Fourth German Edition by Annie Hamilton. Vol. V.: Parts I. and II. George Bell & Sons. 9s.
- INDEX TO THE PREENOGATIVE WILLS OF IRELAND, 1536-1810. Edited by Arthur Vicars, F.S.A. Edward Ponsonby.

- THE INVASION OF EGYPT IN A.D. 1219 BY LOUIS IX. OF FRANCE (ST. LOUIS). By Rev. E. J. Davis. Sampson Low.
- THE BUILDING OF THE EMPIRE. By Alfred Thomas Story. 2 vols. Chapman & Hall 14s.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

- THE SPECTATOR. Vol. III. Edited by G. Gregory Smith. J. M. Dent & Co.
- POEMS FROM HORACE, CATULLUS, AND SAPPHO. By Edward George Harman. J. M. Dent & Co.
- THE TEMPLE CLASSICS: THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD. By Oliver Goldsmith. J. M. Dent & Co. 1s. 6d.
- THE RUBAIYAT OF OMAR KHAYYAM: A FACSIMILE OF THE MS. IN THE BOULIARIAN LIBRARY. Translated and edited by Edward Heton Allen. H. S. Nichols, Ltd. 1896.
- DOMESTIC VERSERS. By D. M. Moir (Delta). Centenary Edition. Wm. Blackwood & Sons.
- EPHEMERA: A COLLECTION OF OCCASIONAL VERSER. By J. M. Cobbett. Alden & Co. (Oxford). 2s. 6d.
- THE SPECTATOR. Vol. IV. John C. Nimmo.

NEW EDITIONS OF FICTION.

- A MONK OF FIRE. By Andrew Lang. Longmans, Green & Co.

EDUCATIONAL.

- MODERN PERSIAN COLLOQUIAL GRAMMAR. By Dr. Fritz Rosen. Luzac & Co. PASSAGES FOR UNSEEN TRANSLATION (LATIN AND GREEK). Edited by A. M. Cook, M.A., and E. C. Marchant, M.A. Methuen & Co. 3s. 6d.
- THE STYLOGRAPHY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. By Dr. Brojendh Shaha. Patrick Press Co. (Calcutta). A PUBLIC SCHOOL RECITER. By Bertha M. Skeat, Ph.D. Longmans, Green & Co. 2s. 6d. THE STORY OF THE GREEKS. By H. A. Gushier. Wm. Heinemann. 3s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- REGISTER OF THE SCHOLARS ADMITTED TO COLCHESTER SCHOOL, 1637-1740. Edited by J. H. Round, M.A. Wiles & Son (Colchester). WORKHOUSES AND PAUPERISM. By Louisa Twining. Methuen & Co. 2s. 6d.
- SOME ACCOUNT OF CHURCHGOING. Watts & Co. GOLF. By Garden G. Smith. Lawrence & Bullen. 1s. and 6d.
- NIGHT ON THE WORLD'S HIGHWAY. By Narcisse de Polen. T. Fisher Unwin. 1s. 6d. WHITAKER'S DIRECTORY OF TITLED PERSONS FOR THE YEAR 1898. VIEWS ON SOME OF THE PHENOMENA OF NATURE. By James Walker. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. THE ANTIQUARY: 1897. ELLIOT STOCK. HANDBOOK OF HOUSEKEEPING FOR SMALL INCOMER. By Florence Stacpools. Walter Scott, Ltd. 2s. 6d. ALLEGORIES. By Frederic W. Farrar. Longmans, Green & Co. 6s. COMPLETE PERSPECTIVE COURSE. By J. Humphrey Spanton. Macmillan & Co. 8s. THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS YEAR-BOOK, 1893. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 2s. 6d.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE AUTHOR'S FIGURES.

SIR,—Mr. Nutt, by way of wriggling out, shifts his ground. I cannot allow him to do so.

(1) His "main issue" was a statement which had no foundation. This I bowled over with the greatest ease. In consequence, down dropped all his figures.

(2) He now says that his "main issue" was that an inquiry should have been made. Very well. An answer to that is quite as easy. The essential conditions of the case were before us. We had nothing to learn, because we knew exactly what was proposed to do.

(3) Mr. Heinemann wants me to withdraw my "Catonian jest": "Heinemannus delendus est." Dear me! I have never made any such "Catonian jest." I am sorry to say anything that may wound Mr. Heinemann's feelings, but I really have never expressed any such sentiment. I can assure him that I should contemplate his destruction with no emotion at all, either of joy or sorrow.

(4) He wants me to "prove my assertions, and to name the person who pretends to have spent £14 on advertising, when £5 is nearer the mark." I really wish your readers would turn to your columns of January 8, or let me repeat my assertion. This I cannot but call an unfortunate misrepresentation. Nothing at all had been spent; we were talking only of an agreement. There had been no account. There was not the slightest allegation of any pretence whatever. These are my actual words:

Mr. Nutt "tries to get out by asking if £14 is all that is spent on advertising a Barrie. A Barrie, indeed! The book before me was one which no one would produce, except at the author's cost. I can assure your readers that not £14, but £5 is nearer the mark in such a book as this."

Where is the pretence?—I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

WALTER BESANT.

Jan. 18, 1898.

[This correspondence must now cease.—
ED. ACADEMY.]

EDUCATION FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA.

SIR,—May I crave permission to add a few remarks to the article in your valuable paper of Saturday last on education for the Indian Civil Service, by way of supplementing it by a series of facts bearing on that subject?

In speaking of the institutes where Indian Civil Service candidates are prepared for the Open Competition, the writer of the article does not say a word about an educational institute where more than one-third of the successful candidates have received an education enabling them to pass that examination. I mean Mr. Walter Wren's Institute. Surely, when candidates, after having gone through two or three years of Oxford or Cambridge, fail at their first attempt at the Open Competition, and then, after a year's instruction at "Wren's," pass at their next trial, it cannot in common fairness be said that they were prepared at Oxford or Cambridge. Yet this is what is officially and semi-officially said. The candidates themselves, of course, know better. A "man" who at his first trial made 1,000 marks and failed, and at his second trial, after a year's study at Wren's, makes 2,100 marks and passes, such a man—and their number is very considerable—will hardly think that he owed the great success of his life to an institute other than that of Mr. Wren.

Sir, I have the honour to be one of Mr. Wren's lecturers; yet in calling attention to the above facts I am not speaking pro domo. Mr. Wren can well dispense with my pleading. I am prompted by a sense of justice to the great pedagogical achievements of a teacher who has, both in person and through his lecturers guided by him, taught I.C.S. candidates how to be accurate, lucid, and terse, and thereby secured the success of hundreds of men who have ably done the work of English rule in India.—I am, yours, &c.,

EMIL REICH.

"WHAT A SCHOOLBOY READS."

SIR,—I hope you will allow one who read with much pleasure, and not a little amusement, your recent article on "What a Schoolboy Reads" to add a few words on this subject, which is, perhaps, of more real importance than one is inclined at first sight to think.

Eighteen months ago, as a young schoolmaster, responsible among other things for the essay-writing of the upper classes in a small grammar school (about fifty boarders) in the South of England, it was one of my chief cares to get the boys, by all possible means, to read good English with a view to improving their own. I was, in fact, like "Burnup," in your article, "awfully keen on getting the chaps to read good books."

Almost immediately after my arrival, with a view to finding out what the boys had read, I set as my essay subject to the first two classes (boys ranging from 17 to 13 years of age), "Your favourite author." The best essay shown up was on Thackeray by a boy of fifteen, who had read Vanity Fair, Esmond, The Newcomes, and the Ballads. One boy (aged 16) chose Dickens, one Conan Doyle, and four or five Sir Walter Besant, who was, I found, a general favourite with the bigger boys. Among the youngsters Henty was almost universally chosen; but the fact that almost all his books have a thread of history running through them was generally considered a blemish. Not one boy, so far as I could discover, cared much for Kingston.

As the school library was unfortunately not very large, I decided, not without some trepidation, to give the elder boys the run of my own library, such as it was. The results were interesting.

The boy who had written on Thackeray took at once to Miss Austen and Charlotte Brontë and, I think, read all the works of these two authoresses in the course of the year I remained at the school. Three or four other boys read and enjoyed Jane Eyre and Villette, but could not read Miss Austen at all. To five or six boys, all aged about fifteen, I read Stevenson's New Arabian Nights, and they all took the keenest interest in it. There was a curious divergence of opinion concerning Mr. Stanley Weyman's books. Some boys thought him splendid, others "couldn't stand Under the Red Robe or The Red Cockade at any price." I could never persuade the boys to venture on any poetry except The Bab Ballads, Verses and Translations (omitting the translations), Fly-Leaves and Humorous Poems of the Century. Essays were in no demand; in fact, my only success in this line consisted in once getting a boy to read The Pleasures of Life, which he described as "not half bad."

Lorna Doone was an immense favourite, Rodney Stone was popular with the boys of fourteen to sixteen. My copy of Baron Munchausen was so much read by the smaller boys that it soon became worthless.

I had no copy of Erie; or, Little by Little, in my library, but I never yet came across a manly boy who could stand it. One very favourite book I find I have omitted—The Three Musketeers. One or two of the bigger boys enjoyed, somewhat to my surprise, Kenneth Grahame's Golden Age.

I hope that these jottings may be of some interest to those interested in boys' literature.—I am, yours, &c.,

CHARLES H. S. MATTHEWS.

Leeds, Jan. 18, 1898.

THE BOOKSELLING QUESTION AGAIN.

SIR,—May I without giving mortal offence to a deserving body of men offer my own observations on the bookselling question?

In most businesses the trader possesses some special technical knowledge of the goods in which he deals. The draper or silk mercer can form his own judgment of the quality of his cloths or his silks. The jeweller must possess very special knowledge. The dealer in musical instruments knows something of music; and so with other trades. What special knowledge of books does the ordinary bookseller possess? Less, I should say, than the average well-informed customer. There is, indeed, one branch of the bookselling business which demands (and I suppose repays) special knowledge—namely, that which is concerned with second-hand books; and in London and some other cities there are men of great skill and intelligence who devote themselves to this. In the city from which I write (one of the most important in the kingdom, but which I refrain from naming), although there are many second-hand bookshops, there is not one that seems to be managed with the skill which such a business, to be thoroughly successful, requires. Is there any reason why a bookseller in a provincial town should not combine the old and the new book trade? It would be good for him, good for the customer, and, I should think, good for literature. Then, again, as to foreign books. The foreign booksellers in London form a separate class, well-informed and capable of advising their customers. In this city, as in most provincial towns, the same bookseller deals in English and foreign books, but of the latter he is scarcely able even to read the titles, even if he can do that. He is, in fact, dependent on his London agent. I myself buy a good many foreign books, and one or two London firms which they think likely to attract me. The local bookseller has not knowledge enough to do this: he knows of nothing but the parcel sent him from London. It appears to me that this is not the way in which other businesses are conducted. Bookselling of this character could be carried on quite as well by a stationer or a draper.—I am yours, &c.,

Z.

NEWSPAPER ENGLISH.

SIR,—While I am substantially in agreement with Mr. Nisbet, I should like to enlarge on one particular in which he has neglected to fall back upon the Anglo-Saxon evidence, which he has in other cases shown himself able to use trenchantly and well. I refer to what he says on "none" as a plural, and to his condemnation of "a ables," "a gasworks," which though created by him as a separate item, really falls under the same head, because the crucial point in both instances turns upon a "one" or "one," of which "none" is merely a derivative. What I wish to observe is that in Anglo-Saxon (as in Icelandic) plural words with a singular meaning can be preceded by "one" with plural inflections; although "to a gasworks" naturally does not occur, such a dative as to anum adheafidum is exactly parallel. A further most interesting example of such plural construction is afforded by the phrase "a few words." To the modern man "few" is here a singular noun; even the New English Dictionary treats it as such; but historically it is a plural adjective, and "a" before it is so plural, as is proved by the Anglo-Saxon and feawa worda.—I am yours, &c.,

JAMES PLATT, JUNIOR.

77, St. Martin's-lane: Jan. 19, 1898.

SIR,—The remarks of Mr. Earl Hodgson and those of Mr. J. F. Nisbet in the ACADEMY concerning newspaper English might, no doubt (as the latter justly says), be considerably extended. It is likewise true that in his meticulous exactitude the reader in newspaper offices often trenches on the absurd, and that the intelligent compositor is at times a fearsome wild beast. Let—and Mr. Nisbet, one is sure, would be eager to admit it—all of us who have to enter these offices owe a debt for many an inadvertence remedied, many an error of indolence or momentary forgetfulness avoided, to the patient man with the strong spectacles who "reads us" for press.

And (equally, of course) all of us have a series to tell of weird adventures in this connexion. I remember once being sent by a religious newspaper to "do" a descriptive account of a memorial sermon, by (I think) the late Master of Balliol. Prof. Jewett opened with an impressive citation of 1. lxxviii. 17 (the printer's reader will correct me if the reference is wrong), and I transcribed the exordium verbatim—perhaps a couple of stickfuls. When the paper came out this opening passage was thus printed: "The chariots of God are 20,000, ten thousands of angels." The figures had an effect indescribably funny on everybody but me!

One wonders whether the printer has been malignly illustrating Mr. Nisbet's pictures with the word "objectionable" which your contributor is made to use, or whether Mr. Nisbet rebelled against a word which is certainly an "objection-to-able" as ordinarily used. It is difficult to show "objectionable" is better than "objectionable." Someone once questioned Mr. V. S. Gilbert's use of "coyful," as an adjective (it rhymes so usefully to an otherwise rather unrhymeable word, that "Bab" is rather fond of it). The critic said that you "cannot very well be full of coy." Mr. Gilbert, whom none criticise with safety, reported that bashful is a good word enough "let I cannot, or at least I don't think I can, be full of bash," and the criticised critic had not wherewith to reply!—I am, yours, &c.

T. B. R.

Dulwich: Jan. 18, 1898.

DR. BRANDES AND SHAKESPEARE'S SONNETS.

SIR,—The author of the article, "A German Mare's Nest," in your last number, is apparently unacquainted with the opinions which Dr. Brandes has expressed concerning the date of the Sonnets and the persons with whom they are mainly concerned. This I infer from his saying that "Herr Georg Brandes has yet to run his course." As I have just been reading with much interest Brandes's German work on Shakespeare (1895-6), I am able to give some information on the matter. As to the date, Brandes accepts as entirely convincing the evidence which I adduced (first in the Athenaeum for September 11, 1880), that the fifty-fifth sonnet distinctly shows an acquaintance with Mere's well-known book, which was entered on the Stationers' Register September, 1598. For Sonnet 104, with its intimation that three years had elapsed since Shakespeare became acquainted with his young male friend, Brandes accepts the date 1601. With respect to the coincidence between some expressions in the Sonnets and others in the Venus and Adonis and the earlier comedies, these, he maintains, in no way suffice, notwithstanding what was put forth by Hermann Isaac, to demonstrate the date of the Sonnets.

Shakespeare's friend "Mr. W. H." Brandes finds in young William Herbert. In his case alone "agree name, age, worldly circumstances, outward appearance, virtues, and vices." Coming to London in the autumn of 1597 or the spring of 1598, Herbert then, in all probability, formed an acquaintance with Shakespeare which lasted, apparently, till the poet's death.

The claims of Herbert having been thus admitted, there was little difficulty with respect to Mary Fitton, having regard to facts in that lady's history which are certainly known. Quoting Love's Labour's Lost (1598), and referring to the title, which states that the play had been "newly corrected and augmented," and that it was given as it was presented at Court "this last Christmas," Brandes easily attains the conclusion that Biron's eulogy of his brunette love had been expressly added, or modified, to accord with the characteristics of Mrs. Fitton, who would be, in the ordinary course, one of the spectators. The agreement between the play (iv. 3) and Sonnet 127 is thus easily accounted for. Brandes, also, rightly attaches importance to the allusion to the lady's name ("thy name") in Sonnet 151. This allusion entirely agrees with the name "Fitton," though it involves a word-play which would scarcely be regarded as decorous in these Victorian days.

I have been referring to Brandes's German work. Mr. Heinemann has in the press a translation of the same author's Danish work, which has been partly executed by Mr. William Archer. The two works were published about the same time, and though, so far as I am aware, the one is not stated to be a translation of the other, the views set forth are no doubt in essential agreement.—I am, yours, &c.,

THOMAS TYLER.

London: Jan. 17, 1898.

THE BITTER CRY OF A SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER.

SIR,—It is difficult to understand in what way Mr. Andrew Lang's experience in the matter of the cost of a book which he purchased for £4 bears upon the question of the fairness of a public statement of the same. Is it not well known that second-hand booksellers are never rich in the sense applied to business men generally? Who ever heard of a millionaire second-hand bookseller? Yet he is often a man of considerable intelligence; becomes a bookseller not for the sake of making money one half so much as because he loves that literature which Mr. Lang adorns; and he labours at his calling all the year round, with, perhaps, but a brief fortnight's rustication within hearing of the sad sea waves, unsolaced even by the amenities of golf. He spends, perhaps, a fourth of his waking hours in the auction rooms, wasting many a weary hour, at the gain only of a splitting headache; and when, by rare chance, he does manage to pick up a bargain, Mr. Lang—a brother, however far removed on a higher plane, but still a brother in literature—appears to begrudge him the market value, and presumably would prefer that he himself profited by the bookseller's patient search.

If bookselling were a commercial instead of a dilettante business the matter would have been different. Steel pens, for instance, can be ground out by the million, can be bought and sold any day, and should bear an easily ascertainable rate of profit. Or, leading articles in newspapers can be written to order and produced any day, and the rate of remuneration be easily fixed. But a second-hand book is often a scarce commodity, and when found is worth its market value, whatever may have been given for it. As a matter of fact, it does not pay for a bookseller to be notoriously dear, and self-preservation makes him regulate his prices according to the true value of his wares. With regard to an article which cannot be produced to order, I altogether fail to see why the dealer, when he does meet with a piece of luck—all too rare, alas!—should share his good fortune with, say, Mr. Lang. In the opinion of many persons the publication of trade information for the sake of making personal profit is unjustifiable to a degree, and should be protested against by all concerned. Personally, I care very little about the matter. It is on principle only that I object.—I am, yours, &c.,

THE SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER
IN QUESTION.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"Poems."
By Stephen
Phillips.

THE Times praises Mr. Phillips's Poems with a certain caution. "Marpessa," says this critic, is "a very lovely treatment" of the story on which it is based. Some objection is taken to the subject-matter of one or two of the poems, and the critic concludes by saying:

"On the whole, the volume reasserts the claim to attention which was made so strikingly in Mr. Phillips's first poem, but the world must wait a little longer before it admits him without cavil or question into the narrow circle of those poets who have at once a message for the many and for the few."

The Daily Chronicle is less hesitating in its approval. It points out that "in the science of verse Mr. Phillips is a disciple of Milton." Of Mr. Phillips's subjects and outlook we read:

"Almost the whole of this book is concerned with life and death, largely and liberally contemplated: it is precisely that kind of contemplation which our recent poetry lacks. Poetry, says Coleridge once more, 'is the blossom and the fragrant of all human knowledge, human passions, human thoughts, emotion, knowledge.' It should not be didactic, it cannot help being moral: it must not be instructive, but it must needs be educative. It is, as it were, the mind of man 'in excelsis,' caught into a world of light. We praise Mr. Phillips for many excellences, but chiefly for the great air and ardour of his poetry, its persistent loftiness."

The Saturday Review regrets the Miltonic character of Mr. Phillips's verse:

"His blank verse is as beautiful as any that has recently been written. But he is at present very much under the influence of the dangerous Miltonic tradition; a tradition dangerous because it tends towards a beautiful lifelessness, a mechanical replacement of the living voice by an instrument on which careful fingers touch elaborate stops. Good Miltonic verse is, after all, other things being equal, one of the easiest kinds of verse to write, if one will permit oneself to write after any model. Whenever it is done well, it has an undoubted charm; and its actual, as apart from its relative value, is apt to be over-rated by critics and readers who do not realise that it is not enough to do over again, however well, only what has been done before. . . . Mr. Phillips has so much genuine poetic quality, he thinks so poetically, that we are the more regretful that he has not found his own voice."

The Spectator declares Mr. Phillips shows the promise of a true poet:

"The true poet must . . . be classical, that is universal. He must lift his subject and its expression into the sublimer air, and make us feel that though he writes of England and to-day, his arrows of song would have gone home in Athens or Rome, or in the London of Elizabeth or Anne. He must find his subjects here and among us, but once found he must bear them aloft and place them, as stars, in the heaven of invention, there to rain light and harmony on us mere 'mortals militant' below. To these requirements Mr. Phillips responds. He is modern and he is classical. He has passion and he has imagination."

Literature hails Mr. Phillips as a poet of much achievement and more promise:

"No such remarkable book of verse as this has appeared for several years. Mr. Phillips boldly challenges comparison, both in style and subject, with the work of great masters; the writers whom he makes you think of range up to Milton and do not fall below Landor. He attempts nothing small, and his poetry brings with it that sensation of novelty and that suffusion of a strongly marked personality which stamps a genuine poet. The volume of his work is not great, but it is considerable, about equal in length to the 'Georgics'; it contains abundant performance; and even when promise exceeds performance it is promise of the most interesting kind."

This critic quotes the following passage "as showing Mr. Phillips not perhaps in his most original or characteristic aspect, but at the height of his technical achievement":

"How wonderful in a bereaved ear
The Northern Wind: how strange the summer
night,

The exhaling earth to those who vainly love.
Out of our sadness have we made the world
So beautiful; the sea sighs in our brain,
And in our hearts the yearning of the moon.
To all this sorrow was I born, and since
Out of a human womb I came, I am
Not eager to forego it; I would scorn
To elude the heaviness and take the joy,
For pain came with the sap, pangs with the bloom:

This is the sting, the wonder."

No man in our generation and few in any generation have written better than this."

The Standard reviews Mr. Phillips's book among a crowd of volumes of minor verse, and does not so much as mention "Marpessa."

"Dariel." THE critics do not think
By R. D. Black- Dariel quite worthy of Mr. more. Blackmore. "The novel, as a whole," says the Standard critic,

"is very far from being a fair type of what Mr. Blackmore can do. His humour is degenerating. It is not funny when George has asked Bob Slemnick, 'Did you spend the whole of your time in that enchanted valley?' to have Bob answering, 'Ah, a chant it were, by gum! A chant I could listen to,' nor humorous to talk of a window being 'lighted by leaded diamonds which were certainly not brilliants.' Nor to tell us that Farmer Ticknor was 'rather crusty now, as a man is apt to be who lives on a crust for the benefit of foreigners.' Nor is any of the talk between George and his sister Grace the least conceivable; given that, though they are poor, and George is practically a farmer and Grace a dairymaid, they belong to the squirearchy, are the children of Sir Harold Cranleigh, and of a family that had been on its land before the Conquest. It seems, by the way, that the families of Saxon descent, in our England of to-day, treat their women-folk in quite a different fashion from that favoured by those who have Norman blood in their veins. The portions of the story which entitle it to be called a romance are interesting, and as fantastic as any of Mr. Blackmore's admirers could wish. But they might have been unfolded more gradually. Much hangs on Sur Imar's story, which is narrated in three chapters."

The Daily News' critic calls the story "a good book marred." He takes objection to the author's Protectionist views, and likens Mr. Blackmore to Jeremiah. "This blemish, alienating sympathy, and appealing to the grossest class selfishness, mars an otherwise picturesque and exhilarating romance."

The Daily Telegraph is kinder: "The story is admirably told"; but there is a hint of agreement with more severe critics: "Towards the end, where the interest becomes more concentrated, it grips the reader's attention like a vice. In the earlier parts, pleasant and charming as Mr. Blackmore always is, his discursive tendencies impair in some degree the attractiveness of the tale."

"Lord Ormont and His Aminta." By George Meredith. THE new revised edition of this novel, issued by Messrs. Constable, has elicited the following from a Daily News critic. We shall quote the latter half of it. The writer says:

"It is interesting that in Lord Ormont and His Aminta Mr. Meredith should again have chosen a couple who 'offend good citizenship,' the woman being still one to 'walk on the straight line.' We have more than one allusion to the 'Nature versus Society' problem which occupied him in One of Our Conquerors. Here, indeed, he does not so often mount the lecture-rostrum, and the result of his self-denial is a novel more perfect in form—an altogether better story. But he evidently desires to show how a man and a woman may succeed where Victor Radnor and Nataly came to grief, and there can be no doubt that in both novels he is preaching rather than narrating. In Lord Ormont, at least, he seems to be not altogether honest, for the happiness of Weyburn and Aminta is made to depend on an 'economy of truth,' a basis that seems to us essentially un-Meredithian. It is evident from their conversation in the last chapter that they were living under false pretences, even concealing their true position from the parents of their pupils. That they were not found out by society, that their plans and hopes were not shattered and themselves driven, like Victor and Nataly, from place to place, was a pure fluke, and it is impossible not to see it. They shirked the consequences of their action just as Victor did, and if Mr. Meredith sought to show that Victor's overthrow was inevitable we cannot see any logical ground for their success. One does not necessarily mean that this couple were under any obligation to advertise the world of what they had done, but they should not have practised deception upon those whom it concerned to know the truth. Nor is it necessary to discuss the question whether their elopement was justifiable or not; it is their subsequent behaviour that is the essential matter of interest, and we contend that in breaking a convention, and then pretending that they have not broken it, Weyburn and Aminta do not follow the course which the author in One of Our Conquerors seemed to approve. It is, of course, unpleasant to be forced on to these lines of criticism; but Mr. Meredith practically lays them down for one by his 'asides.' It is impossible to accept the story simply as a narrative of events that happened so, when one is constantly told how and why such and such things 'ought' to happen. Lord Ormont and His Aminta is weak in those stern qualities which make the strength of One of Our Conquerors, but it excels in nearly every respect in which its predecessor is deficient. There are passages in this book unsurpassed in beauty and grace by anything Mr. Meredith ever wrote. There are, of course, the usual puzzles—e.g., why does Mr. Meredith call the mark over the z in Pagnell a cedilla? What does he mean by a man who is a distinguished 'member' and ornament of chosen seats above? And what language does he draw upon for the epithet 'thrasylloon,' which he applies to a coxcomb? Presumably it means presumptuous, but is it either Greek or English?

And why, finally, is Mrs. Lawrence Finchley (like Mrs. Mountstuart Jenkinson and others) constantly denied her surname and called Mrs. Lawrence, or Isabella Lawrence? But such chapters as the first two, 'Lovers Mated,' 'A Marine Duet,' and the pages immediately before it are enough to prove that Mr. Meredith's fancy has preserved its freshness, and his style all its old vigour and colour and charm."

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO

SIDGWICK (PROF. HENRY).

PRACTICAL ETHICS. By Henry SIDGWICK, Litt.D., Knightsbridge Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Cambridge. 4s. 6d.

CUNNINGHAM (PROF. W.).

ALIEN IMMIGRANTS TO ENGLAND and their INFLUENCE ON SOCIAL LIFE. With Facsimiles, Maps, and Illustrations. 4s. 6d.
Divided in Chapters headed The Norman Invasion—The Later Middle Ages—The Reformation and Religious Refugees, Intercourse with the Dutch—Later Immigrations—Conclusion.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR OF CAMBRIDGE UNIV.

A RUN ROUND the EMPIRE: being the Log of Two Young People who Circumnavigated the Globe. By ALEX. HILL, M.A., M.D., Master of Downing College. 42 Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

"A capital little book of travel, alike for young and old."—DAILY MAIL. "Revises a royal road to the learning of geography, for there is no dull page in it."—YORKSHIRE POST.—"A fascinating book, one which old people as well as young may read with advantage and pleasure."—SPEAKER.

HARBOTTLE (THOMAS BENFIELD).

DICTIONARY of CLASSICAL QUOTATIONS. With Authors, Subjects and Catchword-Indexes. pp. 610. 8vo, 7s. 6d.
Uniform with Col. Delhiae's "Dictionary of Quotations" (English). 7s. 6d.

"We gladly put the second volume on the shelf by the side of the first, and expect to consult it frequently.... The scholar is to be congratulated upon the appearance of this volume. It will greatly facilitate the task of research, and forms an indispensable portion of the student's library. He that hath but few books is bound to have this."—NOTES AND QUERIES.

LOWSLEY (LIEUT.-COL.), R.E.

WHIST of the FUTURE: a Forecast submitting defects in existing Whist Laws; containing arguments against the American leads being applicable to strong hands and weak hands alike; and advocating, with other matters, the adoption of the same game and the same laws for all countries. By Lt.-Col. B. LOWSLEY, R.E. (Retired). 3s. 6d.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS YEAR-BOOK, 1898.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS YEAR-BOOK: Ninth Annual Issue, 1898. Edited by Three Public School Men (Eton, Harrow, Winchester). 2s. 6d.
In the present issue Twenty-nine Public Schools appear for the first time. Full details are now given of nearly one Hundred Public Schools.

"This indispensable annual."—JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

WADE (JOHN), B.Sc.

INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of ORGANIC CHEMISTRY: a Text-Book for Students in the Universities and Technical Schools. By JOHN WADE, B.Sc. (Lond.), Senior Demonstrator of Chemistry and Physics at Guy's Hospital. With 60 Charts and 11 Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

HERBERT (J. F.).

THE APPLICATION of PSYCHOLOGY to the SCIENCE of EDUCATION. Translated, with Notes and Introduction to the Study of Herbert (125 pp.), by BEATRICE C. MULLINER, Lecturer at the Ladies' College, Cheltenham. Preface by DOROTHEA BEALE. 5 Plates. 4s. 6d.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LIM., London.

NOW READY, price 7s. 6d.

THE STORY OF GLADSTONE'S LIFE.

BY

JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P.,

Author of

"A History of Our Own Times," "Life of Sir Robert Peel," &c.

In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

CONTAINING

45 Illustrations, mostly Full-Page Portraits, representing Mr. Gladstone at different periods.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

H. G. WELLS'S NEW STORY.

Mr. WM. HEINEMANN begs to announce that H. G. WELLS'S New Romance,

THE WAR OF THE WORLDS,

Revised and Amplified, is Ready this day at all Libraries, Booksellers', and Bookstalls, in one volume, price Six Shillings.

London: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

|   |  |
|---|--|
| TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.   | COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.  |
| LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum. | N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage. |

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS IN TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited
30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S LIST.

CONAN DOYLE'S NEW NOVEL.

ON FEBRUARY 1st.

With 40 Full-Page Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE KOROSKO.

By A. CONAN DOYLE,

Author of "The White Company," "Rodney Stone," "Uncle Bernac," &c.

On January 26th. With 2 Portraits and 2 Views. Large crown 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ARTHUR YOUNG.

With Selections from his Correspondence. Edited by M. BETHAM-EDWARDS.

Chosen for Holiday Reading at Harrow and Winchester FOURTH EDITION. With 16 Portraits and 11 Plans. Crown 8vo, 6s.

DEEDS that WON the EMPIRE. By the Rev. W. H. FITCHETT ("Venetia"). From the Bookman.—"There is no bluster, no brag, no nauseous cant about a chosen people; but there is a ringing enthusiasm for endurance, for daring, gallantry, for daring and difficult feats, which generous-hearted boys and men will respond to quickly. There is not a flabby paragraph from beginning to end."

THE LIFE OF

SIR JOHN HAWLEY GLOVER, R.N.

G.C.M.G. By Lady GLOVER. Edited by the Right Hon. Sir RICHARD TEMPLE, Bart., G.C.S.I., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S. With Portrait and Maps. Demy 8vo, 14s. From the Pall Mall Gazette.—"Sir John Glover was a born leader of men, and it is well that the lives of such leaders should be recorded as an example for the next generation of public servants. His widow has written the story of his life with great discrimination."

LORD COCHRANE'S TRIAL before

LORD ELLENBOROUGH in 1814. By J. B. ATLAY. With a Preface by EDWARD DOWNES LAW, Commander Royal Navy. With Portrait. 8vo, 18s. The Manchester Guardian.—"Since Sir James Stephens's triumphant vindication of Hastings in the matter of Napoleon, no such convincing piece of legal investigation has appeared as the book before us. Mr. Atlay has been able completely to clear the character of a great judge from a tissue of foul aspersions."

THE STORY of the CHURCH of EGYPT: being an Outline of the History of the Egyptians under their Successive Masters, from the Roman Conquest until Now. By E. L. BUTCHER, Author of "A Strange Journey," "A Black Jewel," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s. The Academy.—"Mrs. Butcher has written a very interesting book. The record of a Church which has preserved its national character unchanged for nearly nineteen centuries must needs have the deepest interest for all who care for antiquity."

RELIGIO MEDICI, and Other Essays.

By Sir THOMAS BROWNE. Edited, with an Introduction, by D. LLOYD ROBERTS, M.D., F.R.C.P. Revised Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

[On January 26, CONTENTS: Biographical Introduction—Religio Medici—Christian Morals—Letter to a Friend—On Dreams—Urn Burial.

CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For FEBRUARY. Price ONE SHILLING.

Contents:

The Second of a Series of FIGHTS FOR THE FLAG: BLAKE AND THE DUTCHMEN.

By the Rev. W. H. FITCHETT, Author of "Deeds that Won the Empire."

MISTRESSES and SERVANTS. By Mrs. C. W. EARLE, Author of "Pot-pourri from a Surrey Garden."

AN INVOLUNTARY PRESIDENT. By W. L. ALDEN.
SOME REAL TIGER STORIES. By A. SARATKUMAR GHOSH.
LONDON FISH and FISHERIES. By G. J. CORNISH.
A GAY CAVALIER. By Miss EVA SCOTT.
THE BRIGANDS of CALABRIA. By CLARE SOREL STRONG.
CONCERNING BREAKFAST. By E. V. LUCAS.
A DESERT DREAM. By E. and H. HIGGON.
MY FIRST SHIPWRECK: a Narrative of Fact. By FRANK T. BULLEN.
PAGES from a PRIVATE DIARY.
THE CASTLE INN. Chapters V.—VIII. By STANLEY WEYMAN.
Ready at all Booksellers' on January 26th.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place.

NOW READY.

With 17 Photogravure Illustrations, demy 8vo, cloth, price 16s.

THE TWO DUCHESSSES:

Family Correspondence of, and relating to, Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire; Elizabeth, Duchess of Devonshire; the Earl of Bristol (Bishop of Derry) and Countess of Bristol; Lord and Lady Byron; the Earl of Aberdeen; Sir Augustus Foster, Bart.; and many eminent personages of the period 1777-1859.

Edited by VERE FOSTER.

London: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 50, Old Bailey.

COLGATE & CO.,

Oldest and Largest Perfumers and Soap Makers in America.

ESTABLISHED 1808.

Cashmere Bouquet Soap, per Box, 3 Tablets ... 2/6
 " " Perfume, per Case, 2 Bottles 5/-

OF ALL STORES, PERFUMERS, CHEMISTS, AND DRUGGISTS.

BRITISH DEPOT: 46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
 Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
 TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
 TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
 STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
 HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
 FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
 HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
 FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSROFT, Manager.

People's Edition, price 6d., with Portrait. (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V. with Two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Farnival Street, E.C.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S
 GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A
 BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND

BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COLLECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CONTINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED, AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the Literary matter, and of the Advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

|   | s. | d. |
|---|----|----|
| FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE* ... ..  | 8  | 6  |
| FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE .. .. . | 4  | 6  |
| FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE ... ..    | 2  | 6  |

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS, the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print Books Wanted column.

READY SHORTLY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1897.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 6s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE English Catalogue for 1897

gives the FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated Titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages, whilst the price (6s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue' is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenaeum.
 "We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in those pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books' is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research, wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.....The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.
 St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1343.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 29, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS.
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

POTTER'S CATALOGUE of New and Second-hand BOOKS (No. 119, for FEBRUARY) at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, BELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast binding and covering 8, 12, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

FOR the AUTOGRAPH COLLECTOR—A NEW MANUAL by Dr. Scott, 1s. post free, 17, Crondance Road, Ilham. Autographs purchased; a large variety for sale; lists free.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. English, 10d. per 1,000 Words. French and German, in Roman characters, 1s. 3d. per 1,000. French Translated. Samples and references.—Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS of ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout a civilized world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. His work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs. Adamson & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

FRENCH in THREE MONTHS.—FRENCH in THREE MONTHS—DAMIAN'S NEW SYSTEM. Available by post. Any age. Success certain. Commended by Press.—10, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.
Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER.—PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,
4, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL of Munich,
The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.
PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY
BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.
Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Architects, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.
J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.
For the reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS.,
Signs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book
Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and Price List on application.
Office: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

QUAIN PROFESSORSHIP OF PHYSICS.
This CHAIR is VACANT by the resignation of Prof. Carey Foster at the close of the present Session.
APPLICATIONS, accompanied by such Testimonials as Candidates may wish to submit, should reach the Secretary by TUESDAY, MARCH 1, 1898.
Further information will be sent on application.
The new Professor will enter on his duties next October.
J. M. HONSENOUR, M.A., Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.

PROFESSORSHIP OF GREEK.
APPLICATIONS are invited for the GLADSTONE CHAIR OF GREEK now vacant in the above College, the applications, with twenty copies of testimonials, to be in the hands of the Registrar not later than MARCH 5th, 1898. Stipend, £375 per annum, with two-thirds of Fees from Students.—For all information concerning terms and conditions of tenure, apply the Registrar, University College, Liverpool.

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

The University Court of the University of Edinburgh will, on Monday, 14th March next, or some subsequent day, proceed to the Appointment of an additional EXAMINER in MATHEMATICS and NATURAL PHILOSOPHY. The person appointed will be required to examine also in PHYSICS at Examinations for Degrees in Medicine and Public Health.
The period of office is four years, from 1st February, 1898. Particulars regarding remuneration may be obtained on application to the Secretary of the University Court.
Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, not later than Monday, 22nd February next, sixteen copies of his Application, and sixteen copies of any Testimonials he may desire to present. One copy of the Application should be signed. Applicants who send in Testimonials must not send more than four.
M. O. TAYLOR, Secretary University Court.
University of Edinburgh,
24th January, 1898.

MCGILL UNIVERSITY, MONTREAL.

CHAIR OF CHEMISTRY.
The Board of Governors is prepared to receive applications for the additional CHAIR of CHEMISTRY, newly instituted by Mr. W. C. McDonald. Candidates should produce evidence of special qualifications in Organic Chemistry. Applications, accompanied by any testimonials which the Candidate may desire to submit, should be forwarded to the undersigned on or before the 31st March next.
W. VAUGHAN, Secretary.
McGill University, Montreal.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D. and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.
For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

GREEK DRESS and the SURROUNDINGS of GREEK LIFE.

A COURSE OF LECTURES will be given on this subject at UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON, by Professor ERNEST A. GARDNER, M.A., on MONDAYS at 4 p.m., beginning on JANUARY 31st.
A CLASS on ATHENIAN TOPOGRAPHY will be held on WEDNESDAYS in preparation for lectures in Athens. Fee for the Course, £1.
For Prospectus apply to
J. M. HORSBURGH, M.A., Secretary.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY CALENDAR FOR THE YEAR 1898.

London: MACMILLAN & Co. Manchester: J. E. CORNISH.

ESTABLISHED 1851. BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.
BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

|   |  |
|---|--|
| TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.   | COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.  |
| LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum. | N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage. |

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

Now Offered at Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)
Sent Gratis and post free to any address.
The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.
30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BAOMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

LONDON LIBRARY, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.O.
PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.
VICE-PRESIDENTS—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP of LONDON, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B.
Treasurer—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBERRY.
The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year: Life Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes allowed to Country and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room open from 10 to half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 2 vols., Royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.
C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

THE AUTO TYPE COMPANY

INVITE ATTENTION TO THEIR PERMANENT PROCESSES OF PHOTOGRAPHIC REPRODUCTION,

Combining great range of tone effect with accurate monochrome representation and artistic expression.

THE AUTO TYPE SOLAR or CARBON PROCESS, for the Reproduction in Permanent Pigments of Oil Paintings, Drawings in Water Colour, Pencil, Crayon, Indian Ink, &c.

AUTO-GRAVURE.—The Autotype Company's Process of Photographic Engraving on Copper, yielding results resembling Mezzotint Engravings.

The Company has successfully reproduced several important Works by this process, including Portraits by Sir J. E. Mills, P.R.A., J. Pettie, R.A., W. W. Oakes, R.A., F. Hill, R.A., the Hon. Geo. Collier, Sir G. Reid, P.R.S.A.; also Examples of Gainsborough, Turner, Constable, Schmalz, Douglas, Draper, &c.

THE AUTO TYPE MECHANICAL PROCESS (Zawyer's Collotype) for Book Illustrations of the highest class. This process is noted for its excellence in copies of Ancient MSS., Coins, Seals, Medals, and of all subjects of which a good Photograph can be taken, and is adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, many of the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers.

Amongst Works lately Illustrated by the Company may be mentioned the following:—

FOR H.M. GOVERNMENT.—ILLUSTRATIONS to the REPORT of the ROYAL COMMISSION on TUBERCULOSIS; The REPORTS of the MEDICAL OFFICER of the LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD, as issued to both Houses of Parliament (INFLUENZA, TYPHOID, DYPHTHERIA, CHOLERA, VACCINATION, &c.)

ELECTRIC MOVEMENT in AIR and WATER; with Theoretical Inferences. By Lord ARMSTRONG, C.B., F.R.S.

The MONTAGU COLLECTION of COINS and MEDALS. All the Illustrations to the Trustees of this renowned Collection, recently dispersed.

FORD MADOX BROWN: a Record of his Life and Work. By F. M. HUEFFER.

The AUTO TYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ARTISTIC, SCIENTIFIC, or ANTIQUARIAN INTEREST, of every character, for Book Illustration, for the Portfolio, or Mural Decoration.

Examples of Work may be seen, and Terms obtained, at
THE AUTO TYPE FINE-ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

IMPORTANT.

All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, should subscribe to the

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND

BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

ESTABLISHED 1837.

Among the many attractions of its columns the following are mentioned:—

Several literary articles (including leader on some prominent topic of the moment) announcements of forthcoming volumes, notes on current events in connection with the publishing world, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated) of new books and magazines, correspondence, &c., &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of

NEW BOOKS OF THE WEEK

(the most complete list issued) giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number upwards of a thousand.

OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS

are advertised for, thus affording readers an excellent opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and attention may be particularly drawn to the fact that annual subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money-payments should be made.

|  |          |
|--|----------|
| For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland         | 8s. 6d.  |
| " Six Months ditto   | 4s. 6d.  |
| " Three Months ditto   | 2s. 6d.  |
| To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage | 11s. 0d. |

NOW READY.*BOOKS of the YEAR 1897.

SIXTY-FIRST YEAR OF ISSUE OF ANNUAL CATALOGUE

THE ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS

FOR THE YEAR 1897.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 224, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

It contains a much longer List of Works than last year's Catalogue, including an addition of some 1,400 more Titles, but the price remains the same, viz., 5s. net, cloth limp; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenæum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.....The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, .C.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

A NEW WORK BY MR. HAVELOCK ELLIS

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

AFFIRMATIONS. By Havelock Ellis, Author of "Man and Woman," "The Criminal," "The New Spirit," &c.

"He has worked out problems for himself, and holds his convictions sincerely and fearlessly. Even where we agree and approve least we recognise the vigour, the suggestiveness, the stimulating qualities of his work."—Athenæum.

".....a very generous and very rousing indicator of the many paths to truth to-day. His [Mr. Havelock Ellis's] 'Affirmations' will win him a hundred quarrels, no doubt, but not one lethargic reader."—Sketch.

"A work that makes for light."—Manchester Guardian.

"He [Mr. Havelock Ellis] is nothing if not bold, yet amid much that is certain to startle and offend there is also much which most of us needed to be told. On the broad basis of mere cleverness 'Affirmations' deserves liberal attention."—Daily Mail.

A NEW BOOK ABOUT INDIA.

Demy 8vo, gilt top, art linen, with 14 Full-Page Illustrations, price 6s.

SUNNY MEMORIES of an INDIAN WINTER. By Mrs. ARCHIBALD DUNN, Author of "The World's Highway."

"This record of travel is written with insight and knowledge. There are many illustrations in the volume, and some of them—notably views of the interiors of mosques and temples—are of more than passing interest."—Speaker.

THE SCOTT LIBRARY.

Crown 8vo, gilt top, cloth elegant, price 1s. 6d.

NEW VOLUMES NOW READY.

RENAN'S LIFE of JESUS. Translated, with an Introduction, by WILLIAM G. HUTCHISON.

"This well-known work has often been rendered into English before, but never in a more readable or scholarly version."—Scotsman.

ESSAYS of SCHOPENHAUER. Translated by Mrs. RUDOLF DIRCKS. With an Introduction.

"These essays are all characteristic of the man—of his strength and his weakness, of his intellectual sincerity, and of his moral shortcomings."—Spectator.

CRITICISMS, REFLECTIONS, and MAXIMS of GORTHE. Translated, with an Introduction and Biographical Note, by W. B. RONNFELDT.

"The translation is vigorous and idiomatic, and Mr. Ronnfeldt's introduction.....will give the reader unfamiliar with German a fair conception of Goethe's place in European literature."—Times.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

Edited by HAVELOCK ELLIS.

FOUR IMPORTANT NEW VOLUMES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., with Diagrams.

SLEEP: its Physiology, Pathology, Hygiene, and Psychology. By Dr. MARIE DE MANACEINE (St. Petersburg).

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

HALLUCINATIONS and ILLUSIONS: A Study of the Fallacies of Perception. By EDMUND PARISH.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

The PSYCHOLOGY of the EMOTIONS. By Prof. T. H. RIBOT.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. 124 Illustrations.

THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY. By E. W. SCRIPTURE, Ph.D. (Leipzig).

A NEW AND INVALUABLE HANDBOOK.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.; half-roan, 3s. 6d.

HANDBOOK of HOUSEKEEPING for SMALL INCOMES. By FLORENCE STACPOOLE, Diplômée of the London Obstetrical Society, Lecturer to the National Health Society, and for the Councils.

"The chapters embody the fruits of the closest observation upon a complex subject.....Economy is insisted on not only as regards expenditure, but in making the best use of provisions by competent cookery, while some good hints are given for invalid feeding, the care of children, and the treatment of everyday ailments."—Telegraph.

"A thoroughly sensible book."—Daily Mail.

"A marvel of completeness and cheapness."—New Age.

London:

WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S SELECTED LIST.

NOW READY.

MY LIFE IN TWO HEMISPHERES.

By Sir CHARLES GAVAN DUFFY.

In 2 vols., with a Photogravure Portrait to each, price 32s.

* * * This work contains letters from John Stuart Mill, Cardinal Newman, Thomas Carlyle, Mrs. Carlyle, Richard Cobden, Father Mathew, Leigh Hunt, John Bright, Robert Lowes (Lord Sherbrooke), Sir Emerson Tennant, Sir Arthur Helps, H. E. Childers, John Forster, William Allingham, Clarence Mangan, and from eminent Political Men in Ireland and Australia too numerous to specify.

The Daily News.—"These volumes may serve for a history not only of a man and of a movement, but of a whole nation in one of its most stirring periods.....Sir Charles Duffy surveys the entire field of Imperial politics, and there are few men of the first importance whom he is not able to estimate as personal forces."

The Daily Chronicle.—"A bright refreshing narrative, full of valuable information, replete with admirable stories, and abounding in thoughtful and suggestive reflections."

The Newcastle Daily Leader.—"We commend Sir C. Duffy's graphic and vigorous pages to all who are sincerely desirous to know the ins and outs of the Irish questions."

READY NEXT WEEK.

THE GLADSTONE COLONY: an Un- written Chapter of Australian History. By JAMES FRANCIS HOGAN, M.P., Author of "The Irish in Australia," "The Australian in London," "Robert Lowe, Viscount Sherbrooke," &c. With a Prefatory Note by the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

ABBREVED CONTENTS: Prefatory Note—The Genesis of the Gladstone Colony—Some Preliminary Proposals—Constitution of the New Colony—Mr. Gladstone's Enunciates his Land Policy—The Founding of the Colony—The Veto of Earl Grey—The Vindication of Colonel Barney—The Growth and Development of Gladstone—Experiences of a Pioneer Squatter—The Great Gold Rush—The Correspondence of Sir Maurice O'Connell—A Grievous Error of the Gladstones—Major de Winton—Oldest Living Gladstonian—The Gladstone of To-Day—Mr. Gladstone's "True Principles of Colonisation"—Mr. Gladstone and the Colonies—A Couple of Colonial Lectures.

TOURGUËNEFF and his FRENCH

CIRCLE: a Series of Letters to Flaubert, George Sand, Emile Zola, Guy de Maupassant, Gambetta, and others. Edited by H. HALPERINE-KAMINSKY. Translated, and with Preface, by Miss ETHEL ARNOLD. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

The Times.—"This work has been admirably translated into English by Miss Ethel Arnold.....The preface contains much sound criticism very felicitously expressed.....The merit of the rendering is attested by the easy and idiomatic flow, and by the close correspondence it establishes between the style and the man.....In a word, Miss Arnold has treated the book exactly in the right spirit."

SIR THOMAS MAITLAND. By W.

FREWEN LORD. (Vol. II. of "Builders of Greater Britain.") Photogravure Front, and Maps. Cloth, 6s.

The Pall Mall Gazette.—"Written in a bright and spirited style, this study of Sir Thomas Maitland furnishes a fascinating chapter in the history of the making of the empire."

SIR JAMES Y. SIMPSON. By H. LAING GORDON. (Vol. III. of "Masters of Medicine.") Illustrated. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

The Glasgow Herald.—"The book, we repeat, should be widely read, and especially by Scotsmen."

THE PEOPLES and POLITICS of the FAR EAST. By HENRY NORMAN. Over 60 Illustrations and 4 Maps. Third Edition. Cloth, 21s.

MODERN FRANCE. By Andre

LE BON. (New Volume of "The Story of the Nations.") Illustrated. Cloth, 5s.

WITHOUT PREJUDICE. By I. ZANG-

WILL, Author of "The Master," &c. Cloth, 6s.

WILD NATURE WON by KINDNESS.

By Mrs. BRIGHTWEN. Many Illustrations. New Edition (the Eighth). Cloth, 1s. 6d.

HOW TO BE HAPPY THOUGH

MARRIED. By Rev. E. J. HARDY, M.A. New Edition, completing the 53rd Thousand. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

A Set of Prospectuses, Catalogues, and Lists, containing descriptive details of books in every class of literature, will be sent post free to any address on receipt of card. If desired, arrangements can be made for intending purchasers to view any book at the local bookseller's.

London:

T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S LIST.

CONAN DOYLE'S NEW NOVEL.
ON FEBRUARY 1st.

With 40 Full-Page Illustrations.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE KOROSKO.

By A. CONAN DOYLE,
Author of "The White Company," "Rodney Stone,"
"Uncle Bernac," &c.

READY THIS DAY. With 2 Portraits and 2 Views.
Large crown 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ARTHUR YOUNG.

With Selections from his Correspondence.
Edited by M. BETHAM-EDWARDS.

IMMEDIATE PRESS OPINIONS:—

The TIMES.—"The autobiography reveals a singular character, and one which even his friends imperfectly understood.....Miss Edwards has done her task with a reserve and succinctness to be much commended."
The DAILY NEWS.—"In these pages Arthur Young presents himself to us as the untiring experimentalist and dreamer of economic dreams, as the brilliant man of Society and the world, and as 'the blind, solitary victim of religious melancholia.' His editor has judiciously performed her task."

READY THIS DAY.

Revised Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

RELIGIO MEDICI, and Other Essays.

By Sir THOMAS BROWNE. Edited, with an Introduction, by D. LLOYD ROBERTS, M.D., F.R.C.P.

London:

SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

SECOND EDITION Now Ready of MR. E. H. COOPER'S NEW SPORTING NOVEL.

THE MARCHIONESS AGAINST THE COUNTY

By E. H. COOPER, Author of "Mr. Blake of Newmarket." Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Westminster Gazette says: "It is a real refreshment in dark days to come across a novel so pointed and animated, so full of life and character, as Mr. Cooper's 'Marchioness Against the County.' In this kind of fiction—a rare and good kind—Mr. Cooper has long distinguished himself, but 'The Marchioness' is a real advance upon his previous work, and shows both a firmer grip of character and greater ease in dealing with the technique of fiction."
The Standard says: "We commend to the general reader 'The Marchioness Against the County'..... there is not a dull page in it."

CHAPMAN & HALL (Limited), London.

THE JOY OF MY YOUTH. A Novel.

By CLAUD NICHOLSON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"There is very delicate work in 'The Joy of My Youth' There is not much story in it, but reminiscences from the history of a sensitive man, peculiarly open to impressions and influences from without. It has a Breton background, and, indeed, there is nothing at all English about it.... Its style, its sentiment, its attitude, were all made in France. It has charm and subtlety, and the childhood portion, with the blithe imaginative pictures of a beautiful and irresponsible past, must captivate all readers who have time to linger in their reading."

"The delicate charm of this story is not realized until the reader has read more than two or three chapters. The first chapter is unintelligible until the book is finished, and then we see that the author has chosen to tell us of the end of his hero's life before he has told us of the beginning of it.... Mr. Nicholson writes with rare sympathy for and appreciation of French life."—Glasgow Herald.

"The hero is a charming child from first to last.... Too delicate, too cultivated, most will vote the book; but that judgment will ignore its intention, which is fulfilled almost without a flaw."—Bookman.

SELECTED POEMS from the WORKS

of the Hon. RODEN NOEL. With a Biographical and Critical Essay by PERCY ADDLESHAW. With 2 Portraits. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Addleshaw has done his work well.... It is conceivable that all will die of a poet endowed with so splendid an originality, though claiming kinship, by the rare blend of his qualities with Blake, with Victor Hugo, and with Edgar Poe."—Manchester Guardian.

London: ELKIN MATHEWS, Vigo Street, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

In Crown 8vo, bound in buckram, price 5s.

FOOTSTEPS OF PROSERPINE

BY

NEWMAN HOWARD.

STANDARD.—"In Mr. Howard's case the Hellenism is genuine. His verses 'To the Uranian Aphrodite' could hardly have been written by a man who had not studied his Greek poets, as well as the English poets, pretty closely.....But scholarship has not destroyed the writer's spontaneity. Some of his lyrics are quite exquisite. But neither the classical nor the lyrical manner quite exhausts Mr. Howard's capabilities. He can do very well in the ballad and the narrative. 'The House by the Sea' is a good dramatically told version of the 'Auld Robin Gray' story, with a tragic ending; and 'Ket, the Tanner,' is a spirited episode from English history.....His floral lore is extensive and accurate, and he can describe the splendours of the meadows and river banks in verse that has a Spenserian sweetness and a Tennysonian knowledge. Altogether Mr. Howard is a very accomplished writer, and his future work will be looked for with interest. He seems, by the way, to be a believer in the sort of artistic Socialism cultivated by the late Mr. William Morris.....but, fortunately, his political views are not made aggressive enough to mar the enjoyment with which his beautiful verses can be read."

SCOTSMAN.—"With much that might seem exotic to one who is fond of simple poetry, there is also much to admire.....The polish and the cult of beauty gives the work distinction."

DAILY MAIL.—"Mr. Henry Newman Howard gives evidence of real poetic talent.....The longer poems are good, but the shorter ones scattered throughout the pages are better still. Happy phrases gem these songs at not infrequent intervals. Mr. Howard's vocabulary is rich, and his play of fancy and apt choice of words give an effect of positive originality."

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row.

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 988. - FEBRUARY, 1898.—2s. 6d.

AMONGST THE CRETAN INSURGENTS, by Ernest N. Bennett.
—JOHN SPLENDID: THE TALE OF A POOR GENTLEMAN, AND THE LITTLE WARS OF LOEN, by Neil Munro. Chaps. xii.-xiv.—QUEEN OGLETHORPE.—JOHN NICHOLSON OF DELBI.—ADVENTURES OF THE COMTE DE LA MUEETE DURING THE REIGN OF TERROUR: THE HEED OF SWINE; THE CHEVALIER DU GUET, by Bernard Capes.—THE SPANISH CRISIS.—THE GAY GORDONS, by J. M. Bulloch.—AN OBJECT-LESSON FOR THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT: THE TRANSPORT SERVICE AND THE HEALTH OF OUR ARMY IN INDIA, by Professor Robert Wallace.—A FAMOUS STUDENTS' CLUB (1747).—MRS. BISHOP IN KORRA.—THE CRISIS IN CHINA. With Map.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

Now ready, for FEBRUARY, price 8d.

THE EXPOSITORY TIMES.

Edited by J. HASTINGS, D.D.

Contents include: Editor's Notes of Recent Exposition—The Incarnation and the Atonement, by Bishop Eliott—A Wave of Hypercriticism, by Professor Van Manen—The Atonement: Limitations of Theology, by Principal Robertson, D.D., King's College—Babylonian Witchcraft, by W. St. Chad Boscawen, F.R.S.—Guild of Bible Study—At the Literary Table—Contributions by Professor Hommel, Professor Nestle, and others.

Now ready, for JANUARY, price 1s. 6d.

THE CRITICAL REVIEW.

Edited by Professor S. D. F. SALMOND, D.D.

Containing signed Reviews of the principal Theological and Philosophical Books issued during the past Quarter.

Edinburgh: T. & T. CLARK, 38, George Street.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

EDITED BY W. L. COURTNEY.
FEBRUARY.

M. HANOTAUX.
THE MILLAIS and ROSSETTI EXHIBITIONS. By FORD MADDOX HUEFFER.
THE COUNTY COUNCIL ELECTION. By H. L. W. LAWSON.
SHAKESPEARE and the EARL of PEMBROKE. By STONEY LEE.
COREA. By E. H. PARKER.
FORTY YEARS in the LOBBY of the HOUSE OF COMMONS. By FREDERICA GALE.
AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, and BOOKSELLERS. By JOHN A. STEUART.
FROM CANTON to MANDALAY. By WILLIAM JOHNSTONE.
A REMEDY for BABY-FARMING. By FRANCES C. LOW.
MR. WILFRID WARD'S "CARDINAL WISEMAN." By W. S. LILLY.
HOPE for the WEST INDIES. By SIR GEORGE BADEN-POWELL K.C.M.G., M.P.
A MONROE DOCTRINE for CHINA. By DIPLOMATICUS.

CHAPMAN'S MAGAZINE.

EDITED BY OSWALD CRAWFURD.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

FEBRUARY Number Contains—

COUNT LEO TOLSTOI'S ARTICLE—GUY DE MAUPASSANT and the ART OF FICTION.
And Eight Complete Stories by STEPHEN CRANE, BEATRICE HEBOX MAXWELL, and others.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LTD., London.

EPPS'S COCOA.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE ON 'FOODS AND THEIR VALUES,' BY DR. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., &c.—"If any motives—first, of due regard for health, and second, of getting full food-value for money expended—can be said to weigh with us in choosing our foods, then I say that Cocoa (Epps's being the most nutritious) should be made to replace tea and coffee without hesitation. Cocoa is a food; tea and coffee are not foods. This is the whole science of the matter in a nutshell, and he who runs may read the obvious moral of the story."

with his apple wasn't in it; it was a case of once bitten soon gone. Then I would hurry on to make up for my dawdling with only the hunch of barl-y bread in my wallet, the joys of the dumpling behind me, and before me the day's drudgery with perhaps a thrashing thrown in."

No couleur de rose peasanthood here, but a struggle on the utmost confines of existence! To complete the picture, take the following paragraph and consider the pathos of that pride which the author expresses by italics:

"Numbers of people used to go to the rectory for soup, but not a drop of it did we touch. I have stood at our door with my mother, and I have seen her face look sad as she watched the little children toddle past carrying the tin cans, and their toes coming out of their boots. 'Ah, my boy,' she once said, 'you shall never, never, do that. I will work these fingers to the bone before you have to do it!' She was as good as her word. I never went to the rectory for soup."

We can scarcely be wrong in assuming that the extracts will serve to show what a stern view is presented in this book of the life of country swains. Here Corydon blows not "on chaunter or on oaten straw," but is visible only as a grim figure shouldering the pickaxe or the spade. And if at times he refreshes himself with music, it is indignation that makes the verses. A number of the ditties sung by shepherds are given here. In most cases their character will be indicated by the first line, such as "There's a man who represents our shire," "O, workman, awake, for the strife is at hand," or

"Arch is goin' to Parliament
With a grand majority."

Phyllis is not seen dancing on the village green, but is doing laundry and charing work at next to nothing a week. Both express what dim poetry is in them by being pious and Methodist, and singing hymns that are mere doggerel, if those quoted by Mr. Arch are good samples. A very dismal account of country life, says the reader; and he is right, but in dismalness lies its distinction.

And now the literary conscience bids us add a few words of criticism. The Countess of Warwick has done her work well, but she would have done it better had she persuaded Mr. Arch to tone down his rhetoric and compress his language. The book would have been of priceless value if more of these reminiscences of village life had been given and the astonishingly tedious discourses shorn away. Mr. Joseph Arch on the Game Laws to the tune of thirty pages, emigration twenty-two pages, Franchise twenty-two pages, the Agricultural Labourers' Union x pages (we cannot sum them all up, they are the most tedious of all), and that bugbear the Agricultural Depression twenty-three pages, is not stimulating. He is not a thinker, therefore makes no great addition to our knowledge; not a great writer, and so fails to keep our attention. Also he interlards his narrative with yards of old speeches—a most reprehensible practice. Nothing grows old sooner than a political oration—why, even those of Bright and Gladstone and Disraeli can only be read now with an effort. But on the other hand, all his anecdotes and sayings and doings are worthy of careful preservation, because they help to build up a character that any novelist would have been proud of creating. For conceive what a fertile imagination could have made of him! A Radical of the Radicals, repeating the notorious phrase that angered Bishop Fraser, to the effect that he would view with equanimity streets flowing with the blood of landlords, yet proud to represent the Prince of Wales, and be patronised by the Countess of Warwick; an agitator and organiser obliged to defend himself from the gravest accusations brought forward by his own colleagues, yet declaring himself the chosen of God; a political propagandist, a Methodist preacher, the "champion hedger," and a Member of Parliament, at one moment scuffling for his share of charity, at another dining with peers and celebrities—was there ever such a grotesque mingling of attributes? The book is one for future novelists to plunder.

THE LATE PROF. DRUMMOND'S POPULARITY.

The Ideal Life, and Other Unpublished Addresses. By Henry Drummond, F.R.S.E. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THIS volume contains some dozen addresses or short sermons delivered by the late Prof. Drummond between his twenty-sixth and thirtieth years, and before he had gained the ear of the public. They are all devoted to points of what is called practical religion, and any discussion of them here would therefore be out of place. The two biographical sketches by Dr. Robertson Nicoll and Ian Maclaren with which the book opens, will, however, give much food for reflection to all who are interested in literature.

This is the greater paradox, as Prof. Drummond's place in literature is a very small one. During his University career at Edinburgh he distinguished himself in science, and his subsequent appointment to the lectureship in Natural Science (afterwards raised to a professorial chair) at the Free Church College in Glasgow, seemed to mark out his future course in life. He appears to have been an excellent teacher, especially in geology and botany, and to have kept himself thoroughly familiar with the biological theories of the day. His devotion to his work was shown by the visit that he paid to Lake Tanganyika, and the privations which he there suffered in the collection of specimens. Although in orders, he never allowed himself to be addressed as "Reverend," abjured clerical clothes, and seldom went to church. But for his early death, he might have been expected, by those who knew only this side of him, to sink into the ordinary type of college professor, and to write, in his old age, a gigantic work on the Lepidoptera which would be praised by many and read by few.

But Henry Drummond was, both by birth and training, a Celt, and possessed the double personality so often to be found in the Celtic race. Within the quiet and undistinguished man of science, there lurked another Henry Drummond animated with the evangelical fervour of a St. Francis d'Assisi or a Savonarola. Born of the strictest sect of Calvinists, there is no reason to suppose that he ever wavered in his faith; but it is evident, to anyone who will read between the lines of the present sketches, that what Calvinists would call his "conversion" dated from the visit of "the American evangelist, Mr. Moody," to Edinburgh in 1873. Thereafter he joined himself with Moody; conducted for two years an evangelical campaign in England, Scotland, and Ireland; and, according to Dr. Nicoll, saved the Free Church from the doom which its too conservative view of "traditional Christianity" was bringing upon it, by showing the world that the most characteristic doctrines of Calvinism were perfectly consistent with the acceptance of the latest conclusions of natural science. Spurred on by his success as an evangelist, he resolved to appeal to a wider audience than he had hitherto addressed, and published, in 1883, a selection from his spoken lectures under the title of Natural Law in the Spiritual World. The result must have exceeded his wildest hopes. Dr. Nicoll tells us that 120,000 copies have been sold in England alone, while the American and foreign editions are "beyond count." A smaller book on something of the same lines ran into the third of a million, and his charmingly written but extremely brief account of his adventures in East Central Africa reached a sale of 34,000. Dr. Nicoll is certainly within the mark when he suggests that no living novelist ever had so many readers.

Some small part of this success may, perhaps, be accounted for by the extent of his personal influence. Henry Drummond appears to have been one of those rare persons who win everybody with whom they come in contact as if by magic. To a handsome presence, and manners so gentle that he is said never to have uttered an unkind word, he joined a real refinement of mind and qualifications not to be found in the ordinary evangelist. His information, if not profound, was extensive and accurate, and both his biographers dwell significantly on the fact that he was always perfectly dressed. When we add to this a real gift of humour and the utter absence of vanity, it is no wonder that he made his way equally with high and low.

"He received," says Dr. Nicoll, "more of the confidences of people untouched by the ordinary work of the Church than any other man of his time. Men and women came to him in their deepest and bitterest perplexities. . . . He was an ideal confessor."

To Ian Maclaren, indeed, his personal magnetism is so extraordinary that he thinks it necessary to record that "he had given much attention to the occult arts, and was at one time a very successful mesmerist." If this were the cause of it, the sooner occult arts are added to the present curriculum of every theological college the better.

But whatever effect his personal influence may have had on his hearers, it is plain that thousands of his readers can never have seen his face or heard his voice, and we must therefore look deeper for the cause of his popularity as a writer. It was certainly not due to the literary merit of his books. In his earlier works, consisting as they did of lectures largely addressed to working men, his style, perhaps rightly, did not rise above that of the ordinary sermon. Natural Law in the Spiritual World in particular is full of piled-up illustration and rhetorical repetitions designed to produce in slow minds the assent which apparently follows the advertiser's constant assertion that somebody's tea is the best. His later books, such as Tropical Africa and the Ascent of Man, show a great advance upon this, and display in parts literary gifts of a high order. Yet the change can hardly have been to the taste of his readers, for the sale of these last is reckoned by tens instead of hundreds of thousands. Nor can it be said that his theories gained universal acceptance. People do not so readily change their preconceived opinions, and while from the Agnostic camp, Mr. Samuel Laing courteously complained that Prof. Drummond should have proved instead of assuming the existence of a spiritual world before attempting to describe its legislation, many orthodox writers detected in his utterances such theological unsoundness that they talked much of a prosecution for heresy. These attacks were, perhaps, to be expected, but it is certainly astonishing to hear from Ian Maclaren that Drummond saw before his death the weakness of the position which Natural Law in the Spiritual World was written to defend, and that he no longer believed the laws of nature to extend beyond the physical universe. "My own idea," says Ian Maclaren of the book in question, "is that he had abandoned its main contention and much of its teaching, and would have been quite willing to see it withdrawn from the public." A theory so soon given up by its author could hardly be expected to make many converts.

On the whole, therefore, we are led to think the popularity of Drummond's writings due to their purpose rather than to their contents. He was the first to notice that the reluctant acquiescence by the leaders of religious thought in scientific doctrines which they had at first rejected, had done more than anything else to create distrust of their judgment. Those who saw, for instance, the open teaching in religious seminaries of the evolutionary theories once scouted by the orthodox as contrary to revelation, could hardly help looking in future to reason rather than to authority for the support of their faith.

"The authority of authority," said Drummond, "is waning. . . . And it was inevitable. Authority—man's authority, that is—is for children. And there, necessarily, comes a time when they add to the question—What shall I do? or, What shall I believe? the adult's interrogation—Why?"

Nor did he blink the fact that the study of natural science and its methods in itself raised obstacles to the unquestioning acceptance of religious dogmas:

"No man can study modern science," he said, "without a change coming over his view of truth. . . . And the integrity of the scientific method so seizes him that all other forms of truth begin to appear comparatively unstable."

Later, he tells us what are the "other forms of truth" he means:

"Science cannot overthrow Faith; but it shakes it. Its own doctrines, grounded in Nature, are so certain that the truths of Religion, resting to most men on authority, are felt to be strangely insecure."

It was, then, to those who had found their religious faith shaken by their acquaintance with science that his principal works were confessedly addressed, and the result proved that this class of doubters is an astonishingly large one. Yet to doubt is not to deny, and the majority of those who rushed to read Drummond's books unquestionably hoped to find in them the main truths of religion established by proof as cogent as that of any scientific proposition. That they did not do so is, of course, notorious; and, as we have seen, Drummond's arguments eventually failed to satisfy even himself. Hence the constantly increasing army of unwilling doubters has had to betake itself to newer, but no surer guides, and a large audience is therefore waiting for any writer who will attempt to bridge over the gulf which still yawns between science and religion. Let us hope that everyone who does so will bring to the task the high ideal, the deep earnestness, and the candid mind of Henry Drummond.

THE PROPHET AS POET.

Ezekiel. Edited by R. G. Moulton, M.A. "The Modern Reader's Bible." (Macmillan & Co.)

Most people read the Bible from a religious standpoint, an historical standpoint, a textual standpoint, everything except a literary standpoint. Wherefore, Messrs. Macmillan have put forward the Modern Reader's Bible—a series of small volumes by an American, Dr. Moulton, in which the Biblical books are arranged to bring out their literary character. The idea is to print them as nearly as possible as they would be arranged by a modern author. Our aim is not to criticise this edition, or we might say something about certain fanciful excesses in the editor's arrangement. But it is a move in a needed direction, and the prefaces do excellent work in awakening readers to the fact that the Bible is literature. We propose, somewhat on the line of these prefaces, to deal with the most literary of all the Biblical writers—the prophets. The prophecies are not, we believe, in Hebrew poetic form. But their character is, from a modern standpoint, poetic in a high degree. As poets we design to consider the prophets; and we begin with the least read among the major prophets (yet not the least in a literary view), Ezekiel.

To give, in a column or so, the pith and quality of Ezekiel! It is a hazardous attempt, and more hazardous because he is so little studied that we can presume no great acquaintance with him to lighten the task. Ezekiel (if we may so speak) is not a popular prophet. He is too remote from Europeans in general, and Englishmen in particular. Of all the prophets he is the most Eastern. All the prophets speak in figures; Ezekiel in hardly anything else but figures. All the prophets are abrupt, sudden, dramatic in transition; Ezekiel hardly has transitions. He does not proceed by pedestrian steps; he flies, he baffles, he eludes—you see him only, as it were, when he alights from his brusque flights. He leaps from jag to jag of precipitous utterance, and leaves the reader to bridge the connexions. He speaks forked lightnings. All the prophets are often obscure by consequence of this Hebraic abruptness; Ezekiel is yet more obscure. All the prophets are at times obscure with intention; Ezekiel is habitually obscure with intention. Parable is the common counter of his speech. He knew it, and knew that it was dark to the Jew. What, then, to the Englishman? In a curious and valuable passage, he remonstrates with Jehovah for this constant feature of style:

"Son of man" (says Jehovah), "set thy face toward the South . . . and prophesy against the forest of the field in the South; and say to the forest of the South . . . Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will kindle a fire in thee, and it shall devour every green tree in thee, and every dry tree."

Ezekiel objects: "Ah, Lord God! they say of me, Is he not a speaker of parables?" Whereupon the prophet, in the person of Jehovah, absolutely translates himself—the allegoric passage gone before—into plain Hebrew:

"Son of man, set thy face toward Jerusalem . . . and prophesy against the land of Israel; and say to the land of Israel, Thus saith the Lord: Behold, I am against thee, and will draw forth my sword out of its sheath, and will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked."

It is a literal translation, from which the student may get an interesting insight into the allegoric language of the prophets.

"Is he not a speaker of parables?" That is the instinctive complaint of the Englishman against Ezekiel. The Englishman loves not looking through brick walls. Yet more, Ezekiel acts parables. It is hopelessly Eastern, dreadfully un-English; and what worse can one say of a thing than that it is "un-English"? Conceive that John Henry Newman (who was both preacher and poet) believed himself to have a mission of warning against the national sins of England. He enters Trafalgar-square, bearing a cavalry sabre. Amid the gathering crowd he draws it from its sheath, declaring it to be the sword of the Lord drawn forth against England; turns from side to side, lunging it hither and thither, with passionate denunciation. Then throwing it to the ground, he smites his hands together, and with raised eyes wails over the coming woes of the land; and still he stamps his foot, and claps his palms. Another time, he appears daily in the environs of London; lies on his side, looking toward the city, and regales himself at intervals on a provision of cats'-meat. Thus, he explains, shall the German army lie round London, till the inhabitants are reduced to live on cats'-meat and refuse. What articles, even

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS:   | PAGE    |
|--|---------|
| The Real Peasant ... ..                                      | 113     |
| Prof. Henry Drummond's Popularity ... ..                     | 114     |
| The Prophet as Poet ... ..                                   | 115     |
| The New Education ... ..                                     | 116     |
| Some Recent Theology ... ..                                  | 117     |
| The Complete Mrs. Browning ... ..                            | 117     |
| "The Light Fantastic Toe" ... ..                             | 118     |
| A Book of Es-says ... ..                                     | 119     |
| BRIEFER MENTION ... ..                                       | 119     |
| ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT ... ..                                    | 121-124 |
| NOTES AND NEWS ... ..  | 125     |
| REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED: HENRY FIELDING ... ..              | 127     |
| THE SHARK'S SIGNIFICANCE ... ..                              | 128     |
| THE LONDON OF THE WRITERS: V., THE PORTS OF THE THAMES... .. | 130     |
| THE BOOK MARKET ... ..                                       | 131     |
| THE WEEK ... ..  | 132     |
| New Books Received... ..                                     | 132     |
| DRAMA ... ..   | 133     |
| CORRESPONDENCE ... ..  | 134     |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..                                 | 135     |

REVIEWS.

THE REAL PEASANT.

Joseph Arch: the Story of His Life Told by Himself. Edited, with a Preface, by the Countess of Warwick. (Hutchinson & Co.)

THE ACADEMY is not a political journal, and in considering this book we propose to ignore its highly controversial aspect, and concentrate attention upon its value as a literary document of the very first importance. At no previous time have so many imaginations been directed to the rural swain. Not only by the flourishing Scotch school, but by novelists of France, Germany, Russia, Hungary, and America the peasant has been accepted as a central figure of modern romance. Even criticism has been forced into the same groove. Mr. Henley has quite recently shown that an understanding of the peasant is a key to the poetry of Burns. It is equally important to a full comprehension of Carlyle's life and of the best of Tennyson's verse. English literature, indeed—from Chaucer and Shakespeare to George Eliot and Thomas Hardy—is peculiarly rich in scenes drawn from rustic annals. But we know of no book exactly similar to this life of Mr. Arch. Here is a full-drawn picture of the peasant given by his own hand. William Cobbett alone could have furnished its companion, but, unfortunately, he left others to write his biography. To contrast the real, then, with the ideal, the peasant of fiction with the peasant of fact, cannot fail to be of service both to those who read and those who write works of the imagination. And one of the first reflections is, what a heaven on earth must Drumtochty, say, be in comparison with Barford in Warwickshire. For Ian Maclaren has bathed his Scotch amlet in mercy, charity, loving-kindness; his folk have rough exteriors but warm hearts; they sacrifice themselves for one another and positively overflow with sentiment at the slightest provocation. The face teems with pathos and all "the finer elings of our nature." Yet the Scottish peasant is generally supposed to be as hard of mind as he is harsh in feature, possessing about a pennyweight of sentiment to a ton of sterner qualities. In Barford it is the other way about. The "jolly English plough-boy," by repute a merry, beer-swilling, good-natured oaf, turns out quite different when seen through the eyes of Mr. Joseph Arch.

In the article of religion he is a greater fanatic than the Scot. There are no "meta-feeisics" about Mr. Arch; no twisting and dividing of doctrine, none of that criticising of sermons which seems to be the joy of Ian Maclaren's dramatis persone, but in place a fanaticism that blazes out as it has not done since the day of Praise-God-Barebones and those who signed the solemn League and Covenant.

"The Almighty Maker of Heaven and Earth," he says, "raised me up to do this particular thing; in the counsel of His wisdom He singled me out and set me on my feet in His sight and breathed of the breath of His Spirit into me, and sent me forth as a messenger of the Lord God of Battles."

It is a curious illustration of the isolation of one section of society from another that in years when, as some thought, the sea of faith was at its lowest ebb, men should have gone on mixing prayer-meetings with politics, not in opposition to doubt, but wholly unconscious that doubt existed. Some of the incidents which account for the fiery Methodism of Mr. Arch are very characteristic of village life and manners. When he was born, in 1826, Dissent was not strong in Barford, and, as retainers of the house of Warwick, his people attended the parish church. His grandfather was a hedger and ditcher, his grandmother an old servant of the great Midland family, for whom they kept a lodge; his father was a steady shepherd who married a coachman's widow. He himself took to wife a domestic servant, whose character is summed up in these words:

"She thought 'As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end, Amen.'"

These facts prove that Mr. Arch is a peasant to the bone. No yeoman or middle-class blood of any kind mixed with his. Further, he has been all his life in touch not only with poverty, but with hunger and want. He suns up his life with all its bitter and all its tender memories in a passage that deserves quotation as a deeply felt and well-expressed piece of English:

"As I sit here in my little cottage at Barford and review the past, it seems at one moment a long look back; at another it seems but yesterday that my grandmother sat in the chair I am sitting in now—a chair which is over a hundred years old—and I stood by her a little chap of six. And there is the old eight-day clock which my father bought in Leamington fifty years ago. He, I have heard him tell, carried home the case over his shoulder, and my mother trudged at his side with the works in her market basket. I can see my good mother cutting the barley bread for us, with tears in her eyes because there is so little of it for the children who are so hungry. I can see my father step in at the door, come in for a bite or sup of whatever is going. I can see myself tramping off in my little smock-frock, clapper in hand, to scare away the birds; then jumping the clods at sixpence a day, and so on to the great year of 1872, when I held that first meeting under the Wellesbourne chestnut-tree on the February evening which saw the birth of the Agricultural Labourers' Union."

That is peasant life, lying tranquil and softened in "the moonlight of memory." It grows harsh and bitter as the facts come into clear and definite shape. The urchin in his smock-frock writhing under the farmer's switch, and, later, trembling at the whip of a bullying carter; the wife going out to do charring; that father who came home so triumphantly, carrying the clock, old and past his work; the son Joseph forced to gulp down his pride and ask relief for him from the parish; the offer of the farmhouse—these are the shadows of that Arcadian picture. It is not Ian Maclaren's golden age and reign of all the virtues, but neither is it the gross and worse than beast-like world of La Terre.

Having thus obtained a slight notion of the man, we may now return to those quaint scenes of village life that might have been lifted clean out of, or into, a modern novel; premising, however, that they would gain immensely if divested of the bitterness with which Mr. Arch, rightly or wrongly, presents them, and looked at with a little humour and imagination. We shall begin with two pictures of the village church. The first is this:

"I can remember the time when the parson's wife used to sit in state in her pew in the church, and the poor women used to walk up the church and make a curtsy to her before taking the seats set apart for them."

But how one would like to have Jane Austen's description or Hugh Thomson's drawing of this parson's wife! The second has a more personal interest, as it shows how Mr. Arch became a Dissenter. One Communion Sunday, when he was seven, he peeped through the keyhole to find out what happened after the children were turned out. This is what he saw:

"First up walked the squire to the communion rails; the farmers went up next; then up went the tradesmen, the shopkeepers, the wheelwright, and the blacksmith; and then, the very last of all, went the poor agricultural labourers in their smock-frocks. They walked up by themselves; nobody else knelt with them; it was as if they were unclean, and at that sight it was if the iron entered straight into my poor little heart, and remained fast imbedded there. I said to my myself, 'If that's what goes on, never for me.'"

Our next extract is selected as one of the very few recollections that are simple and human and boylike, and are not tinged or distorted by bitter party feeling. Little Joe, after his bird-scaring experience, was promoted to be a plough-boy, and this is a description of "apple-dumpling day." He carried his dinner afield in a wallet. He says:

"Apple-dumpling day was a red one in my boy's calendar. When I had such a dainty bit in my bag it seldom stayed there many minutes. Although I had despatched a hearty breakfast before starting, out would come the dumpling. 'Just to have a look at it, and to see if it is as big as mother generally makes them,' I would say to myself. Then I would turn it about and admire its size. From handling the dainty to tasting it was a sure process. 'I'll have one little bite, only a nibble,' I would say. When I had got my tooth into that dumpling Adam in the religious papers, rebuking him for degrading religion by freaks worse than those of a captain in the Salvation Army! What suggestions of inquiry into his sanity! Yet these things, or like to these, Ezekiel did among the Jews of the Captivity; and it was thought an impressive and solemn performance. So far is East from West.

"Is he not a speaker of parables?" But try a little to see like an Eastern; overcome your most Saxon hatred of parable, and you shall find compensation; majesty in the parables, boldness in the imagery. You shall find that impressive review of the iniquities of Israel and Judah, under the figure of the two harlots, with its grand brutalities. For a hirsute power of denunciation, a terrible minatory plainness from which our modernity recoils, are among this prophet's marked characteristics. He has not the lofty and most moving pathos of Jeremiah, nor the lyric sublimity of Isaiah; in spite of his lavish use of figure, he is less lyric than either of these, has more of the character of harangue. But he has full grandeur. Yea, one passage is also powerfully lyric. It is that most imaginative, solemn, and majestic denunciation of Egypt, who is bidden to join the mighty nations perished in their glory, that shall welcome him to their abode in the earth.

"The strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of hell. . . . Asshur is there and all her company; his graves are round about him. . . . There is Elam with all her multitude. . . . they have set her a bed in the midst of the slain with all her multitude; her graves are round about her; all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword."

So, with formal pomp of lyric repetition, the spacious and sombre catalogue proceeds. The famous and indecipherable vision of the cherubim, for those who are not repelled by the peculiar forms of Hebrew symbolism, has a strange sublimity of conception. To us, at least, it is tremendous: but it must be read in a receptive mood. A certain mystic and inscrutable beauty is a frequent character of Ezekiel, with his tendency towards symbolic vision. Such is the lament over Tyre, which foreshadows the character of the Apocalypse. "Thou wast in Eden, the garden of God; every precious stone was thy covering—the sardius, the topaz, and the diamond," &c. To him, indeed, everything comes by way of vision and concrete sign. Such is that bold (and for once readily comprehensible) image of the dry bones.

In fine, this is a poet without the softer graces; rugged, eloquent, Hebraic to a degree, with his sharp transitions, his crowding imagery; yet affording, also, passages of direct and pregnant common sense, akin to his uncompromising plainness of invective; pre-eminently a visionary, who sees all things through the eye, and with the frequent grandeur of the born visionary; yet, in his style, lacking somewhat the lyric form and the lyric wing.

THE NEW EDUCATION.

The Sub-conscious Self, and its Relation to Education and Health. By Louis Waldstein, M.D. (Grant Richards.)

THE author of this book, which appears to be of American origin, aims high. He proposes to improve both our health and our morals, to heighten our artistic and æsthetic tastes, nay, to manufacture genius itself and at the same time to diminish crime, insanity, and other evil tendencies of human nature by—what? The proper cultivation of the sub-conscious self. It must not be assumed that this sub-conscious self is the possession of the privileged few. We all have it, though in varying degrees. Dr. Waldstein divides mental action into two classes—the conscious and the sub-conscious. The latter, he contends, plays a large, though commonly unsuspected, part in our lives.

"What is often called heredity is simply the expression of a sub-conscious self, the beginnings of which can be traced to early childhood when the actions of the parents are sub-consciously perceived and by their constant repetition form fundamental impressions which make up a great part of the memory. . . . From conscious impressions and the accumulation of them the intellectual, the calculating, the deliberate man is formed. From the rich material of the unconscious impressions is evolved the emotional, the spontaneous, the passionate man."

Although Dr. Waldstein minimises the part played by heredity in the mental and physical equipment of the individual, he cannot, of course, get rid of it altogether. That a child may inherit the particular kind of liver or stomach of a parent as well as the nose or eye he admits, and in the face of the family likenesses that are met with every day it would be hopeless to deny the fact. But these are all-important sub-conscious impressions. They, too, are obviously dependent upon an inherited system of nerves and nerve-cells, as Dr. Waldstein is fain to own:

"The colour of an object, for instance, affects the eye of one who is colour-blind differently from that of another whose colour-sense is normal. Again, certain sounds and chords produce different effects upon the ear according to the constitution of that organ in different persons. . . . The same original variations exist in the nerves which conduct and in the brain which receives the impressions."

Thus, on the very threshold of his inquiry, Dr. Waldstein is confronted with a physical condition of things which gravely discounts his theory as to the effects of education both conscious and unconscious. It is clear that the nature of the tune to be played must largely depend upon the quality of the instrument, and that important condition is hereditary, or rather, as the Weismannites would say, is due to the particular blend of germ-plasm that takes place at conception. We have no quarrel with Dr. Waldstein's theory; it is not, indeed, new, but may be traced as far back as Schelling's speculations as to the "Ego" a hundred years ago; for the "Ego" of the old metaphysicians and the Consciousness of the modern psychologist are practically one and the same. In elaborating a theory of the Sub-conscious, or any other theory, care must be taken not to ride it to death. The following proposition may be accepted without question:

"The accumulated contents of our memory govern our emotions, our thoughts and actions, and therefore that portion of our memory made up of sub-conscious impressions, and their aggregate, must necessarily play a great part in our individual life."

But the danger of overworking the theory becomes apparent when, after condemning the notion that a vicious mental organisation is necessarily transmissible from father to son, Dr. Waldstein points to the cultivation of sub-conscious impressions as "a certain means of prevention and of cure" (p. 19).

"Is it too bold," asks the author, "to assert that the crying baby who makes a slave of its mother develops into the habitual malcontent of society? That the child surrounded by every outward sign of shiftlessness, cheerlessness—that lives in an atmosphere of egotism, discord, and white lies, may grow to the man who may some day surprise his friends by acts that seem out of harmony with the life he had been leading among them?"

Yes; for our part we think the assumption is too sweeping, if Dr. Waldstein means to put down the degeneracy of the child solely to its sub-conscious impressions of its parents' worthlessness. For what justification is there for excluding hereditary influence here? Parents who would live the life supposed could not themselves be normally constituted citizens; and it is plausible, at least, to argue that the instability of their cerebral and nervous system should be transmitted, along with various physical attributes, features, complexion, stature, &c., to their offspring.

If Dr. Waldstein is right, then children brought up and educated under similar conditions ought to be as like each other as two peas. Indeed, he asserts as much:

"The refined tastes and joyous dispositions of the elder children in a family with whom I often came into contact was a matter of some surprise to me, as I could not account for the common trait among them by the position or special characteristics of the parents; they were in the humblest position socially, and all but poor. My first visit to their modest home furnished me with the natural solution and gave me much food for reflection. The children—there were six—occupied two rooms into which the sunlight was pouring as I entered. . . . the colour and design of the cheap wall paper were cheerful and unobtrusive, bits of carpet, the table cover and the coverlets on the beds were all in harmony, and of quiet design in nearly the elementary colours; everything in these poor rooms of poor people had been chosen with the truest judgment for æsthetic effect."

Again:

"A young boy of my acquaintance had an invincible dislike to music, and could not be prevailed upon to continue his piano lessons. I was impressed by the violence of his aversion, and upon inquiry was told that he was born and passed his infancy in a house next to a conservatory of music; no doubt he had been constantly disturbed in his sleep by the discordance of sounds from a number of instruments played at the same time."

These seem certainly far-fetched assumptions. One wonders, for instance, from what kind of conservatory of music would flow a "discordance of sounds" sufficiently loud to be heard next door. Dr. Waldstein evidently spares no pains to make his facts fit his theory. To some of the commonest experiences of life he pays no heed. Notoriously, children brought up under the same conditions differ morally and mentally as much as they do in feature. Has Dr. Waldstein never heard of the "black sheep" of the family, or, on the other hand, of the genius? And would he propose to reduce them all to the same dead level of aptitude by a systematic and uniform cultivation of the sub-conscious? Just a closing word on the question of genius. Dr. Waldstein is unquestionably right in assigning the workings of genius to the sub-conscious strata of the brain. The poet's and artist's best ideas suddenly come from—they know not where, and during sleep pre-existent thoughts are often fashioned and developed in an amazing degree. That the sub-conscious plays indeed a large part in our lives is self-evident; but from a recognition of that fact to proposing to educate it, and by its means fashion the moral and intellectual man to pattern, is a far cry. Still, this ingenious book will not have been written in vain if it directs attention to a branch of education that is perhaps too much neglected. The sub-conscious may not be as impressionable or as tractable as Dr. Waldstein supposes; but as regards the possibility of storing up agreeable impressions in the child's mind it may be as well to err on the safe side.

SOME RECENT THEOLOGY.

Genesis Critically and Exegetically Expounded.
By Dr. A. Dillmann. Translated by
W. B. Stevenson, B.D. (T. & T. Clark.)

A much needed translation of a well-known work by the late Professor of Theology in Berlin. Dillmann was one of the best examples of the conservative school of Biblical criticism, and to the last maintained his hostile attitude towards the more daring theories of Wellhausen and Kuenen. In the present commentary he disputes their conclusions as to the post-Exilic character of the Priestly Code, which he considers to be the oldest component of the Pentateuch, the work of the Elohist coming next, and that of the Jehovist last. On less technical points he asserts, with robust common sense, that the "days" in Gen. i. mean days and not geological periods, that it is the serpent in his animal capacity, and not the devil in his likeness, who tempts Eve, and that the "sons of God" who are represented in Gen. vi. as intriguing with the daughters of men are angels, and nothing else. The author is in only a few respects behind the time, as when he says that the Bahû or Bahû (i.e., Chaos) of Gen. i. has no equivalent in "the Assyro-Babylonian mythological circle," Dr. Lommel having pointed out some years ago that the Chaos-goddess Bahû was one of the earliest divinities of the Sumerian pantheon.

Mr. Stevenson's translation is careful, but occasionally harsh, and in many cases the clumsy locutions of the German original are reproduced with hardly any alteration. On the other hand, he has added three excellent indexes which the German work does not possess. No one interested in the orthodox view of Scripture can afford to neglect this book.

The Dawn of Civilisation. By Prof. Maspero.
Translated by M. L. McClure. (S.P.C.K.)

A THIRD edition of this deservedly popular work. To the Egyptological portion Prof. Maspero has added four new pages dealing with the discovery made by Prof. Flinders Petrie of the existence of an early cannibal race in Egypt. Among the additions to the Assyriological part we may notice the texts announced last year by M. Heuzey, which go to show that the patesis, or "priest-kings" of Lagash, were really the vicegerents of a dynasty of emperors comprising the conqueror Sargon of Accad and his successors. So much has been said about the defective translation of Prof. Maspero's second volume, that we feel bound to notice that on p. 550 of the present book: "Les premiers peuples [of Mesopotamia] paraissent avoir appartenu à des types très différents," is translated by: "The first races . . . seem to have belonged to three (!) different types," thereby making nonsense of the paragraph.

The Mysteries, Pagan and Christian. By S. Cheetham, D.D. (Macmillan & Co.)

THIS book, containing the Hulsean Lectures for 1896-97, was apparently written in refutation of the theory advanced by the late Dr Hatch, that the Christian Eucharist is in part a survival of the Eleusinia and other Pagan mysteries. Canon Cheetham makes the best of his case, and effectually disposes, at any rate, of Dr. Hatch's statement that a lamb was actually offered on the altar in early Christian times. But there is a good deal to be said on the other side; and we confess that the allusion in certain early papyri to bread and wine as the body and blood of one of the heathen gods seems to us very difficult to get over. However that may be, we can all enjoy the lucidity of statement and ripe scholarship which Canon Cheetham brings to bear upon his subject, while we fully appreciate his good temper and fairness to opponents.

The Supernatural in Nature. By Joseph William Reynolds, M.A. (Longmans & Co.)

THIS is, as we learn from the preface, a new and cheap edition, published at the expense of General Elliot. The book is said to be written for doctors and "other truth-loving men in danger of being beguiled by the sophisms of imperfect science"; but we doubt if anyone having the slightest acquaintance with science, however imperfect, will pay any attention to it. Prebendary Reynolds appears to have the conviction, not uncommon among popular preachers, that in scientific matters appeals to the emotions and tricks of rhetoric can usefully replace sober thought and exact reasoning. At all events, a fairly careful perusal of his book has failed to disclose to us a single important point of difference between science and religion where the issue is fairly faced, or where his arguments rise above the level of those which Macaulay describes as just good enough to be used once. The following is an example of his style:

"As far as the eye of science has hitherto ranged through nature, no intrusion of purely creative power into any series of phenomena has ever been observed. [This is quoted from an Apology for the Belfast Address without the author's name or other means of verification.] What a fib! Science knows not a millionth part of nature, and of what she does know it is certain that every moment nature is afresh maintained in every part by forces from the eternal Power. The assertion stands self-convicted of inadequacy."

We are afraid that Sir Alexander Elliot has wasted his money.

The Story of Jesus Christ. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. (Sampson, Low & Co.)

YET another attempt, this time by the author of The Gates Ajar, to make the history of Jesus more impressive by telling it in the language of to-day. Miss Phelps—to call her by her best-known name—approaches her task with much reverence and gentle piety, her phrases in some passages rising to the height of a true pathos. Under these circumstances one has no more right to be annoyed with her frequent Americanisms than to complain of the early Italian painters of the Crucifixion for dressing the Roman soldiers in the trunk-hose of the period; yet it must be said that such words as "disgruntled" somewhat jar upon one. And then—cui bono? All these modern versions of the Gospel story seem to be consciously or (as is probably the present case) unconsciously inspired by Renan's Vie de Jésus; but the pure and perfect grace of Renan's style has descended to none of his successors. For the rest, Renan was a scholar of world-wide reputation, who devoted twenty years to the writing of his book. Miss Phelps, in her preface, modestly disclaims all pretensions to scholarship, and has probably done her work within twelve months.

THE COMPLETE MRS. BROWNING.

The Poetical Works of Elizabeth Barrett Browning. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING was a poet of abundance—of abundant thoughts, feelings and aspirations, abundant labours, abundant failures, and a vocabulary superabundant and redundant. She sowed with a lavish hand, retaining nothing, storing nothing; and her harvest is profuse—the wheat and the tares. Into 600 closely printed pages, with double columns on each page, are here gathered all the poems she ever printed, and you wonder afresh to find how many they were and how various were the interests in love, in religion, in politics of this abounding woman. The standard copy-right edition of 1866, in six volumes, contained all she had cared to preserve from the former issues of 1838 and 1844, together with new additions. But the early verses omitted by her own hand are now restored, Mr. F. G. Kenyon, the judicious editor, saying that the republication can do no harm to the fame of one "whose place among English poets has long been assured," while they have a literary and biographical value that amply justifies their reappearance. An exception is made as to the first translation of "Prometheus Bound," published by Miss Barrett in 1833, inasmuch as she prepared a second translation, here printed, in expiation, as she somewhere says, of that "sin of her youth."

In addition to her poems—we know only one poem which has escaped the editor's vigilance, and by no fault of his, for it is in MS. in a private collection—the volume has her prose essays, "The Greek Christian Poets" and "The Book of the Poets," the last-named an exuberant survey of English poetry, containing appreciations, especially of later poets, that might cry to her now for revision and be accounted as more sins of her youth. Her judgment of past poets, however, was more judicious than that of poets still new. Like Dr. Johnson and Hazlitt, she refused to pay the honours of a first class poet to Gray, yet conceded them to Byron.

Besides these essays, the new volume contains, as it ought, the preface she put to former editions, and also Mr. Browning's "Prefatory Note" of 1887, mostly, though still very scantily, biographical. We miss, however, the brief preface he put to the "Selections" he made with "all care and the profoundest veneration" from his wife's works in 1865. Any of the few words uttered of the other by either of these two have a more than common sacredness, conferred by the conditions of that "marriage of true minds." Yet Mr. Browning, it must be confessed, was the lover rather than the critic. His eulogy, as is the phrase, "her glories shall never fade," is magnificent; but is it true?

The Dedication of "The Battle of Marathon," published in 1820, is reprinted among the rest. It is "to him to whom I owe the most—to the father whose unwearied affection I never can repay." But above all does the dedication of the edition of 1844 strike us with an ever fresh pathos—"To My Father" is the headline:

"My desire is," she says, "that you, who are a witness how, if this art of poetry had been a less earnest object to me, it must have fallen from exhausted hands before this day—that you who have shared with me in things bitter and sweet, softening or enhancing them every day—that you who hold with me, over all sense of loss and transiency, one hope by one Name, may accept from me the inscription of these volumes, the exponents of a few years of an existence which has been sustained and comforted by you as well as given. Somewhat more faint-hearted than I used to be, it is my fancy thus to seem to return to a visible personal dependence on you, as if, indeed, I were a child again; to conjure your beloved image between myself and the public, so as to be sure of one smile, and to satisfy my heart while I sanctify my ambition by associating with the great pursuit of my life its tenderest and holiest affection."

That was in 1844. Two years later came the marriage with Mr. Browning, which the Barretts did not approve. Henceforth between the happy wife and the father she adored "the rest is silence." Yet not quite. Now and again, from Italy and elsewhere, that wounded thing—"half angel and half bird," said Browning; "scarcely embodied at all," said Hawthorne—sent forth cry after cry to her old home. But never again did any exchange of greeting pass between father and daughter. Her crime in marrying an ineligible man was never blotted out. What love owes to poets we may all know; but how has the debt been repaid, how have poets been treated as lovers? In our time Tennyson, too, was an "ineligible" who had to wait twenty years for the woman of his choice. And Browning could secure his bride only at the cost of her severance from earlier ties—Miss Barrett could only win a husband at the sacrifice of a father. At the head of all lists of paternal tyranny must stand to all time this instance of it, the full folly and misery of which have been realised only now that Mrs. Browning's letters have been published. Browning's capacities were equal to the occasion—he could be lover, husband, and father in one; and his wife's last words when she died in his arms, a worn-out body tenanted by a soul too stirring for it, compose the fitting epitaph for her life and his together—"It is beautiful."

"THE LIGHT FANTASTIC TOE."

A History of Dancing, from the Earliest Ages to Our Own Times. From the French of Gaston Vuillier. With a Sketch of Dancing in England by Joseph Grego. (William Heinemann.)

"You and I may be past our dancing days, good Cousin Capulet," but that is no reason why we shouldn't enjoy studying the pictures and glancing at the text of Mr. William Heinemann's remarkably handsome edition of M. Gaston Vuillier's astonishingly ill-written History of Dancing. The text, indeed, is as ill-written as it very well could be, as thin, superficial, and uninteresting. It breathes a general air of having been hastily and perfunctorily "got up" at a public library, and sometimes it rises to quite supreme heights of ineptitude, as where, for example (p. 176), M. Vuillier observes of the gavotte, "This dance was of very ancient origin; it dated from the sixteenth century." One had never till now thought of the sixteenth century as appertaining to "very ancient" times. Again (p. 39), M. Vuillier informs us, "It was by her dancing that Salome obtained the head of John the Baptist." This, to be sure, would be an interesting item of news—if it were only new. But one has heard it before. However, the text is worth glancing at, for the sake of the lovely words that keep recurring in it. Branle and Sarabande, Pavane and Tarantella, Carole, Farandole, Seguidilla—they are as sweet as the names of old-fashioned flowers. And some of the famous dancers whom M. Vuillier is constrained to mention had pretty names too, or pretty pseudonyms: Rose Pompon (which sounds like something good to eat), Camargo, Rigoletto, Pomaré (which sounds like a sparkling wine). After these, what shall we say of our contemporary "Grille d'Egout," "Môme Fromage, or "Nini Patte-en-l'Air"?

But the pictures—the pictures are the thing. One has seldom opened so sumptuously be-pictured a book. There are more than 400 of them; and if they are not all of transcendent excellence as works of art, they are all, at any rate, diverting. They show us Jack piping and Jill dancing in many lands and in many ages: in ancient Egypt and in modern Paris, in Greece and Rome, in Spain, India, England, and Algiers, even in Patagonia and Berlin—for savage dances are dances still. They show us peace dances and war dances, sacred dances and profane, the "Dance of Death" and the "Danse du Ventre." They show us odalisques dancing in the pasha's seraglio, and houris dancing in Mahomet's paradise. They show us balls under Louis XIV., balls under the Directory, under the Empire, and those amazing "Victim Balls" that followed the Terror. They show us valse in the Chaussée d'Autin of 1830, and cotillions in the Champs-Elysées of last year. They show us Ranelagh and Mabilles and Vauxhall; and incidentally they set us wondering why we have nothing like Vauxhall in the London of our degenerate days. The entertainment begins on the very cover, where a group of plump, cherubic four-year-olds are represented dancing in a ring. If it were still permitted to quote Hans Breitmann, we should intimate in passing that the four-year-olds have "nodings on." Then the frontispiece is a photogravure of Carpeaux's spirited dance of nymphs, from the façade of the Paris Opera House. So that we are put in a proper humour at the outset. One suffers a pang, it is true, a few pages later, on discovering that there is no index to the pictures. There is a list of the "twenty full-page plates," but none of the "409 illustrations." However, one mustn't expect everything here below; and the philosopher will be content to take his 409 as he finds them—though he may continue to speculate why "409" is printed in figures, while "twenty" receives the honour of being spelled out.

The full-page plates include Mr. Whistler's portrait of Miss Connie Gilchrist, Mr. Sargent's "Carmencita," and Watteau's "The Pleasures of the Ball." They include, also, a very jolly print of Lancret's "Mademoiselle Camargo," more Watteau-like than Watteau himself. But that was Lancret's glory—the uninitiate could detect his canvases from his master's only by the circumstance that they were "a trifle too like." There are other Watteaus and other Lancrets among the unindexed pictures; there is a Fra Angelico; there is a delightful Domenichino, a dance of cupids (after a drawing in the possession of Mr. William Heinemann—lucky Mr. William Heinemann!); there are two or three Teniers; one or two Gavarnis; and (a superlative distinction) there is a Degas. Fancy having a Degas and not boasting of it in an index. It is one of the master's ballet-girls, of course; a thing brimful of light and movement; a thing of inexpressible charm, even in this process reproduction, without the master's colour. She is poising on one leg, in a white diaphanous skirt that is like a puff of fragrant air made visible; there's a ribbon of black velvet round her throat, there are flowers in her corsage; and then—her face, her eyes, her arms! We kiss our hand to her; and since there is no index, we will mention, for the hesitating purchaser's encouragement, that she adorns page 368. The more interesting of the two Gavarnis will be found on page 289—a Parisian ball under the Restoration. Oh! the pretty frocks of the ladies, their sloping shoulders, their ringlets, and their ankles, and the graceful costumes of the men, with their pantalons collés à la peau! One thinks of Rastignac and Delphine, of Lucien, of the Marquise d'Espard. It is a page of Balzac translated into black and white. Two of the pleasantest pictures in the book, by the by, are not attributed. One is a pen-drawing of Mdlle. Guimard, the other a pen-drawing of Marie Antoinette in the "Ballet de la Reine"; and they both occur on page 174. They are so delicate, so sprightly, so exquisitely naïf and winning, it would really have been worth while to recall the draughtsman's name.

By reason of its pictures, in short, this is a very precious volume. It is a thousand pities the letterpress should be so dreary. Why doesn't Mr. Heinemann bring out a new edition, with a new letterpress written by someone who understands? Think of the subject! Dancing—the most beautiful of all human pastimes. What an opportunity for good literature! M. Vuillier's letterpress, stiff in its joints, creaking as it moves, smelling of the musty purlieus of the Bibliothèque Nationale, is as reluctant as an ill-coached schoolboy before an examiner.

And, of course, in the new edition the 409 illustrations will be indexed.

A BOOK OF ESSAYS.

Varia. By Agnes Repplier. (Gay & Bird.)

MISS REPPLIER has in this volume reprinted nine essays contributed to the magazines. The subjects are nearly all literary in character. Four are concerned with various aspects of fiction, one with diaries, one with drinking songs, one with Froissart, and one with "the eternal feminine." All reflect the views of a clever, cultivated woman, who is frankly enamoured of life's pleasures, has a clear flexible style, and has taken Mr. Andrew Lang for a model. She reproduces all of her master except that background of melancholy which gives even to Mr. Lang's drolleries a peculiar and touching charm. Naturally, then, Miss Repplier is a romantic, filled with a huge admiration of Scott and Dumas, a dislike of those who would vex a reader's soul with problem plays, or realistic studies, and a frank taste for out of the way literature, even of "ribald (drinking) songs with which refined femininity is not presumed to sympathise." She has gathered quite a garland of those flowers in her discourse on "Cakes and Ale"—perhaps the best in the volume. The place of honour is given to Burns:

"It is the moon, I ken her horn,
That's blinkin' in the lift sae hie;
She shines sae bright to wile us hame,
But by my sooth she'll wait a wee."

She does not quote the famous song in "Gammer Gurton's Will"—

"Let back and belly go bare, go bare"

—but the seventeenth century is ransacked for examples. Coming nearer to our own, she draws a capital picture of that Pagan full o' pride, Thomas Love Peacock, and quotes his inimitable "In life three ghostly friars were we," and "Seamen three: what men be ye?"—drinking songs as admirable as the seventeenth century produced. Quite in Mr. Lang's best manner is the funny way in which she rounds off this praise of drunken hilarity with Longfellow's glorification of cold water glistening "in the head of old Silenus." She might have contrasted his simple innocent directness with the pawky fun Robert Fergusson applied to the same theme:

"Ere faither Adie first put spade in
The bonnie yaird o' auncient Eden,
His awmrie had nae liquor laid in
To fire his mou'
Nor did he thole his wife's upbraidiu'
For gettin' fou!

And she ends all with an ironical lament:

"Once Charles I. sent Ben Jonson, as poet laureate, one hundred pounds a year and a tierce of Spanish Canary. No such generous drink comes now from Queen Victoria to lend sparkle and vivacity to Mr. Austin's verses. Once Dr. Johnson, 'the real primate and soul's teacher of England,' says Carlyle, declared roundly and without shocking anybody, 'Brandy, sir, is the drink for heroes.' It is not thus that primates and teachers of any land now hearten their wavering disciples. Once the generous publishers of Marmion sent Scott a hogshead of fine claret to mark their appreciation of his verse. It is not in this graceful fashion that authors now receive their tokens of goodwill."

From this outline of one of Miss Repplier's essays it will be easy to gather what the rest are like. Always urbane and smiling, she avoids such themes as cannot be dismissed with a light and well-bred laugh. And even when a difference of opinion arises she mocks opposition with the remark that the book that keeps her fast in an armchair is the book for her, whatever critics may say. And, indeed, if the intelligences of all were as keen and cultivated as those of Miss Repplier, the critic well might say, "My vocation's gone." For if a laugh that is too genial to be called a sneer means anything, it is that Miss Repplier has very decided likings and dislikings, and that she is ever ready to push aside Mr. Hall Caine and Ian Maclaren, and another of her bugbears, Mr. Hamlin Garland, for the gallant page of Froissart. But even those who differ from her point of view will find a great deal that is agreeable in these cultured and well-written essays.

BRIEFER MENTION.

The Clerical Life: a Series of Letters to Ministers. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THIS is a theological variant upon Hamerton's Intellectual Life—a sort of gnomie handbook to the pulpit. We confess to having read these letters with genuine interest and amusement, though we are far enough from hoping to make any practical use of them. The conception of the clergyman, to be sure, is a limited one; in the eyes of the writers he is what they succinctly describe as a "Christian specialist." This being so, it is reasonable that he should have good advice given him whereby to direct his specialisation and guide his difficult steps. The tone of the book is kindly and sensible, and, in general, there is a total absence of the inspired fatuity usually found in a work of this nature. The writers write like honest men who have been at the trade before, and one or two are abundantly humorous. Faults of taste are rare, and wit is grateful in such a connexion. The letter "To a Minister Who is given to Anecdote in the Pulpit" is quite a polished little piece of irony; so, too, is that "To a Ministerial Sir Willoughby Patterne," and, funniest of all, the letter "To a Minister who has Studied in Germany." In the more serious epistles there is a tendency to fall into a sermonising vein and vulgarise the fine words of Scripture by a half-sentimental application. But this is a common weakness nowadays, and the book as a whole is fresh and attractive.

Letters from Julia; or, Lights from the Borderland. (Grant Richards.)

ONCE upon a time there were two friends in America, named Julia and Ellen, both of whom were known to Mr. Stead. They were devout Christians, and they made a compact that whichever of them died first would, if it were permitted, return to the other and manifest herself to her, and thus prove existence beyond the grave. Then Julia died and appeared to Ellen. The apparition did not speak, but softly and silently vanished away. Shortly afterwards Ellen came to England and told Mr. Stead about it, and Mr. Stead suggested that as he had recently acquired the gift of automatic writing he should constitute himself the medium between Ellen and Julia. Now, an automatic writer is one who holds a pen in his hand, but refuses consciously to control it. The hand writes of itself. The matter proceeds either from the sub-conscious self or from invisible intelligences, such as Julia. Time after time Mr. Stead wrote to Julia's dictation, and a selection of the correspondence forms this little volume. Julia writes very much as living persons do, and her pictures of spiritual life will interest those who are interested in pictures of spiritual life from the automatic hand of Mr. Stead. Here is a passage:

"The Angel Guardian who came to me had wings, as I said. It is not usual, but if we please we can assume them. They are no more necessary than any of the contrivances by which you attempt to attain the mastery of the spirit over the burden of matter. We think, and we are there. Why, then, wings? They are scenic illusions useful to convey the idea of superiority to earth-bound conditions, but we do not use them any more than we use steam-engines. But I was glad my Guide had wings. It seemed more like what I thought it would be and ought to be, and I was at once more at ease than I would otherwise have been."

To say anything more about the book is unnecessary.

Picturesque Dublin Old and New. By Frances Gerard. (Hutchinson & Co.)

THE weight of this book, whether it lie in paper or binding, is so extraordinary, that it takes an athletic man to read it. The writer had an excellent subject to her hand, and it is a pity that she was not capable of turning it to better use. It is a farrago of antiquated gossip and uninteresting detail—exactly in the style of a foolish local guide-book. The arrangement of the subject is thoroughly chaotic, and the present writer in despair gave up the attempt to follow the involution of the author's mind. The manner of writing is slipshod, and the grammar frequently to seek. For example, on p. 226 she uses "potential" when she obviously means "potent." The work evinces a perfect genius for the making of foolish and inappropriate remarks in every conceivable context. This is especially evident in the literary criticism. For example, take this acute note on Charles Lever:

"One of the best of Irish novelists, the edge of his wit being so keen, and his knowledge of human nature (especially of his own countrymen) so true, that his books will live when those of, in a sense, better writers are forgotten."

As an example of exquisite humour in the choice of a nickname, we are told that an old gentleman who suffered from tender feet was called "Bunions." "These," says the author (she quotes some other instances), "will give an idea of the talent for sarcasm which is inherent in Irish men and women." The one good story we can find has been told before in a different connexion:

"A certain lady sat next to Archbishop Trench at a dinner party, and to her surprise found him constantly pinching her leg. She was about to remonstrate, when he suddenly said: 'I fear I am developing paralysis; my leg has no feeling, though I have pinched it many times.'"

We are sorry to speak hardly of what is, after all, a very amiable performance. Doubtless the book will please in its own class. A word of praise should be given to the illustrations, which are often good.

Heine's Lieder und Gedichte. Selected by C. A. Buchheim, Ph.D. "Golden Treasury" Series. (Macmillan & Co.)

A SELECTION from Heine's songs is a seasonable publication after the revived interest in the poet on the Continent and in this country at the end of the past year. Heine, who is well-nigh the worst subject for translation conceivable, repays judicious selection, for he fell often below his best. "Poems which have the swiftness and certainty of exquisite physical sensations": so Mr. Henley with truth, for in his best lyrics the age-sickness is less felt, and we have the very song of the mystery and joy of life. For his lyrical work at its best is modelled on the old Minne-songs; and whether one speak of the Volkslied or the Volksballade, it has all the note of the great poetry of the people. Sometimes he went straight to the old story, sometimes to a modern adaptation, as in the immortal Lorelei; and, says Dr. Buchheim, "we need not wonder that his poems have become themselves Volkslieder." The editor has done his work carefully, and contributes an awkward, hesitating, but sympathetic little introduction.

Modern France, 1789-1895 ("The Story of the Nations"). By André Lebon. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

It is but natural that France should not have been particularly happy during the past century, for she has been making history at a furious rate. The hundred and six years dealt with in M. Lebon's book are well worthy of a place in "The Story of the Nations" series, for they comprise the history of Modern France, which is in every respect an utterly different country from the France of Louis XIV. and XV. M. Lebon begins with the meeting of the States-General on May 5, 1789, having rapidly sketched the position of France under the Ancien Régime, and then plunges at once into the welter of revolutions, wars, dynasties, and ministries with which we are all more or less familiar, coming out successfully at the beginning of M. Félix Faure's presidency in 1895. The book is a very excellent summary of a period of volcanic upheaval, and is extremely useful as a groundwork of further study, or as a means of refreshing the memory. But in many places it is choked by detail, and too frequently the broad issues are obscured for awhile by a summary of events which might have been put with less minuteness. Nor is the English irreproachable—occasionally it reads unnecessarily like a translation—and the dates given during the first revolution are at times confusing. Still, M. Lebon has, of course, a thorough grip of his subject, and he makes it clear that of the three—Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity—only civil equality has really been the outcome of these vast disturbances. There have been too many revolutions for liberty ever to flourish, and the nearest approach to it is that which now obtains under the Third Republic. After the wild orgies of the Revolution quieted down, the power of the State was placed in the hands of a dictator, and on his fall the middle-classes, by means of a narrow and restricted franchise, were the depositaries of power. They got up the revolution of 1830 to break the power of the Crown, and had their brief spell of glory from 1830 to 1848. Then the democracy rebelled against the middle-classes, and once more resorted to the expedient of a dictator. Since 1870, the democracy has done its best with parliamentary institutions, which are by no means a success, but which have weathered the quarter of a century owing chiefly to the fact that they are the form of Government which divides Frenchmen the most. The moral of the whole period is that freedom is best where it gradually broadens down from precedent to precedent, and that a great people cannot hope to achieve freedom and occupy a becoming place in the world by flying from one excess to another.

Aristotle's Theory of Poetry and Fine Art. By S. H. Butcher. (Macmillan & Co.)

THIS is a second and carefully revised edition of Prof. Butcher's treatise. The importance of Aristotle's Poetics, to students of poetry in general and to critics in particular, can hardly be over-estimated, nor is there any better edition than this, with its elaborately established text, its excellent translation printed page for page with the Greek, and the eleven essays which make up in bulk three-fourths of the volume, and are themselves a most valuable contribution to critical literature. In the present edition the translation has been reconsidered and the textual notes enlarged. The essays are only touched in minor points, and the book, which first appeared in 1895, remains substantially the same.

Specimens of the Pre-Shakespearean Drama. ("Athenæum Series.") By John Matthews Manly. Vol. II. (Ginn & Co.)

A FEW weeks ago we reviewed the first volume of Prof. Manly's helpful and scholarly work. The second volume is now before us, and consists of texts taken from the drama of the early Elizabethan period. The first four of these are the four plays generally regarded as the beginnings of the "regular" drama—Udall's Roister-Doister, Still's Gammer Gurton's Needle, Preston's Cambists, Sackville and Norton's Gorboduc; and to have these together in a handy form is a very convenient thing. The remainder of the volume consists of individual plays by Lyly, Greene, Peele, and Kyd. These are perhaps less valuable, as Lyly and Peele are already well edited, and complete editions of Greene and Kyd are promised by the Clarendon Press. As specimens they may be useful, although Prof. Manly's canons of editing are somewhat rigorous for the type of student to whom specimens are likely to be of service. But we wish that all critical editors would adopt Prof. Manly's plan of editing the stage directions as well as the text, and bracketing all additions to the original of these. To Prof. Manly's third volume, with its promised historical sketch of the English drama from the tenth to the sixteenth century, we shall look forward with zest.

Bad Lady Betty: a Drama in Three Acts. By W. D. Scull. (Elkin Matthews.)

MR. SCULL's comedy, or, if you prefer it, comic melodrama, is founded on the career of Elizabeth Luttrell, the heroine of Mr. W. K. R. Bedford's The Luttrells of Four Oaks. She was the sister of the Duchess of Cumberland, "coarse, vulgar, and a gamester"; she kept a faro-table, and ended her days cleaning the streets of Augsburg, and chained to a barrow. Mr. Scull adds to her crimes by making her come between two lovers and their happiness. He writes fair dramatic prose, but surely people do not read melodramas.

THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 29, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

GOD'S FOUNDLING.

BY A. J. DAWSON.

This story, by the author of Middle Greyness, tells how Mr. Morley Fenton—married and come to fullest wisdom (he is the only man at Sunbury to whom the station-master invariably opens the carriage door on his arrival)—solved problems connected with his unacknowledged son, Harold Foster. Harold is a young medical "whose red lips, sensitive as an Æolian harp's strings, reflected every fleeting thought which crossed his mind, and seemed to tinge with hesitancy's greyness the vivid pertinence of much that he said." Much that he says sounds like that. The end is happier and more conventional than the reader might expect from this note. (Heinemann. 310 pp. 6s.)

ENTOMBED IN FLESH.

BY M. H. DZIEWICKI.

A supernatural romance of the battle between Lucifer and Phantasto, a starry and beneficent Presence. Lucifer desires the ruin of a maiden. Phantasto would preserve her pure. The two immortals make a compact: Phantasto is to enter the body of a human being and do what good he can on earth, for mankind in general and the maiden in particular, while Lucifer opposes him. Thus far the Prologue. The story, which is of modern English life, follows. (Blackwood & Sons. 282 pp. 6s.)

TALES IN PROSE AND VERSE.

BY DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY.

"The belief they express is this," says the author in the dedicatory epistle to this collection of stories and ballads, "that there is no degradation into which man can fall, out of which it is impossible for man to emerge." The stories are nine in number and the poems ten. The last of all is a little comedy in dialogue entitled "A Question of Fetters." (Chatto & Windus. 271 pp. 3s. 6d.)

TRAITS AND CONFIDENCES.

BY THE HON. EMILY LAWLESS.

The author of Hurrish and Grania always deserves attention, even when she offers mere scraps. This new book is like Mr. Christie Murray's, a bundle of stories, sketches, and poems, a mixture of sad and merry, in the Irish way. Here are two titles chosen at random: "Of the Influence of Assassination upon a Landscape," and "On the Pursuit of Marine Zoology as an Inventive to Gossip." (Methuen & Co. 272 pp. 6s.)

PHILIP GREYSTOKE.

BY EVAN MAY.

This capacious fiction begins thus: "Midnight! Midnight, amid densest, awful mountain silence. Such silence as habitual dwellers in valleys among their fellows neither know nor can conceive. Midnight! where the passage of time, as it flies, is only noted by cart-throbs. . . ." and so on. In the midst of this midnight a young man stands on the top of an alp and holds a conversation with himself. It is (of course) Philip Greystoke. How could it be anyone else? Afterwards come love, tons of it, and all the warp and woof of a Digby & Long novel. (Digby & Long. 341 pp. 6s.)

LIZA.

BY MARCUS REAY.

Liza was a bad woman. Obviously; for she backed herself to smoke more cigarettes than any man in town; she drank like a fish; and she drew patrons to the stalls of the Frivolity by the titude of her kicks. Dick Mortimer was the son of a retired butcher. With him affaires de cœur were short-lived, and une grande passion was yet to come. So he made love to Liza in her maisonette, and consequences followed. A very silly story. (Digby & Long. 6 pp. 3s. 6d.)

TWEEN THE NEW AND THE OLD.

BY GEORGE WEMYSS.

This is a tale of three lovers, two of whom are born in the same village on the same day. One mother exclaims: "Who knows but what they mightn't some day be husband and wife"; and the other answers, "Stranger things nor that hev happened." Stranger things did happen. The third lover's name is D'Arcy de Blois; and what might have been a rustic wedding between a shepherd and a kitchen-maid becomes something else. When its improbabilities are condoned, the story is fresh and pleasing enough. (John Macqueen. 327 pp. 6s.)

A MAN WITH A MAID.

BY MRS. HENRY E. DUDENEY.

Brighton between Saturday and Monday is drawn in these pages to the life, and it is all pretty real and pretty sad. Tom's way with Tabbie turns out sad, mad, and bad; and Tabbie's way out of her trouble is mad and sad, too—and if the story were not well told, which it is, one would resent it, which one doesn't. (Heinemann. 183 pp. 2s. 6d.)

DUNTY THE DROLL.

BY JOHN TWEEDDALE.

This book of Scotch episodes is written in a dialect which even the author recognises he must translate as he goes along. But we are not taking lessons in broad Scotch just now; and such a sentence as this merely annoys: "The clatter's gaun that Lucky Muckle's (Meikle's) waul's (well's) turned itill no mask (infuse) tea, 'at wull't. Think ye the deil and Michael Scott can hae ony han' in't?" We don't know about Michael; but, decidedly, we think the deil has a hand in dialect stories. (Alexander Gardner. 101 pp.)

REVIEWS.

The War of the Worlds. By H. G. Wells.
(Heinemann.)

I.—THE STORY.

MR. WELLS has done good work before, but nothing quite so fine as this. He has two distinct gifts—of scientific imagination and of mundane observation—and he has succeeded in bringing them together and harmoniously into play. Upon the scientific imagination depends the structure, the plot, of the whole thing. The worlds are Mars and the Earth. The Martians, whose planet, older and further from the sun than ours, was becoming uncomfortably cool, planned a descent upon a new abiding-place. Their extraordinary mechanical development enabled them to accomplish this. Projected with stupendous velocity in cylinders they alighted upon Woking Common. Here is Mr. Wells's description of one of them:

"A big greyish, rounded bulk, the size, perhaps, of a bear, was rising slowly and painfully out of the cylinder. As it bulged up and caught the light, it glistened like wet leather. Two large dark-coloured eyes were regarding me steadfastly. It was rounded, and had, one might say, a face. There was a mouth under the eyes, the lipless brim of which quivered and panted and dropped saliva. The body heaved and pulsed convulsively. A lank, tentacular appendage gripped the edge of the cylinder, another swayed in the air. . . . There was something fungoid in the oily brown skin, something in the clumsy deliberation of the tedious movements unspeakably terrible. Even at this first encounter, this first glimpse, I was overcome with disgust and dread. Suddenly the monster vanished. It had toppled over the brim of the cylinder and fallen into the pit, with a thud like the fall of a great mass of leather. I heard it give a peculiar thick cry, and forthwith another of these creatures appeared darkly in the deep shadow of the aperture."

The narrator is a student of moral philosophy living at Maybury Hill, and he becomes an eye-witness of many of the strange events that follow: of the construction by the Martians of their fighting-machines, of their advance upon London, of the rout of the military and flight of the populace, and of the ultimate and remarkable collapse by which the world is freed from the invaders. The course of evolution on Mars has been very different to ours: the Martians have all gone to brain. Here they move heavily because the gravitational force of the earth is greater than they are accustomed to. But their mechanical appliances are irresistible. They mount themselves upon vast walking tripods.

"Seen nearer the thing was incredibly strange, for it was no mere insensate machine driving on its way. Machine it was, with a ringing metallic pace, and long flexible glittering tentacles (one of which gripped a young pine tree) swinging and rattling about its strange body. It picked its road as it went striding along, and the brazen hood that surmounted it moved to and fro with the inevitable suggestion of a head looking about it. Behind the main body was a huge thing of white metal like a gigantic fisherman's basket, and puffs of green smoke squirted out from the joints of the limbs as the monster swept by me. And in an instant it was gone."

With the accuracy of Mr. Wells's speculative science we deal elsewhere. It is extraordinarily detailed, and the probable departures from possibility are, at least, so contrived as not to offend the reader who has but a small smattering of exact knowledge. The consistency and definiteness of the descriptions create an adroit illusion. And, in any case, given the scientific hypotheses, the story as a whole is remarkably plausible. You feel it, not as romance, but as realism. Mr. Wells's art lies, we fancy, in the fact that, while his monsters are sufficiently like mankind to be terrible, his human beings are throughout so completely human. The inhabitants of Chertsey and Woking behave, in presence of the Martians, precisely as a Surrey suburban population would. Mr. Wells never relaxes his hold on the commonplace, everyday life, against which his marvels stand out so luridly. A thousand deft and detailed touches create an atmosphere of actuality, bring the marvels into the realistic plane. The moral philosopher himself is thoroughly natural from beginning to end. So is the drunken artilleryman, who devises a brilliant scheme for living the life of a rat in a London subject to the invaders. He is not sure that it will not be better than civilisation. On the other hand, the imbecile and greedy curate with whom the narrator foregathers, and whom he is reluctantly compelled to slay, seems to us to introduce a needlessly farcical element. Mr. Wells must have suffered from curates lately, we should think.

As a crowning merit of the book, beyond its imaginative vigour and its fidelity to life, it suggests rather than obtrudes moral ideas. The artilleryman with his scorn of the "damn little clerks" who would willingly be fattened for Martian dietary, and might even be trained to hunt their wilder fellows, has some truth on his side. In the light of the imagined cataclysm certain follies and meannesses of our civilisation stand out. Our smallness, after all, in the universe receives its illustration. It is a thoughtful as well as an unusually vivid and effective bit of workmanship.

II.—MR. WELLS'S SCIENCE.

Mr. H. G. Wells has probably a greater proportion of admirers among people actively engaged in scientific work than among any other section of the reading public. It is not difficult to understand the reason of this. Nothing irritates a man of science more than incorrect assertions with reference to natural facts and phenomena; and the writer who essays to use such material must obtain information from Nature herself, or he will provoke the derision of better informed readers. Mr. Wells has a practical familiarity with the facts of science, and this knowledge, combined with his imaginative mind, enables him to command the attention of readers who are not usually interested in romance.

The fact that Mr. Wells has been able to present the planet Mars in a new light is in itself a testimony to originality. The planet has been brought within the world of fiction by several writers, but in the War of the Worlds an aspect of it is dealt with altogether different from what has gone before. We have had a number of stories of journeys to Mars, but hitherto, so far as we remember, the idea of an invasion by inhabitants of Mars has not been exploited. Astronomers can make out just enough of the planet's surface to justify the conclusion that water and ice or snow exist there, and that the land areas are at times traversed by a network of canals or channels more or less enigmatical in origin. According to Mr. Percival Lowell, who made an exhaustive study of Mars in 1894, these canals are really belts of fertilised land, and are the only habitable tracts on Mars, the remainder of the land surface being desert. The view that the Martians—it is less unreasonable to think that Mars is inhabited than that it is not—would look towards our earth with longing eyes is thus quite within the bounds of legitimate speculation; and the fact that Mr. Wells put it forward before Mr. Lowell had brought before the attention of British astronomers the reasons for thinking that Mars at the present time is mostly a dreary waste from which all organic life has been driven, is a high testimony to his perceptive faculties. In other words, the reasons given for the invasion of the Earth by Mars are perfectly valid from a scientific point of view, and are supported by the latest observations of the nature of the planet's surface.

Then, as to the intellectual status of whatever inhabitants there may be on Mars, there is every reason for thinking that it would be higher than that of man. On this matter the following words, written by a distinguished observer of Mars—M. E. M. Antoniadi—in July last, give evidence to the view of the Martians presented by Mr. Wells. Referring to the origin of the canal systems, M. Antoniadi wrote:

"Perhaps the least improbable—not to say the most plausible—clue to the mystery still attaches to the overbold and almost absurd assumption that what we are witnessing on Mars is the work of rational beings immeasurably superior to man, and capable of dealing with thousands and thousands of square miles of grey and yellow material with more ease than we can cultivate or destroy vegetation in a garden one acre in extent."

Naturally, the view that beings immeasurably superior to man exist upon Mars is repugnant, but we see by the words quoted that astronomers are being forced to accept it as the easiest method of explaining the phenomena observed. Mr. Wells's idea of the invasion of the earth by emigrants of a race possessing more effective fighting machinery than we have is thus not at all impossible; and the verisimilitude of the narrative appeals more strongly, perhaps, to scientific readers than to others not so familiar with accepted opinion upon the points deftly introduced.

The most striking characteristic of the work is not, however, the description of the Martians, but the way they are disposed of after they had invaded the Earth. We venture to assert that scientific material has never been more cleverly woven into the web of fiction than it is in the epilogue of this story. The observations of Pasteur, Chaveau, Buchner, Metschnikoff, and many others, have made the germ theory of disease an established truth. In the struggle for existence man has acquired, to a certain extent, immunity against the attacks of harmful micro-organisms, and there is little doubt that any visitors from another planet would not be able to resist these insidious germs of disease. The Earth itself furnishes analogous instances: Englishmen who migrate to the West Coast of Africa, or the strip of forest land in India known as the Terai, succumb to malarial disease, and the Pacific Islander who comes to reside in London or another large British city, almost certainly perishes from tuberculosis. Mr. Wells expresses the doctrine of acquired immunity so neatly that not to quote his words would be to do him an injustice. He says:

"These germs of disease have taken toll of humanity since the beginning of things—taken toll of our pre-human ancestors since life began here. But by virtue of this natural selection of our kind we have developed resisting power; to no germs do we succumb without a struggle, and to many—those that cause putrefaction in dead matter, for instance—our living frames are altogether immune. But there are no bacteria in Mars, and directly these invaders arrived, directly they drank and fed, our microscopic allies began to work their overthrow. Already when I watched them they were irrevocably doomed, dying and rotting even as they went to and fro. It was inevitable. By the toll of a billion deaths, man has bought his birthright of the earth, and it is his against all comers; it would still be his were the Martians ten times as mighty as they are. For neither do men live nor die in vain."

The book contains many other paragraphs which happily express scientific views, but we must refrain from quoting them. Not for an instant, however, do we think that Mr. Wells owes his success to mere correctness of statement. Science possesses a plethora of facts and ideas, yet not once in a generation does a writer arise competent to make use of them for purposes of romance. Already Mr. Wells has his imitators, but their laboured productions, distinguished either by prolixity or inaccuracy, neither excite the admiration of scientific readers nor attract the attention of the world in general.

Middle Greyness. By A. J. Dawson.
(John Lane.)

In a dream it sometimes happens that the vagrant imagination strikes out a phrase of surprising dignity. Slowly and tentatively, the sleeper, if he be a person interested in words for their own sake, gropes his way back to consciousness, grasping with both hands his fluttering inspiration. For all that he can do the captive is rarely brought home; and if once in a while, being a person of discrimination, he have his will of it, the glow has quickly faded out. Mr. Dawson can dream with the best of us, but he does not discriminate so well. One night he had a dream (let us conjecture our way to the springs of Middle Greyness): he was rapt by a torrent of oratory. Of the stream of eloquence which inebriated his soul but one precious drop won through to daylight. "England and we who be English"—these were the words. They rang in his head; they became an obsession; and about them grew up the conception of Robert Darley.

About this time a distinguished career had been blasted by a scandal. That shall be embodied in our novel; and because we are all Ibsenites now, the impulse to evil shall be (as Dr. Middleton might phrase it) hereditarily inherited. Which gives rise, on the one hand, to Rollo Croft with his Odalisque and an indeterminate lure named Bêté, of which we are told nothing except that it has a "piquant profile"; and, on the other, to a father who in early life had broken down under the same moral infirmity as shall ruin the son. Him Mr. Dawson exiles to a New South Wales gunyah, with a dog for his helpmeet. "Satan" and "fool dog" are the terms by which in inflicting his confidences upon this quadruped (for soliloquies are disallowed) the beachcomber habitually apostrophises it. The person named Rollo revels in redundancy. This is the way (he has a languid voice, beautifully modulated, and wonderfully musical):

"I thought you were supposed to be studying Hampshire rustics, or Parliamentary debates, or something . . . This afternoon I've been working with a man who has a studio at Twickenham, and I came on here because I like the crowd and the river, served [ ] with a band and a sunset. You may have noticed that the combination is distinctly picturesque, though either taken separately are [sic] insipid, with the exception, perhaps, of the sunset, and even that wants something to focus it, don't you think?"

And in an epicurean tasting of life's flavours, thus:

"But tell me, what effect on you does the slow movement of that waltz have, taken with the sunset light on the water? How does it affect your immediate inclinations in the matter of what one ought to do and where one ought to do it? I ask, because it would be sinfully Gothic under the circumstances to do anything which would not harmonise with this atmosphere."

If this kind of thing amuses, Mr. Dawson's book will amuse.

In a collection of short stories published some months ago under the title Mere Sentiment, Mr. Dawson promised better things; better things he may give us in the future; but this present volume is beyond the limits of patience pretentious and vulgar.

* * * *

Wayside Courtships. By Hamlin Garland.
(Neville Beeman.)

These are stories of the beginnings of love, love at first sight; stories in which the chance encounter of two pair of eyes becomes fraught with fate, happy or unhappy, for two lives. For the most part Mr. Garland takes his theme seriously—sometimes, perhaps unconsciously, he burlesques it. Burlesque, at least, is to us the effect of the impulsiveness in "Upon Impulse." The hero who "looked into the upturned faces of the girls as if they were pansies" is suddenly smitten by one. Thus her friend comments:

"As they streamed away in files she said, 'Isn't he good-looking? We've known him for years. He's all right,' she said significantly, and squeezed Miss Powell's arm.

'Well, Lou' Blakesley, you're the same old irrepressible! Blushing already, you dear! I tell you he's splendid. I wish he'd take to you,' and she gave Miss Powell another squeeze. 'It would be such a match! Braius and beauty too!'"

Surely this sort of thing rather rubs the bloom off young romance. Mr. Garland will appeal to those who like American slang, American local colour, and American provincial character, for he is redolent of up-country life. We confess to a feeling of irritation at the ugliness of the setting, and the hideous iteration of clipped words and elided vowels. Here is a specimen of Mr. Garland's vernacular:

"Y'see, my division ends at Warsaw, and I run back and forth here every other day, but I don't get much chance to see them, and I ain't worth a cuss f'r letter-writin'. Y'see, she's only aunt by marriage, but I like her; an' I guess she's got about all she can stand up under, an' so I like t'help her a little when I can. The old man died owning nothing but the house, an' that left the old lady t'ruffle f'r her livin'. Dunned if she ain't sandy as old Saul. They're gitt'n' along purty."

We find some relief in the "Alien among the Pines," where the dialogue passes between English-speaking people, with only a faint salt of Americanisms. This is a picturesque story of pine-wood clearing, with, for central figure, a musician who has seen better days, but chooses to efface himself as a woodcutter while he conquers his passion for drink. Mr. Garland's landscape is vividly touched:

"The trail (it was not a road) ran like a graceful furrow over the hills, around little lakes covered deep with snow, through tamarisk swamps, where the tracks of wild things thickened, over ridges of tall pine clear of brush, and curving everywhere amid stumps, where dismantled old shanties marked the site of the older logging camps. Sometimes they met teams going to the store. Sometimes they crossed logging-roads—wide, smooth tracks artificially iced, down which mountainous loads of logs were slipping, creaking, and groaning. Sometimes they heard the dry click-clock of the woodsmen's axes, or the crash of falling trees deep in the wood."

Mr. Garland has imagination and artistic intention, but his methods are crude, and he seems to find it difficult to wind up his stories without leaving ragged ends.

SOME APHORISMS.

I.—MR. GEORGE MEREDITH.

IN that pleasant American budget of quoted matter, Current Literature, we find a page of aphorisms snatched with varying judgment from the pages of Mr. Meredith's novels.

The hero of two women must die and be wept over in common before they can appreciate one another.

What a woman thinks of women is the test of her nature.

Convictions are generally first impressions that are sealed with later prejudices.

One may be as a weed of the sea while one's fate is being decided. To love is to be on the sea, out of sight of land.

Intellectual differences do not cause wounds, except when very unintellectual sentiments are behind them.

It has been established that we do not wax diviner by dragging down the gods to our level.

Women don't care uncommonly for the men who love them, though they like precious well to be loved.

After forty, men have married their habits, and wives are only an item in the list, and not the most important.

That small motives are at the bottom of many illustrious actions is a modern discovery.

Observation is the most enduring of the pleasures of life.

We women miss life only when we have never met the man to reverence.

The young who avoid the region of Romance escape the title of Fool at the cost of a celestial crown.

True poets and true women have the native sense of the divineness of what the world deems gross material substance.

The slave of a passion thinks in a ring, as hares run; he will cease where he began.

Success is costly. We find we have pledged the better part of ourselves to clutch it; not to be redeemed with the whole handful of our prize.

Masculine ideas are one thing; but let feminine ever be feminine, or our civilisation perishes.

Whether a woman loves a man or not, he is her lover if he dares tell her he loves her, and is heard with attention.

II.—BY R. L. STEVENSON.

It is curious that a little publication, entitled The Stevenson Birthday Book (Marcus Ward & Co.), has not received more notice. True, birthday books fall into the category of books which are not books. But Stevenson's name is magical, and the booklet in question is at least interesting as a collection of his aphorisms. Below we give a selection of those used by the editor of this publication:

If a man love the labour of any trade, apart from any question of success or fame, the gods have called him.

Habit and practice sharpen gifts; the necessity of toil grows less disgusting, grows even welcome, in the course of years; a small taste (if it be only genuine) waxes with indulgence into an exclusive passion.

Marriage is of so much use to a woman, opens out to her so much more of life, and puts her in the way of so much more freedom and usefulness, that, whether she marry ill or well, she can hardly miss some benefit.

The time comes when a man should cease prelusory gymnastic, stand up, put a violence upon his will, and for better or worse, begin the business of creation.

Idealism in honesty can only be supported by perpetual effort.

To be a gentleman is to be one all the world over, and in every relation and grade of society. It is a high calling, to which a man must first be born and then devote himself for life.

If you are to continue to be a law to yourself, you must beware of the first signs of laziness.

We live in an ascending scale when we live happily, one thing leading to another in an endless series.

Style is the invariable mark of any master; and for the student who does not aspire so high as to be numbered with the giants, it is still the one quality in which he may improve himself at will.

He is a wise youth who can balance one part of genuine life against two parts of drudgery between four walls, and for the sake of the one manfully accept the other.

To be truly happy is a question of how we begin and not of how we end, of what we want and not of what we have.

Man is indeed marked for failure in his efforts to do right. But when the best consistently miscarry, how tenfold more remarkable that all should continue to strive.

There is not a life in all the records of the past but, properly studied, might lend a hint and a help to some contemporary.

The mere privilege of beholding a comely woman is worth paying for.

The essence of love is kindness; and indeed it may be best defined as passionate kindness; kindness, so to speak, run mad, and become importunate and violent.

To know what you prefer, instead of humbly saying amen to what the world tells you you ought to prefer, is to have kept your soul alive.

Love rests upon a physical basis; it is a familiarity of nature's making, and apart from voluntary choice.

The thought that prompted and was conveyed in a caress would only lose to be set down in words.

It is by careful method, and minute, unwearied attention, that men rise even to material exactness, or to sure knowledge even of external and constant things.

A generous prayer is never presented in vain; the petition may be refused, but the petitioner is always, I believe, rewarded by some gracious visitation.

An intelligent person looking out of his eyes and hearkening in his ears, with a smile on his face all the time, will get more true education than many another in a life of heroic vigils.

Most of our pocket wisdom is conceived for the use of mediocre people, to discourage them from ambitious attempts, and generally console them in their mediocrity.

Dissatisfaction with our life's endeavour springs in some degree from dulness. We require higher tasks, because we do not recognise the height of those we have.

There is nothing so monstrous but we can believe it of ourselves.

Falling in love is the one illogical adventure, the one thing of which we are tempted to think as supernatural, in our trite and reasonable world.

O to be up and doing, O,
Unfearing and unashamed to go,
In all the uproar and the press,
About my human business!
My undissuaded heart I hear
Whisper courage in my ear;
With voiceless calls, the ancient earth
Summons me to a daily birth.

Though I have all my life been eager for legitimate distinctions, I can lay my hand upon my heart, at the end of my career, and declare there is not one—no, nor yet life itself—which is worth acquiring or preserving at the slightest cost of dignity.

BECKY SHARP.—AFTER.

In the February Longman's Magazine Mr. S. Arthur Strong brings to light some letters written by Dickens and Thackeray to William George Spencer, the sixth Duke of Devonshire. The gem of the collection is a letter written by Thackeray to the Duke in which he satisfies that nobleman's curiosity as to the career of the Vanity Fair puppets after they had disappeared from the view of Thackeray's readers. We quote a portion of this letter:

"Mrs. Rawdon Crawley, whom I saw last week, and whom I informed of your Grace's desire to have her portrait, was good enough to permit me to copy a little drawing made of her 'in happier days,' she said with a sigh, by Smee, the Royal Academician.

Mrs. Crawley now lives in a small but very pretty little house in Belgravia, and is conspicuous for her numerous charities, which always get into the newspapers, and her unaffected piety. Many of the most exalted and spotless of her own sex visit her, and are of opinion that she is a most injured woman. There is no sort of truth in the stories regarding Mrs. Crawley and the late Lord Steyne. The licentious character of that nobleman alone gave rise to reports from which, alas! the most spotless life and reputation cannot always defend themselves. The present Sir Rawdon Crawley (who succeeded his late uncle, Sir Pitt, 1832; Sir Pitt died on the passing of the Reform Bill) does not see his mother, and his undutifulness is a cause of the deepest grief to that admirable lady. 'If it were not for higher things,' she says, how could she have borne up against the world's calumny, a wicked husband's cruelty and falseness, and the thanklessness (sharper than a serpent's tooth) of an adored child? But she has been preserved, mercifully preserved, to bear all these griefs, and awaits her reward elsewhere. The italics are Mrs. Crawley's own.

She took the style and title of Lady Crawley for some time after Sir Pitt's death in 1832; but it turned out that Colonel Crawley, Governor of Coventry Island, had died of fever three months before his brother, whereupon Mrs. Rawdon was obliged to lay down the title which she had prematurely assumed.

The late Jos. Sedley, Esq., of the Bengal Civil Service, left her two lakhs of rupees, on the interest of which the widow lives in the practices of piety and benevolence before mentioned. She has lost what little good looks she once possessed, and wears false hair and teeth (the latter give her rather a ghastly look when she smiles), and—for a pious woman—is the best-crinolined lady in Knightsbridge district.

Colonel and Mrs. W. Dobbin live in Hampshire, near Sir R. Crawley; Lady Jane was godmother to their little girl, and the ladies are exceedingly attached to each other. The Colonel's History of the Punaub is looked for with much anxiety in some circles."

SATURDAY, JANUARY 29, 1898.

No. 1343, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .               | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. . . . .                | 0 15 3  | 0 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

SOME time ago, it will be remembered, the German Emperor said that no man who was not a Christian could be a good soldier. A week or so afterwards the Kladderadatsch published a drawing representing Leonidas, Frederick the Great, Alexander the Great, Napoleon, and others, laughing over the remark. Herr Trojan, the editor, an old man, who has filled his place with honour for thirty-six years, has in consequence been tried for lèse-majesté, convicted, and sentenced to two months' imprisonment. We have nothing to say, except that we are surprised at Herr Trojan's removal, because Germany is just now much more in need of a humorist than an Emperor.

Apropos of the theories as to the Snark's significance, which we print elsewhere, it may be added that some excellent persons still believe that the Bellman (who in Mr. Holiday's illustrations is like a blend of Longfellow and Tennyson) is no other than Mr. Gladstone himself. In support of this belief as many reasons can be brought forward as against it.

MEANWHILE, according to the Speaker, the story is told of a certain bishop who complained to Mr. Gladstone that the nature of the Snark was not clearly defined. "But the Snark, you know, was a Boojum," said Mr. Gladstone. "Yes," replied the bishop, "but what is a Boojum?" Mr. Gladstone is said to have hinted, with his customary delicacy, that a prelate who confessed to doubts about the identity of the Boojum was unworthy of ecclesiastical preferment.

So far the Speaker is a valuable commentator on Lewis Carroll. But in continuing its remarks it errs rather sadly. Referring to "Jabberwocky" it says: "To a discerning Radical, the Jubjub bird is obviously Lord Salisbury, and the grumious Bandersnatch haunts the Colonial Office, while a Unionist will argue with some show of reason that the most grumious thing in creation is Mr. Labouchere." But who said anything about "grumious"? Frumious, Sir Wemyss Reid, frumious!

WHAT was probably the last contribution of Lewis Carroll to mathematical science appears in Nature of January 20. It is a long letter on a new method of abridged long division, and is dated from Christ Church, Oxford, on December 21, 1897. As an example of the working of the method, the number 86781592485703152764092 is divided by 9993. To do this sum by ordinary division involves the writing of 202 digits, and 204 additions or subtractions, whereas by Lewis Carroll's method the example can be worked by writing 44 digits, performing 25 additions or subtractions, and 22 multiplications. The letter is distinguished by the severity of exactness which marks all Lewis Carroll's mathematical expositions.

It is always interesting to observe what English books attract attention on the Continent. Miss Kingsley's Travels in West Africa is, we notice, the subject of two long and exhaustive articles in De Nederlandsche of Amsterdam, the leading literary journal in Holland. The reviewer, Mr. A. G. le Van Duyl, the doyen of the Dutch journalists, speaks in the most enthusiastic terms of the book, which he declares he has read no fewer than three times.

A WRITER in the Publishers' Circular has made an interesting list of the alterations—very slight they are, but, from the point of view of the careful literary artist, important—made by Mr. Henley in the reprint of his Burns Essay. We quote a few. In one instance, the "Be this as it may" of the original editions is changed in the reprint to "For all this, though"; in another, "not" is substituted for "none." Again, "knower" gives place to "student"; an "and" is deleted at the beginning of a sentence, "unknown" is interpolated in a quotation from Burns; "which means that" is turned to "despite which." "I think" in one case is altered to "I believe"; and "a discrediting variety of causes" becomes "a variety of discrediting causes."

THE humorous and fanciful dramatic adaptations of Hans Christian Andersen's stories, which are now being played at Terry's Theatre, should be held in mind by those of our readers who wish to give their little people amusement. Captain Basil Hood, the author, has been compelled to arrange each story—"The Tinder Box," "The Emperor's New Clothes," and "Big Claus and Little Claus"—in a single scene, and any departure from the original sequence of events (and such departures meet with severe criticism from child critics) must be pardoned for this reason. Considering his difficulties, he has preserved an astonishing amount of the Danish writer's spirit. The acting is excellent. Mr. Clarey, as the Emperor in one play and the Mayor in another, is so engaging as to make us wish a theatre might permanently be set aside for such innocent entertainments, with himself always in the cast.

A NOTICE has been posted up in the Nottingham Free Public Libraries to the following effect: "The Librarian suggests that Sir Walter Scott's Waverley Novels be read in chronological order, as below." Then follows the list of novels in column, while to each title is appended the dates of the period of which the story treats, and the locality in which it is laid. The Librarian's request that this routine should be followed assumes a good deal. Very few people would care to go through the Waverley Novels in any order, and those who did it in chronological order would be students, not novel-readers. Even the student might be better employed. The table is interesting, and useful for reference; but we shall be surprised if Nottingham readers consent to read Scott by rule. There might be some point in a publisher issuing the novels in the order suggested. But what publisher would allow Count Robert of Paris to be the first volume of his series? Our advice to persons about to read Count Robert of Paris is—Don't.

Is it a fair presumption that a literary man should write brilliant letters to his friends? Perhaps, but there is no law. Some writers—Turgenev, it seems, was one of them—not only fail as letter-writers, but their letters do not even suggest genius. To the Russian novelist we read, in Miss Ethel Arnold's biography:

"Letters were precisely what they have been to many hard-working literary men and women, such as Balzac and George Eliot, for instance—viz., merely a means to an end, that end being the communication of necessary information to his correspondents. They made no demand upon his literary sense, and, consequently, obtained no response from it."

Matthew Arnold's letters were a similar disappointment.

In considering Mr. Benjamin Swift along with other "Younger Reputations" in our issue of December 4, we quoted a scrap of his verse. Mr. Swift has contributed the following little jingle to the Magazine of Glasgow University:

"PHASES.

"The clematis climbs
Like a purple adder,
And the sun's on the limes!

The moon has her paces,
The winds have the sea for a harp,
The stars their sure places.

Ah me, and the heart its own rue
Like a hush midnight burglar Climbing up and through."

A correspondent suggests that Mr. Swift owes his University readers an explanation—of the last three lines at least.

At one time or other most bookhunters are confronted with a nice problem in ethics: they are asked to pay for a book a sum which to their certain knowledge represents only a fraction of its value. Some settle such difficulties for themselves, others ask advice. In the latter class is Mr. J. A. Edmonds, who writes to us: "I am not so unfortunate as to be a seller of books, either new or secondhand, but, as a 'question of metaphysics,' it would be interesting to know Mr. Lang's opinion of the morality of the gentleman (vide the Westminster Gazette) who was recently lucky enough to buy a copy of the first edition of Charlotte Brontë's Villette (three volumes) for one shilling from a secondhand bookseller in the Eastern Counties."

OUR impression is, that Mr. Lang has already given his verdict in the moral aspect of such "bargains." (By the way, the very word "bargain" implies that the dealer has been paid less than absolute equity would dictate.) The sophism (or sound argument) with which most bookhunters satisfy their conscience is, that they cannot be both buyer and seller too, and a dealer should know his business. There are also those who permit their lucky purchases to stand against their unlucky ones, and cry quits.

MR. DAVIDSON is a poet of whom we have tidings too seldom; but a little reminder of his Fleet Street Eclogues comes to us in the form of A Foursome at Rye, a poem designed on somewhat similar lines by Mr. John Somerville. The game of golf has never had more zealous eulogy than is offered it in this bright little poem. Here is a sonnet on the Golfer's Joys:

"Seven are the golfer's joys. And first, the drive,
Which flies o'er bunkers straight towards the green:
Second, the cleek-shot, taken strong and clean,
Which makes him feel 'tis good to be alive;
Third, is the perfect loft which does not dive
Into the ditch, but drops and rolls serene Straight towards the hole: and fourth, the keen
Joy with a worthy foeman well to strive.
Fifth is the noble putt, so fair and true,
Which like an arrow speeds towards the hole,
And makes the sky look bright, tho' it be stormy:
Sixth, is a hole in hand, when all looked blue:
And seventh the crowning joy which calms
the soul—
The almost perfect bliss of being dormy!"

How many more books still lie buried in the old National Observer? We ask, because almost from the inception of that paper the writers in its pages have been gathering their contributions into volumes; yet still more volumes come, whose germ, at any rate, found place there. Already there are published, for instance, Diogenes in London, The Autobiography of a Boy and Monologues of the Dead, Old John and The Stone Dragon, The Celtic Twilight and Barrack-Room Ballads, The Law's Lumber-Room and The Rhythm of Life, The Golden Age and Women's Tragedies.

AND now comes Through a Glass Lightly, a most attractively printed little book, a mere featherweight of literature, by Mr. T. T. Gregg, who writes thus in his prefatory note of the editor who printed the majority of its contents:—"It would not be easy for me to repay Mr. W. E. Henley the deep debt of gratitude I owe him for the literary encouragement which, in common with many others, I have always received at his hands."

WE like Mr. Gregg's dedication: "To my father, from whose generous cellars has floated up much of the inspiration of the following essays." It is a wise author that has such a father. Here is a taste of that inspiration:

"Nectar is but a vague and shilly-shallying poetasterism, which can by no stretch of language be applied to the nobler stuff. For the gods, and primitive man in their image, drank only when they were athirst. They never sipped their liquor. Not theirs (poor devils!) to roll it round the tongue, to toss it playfully against the palate, to let it trickle exquisitely down a gullet of educated sensibility." And here we leave a book clearly not intended for us.

IN the dedicatory letter to a friend which Mr. David Christie Murray prefixes to his new volume of Tales in Prose and Verse, he says that his versified Tales have been all improvisations. One was dictated to a friend after dinner. We may yet be called upon to consider Mr. Murray as a serious poet, for he writes: "I have long been labouring on an ambitious something which may yet turn out to be a poem, and in the profound quiet and loneliness of the winter retreat into which I have stolen I may yet have the good fortune to finish it."

AT a time when competition among the popular magazines is so keen as at present, a bold advertisement is, we suppose, necessary. But the following almost sins against the rules of the game:

"RANJY'S BAT

may be depended upon to make a game of cricket interesting and exciting. That is the secret of Ranjy's popularity. The 'Magazine' may be depended upon to provide each month the most interesting budget of articles and stories published. That is the secret of its success."

And so on.

AN Irish correspondent writes:

"Early among the celebrations of '98 comes the Fainne an Lae ('The Dawning of Day') a new weekly paper published at Dublin in the Irish language. The number which lies before me consists of an eight-page sheet, printed partly in English, and partly in the graceful Irish type, which has come down almost unchanged from the beautiful uncial characters of the Book of Kells and other admired Irish MSS. The Saxon will probably sniff at certain eccentricities of Irish orthography. Not that I am among those who condemn it as a clumsy medium even for spelling Irish. It seems to me well enough adapted to express the native sounds, but hopeless for foreign names or words. Thus New York appears as Nuadh Fabhrac; William Cooinnigh, Ard Dlíghtheadoir, somehow seems less convincing than William Kenny, Solicitor-General; but the most ingenious perversion of all is Cíao Tseamh for Kiao Chow. This is so grotesque that a stranger to the language will scarcely believe me when I state that it fairly reproduces the correct Chinese pronunciation. But laugh as you may, the appearance of a journal for the purpose of intensifying Irish nationality by rehabilitating its almost forgotten language is a serious matter. Had such a weapon been possible in the past we might still have the Pictish language and nationality among us. Some will retort, perhaps, that it is as well we have not, and, undeniably, although we may admit the fervid poetry of the cry of Thomas Davis 'to have lost entirely the national language is death,' in our saner moments, in plain prose, we may doubt if Cornwall would be better off to-day if her ancient language had not died with Dolly Pentreath."

ON the authority of C. K. S. in the Illustrated London News, we may state that Mr. Rudyard Kipling has completed a new novel, entitled The Burning of the "Sarah Sands", which is described as "a stirring historical tale of maritime adventure." The title itself is stirring enough, as Mr. Kipling's titles are apt to be.

THE authoritative memoir of the late Sir Frank Lockwood is to be written by a fellow Q.C. M.P., Mr. Augustine Birrell. It is to be hoped that the book will be kept short.

MR. MURRAY announces a memoir of Her Royal Highness Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck. This biography, based on Princess Mary's private diaries and letters, will be prepared by the editor of The Sporting and Dramatic News.

MR. ALFRED NUTT has expressed a wish to reply to the letter of Sir Walter Besant in our last week's issue, but we regret our inability to depart from the announcement we then made that the correspondence upon "The Author's Figures" must cease. We think that our readers, having heard both sides over a period of some weeks, will have no difficulty in making up their minds on the questions raised.

MR. RICHARD LE GALLIENNE left for New York, in the Teutonic, with his wife last Wednesday. Mr. Lane has in hand, for production next month, Mr. Le Gallienne's new novel The Romance of Zion Chapel.

A POSTHUMOUS volume by the late Phillips Brooks, Bishop of Massachusetts, will be issued shortly by Messrs. Service & Paton. It will be entitled The Best Methods of Promoting Spiritual Life, and will contain a portrait of the author.

THE author of The Gadfly—Mrs. E. L. Voynich, whom most reviewers have taken for a male novelist—is now engaged on a novel of Austrian life. Mrs. Voynich is an American lady who has lived much on the Continent.

REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED.

HENRY FIELDING.

On the first day of January, 1898, I departed this life at my lodging in London. The reader who has perused an Account of a Journey from this World to the Next, discovered by Mr. Fielding a hundred and fifty years ago in Catherine-street, Strand, will need no further description of the stages and incidents of my soul's passage from the Palace of Death to Elysium. The fashions of the dead do not change. I did not, as might be expected, travel in an immaterial Pullman car, and cross Cocytus in the ghost of an excursion steamer, these modern inventions not having as yet been imitated by mechanics of the invisible world. It was the ancient coach drawn by ghosts of dead posting horses, though I will not swear they never drew a tramway car or an omnibus, that carried me off from the house in Warwick-lane. The old ferry-boat bore me across the dark river. Without further particulars, then, I beg you to conceive me as having passed through the usual adventures, and been admitted to Elysium by Minos. There is nothing very new to tell until my arrival at the delicious grove of orange-trees, which is the favourite haunt of such spirits as in life pursued art. You remember, do you not, that here my fore-runner heard Orpheus play and Sappho sing, and meanwhile talked with Homer, who sat listening with Madam Dacier in his lap? Virgil came up to him with Mr. Addison under his arm, and Dick Steele following, and the author talked with Shakespeare and Milton.

I began eagerly to inquire for the great men who had died in my time; but a tall ghost, curiously like a picture of Thackeray, replied, "My dear Sir, it is useless to seek for them. It is the same here as yonder. The new-comers are like little children. They roam the Elysian fields and rest in the meads of asphodel, and have no desire to be spoken to. But after a time—well, after you have been as many years here as I have been—you'll say the novelty begins to fade; vanitas vanitatum—is that not so?" and he turned familiarly to the ghost of Charles Dickens.

"No place can be dull," was the answer, "that has Father Henry in it. What a smile he has, to be sure; it is not a plain, common, ordinary smile, formed by parting the lips and showing a set of teeth. It begins with a little twitching of the muscles, and then it runs up the side of his cheek and plays over his features, and mocks and lances and gleams amid the ghostly smoke sucked by ghostly lips out of the ghost of his old tobacco pipe."

"His pipe and his smile," interrupted Thackeray: "that's you all over, Charles. Get the oddities of a man and it's as much as you know of him." Upon which it seemed to me that Dickens was a little out of countenance; but I did not observe him closely, for at this moment Fielding came up, leaning on the arm of Sir Walter Scott. Beholding them thus I could not but think that their expressions had a similarity never to be noticed in their pictures; but spirits are less distracted by such mere differences in shape and contour as that the countenance of one inclines to length and the other to heaviness. These are but superficial characteristics due to the accidents of birth and race. From the scraps of conversation I heard, it appeared they had been discussing matters not often spoken of in Elysium, and the result was an animation in the bearing of each that made me see at once how they possessed an equal love of life and still were alike capable of regarding it genially from the outside. Scott, now that the baths of Elysium had washed off the imprint of care and tribulation, was the more gleeful and pawky, and his laugh was very frank and loving; yet it appeared to me that Fielding's was the keener wit, and he surveyed even the orange groves and the spirits who haunted them with a glance of unsurpassable irony that was more amiable even than Swift's, because it had no bitterness. And, indeed, I noticed that the famous English novelists (as could be seen by their use of the term Father) bowed to him as their chief. Scott did so and Thackeray and Dickens, and I noticed that when George Eliot came past, were she ever so much engaged discussing the establishment of a sociological school in heaven with George Henry Lewes, she dropped a curtsy when she came near Fielding. But though many poets paid him an equal respect, he returned all their greetings carelessly though not unkindly, and seemed listening to Sir Walter, who was mirthfully upholding the pre-eminence of eighteenth-century Scotland as the hardest drinking country in the world.

"Many a time down below there, Harry," he was saying, "I wished you could have foregathered in Auld Reekie with some of our five and six-bottle men. Put 'a tappit hen' between Squire Western and Duncan Forbes, Lord President of the Session, and the President wouldn't be first under the table. As to your clergy they were a feeble folk, if one were to judge from your Supple, not to be compared with such a man as Dr. Alexander Webster, nicknamed 'Magnum Bonum.' Ministers, lawyers, and lairds in my young days were all jovial alike."

"Pon my soul, Walter," said Fielding, "thou makest me almost wish Minos had turned me back to be reincarnated as a jolly Scot, though my experience of them was none of the pleasantest; but here is a new-comer. Let us ask him what has been going on down there since thou left it, and whether our ancient craft is flourishing or not."

"E'en as you like, Harry," said Scott; "but the last I heard was that a regiment of dull fellows were still beating the old drum I handed to Dumas, and that the big bow-wow style is succeeding better than ever."

"Prithee, friend," said Fielding, turning to me, "if thou hast imagination enough to conjure back the memory of an earthly appetite thou mayest also fancy I have asked thee to supper and a bottle of wine. Thou wilt then converse of what interests thee, which I have no doubt is the kingdom of letters, for the inkstains are not yet entirely washed from thy face. What sort of histories do writers compose now?"

"I have no doubt you are aware, Mr. Fielding," was my answer, "that the reading world is vastly enlarged since your day. Population has increased, education has been extended to all classes, bringing in millions of new readers; and beyond sea, in the United States and Canada, in Australia and India and South Africa, there is a public many times larger than you knew."

Scott appeared to kindle at these words. "A man must have a real grip of human nature to appeal to them all," he said.

"It does not work out that way," I answered. "The novelists are divided into groups. Some call themselves romantic and write historical novels somewhat like yours, except that they depend on situation and leave out character and humour." Scott's face expressed the utmost amazement at this exception; but I proceeded—"A very good line is to work theology or politics." ("This is the way we used to talk of tradesmen," interjected Scott.) "Then there are large numbers who work the sea business, and others who tilt at the marriage law, or the Married Woman's Property Act, or the war between male and female."

"God bless my soul," said Fielding, "has it come to that? Then I wrote all those initial chapters to Tom Jones in vain. It was the bookseller fellow who began it. His Pamelas and Clarissas crowded attention on one little sickly spot in life instead of human nature with all its different sides. But to think of him being imitated! Well, to be sure, 'tis easier to imitate Richardson than to follow Cervantes; and I'll warrant these newly educated crowds have little knowledge of the ancients to qualify the crudity of their taste. Let's go on comparing our merry days on earth," he said to Scott, and half turned away. "I printed my pamphlets as pamphlets," he added.

Scott, however, turned on me with a little touch of severity in his voice. "I hope," he said, "that writers still recognise Fielding as the father of the English novel. I'd expect them to turn against Shakespeare as soon as against him."

"The best admire him as much as ever," I replied; "but the women don't like him." Fielding smiled, and said that for all his praise of women he never expected them to read him, but still he would like to hear their objections; so in that region where nothing but truth can find utterance I was literally compelled to act the part of devil's advocate.

"They say that the Tom Jones theory of life is degrading to the sex," I replied. "That to let him escape punishment for his licentiousness and give Sophia to his embraces was criminal. One eminent novelist complains that Tom had no conscience; another says he would turn out a drunken, profligate husband, and that your happy ending was only a beginning of misery." Scott was about to reply to this with heat, when his companion motioned him to be silent.

"If this be criticism," quoth he, "criticism is as bad as it was in my own day; but don't they like my women?"

"Oh, Mr. Fielding," I said, "the names of your shady females are scarcely fit for mention. Mrs. Slipslop and Lady Booby, Miss Matthews and Mrs. Waters, Molly Seagrims, Laetitia Snap, and Lady Bellaston, what a disreputable crew, to be sure; then all your landladies, barmaids, kitchen-wenchens—frailty, thy name is woman!"

Fielding's good-humour was imperturbable. "Pray tell me," he said—"and pardon me for using the direct terms of the time I lived in—would it be considered a very unusual occurrence in the world thou hast left if a young squire seduced a gamekeeper's daughter? Is there no Miss Matthews, no Lady Bellaston, no Lady Booby in the elegant society thou hast come from? Are the inns kept by virtuous landladies and pure barmaids? No, thou answerest; why, then, had I to go back to the world I would prefer my own truth-telling time."

"But they say," I argued, "that you must have actually preferred the shady side of life—in short, that these characters are brought in for the sake of playing with vice; that you positively enjoy a risky situation."

"Well, well," said Fielding, "I remember, before thou camest, Walter, there was a fat man, who had been a critic and a poet, sought me all over Elysium. I was sitting with William Hogarth at the time, and both wishing there was some vice and ugliness here, were it only to heighten the good and beautiful by contrast, when he posted up to say that Richardson's work was diseased and mine healthy. 'Pon my word, he never gave me a chance to thank him, but talked of Kant and Hegel and object and subject till I was glad to escape from him. He knew that I had drawn the human animal, not, indeed, with all those deep passions and aspirations which are discovered by Homer and Shakespeare, but as he was in our unheroic age. I was entirely honest in the matter, I assure thee, and painted society just as I saw it."

"They hold that you never saw the spiritual side," said I. "There is no Sturm und Drang experience in your heroes, no struggles of the soul, no deep insight through the garmentage of life into what is essential and eternal."

"What the devil does this all mean?" cried Fielding in surprise. "I know that Minos has turned my old friend Square, the philosopher, back into the world, but he has picked up a new lingo if this be he under another shape. Canst thou explain it, Scott?"

"Not a doit!" answered Sir Walter. "Yet I seem to remember to have heard mutterings of the kind while still in the flesh. They were encouraged by Goethe and a Scotch disciple of his, to whom I paid scarcely as much attention as he deserved."

"I suppose, then," said Fielding, "the principal use now of Tom Jones and Joseph Andrews and the rest is only to serve as butter paper—that is to say, if any copies of these works still survive."

"Not at all," was my reply. "The number of readers is now greater than ever. More new editions and more copies are issued to-day than in your lifetime. Why, not long ago one of your descendants made an expurgated edition for women and children." Fielding stared at this piece of intelligence, and asked me to explain who read him. "Always at a time of great literary activity and healthy movement," I said, "you are admired and placed at the top. The strong men recognise your strength. It is the weak second-rater who runs you down, and when I left the game was all in the hands of the second-raters. They make a great noise, and perhaps fancy or deceive themselves into fancying that they express the opinion of the day. But they have no influence at all on the best intellects, further than to make them ignore contemporary literature altogether, and go back to you and the rest."

As was to be expected from his frequent invocation of "the bright love of fame," the great novelist appeared highly gratified at this intelligence, and asked what it was they most admired in him. Did they like those exercises in the mock heroic, the composition of which had made him so proud? Or the copious and learned extracts that illiterate Grub-street could not imitate? Or the sparkling essays in criticism disposed like a kind of framework round the story?

"Only a little for these things," was my reply; "but most of all for that they hold you to be the greatest master of narrative style who ever wrote in the English tongue. The supple, sinewy strength of the sentences; their apparent ease and simplicity; their real force and expression and mastery are unapproached. Other writers may beat you in detail. Sterne's dialogue is occasionally more vividly characteristic. Swift's irony, though never quite so fine and finished, is at times more bitterly effective. Sir Thomas Browne is richer in imagery and suggestion. Johnson has more force and dignity, but the prose of Tom Jones, taking it all round, is easily first, before even that of Addison or Steele, and far before that of Thackeray, who alone among recent writers has approached it. And in Tom Jones your style is at its best. In Joseph Andrews it had not fully matured; while in Amelia it is past its meridian. This is an age of scholarship, and there are scores of youths who could make a show of as much learning as you possessed. What you prided yourself most-on was capable of being acquired; the style which was only half-conscious is inimitable."

Sir Walter Scott heard this with very slight admiration. "When I was launching my three-deckers," he said, "we paid much less attention to mere form. I myself liked Tom Jones best, because I felt the grip of a man in it. There never was any weakness, whatever the other faults might be, in anything done by Fielding. And there is not one of the women you mention brought in merely for the sake of a 'warm' scene. Molly and Mrs. Waters have their place in as grand a plot as was ever laid. As to Lady Bellaston, faith, Harry, you went just a trifle over the score for once; but the rest are drawn frank and free from Mother Nature, though you were luckier with the women characters than the men. Squire Western and Parson Adams are two that never were beaten, and are never likely to be. The rest are not very extraordinary. There is Partridge—he has too much of our old friend Sancho Panza in him; and Allworthy makes me think of Taylor the water-poet's prayer when he, being drunk, asked the Virgin for strength to leap on his horse, and she gave him so much he fell on t'other side—'Oh, Lady Mary! Dear Lady Mary! when you are good you are too good'—and Thwack'em and Square—"

"Hold, hold, Scott," cried Fielding, "or thou wilt leave me as poor in reputation as my Lady Floribel was after two dowagers had caught her leaning on the shoulders of Joseph Andrews. Come, we have had enough of this, and I cannot help myself by printing it in a new initial chapter. Orpheus and Sappho are going to give a concert; let us go and hear them again, for, 'pon my word, I protest 'tis the nearest approach to a play-house that Elysium affords."

Here the MS. suddenly breaks off, just as its predecessor had done; and if there were any more, it has, as Fielding said of the other, probably been destroyed in rolling up pens, tobacco, &c., and those who know the passage know also the warning it contains. P.

THE SNARK'S SIGNIFICANCE.

I.

MUCH fruitless speculation has been spent over supposed hidden meanings in Lewis Carroll's Hunting of the Snark. The inclination to search for these was strictly natural, though the search was destined to fail.

It is possible that the author was half-consciously laying a trap, so readily did he take to the inventing of puzzles and things enigmatic; but to those who knew the man, or who have divined him correctly through his writings, the explanation is fairly simple.

Mr. Dodgson had a mathematical, a logical, and a philosophical mind; and when these qualities are united to a love of the grotesque, the resultant fancies are sure to have a quite peculiar charm, a charm so much the greater because its source is subtle and eludes all attempts to grasp it. Sometimes he seems to revel in ideas which are not merely illogical but anti-logical, as where the Bellman supplies his crew with charts of the ocean in which the land is omitted for the sake of simplicity, and "north poles and equators, tropics, zones and meridian lines" are rejected because "they are merely conventional signs." Or, as in the Barrister's dream, where the Pig, being charged with deserting his sty, the Snark pleads an alibi in mitigation. At other times, when the nonsense seems most exuberant, we find an underlying order, a method in the madness, which makes us feel that even when he gives Fancy the rein the jade knows that the firm hand is there and there is no risk of a spill, such as seems to be the fate of so many nonsense-writers, if we may judge by the average burlesques of the day. Take "Jabberwocky," for instance. The very words are unknown to any language, ancient or modern; but they are so valuable that we have adopted them and translated them into most languages, ancient and modern. What should we do without "chortle," "uffish," "beamish," "galumphing," and the rest? The page looks, when we open it, like the wanderings of one insane; but as we read we find we have a work of creative genius, and that our language is enriched as to its vocabulary.

Whether the humour consists chiefly in the conscious defiance of logic by a logical mind, or in the half-unconscious control by that logical mind of its lively and grotesque fancies, in either case the charm arises from the author's well-ordered mind; and we need not be surprised if the feeling that this is so leads many to look for some hidden purpose in his writings.

The real origin of The Hunting of the Snark is very singular. Mr. Dodgson was walking alone one evening, when the words, "For the Snark was a Boojum, you see," came spontaneously into his head, and the poem was written up to them. I have heard it said that Wagner began "The Ring of the Nibelungs" by writing Siegfried's "Funeral March," which certainly contains the most important motives in the work, and that the rest of the trilogy, or tetralogy, was developed out of it; but as this great work, though finished after the publication of The Hunting of the Snark (1876), was certainly begun before it, it is scarcely open to me to maintain that the great German master of musical drama plagiarised in his methods from our distinguished humorist.

Starting in this way, our author wrote three stanzas of his poem (or "fits" of his "agony," as he called them), and asked if I would design three illustrations to them, explaining that the composition would some day be introduced in a book he was contemplating; but as this latter would certainly not be ready for a considerable time, he thought of printing the poem for private circulation in the first instance. While I was making sketches for these illustrations, he sent me a fourth "fit," asking for another drawing; shortly after came a fifth "fit," with a similar request, and this was followed by a sixth, seventh, and eighth. His mind at the time, this theme seemed continually suggesting new developments; and having extended the "agony" thus far beyond his original intentions, Mr. Dodgson decided to publish it at once as an independent work, without waiting for Sylvie and Bruno, of which it was to have formed a feature.

I rather regretted the extension, as it seemed to me to involve a disproportion between the scale of the work and its substance; and I doubted if the expansion were not greater than so slight a structure could bear. The "Walrus and Carpenter" appeared to be happier in its proportion, and mattered little whether or not it could establish a claim to be classified among tertiary vertebrata. However, on re-reading The Snark now I feel it to be unquestionably funny throughout, and I cannot wish any part cut out; so I suppose my fears were unfounded.

I remember a clever undergraduate at Oxford, who knew the Snark by heart, telling me that on all sorts of occasions, in the daily incidents of life, some line from the poem was sure to occur to him that exactly fitted. Most people will have noticed this peculiarity of Lewis Carroll's writings. In the thick of the great miners' strike of 1893 I sent to the Westminster Gazette a quotation from Alice in Wonderland about a mine; not a coal-mine, it is true, but a mustard-mine. Alice having hazarded the suggestion that mustard is a mineral, the Duchess tells her that she has a large mustard-mine on her estate, and adds, "The moral of that is—the more there is of mine the less there is of yours"; which goes to the root of the whole system of commercial competition, and was marvellously apt when landowners were struggling for their royalties, mine-owners for their profits, railway companies for cheap fuel, and miners for wages; each for "meum" against "tuum."

In our correspondence about the illustrations, the coherence and consistency of the nonsense on its own nonsensical understanding often became prominent. One of the first three I had to do was the disappearance of the Baker, and I not unnaturally invented a Boojum. Mr. Dodgson wrote that it was a delightful monster, but that it was inadmissible. All his descriptions of the Boojum were quite unimaginable, and he wanted the creature to remain so. I assented, of course, though reluctant to dismiss what I am still confident is an accurate representation. I hope that some future Darwin, in a new Beagle, will find the beast, or its remains; if he does, I know he will confirm my drawing.

When I sent Mr. Dodgson the sketch of the hunting, in which I had personified Hope and Care—

"They sought it with thimbles, they sought it with care, They pursued it with forks and hope"— he wrote that he admired the figures, but that they interfered with the point, which consisted in the mixing up of two meanings of the word "with." I replied, "Precisely, and I intended to add a third—in company with"—and so develop the point." This view he cordially accepted, and the ladies were admitted.

In the copy bound in vellum which he gave me the dedication runs: "Presented to Henry Holiday, most patient of artists, by Charles L. Dodgson, most exacting, but not most ungrateful of authors, March 29, 1876."

The above instance will show that though he justly desired to see his meanings preserved, he was not exacting in any unreasonable spirit. The accompanying letter, written after the work was complete, will sufficiently show the friendly tone which had characterised our correspondence.

HENRY HOLIDAY.

Jan. 26, 1898.

[COPY.]

"MY DEAR HOLIDAY,—I finished off my letter at Brighton yesterday in a hurry, and omitted to say how pleased I am with the proofs you sent me. They seem to me most successfully cut, and I agree with you in thinking the head of 'Hope' a great success; it is quite lovely.

On my return here last night, I found the charming chess-boards, for which accept my best thanks. My sister and I have played several games of 'Go-bang' on them already. (I need hardly remark that they serve just as well for that, or for draughts, as they do for chess.)

Now for another bit of designing, if you don't mind undertaking it. Macmillan writes me word that the gorgeous cover will cost 1s 4d. a copy! Whereas we can't really afford more than 5d. or 6d., as we must not charge more than 3s. for the book. My idea is this, to have a simpler cover for the 3s. copies, which will, no doubt, be the ones usually sold, but to offer the gorgeous covers also at 4s., which will be bought by the rich and those who wish to give them as presents. What I want you to do is to take 'Alice' as a guide, and design covers requiring about the same amount of gold, or, better, a little less. As 'Alice' and the 'Looking-Glass' have both got grotesque faces outside, I should like these to be pretty, as a contrast, and I don't think we can do better than to take the head of 'Hope' for the first side, and 'Care' for the second; and, as these are associated with 'forks' and 'thimbles' in the poem, what do you think of surrounding them, one with a border of interlaced forks, the other with a shower of thimbles? And what do you think of putting a bell at each corner of the cover, instead of a single line? The only thing to secure is that the total amount of gold required shall be rather less than on the cover of 'Alice.'

All these are merely suggestions: you will be a far better judge of the matter than I can be, and perhaps may think of some quite different, and better, design.—Yours ever truly,

L. DODGSON.

The Chestnuts, Guildford, Jan. 15, 1876."

II.

HUMAN perversity has identified the Snark with everything possible and impossible. There exist people who, led away by the exquisite demonstration given to the Butcher by the Beaver, have seen in it a treatise on pure mathematics. Others will have it that the Bellman is only an Arctic explorer and the Snark the North Pole; while a few, basing their conjecture on the fact that the Barrister bears, in his portrait, an extraordinary resemblance to the late Dr. Kenealy, maintain that the Snark is the Tichborne Claimant. In fact, each reader finds the Snark that he deserves. My own is Fortune, and I am always lost in astonishment at the people who think it can be anything else. Observe the things with which its capture was attempted. Why, the mere mention of railway shares and soap is sufficient of itself to establish my thesis. And then look at the dramatis personæ and their actions. The Butcher, perceiving that novelty is the secret of success, announces himself as the only beaver-butcher in this or any other country, and the Baker aims at interest by specialising in bride-cakes. Even the Banker, whose celebrated interview with the Bandersnatch gave him so great a fright "that his waistcoat turned white," abandons his legitimate business in favour of the issue of insurance policies against fire and damage from hail. The Barrister dreams of points of the utmost nicety and rarity, and the influence of luck in the court is prettily emphasised by the Snark's assumption of the prerogatives of the Judge. The Bellman is a truly pathetic figure. He is the type of the man who pursues fortune without any sufficient consideration of the facts of practical life, and I fancy that he must, at one time or another, have lost a good deal of money on the Stock Exchange. His sorrowful remark that "he had hoped, when the wind was due East, that the ship would not travel due West," is just what one could expect from a disappointed speculator. Of the Billiard-marker nothing is recorded, save that "his skill was immense"; but that of itself was more than sufficient justification for his joining in the search for Fortune, and he may well have been the most successful in the end of all the crew. The dichotomy of Snarks into those which have "feathers and bite" and those which have "whiskers and scratch" does not, I think, indicate anything more than a belief that there is more than one sort of good fortune, and that all are somewhat to be feared. The habit—common, apparently, to all Snarks—of breakfasting at five o'clock tea and dining the day afterwards, so obviously typifies the tendency of Fortune not to come to a man until it is too late to give him any pleasure that it is unnecessary to labour the point. The taste—"meagre and hollow, but crisp"—I regard as finally settling the question. All varieties of Snark have them, and the most fortunate of mankind freely admit that this is the real flavour of success. On my hypothesis the Bandersnatch would be Scandal. In Through the Looking-Glass this creature is more than once referred to as extraordinarily difficult to stop or to catch, and the judicious reader will remember how the Banker entirely failed to divert its attacks by the offer of large discount or even bearer cheques. But what, then, is the Boojum? It is a kind of Snark—that is clear from twenty passages. But if a sort of good fortune, how could it have so distressing an effect upon the man they called Ho? Well, I think a Boojum is that sort of sudden, unexpected luck which puts a man "above his boots," carries him into a sphere in which he is miserable, and makes his wife cut the greengrocer's lady. It is a very dangerous creature, and the warning of the Baker's Uncle is more than justified.

M. H. T.

III.

AN ingenious friend of mine once maintained, with considerable speciousness, that The Hunting of the Snark was written as a satire on the craving for what is called "social advancement." According to his view, the people who hunt the Snark are the people who try to "get into Society," the bankers, bakers, butchers, billiard-markers, and barristers of our day. They are headed by an individual who rings a bell because their endeavour is to attract attention. They never do get into Society, these good people. The Snark is never caught. They only find a Boojum, which my friend interpreted as a kind of suburban set, where they "never are heard of again"—in the Morning Post. The theory, on the face of it, has much to be said in its favour, and I trust to get further details from my informant. Why, for instance, did the Bellman always repeat everything three times:

"What I say three times is true,"

he says, with marked emphasis?

"Ah," said my friend, "the Bellman was one of those tedious people who always repeat themselves, and who believe that a thing is proved if it is only asserted sufficiently often. I have met loads of them. Can you wonder that they never get into Society? The suburban Boojum (which I take to be a kind of Browning Society) is the only place for them."

This seemed convincing, and I next inquired why it was the Baker who found the Boojum, and not one of the others. My friend's reply was oracular. "Bakers," he said, "never get into Society. Barristers and bankers sometimes; bakers never. The Baker, therefore, was very rightly put out in the first round." No further information could I extract from my friend, and when my questions grew pertinacious, he yawned and went away. For myself, I am tempted to accept his view, and to believe that the whole poem is a prophetic satire on the career of the late Barney Barnato. Students of the poem will remember that all the Snark-hunters' names begin with a "B," which is, I think, strong evidence of my theory.

ST. J. E. C. H.

THE LONDON OF THE WRITERS.

V.—THE POETS OF THE THAMES.

THE Thames has been sung in all ages of song. The Elizabethans, naturally, saw it most as a pure and limpid stream, haunted of nymphs and whispering of love. Spenser made it murmur through a bridal lay. The urban Thames, the Thames which reflected the spires and gardens of London, does not live much in Elizabethan verse. The thoughts of the Elizabethans were not domestic, but were in the ends of the earth. Yet Herrick could not have failed to sing of the London Thames. He loved London. He greeted it with lyric rapture on his return to its streets, and when he bade them farewell it was to the river that he committed his tears. No lovelier lyric of the pride and sweetness of Elizabethan London remains to us than this song, in which the "silver-wristed Naidess" and "golden Cheapside" are quaintly packed:

"I send, I send here my supremest kiss
To thee, my silver-footed Thamasis
No more shall I reiterate thy strand,
Whereon so many stately structures stand:
Nor in the summer's sweeter evenings go
To bath in thee, as thousand others doe;
No more shall I along thy christall glide,
In barge with boughs and rushes beautif'd
With soft-smooth virgins for our chaste disport,
To Richmond, Kingstone, and to Hampton
Court:
Never againe shall I with finnie ore
Put from or draw unto the faithfull shore,
And landing here, or safely landing there,
Make way to my beloved Westminster,
Or to the golden Cheap-side, where the earth
Of Julia Herrick gave to me my birth.

May all clean nimphs and curious water-dames

With swan-like state flote up and down thy streams:

No drought upon thy wanton waters fall
To make them leane and languishing at all:
No ruffling winds come hither to disease
Thy pure and silver-wristed Naidess!
Keep up your state, ye streams; and as ye spring

Never make sick your banks by surfeiting!
Grow young with tydes, and though I see ye never Receive this vow, so fare ye well for ever!"

Michael Drayton did us a like service. He traced the river from Windsor downwards, and it was on the river flowing through London that he spent himself:

"Then to Westminster the next great Thames doth entertain;
That vaunts her palace large, and her most sumptuous fane
The land's tribunal seat that challengeth for hers
The crowning of our kings, their famous sepulchres.
Then goes he on along by that more beauteous
strand,
Expressing both the wealth and bravery of the land.
(So many sumptuous bowers, within so little space,
The all-beholding Sun scarce sees in all his race)
And on by London leads, which like a crescent lies,
Whose windows seem to mock the star-
befreckled skies;
Besides her rising spires, so thick themselves that show,
As do the bristling reeds within his banks that grow.
There sees his crowded wharfs, and people-
pest' red shores,
His bosom overspread with shoals of labour-
ing oars;
With that most costly bridge that doth him
most renown
By which he clearly puts all other rivers down."

But we owe the earliest deliberate poetical eulogy of London's river to William Dunbar, Scotland's great disciple of Chaucer. The pomp of his lines has seldom been excelled. He saw London in the first years of the sixteenth century, when he came over from France in the train of ambassadors sent to negotiate the King's marriage. And thus he saluted the "Flour of Cities of All":

"Gemme of all joy, jasper of jocunditie,
Most mighty carbuncle of virtue and valour,
Strong Troy in vigour and in strenuitie;
Of royall cities rose and geraflour;
Empress of townes, exalt in honour,
In beauty beryng the crone imperial;
Swete paradise, precelling in pleasure:
London, thou art the Flour of Cities all.

Above all rivers thy River hath renowne,
Whose beryall stremys, pleasant and pre-clare,
Under thy lusty wallys renneth down,
Where many a swanne doth swynme with wingis fare;
Where many a barge doth saile, and row with are,
Where many a ship doth rest with topperoyall.
O townes of townes, patron and but compare
London, thou art the Flour of Cities all."

"Where many a swanne doth swymme with wingisfare": surely all the beauty of the Thames that we have not seen is suggested in that line. A living poet has sung of the Thames swans with a note of sadness. The scene is Westminster and the song Mr. Watson's. We quote two stanzas:

"Two stately swans! What did they there?
Whence came they? Whither would they go?"

Think of them—things so faultless fair—
'Mid the black shipping down below!
On through the rose and gold they passed,
And melted in the morn at last.

We ne'er shall know: our wnderment
No barren certitude shall mar.
They left behind them, as they went,
A dream than knowledge ampler far;
And from our world they sailed away
Into some visionary day."

Thus the centuries have distanced the "glory and the dream"!

Some fine lines in praise of the urban Thames occur in Cowley's poem on the completion of Queen Henrietta Maria's repairs of old Somerset House. The poet endows the renovated pile with personality, and makes it sing its Queen's and its own praise. Note the picture of the "glorious bow" (Michael Drayton's "crescent") formed by the river between Westminster and Blackfriars:

"Before my gate a street's broad channel goes,
Which still with waves of crowding people flows,
And ev'ry day there passes by my side,
Up to its western reach, the London tide,
The springtides of the term: my front looks down

On all the pride and bus'ness of the Town:

My other fair and more majestic face
(Who can the fair to more advantage place?)
For ever gazes on itself below,
In the best mirror that the world can show.

And there behold, in a long, bending row,
How two joint cities make one glorious bow;
The midst, the noblest place, possess'd by me,
Best to be seen by all, and all o'er see.
Which way soe'er I turn my joyful eye,
Here the great Court, there the rich Town, I spy;

On either side dwells Safety and Delight,
Wealth on the left, and Pow'r upon the right,
T' assure yet my defence, on either hand,
Like mighty forts, in equal distance stand
Two of the best and stately piles which e'er
Man's lib'ral piety of old did rear,
Where the two princes of th' apostle's band,
My neighbours and my guards, watch and command."

The interest of the poem, as a tribute of the Thames, is not exhausted in the above passages. We have not space to quote the lines in which the poet pleads against the "virtuoso's" condemnation of the shabby Surrey side. But the following lines ring true to-day, and instruct the Londoner how, as a patriot, he should eye the waters that chafe the Embankment:

"And thou, fair River! who still pay'st to me
Just homage in thy passage to the sea.
Take here this one instruction as thou go'st:
When thy mix'd waves shall visit every coast,
When round the world their voyage they shall take
And back to thee some secret channels take,

Ask them what nobler sight they e'er did meet,
Except thy mighty Master's sov'reign fleet,
Which now triumphant o'er the main does ride.

The terror of all lands, the ocean's pride."

Savage—of all men—struck the same note in his poem, "London and Bristol Compared." It is a pity that his outburst of love to London was inspired by hate of Bristol:

"Now silver Isis brightening flows along,
Echoing from Oxford shore each classic song;
Then weds with Tame; and these, O London, see

Swelling with naval pride, the pride of thee!
Wide, deep, unsullied Thames, meandering glides

And bears thy wealth on mild majestic tides.
Thy ships, with gilded palaces that vie,
In glittering pomp strike wondering China's eye;

And thence returning bear, in splendid state,
To Britain's merchants, India's eastern freight."

The poets of the Pool and of the lower Thames are few. As it is, we have the jingles of Taylor, the Water-Poet, remarkable as records of seventeenth century water-life. We have the breezy and melodious songs of Charles Dibdin, in which the sailors and watermen of Georgian days, their debauches, their loves, and their ships, are celebrated. But of imaginative poetry we have little below bridges.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE SALE OF MINOR POETRY.

WE believe that a revival of interest in the works of living "minor" poets has resulted from the crowning of Mr. Stephen Phillips's Poems by the ACADEMY. Inquiry shows, however, that this is not universally the case. We give below a selection of replies we have received from booksellers on the subject. It appears that Mr. Phillips's Poems are in brisk demand, and that the sale of other contemporary poetry has in places been stimulated:

A London bookseller sends the following report:

"A new interest in poetry generally has been created by the ACADEMY in "crowning" Mr. Stephen Phillips's Poems, and in bringing so prominently before its readers the merits of some other of our modern, not minor, poets; for if the opinion of a bookseller be worth anything (which is doubtful, according to your egotistical anonymous correspondent), the poetry of some of our so-called minor poets will bear comparison with, if it does not excel, much that has been written by the great poets of the past.

When the award of the ACADEMY became known there was a brisk demand for Mr. Phillips's Poems and Mr. Henley's Essay on Burns—the former going out of print in three or four days. Two other books to which attention was drawn—Mr. Newbolt's Admirals All and Mr. Watson's Hope of the World—have been selling well; while there has been a fair demand for Colonel John Hay's Poems, Mr. Watts-Dunton's

Coming of Love, &c., Mr. Owen Seaman's Battle of the Bays, Mr. Francis Thompson's Poems, and the two volumes by Carmen Sylva. There has been a large demand for Mr. Austin Dobson's Collected Poems, and Mr. Kipling's Barrack-Room Ballads, Seven Seas, and Departmental Ditties always sell well.

Another London bookseller's experience is less rosy. He writes:

"I do not hesitate to say that, so far as our experience goes, the sale of the poems of Mr. Stephen Phillips and Mr. Henry Newbolt has had no effect whatever on the sale of minor poetry generally—it is, and always will be, a 'drug in the market,' and with the exception of the spurt three or four years ago, when we were introduced to Mr. Watson, Mr. Francis Thompson, Mr. John Davidson, and one or two others, who are still popular, there is absolutely no change to note. The general public will not have it at any price, and the number of bookbuyers is too small to make many volumes really successful."

A Bristol correspondent writes:

"Mr. Kipling's Barrack-Room Ballads is worth more to the trade than the whole of the output of other versifiers. Of the latter, Mr. William Watson always sells. Mr. Stephen Phillips's work is of interest now, but we have not yet met with an enthusiast among the purchasers of his Poems. Mr. Newbolt's Admirals All sells freely."

From Birmingham we learn:

"Mr. Stephen Phillips's Poems had been recognised in Birmingham by a small circle before he was crowned by the ACADEMY, but since then a greater interest has been awakened in him. Mr. Newbolt's Admirals All is still in demand."

A Bournemouth bookseller writes:

"I have always found a steady sale for some of the minor poets. Mr. Watson's new poems, as issued, have always sold very fairly. Mr. Davidson's ballads used to sell well, and sell still. Mr. John B. Tabb's Poems have sold fairly this season. Mr. Francis Thompson's first volume of verse sold well, and his later volume has gone fairly. I think Mr. William Watson is generally accepted here as the favourite of modern minor poets, and Mr. Le Gallienne's poetry sells."

A Cheltenham bookseller makes a suggestion:

"We have done fairly well with Mr. Phillips's Poems, but minor poets are very unsaleable. I would suggest that minor poets would issue their early works in dainty little volumes, elegantly bound and printed, with one or two very pretty illustrations, thus making attractive and inexpensive gift-books."

An Eastbourne bookseller, who has little demand for the works of living poets, endeavours to account for the fact:

"I have received orders for Mr. Phillips's Poems, but cannot say that it has caused any increased demand for minor poetry. Personally, I think the cause of the decline in the readers of poetry is the dropping out of Poetry from most of the leading schools, more particularly boys'. At one time it always formed a part of education; now it is quite an exception, excepting in high-class ladies' schools."

THE WEEK.

THE principal books of the week are biographical; and there is a continuation of the output of books of travel. But publishing, as a whole, remains inactive.

MR. AUSTIN DOBSON is the guardian of Hogarth's fame in our generation; and he has just issued a new and revised edition of his biography of the artist. It contains much more matter than its predecessor, which was published in 1891. The "Memoir" has been revised, the "Bibliography" extended, and the catalogues of Hogarth's Prints and Paintings have been verified and supplemented. In a special preface to this edition Mr. Dobson makes the following interesting plea for Hogarth as a colourist:

"The unprecedented modern development of the graphic arts, and the prevalence of a milder method in satire, have, perhaps, somewhat attenuated the interest hitherto felt in Hogarth as an engraver and a pictorial moralist. But the tenacious admirer cannot fail to have observed with complacency that Hogarth's reputation as a painter has grown, and continues to grow. It is not of great importance now that during his lifetime Churchill called him 'Dauber,' and Wilkes spoke of his portraits as 'almost beneath criticism,' since they were simply flowers of faction. Yet it must be remembered that others of his contemporaries said much the same thing. Horace Walpole, for example, held the colouring of the Sigismunda to be 'wretched,' and he asserted in sober earnest that 'as a painter Hogarth had but slender merit.' The verdict of the Strawberry Hill virtuoso was echoed by many, long after the deaths of both artist and critic; and Hogarth's pictures, dispersed for the most part in private hands, were not forthcoming to plead their own cause. When at last a selection of them was brought together in 1814 and 1817, it began to dawn upon the spectator that secondhand report had been more at fault than usual, and this view gained ground steadily until the exhibition of 1862, when the matter ceased to be even doubtful. Since then, as specimen after specimen has been submitted to an unbiassed public at Burlington House and elsewhere, the reaction has gone on, and though here and there a jarring voice is still heard, the practical consensus of critical opinion in England, in America, and on the Continent, is to the effect that, so far from being an indifferent colourist, William Hogarth, at his best, was really a splendid painter, worthy to rank in all respects with the greatest of his contemporaries of the brush."

The book is beautifully produced, and runs to nearly 350 large octavo pages.

A LETTER from Mr. Gladstone does duty as a prefatory note to Mr. James Francis Hogan's (M.P.) The Gladstone Colony. This proposed colony is now all but forgotten. But Mr. Hogan makes the object of his book clear in the following passage in his introduction:

"In this book, then, I have endeavoured to present a complete and comprehensive survey of Mr. Gladstone's political connexion with the Colonies. For the first time a full and detailed account is given of Mr. Gladstone's most interesting experiment as Colonial Secretary, namely, his attempted establishment, just fifty years ago, of a new colony to be called North Australia. That colony did not succeed in securing a permanent place on the map, but its intended metropolis—the site on which Mr. Gladstone's frontier settlers encamped—was successfully established, and continues to have Mr. Gladstone's name to this day. . . . In addition. . . . I have devoted some space to Mr. Gladstone's ideas on the problem of the treatment and reformation of the prisoners transported from the British Isles to the penal Colonies—a subject in which, as Colonial Secretary, he took the deepest interest, and which was the main impulse and inspiring motive of the new colony that he endeavoured to establish."

It will be of interest to quote Mr. Gladstone's prefatory letter. It is dated "Hawarden, April 20, 1897," and is as follows:

"DEAR MR. HOGAN,—My recollections of Gladstone were most copious, and are now half a century old.

The period—December, 1845, when I became Colonial Secretary—was one when the British Government had begun to feel nonplussed by the question of transportation. Under the pressure of this difficulty Lord Stanley, or the Colonial Office of this day, framed a plan for the establishment, as an experiment, of a pure penal colony without free settlers (at least at the outset).

When I came in, the plan might have been arrested in the event of disapproval; but the Government were, I think, committed, and I had only to put the last hand to the scheme.

So it went on towards execution.

In July, 1846, the Government was changed, and Lord Grey succeeded me. He said he would make none but necessary changes in pending measures. He, however, annihilated this scheme. For that I do not know that he is to be severely blamed. But he went on, and dealt with the question in such a way as to produce a mess—I think more than one—far worse than any that he found. The result was the total and rather violent and summary extinction of the entire system.

Here I lost sight of the fate of 'Gladstone.' It has my good wishes, but I have nothing else to give.—Yours very faithfully,

"W. E. GLADSTONE."

We may add that Mr. Hogan's book will not be all pleasant reading to Mr. Gladstone. A chapter headed, "A Grievous Error of Mr. Gladstone's," revives the circumstances of the recall of Sir Eardley Wilmot from his post as Governor of Van Diemen's Land in 1846. The case excited intense interest at the time, and was used by Mr. Gladstone's opponents.

An interesting arrival is the Autobiography of Arthur Young, the writer on agriculture, whose work, Travels in France During 1787-1790 is still consulted as a remarkably graphic description of the state of France just before the French Revolution. The autobiography has been edited by Miss M. Betham Edwards, who writes:

"From seven packets of MS. and twelve folio volumes of correspondence I have put together all that a busy public will probably care to know of Arthur Young—his strength and weakness, his one success and innumerable failures, his fireside and his friends."

Arthur Young was a magnificent blunderer. The editors of a recently published biographical dictionary tell us that on a small farm in Essex, which he rented from his mother, he made three thousand unsuccessful experiments. On a larger farm he ruined himself. Yet he was "one of the first to elevate agriculture to a science."

In the later years of a chequered and many-sided life, Arthur Young fell into religious melancholia.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

THE BOOK OF THE TWELVE PROPHETS. By George Adams Smith, D.D. Vol. II. Hodder & Stoughton. 7s. 6d.
THE CHRISTIAN IDEAL: A STUDY FOR THE TIMES. By J. Guinness Rogers, D.D. James Bowden.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

THE LIFE OF FRANCIS PLANCH, 1771—1854. By Graham Wallas, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. 12s.
THE TWO DUCHESSSES: GEORGIANA DUCHESS OF DEVONSHIRE; ELIZABETH DUCHESS OF DEVONSHIRE: FAMILY CORRESPONDENCE. Edited by Vere Foster. Blackie & Son. 16s.
THOMAS BRET JERVIS. By W. P. Jervis. Elliot Stock.
THE GLADSTONE COLONY: AN UNWRITTEN CHAPTER OF AUSTRALIAN HISTORY. By James Francis Hogan, M.P. T. Fisher Unwin. 7s. 6d.
ERNEST R. BALFOUR. By R. J. Mackenzie, M.A., and the Rev. C. G. Leung, M.A.
MY LIFE IN TWO HEMISPHERES. By Sir Charles Gavan Duffy. 2 vols.

RELIGION AND CONSCIENCE IN ANCIENT EGYPT. By W. M. Flinders Petrie. Methuen & Co.
THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ARTHUR YOUNG. Edited by M. Betham-Edwards. Smith, Elder & Co. 12s. 6d.
HISTORY OF AUSTRALIA. By G. W. Rusden. 3 vols. Second edition. Melville, Mullen & Slade.
THE CITIZEN OF INDIA. By W. Lee-Warner, C.S.I. Macmillan & Co.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

AT THE GATES OF SONG: SONNETS BY LLOYD MIFFLIN. Illustrated by Thos. Moran. Second edition. Estes & Laurist.
THE FIRST PART OF THE TRAGEDY OF FAUST, IN ENGLISH. By Thos. E. Wobb, LL.D. NEW EDITION, WITH THE DEATH OF FAUST FROM THE SECOND PART. Longmans, Green & Co.
BY SEVERN SEA, AND OTHER POEMS. By T. Herbert Warren, M.A. John Murray. 7s. 6d.
THE TOWNLEY PLAYS. Re-edited from the unique MS. by George England. With Side-notes and Introduction by Alfred W. Pollard, M.A. Kegan Paul.

NEW EDITIONS OF FICTION.

THE CANTONS. By Lord Lytton. Service & Paton.

SCIENCE.

A TEXT-BOOK OF ZOOLOGY. By T. Jeffery Parker, D.Sc., and William A. Haswell, M.A. 2 vols. Macmillan & Co. 36s.

TOPOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

EXPLORATION AND HUNTING IN CENTRAL AFRICA, 1895-96. By A. St. H. Gibbons, F.R.G.S. Methuen & Co.
THE NIGER SOURCES, AND THE BORDERS OF THE NEW SIERRA LEONE PROTECTORATE. By Lieut.-Col. J. K. Trotter, R.A. Methuen & Co. 5s.
THE COCKNEY COLEMBUS. By David Christie Murray. Downey & Co. 6s.
TRAVELS AND EXPLORATIONS OF THE JESUIT MISSIONARIES IN NEW FRANCE. Edited by Reuben Gold Thwaites. 5 vols. Elliot Stock.

FOREIGN.

LA FIN DU CLASSICISME, ET LE RETOUR A L'ANTIQUÉ. Par Louis Bertrand. Librairie, Hachette et Cie. (Paris).

EDUCATIONAL.

ANCIENT CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS: OVID. By the Rev. Alfred Church, M.A. LIVY. By Rev. Lucas W. Collins, M.A. Wm. Blackwood & Sons. HISTORY OF ENGLAND FOR THE USE OF MIDDLE FORMS OF SCHOOLS. By F. York Powell, M.A., and T. F. Toot, M.A. Part II. Longmans, Green & Co. 2s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WEIST OF THE FUTURE, BEING A FORECAST. By Lieut.-Col. B. Lowley. Swan Sonnenschein. 3s. 6d. THE YEAR-BOOK OF TREATY FOR 1898. Cassell & Co. 7s. 6d. THE STORY OF THE BRITISH COINAGE. By Gertrude Burford Rawlings. George Newnes, Ltd. 1s. APPLICATION OF PSYCHOLOGY TO EDUCATION. By Johann Friedrich Herbart. Translated by Beatrice C. Mulliner. With a Preface by Dorothy Beale. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 4s. 6d.

DRAMA.

NO Shakespearean play is more read or oftener quoted than "Julius Cæsar"; but this popularity it does not owe to the modern stage, which has shown a strange disposition to relegate it to the upper shelf. The last great English actor who revived "Julius Cæsar" in London was Phelps, and with the exception of a few stray performances of the tragedy at Drury-lane, his triumph (in the part of Brutus) dates back to the golden period of Sadler's Wells. From this limbo of neglect the noblest of the historical plays has at length been rescued by Mr. Tree, and no one witnessing the ornate and impressive production at Her Majesty's can help a feeling of surprise that this play, with its wonderful adaptability to the art of mise-en-scène, should not earlier have attracted the attention of the modern manager. From the acting point of view, no doubt, "Julius Cæsar" presents drawbacks. It contains little or no "female interest," and the three chief characters—Brutus, Cassius, and Antony—stand so nearly on an equality that the actor-manager must be as much puzzled to choose among them as the ass in the fable between his bottles of hay. Cæsar himself is a striking character, though his greatness is manifested chiefly in the deference paid him. Brutus attracts by his faultless rhetoric and pose, Antony and Cassius by their intellectual subtlety. Mr. Tree elects to play Antony, assigning Brutus to Mr. Waller, and Cassius to Mr. Franklyn McLeay. This distribution of parts, on the whole, is happily made; it would be difficult, with the present resources of the London stage, to suggest a better.

But it is mainly by reason of its pictorial qualities that the present production, in which Mr. Alma Tadema, R.A., has taken an important hand, excels. The Lyceum itself has shown us nothing finer in mounting. The busy streets of Rome, with their mingled crowds of senators, patricians, and plebeians, live before us, the whole showing against a background of marble edifices and stately architecture indicative of a lawning imperialism. When the Saxo-Leiningen Company visited this country fifteen years ago to play "Julius Cæsar" they surprised London managers by their exterous manipulation of the crowd. Mr. Tree has profited by the example. By dint of the expression given to the popular passion, the forum scene, where Brutus and Antony successively harangue the crowd, is one of the most moving episodes known to the stage. Swayed now this way, now that, the crowd becomes a veritable factor in the drama, as well as a curious object lesson in democracy. The shouters are with Brutus while he is addressing them; but Antony, availing his opportunity, deftly turns their passions in his favour, and the exhibition of the "bleeding lump of clay" that once was Cæsar, and of the dagger-rent and blood-stained cloak of the dictator, rouse the fury of the mob to its height. It is, in truth, a memorable scene. But everywhere the plastic hand of the artist is in evidence. Every scene has the careful composition of a picture. Notably is this so with Cæsar's assassination in the Senate House. In order to throw Antony into prominence, Mr. Tree has edited the text so as to extend the first act to Antony's entry to the dead body of Cæsar. This gives an act of two hours' duration, probably the longest on record. On the whole, a representation worthy of its subject!

If the Stage suffers a little in general from the lack of candid friends it cannot be said at the present time to lie under that disadvantage. To Mr. Clement Scott, who has been assailing it on the score of its morality, succeeds Mr. Pinero, who exposes its ill-manners, its pose, its pretentiousness, its insincerities. There could be no severer indictment of the theatrical profession than Mr. Pinero has drawn up in the guise of his genial comedy, "Trelawny of the Wells." To be sure, the period of the story is not of the present day, nor is the scene laid in a West End theatre. Mr. Pinero treats of the "early sixties" and of life behind the scenes at Sadler's Wells, familiarly known as "the Wells"; but if the externals of the profession have been modified since that time, its spirit assuredly has not. The Ethiopian does not change his skin nor the leopard his spots within a generation. And what a sordid picture it is thus limned by a master hand! One is almost surprised to find actors lending themselves with so much zeal and cordiality to an exposure of the seamy side of their calling, which, even to the public in front, is in some degree painful. Many dramatists—English and French—have brought the actor before us with a halo of romance on his brow—David Garrick, Nance Oldfield, Kitty Clive, Peg Woffington, being examples. It has been reserved for Mr. Pinero to turn his lantern upon the green-room, and even to follow the popular idol home to his shabby theatrical lodging. Nothing more painfully realistic than "Trelawny of the Wells"—a section of the public, perhaps, will call it comic—has proceeded from this painstaking dramatist's pen since he wrote "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray."

"STORY" one speaks of in connexion with this play, but story is hardly the word; for the plot is meagreness itself. "Trelawny of the Wells" is a sketch-book rather than a play. Such dramatic effect as it embodies is obtained by contrast, the inner life of the stage, with its tawdry squalor being thrown into sharp relief against a background of West End society. The "Trelawny" of the title is, in fact, Miss Trelawny, leading lady of "the Wells," who in the first act is being fêted by her colleagues at a dinner on her departure for the West End, as a preliminary to her marriage with the grandson of Sir William Gower. The Bohemianism of a Clerkenwell lodging in contrast with the formality and straitlacedness of Cavendish-square! Such is Mr. Pinero's theme, which he proceeds to illustrate act by act. For the better working of the scheme a curious condition is imposed upon Miss Trelawny's emancipation. She leaves the stage, but not immediately to wed her aristocratic fiancé. She has to pass a few weeks in the house of her prospective father-in-law, in order, we are told, to become acquainted with the usages of good society. Strange society it is, even for the abode of a senile Vice-Chancellor in the early sixties! In the sombre drawing-room, after dinner, everybody dozes; music is tabooed; the most violent distraction indulged in is family whist. Here, perhaps, there is a touch of caricature introduced, for the sake of heightening the effect. Sir William is pompous, tetchy, old-fashioned, with his eternal silver snuff-box, and his "much obliged"; and he has a maiden sister more fossilised, if possible, than himself. That such a family should be receiving a theatrical lady into its bosom is passing strange.

WHAT Miss Trelawny's social training has been we learn from the dinner at which "pro's" of every line of business—the heavy father, the tragedy queen, the singing chambermaid, the low comedian, and the rest—assemble to pay her their respects. Mr. Pinero has noted the actor in his habit as he lives, and fills the scene with realistic portraits. In his delineation of the actor's vanity, of his bombast, of his jealousy, of the sham glitter and tinsel of the theatrical profession, he is unsparing. It is, in truth, a squalid picture. Stimulated with draughts of beer from the public-house round the corner, the company grow hilarious and loud. The tragedian picks his bones with his fingers while declaiming against the prejudice of those who declare that the actor is not a gentleman; the low comedian thinks it a capital joke to sit down to table with a lady's bonnet on his head. The note of the gathering is vulgar, rowdy. But every reveller, even in his cups, is an actor still, strutting with a stage stride, re-echoing in his trivial talk the rhetoric of the Sheridan Knowles drama, and passing the salt with a theatrical air. How Miss Trelawny relishes her transplantation from amid such surroundings to the boredom of Cavendish-square may be guessed. She pines for her liberty like a caged bird. After the manner of the heroine of "Le Mariage d'Olympe," she is seized with la nostalgie de la boue. Here is contrast, indeed, and the effect is heightened when one night she gratifies her Bohemian yearnings by introducing into the seigneurial drawing-room, after Sir William and his sister have gone to bed, a party of her old colleagues from "the Wells." The men suck their dirty pipes, help themselves to the Vice-Chancellor's liquor, quarrel and fight; the women scream. The scene is pandemonium, in the midst of which Sir William and his sister appear in their dressing-gowns. Naturally the experiment of civilising Miss Trelawny ends. She goes back with her colleagues to "the Wells," and the aristocratic engagement is broken off.

So far, contrast has been obtained by bringing the players under Sir William's roof. It is now Sir William's turn to look up the players in their proper habitat. This he does with a view to "doing something" for Miss Trelawny. He finds her in the Clerkenwell lodging-house where the members of "the Wells" company "dear" and "darling" each other in the free-and-easiest of camaraderie, and have the run of each other's rooms. Contrast again! Among the "pro's" is a young dramatist engaged in "general utility," in whom can be detected some affinity with the late T. W. Robertson, for Mr. Pinero remembers that the early sixties saw the germs of the "teacup-and-saucer drama." By way of a reaction against the rhodomontade of the Sheridan Knowles school, the young dramatist dreams of a drama in which men will appear in tweed suits and girls in muslin frocks. It is Sir William who gives him his chance by financing the production of one of his plays, "Life"—a Robertsonian title—at the Parthenon Theatre for the benefit of Miss Trelawny. After that, in the fourth act, comes a realistic rehearsal of the new play with Sir William as an interested onlooker; which yields contrast again, thanks mainly to the presence of a noisy stage-manager who "darlings" all the ladies of the company; and here, somewhat perfunctorily, the long estranged lovers are reunited with Sir William's blessing. From this circumstance it will be guessed how little plot, properly so-called, there is in the piece. This absence of story tends to make the play drag and may jeopardise its chance of a prolonged popularity, but the contrasted types of character are vivid and interesting to the last. In this effect, the costumes play their part—the hideous crinoline, the pork-pie hat, the greasy bag-net, the white cotton stockings, the elastic-sided boots, the peg-top trousers, of the period, all showy and vulgar. The company of the Court Theatre, where "Trelawny of the Wells" is produced, appear to find it a congenial task to enact the "pro's" of a previous question. One and all, they do it as though to the manner born—Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Miss Hilda Spong, Miss Pattie Browne, Mr. Athol Forde, Mr. George du Maurier, Mr. E. M. Robson, and others. A graphic embodiment of old-world senility is given by Mr. Dion Bouicault as Sir William, and the prototype of Robertson is sympathetically rendered by Mr. Paul Arthur. A young peer sustains the part of the fiancé, disguising his identity under the name of "James Erskine."

J. F. N.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NEWSPAPER ENGLISH.

SIR,—In his recent interesting article on "Newspaper English" Mr. Nisbet raised a point that deserves further consideration before his conclusion can be accepted. In his judgment, the phrase "No one was there but I" is wrong, because the word "but" has the same force as "except," and should, therefore, be followed by the objective "me." The common usage is, however, not only defensible, but also probably correct. Take another instance:

"The boy stood on the burning deck Whence all but he had fled."

When this was proposed to me not long ago as an example of questionable grammar, my first opinion was in agreement with

Mr. Nisbet's, although it seemed that the rule which would substitute "him" for "he" in these lines was one more honoured in the breach than in the observance. Then other phrases were examined: "All but he were saved." It sounded right. "They saved no one but he." It seemed utterly wrong. After turning many other sentences about in the same way, I came to the conclusion that the pronoun followed the case of the collective word with which it was placed in contrast, and that this was, therefore, an instance of attraction overriding any dubious prepositional force in the word "but."

Perhaps it were best to make no hard and fast rules. I cordially agree when Mr. Nisbet affirms that the purists threaten to become insufferable pedants. If the "garden" of our English speech is "running wild," still there are seasons when the tares must be left to grow for awhile, because weeding is more dangerous to the crop. The language is not a dead thing, to be cut to measure. Is not Mr. Nisbet a little inconsistent in his desire for "an authoritative declaration with respect to" one of his puzzles? There is, so far as I am aware, no authority great enough to settle these matters, except the English people. It may be objected that they are not capable. They were capable, though, of creating the language; and, as a matter of fact, they are at this present time settling one of the minutest details of it—a small affair of spelling.

It is well known that every trade has a number of technical words, which are good English, but are by no means familiar to the general public. So long as these words are not used outside the factories, it is common to find that they may be spelt in a variety of ways, all correct. You take your choice. A wheelwright tells me, for instance, that it is quite optional whether you write "lynch pin," or "linch-pin," or "lince-pin"; that "felle" is as common as "felloe"; and so on. But, he says, the spelling of "tyre" is becoming fixed. Ten years ago, "tire," "tier," or "tyer" were permissible alternatives, the word probably standing for the thing that tied a wheel together. But now that it has escaped from the wheelwright's shop and every bicyclist uses it, we are coming to an arbitrary decision in favour of "tyre." It probably has not occurred to either wheelwright or bicyclist that the question should have been submitted to an authority.—I am, yours, &c.,
G. S.

SIR,—If the endless controversy between the rights of "Whitsun Day" and "Whitsunday," to which Mr. J. F. Nisbet alludes, could be put to a "Folks-Referendum," or in appeal to the language traditions of the common people, judgment must certainly be given on behalf of the earlier of the two forms. I have been in the habit for some years past of taking evidence upon the point whenever I have come across any contemporary mention of the season in seventeenth century documents. To empty the contents of my notes into the columns of the ACADEMY would require more of them than you could possibly spare. But I will select four, which prove that the "Whitsun" use prevailed among all classes of the English people throughout the seventeenth century: 1615: Parish Register of Youghrove, co. Derby, "Witson Week." 1634: Sir William Brereton (Travels in Holland, p. 12)—"Upo Whitsun-Tuesday, about 11 of the clock we took waggon for Dort." 1660: William Caton the Quaker (Autobiography, p. 99)—"The time called Whitsuntide." 1672: Oliver Heywood (one of Calamy's Two Thousand Nonconformist Confessors, Hunter's Life of O. H., 239, 240)—"God hath cut out work for me in a new place, for upon Whitsun Tuesday, May 28, I was called to preach at John Butterworth's house in Warley."

The oral tradition still survives. On Bank-holiday, June 6, 1892, I had chat upon the road with an octogenarian townswoman, who said to me, "A great many more people came to Harrow last Whitsun-Monday."

I doubt whether the contraction of "Whitsun" into "Whit" is especially characteristic of the modern English love for shortness as some imagine. The contraction "Pfungsten" into "Pfungst," in the compounding of a pentecostal phrase, has become no less frequent among the Germans and the German Switzers. The word "Pfungsten" is generally restricted in the popular Calendars to the Sunday, while the next day is called "Pfungstmontag," and not "Pfungsten-montag." Similarly Whitsun plays or games are now generally called "Pfungstspiele."—I am, yours

T. HANCOCK.

Harrow-on-the-Hill.

NEWSPAPER LATIN.

SIR, You will be doing a service if you will call attention to two familiar blunders which one meets with too often in newspapers, and even in more permanent literature.

Why should a priori, a posteriori, a fortiori, &c., be so often written à priori, à posteriori, à fortiori, as if they were French, not Latin?

The use of cui bono in the sense of what good purpose? is one for which, Macaulay would have said, any fifth form boy would be flogged. No other meaning of the words is possible than that in which Cicero used them in his celebrated oration for whose benefit?

Is it not possible to check the use, not adopted even by writers who ought to be us a better example, of the word phenomenon in the excruciating sense of "remarkable" ALFRED W. BENNETT.

EDUCATION FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA.

SIR,—With reference to Mr. Emil Reich's letter complaining that my article contained no reference to Mr. Wren's success training-college (not to use an invidious word)—he himself gives a sufficient explanation, if any is needed, in the fact that the Reports of the Commissioners do not furnish statistics of such establishments. However, no injustice was intended, and Mr. Wren's success is matter of common knowledge. I think, however, that probably Mr. Reich claims too much for him; if not, he could easily establish his case by a few figures. Taking the official returns for 1892-3 and 1895—the only ones I have at hand—I find that in those years there passed into the Indian Service from Oxford and Cambridge seventy-three and thirty-eight respectively, and that of these there were “subsequently specially prepared” twenty-two and eighteen respectively. Whether the final year, which Mr. Reich seems to indicate, is really the causa causans of success or not, each will judge for himself. It would have been unfair in me to mark out Mr. Wren’s establishment when others—perhaps quite as worthy, though less large—were not named. And would not Mr. Wren have been more gracefully championed by one of those who owed success to him than by one of his able assistants?—Yours faithfully,

THE WRITER OF THE ARTICLE.

Jan. 22, 1898.

SIR,—In your last week’s number you published a letter containing the astounding statement that while a certain proportion of those who pass for the Indian Civil are “educated” at Oxford, a certain other proportion—I forget the figures—are “educated” by Mr. Wren. Mr. Wren is, I believe, an extremely able man, and I am inclined to think that he would never advance so preposterous a claim. Mr. Wren makes no pretence of “educating” anybody. It is not his métier. He teaches people to pass examinations. The two functions are quite distinct, and “educated” people do not confound them.—Yours faithfully,

ST. JOHN E. C. HANKIN.

Jan. 21, 1898.

“MACCHAILEAN MOHR.”

SIR,—I am not a reader of Longman’s, and do not know the precise connexion in which the expression occurs; but “Macchailean Mohr” is a correction of “The Maccallum More,” which you probably met with in Scottish history. “Macchailean Mohr” means the Great Son of Colin—apparently a family name of the house of Argyll. Mr. Lang, of course, was referring to the Duke of Argyll, for whom a place was claimed in the list of Academicians.—Yours very truly,

HECTOR MACAULAY.

Beowsa Church, Stornoway, N.B. :

Jan. 20, 1898.

BACCHYLIDES.

SIR,—Your reviewer (January 15) on Mr. Kenyon’s Bacchylides, says airily, “None of the Dii Majores have yet appeared. Some day we may be electrified by the announcement of a volume of Sappho’s lyrics, or a play of Menander.” Short of being “electrified,” since he is a lover of Menander, he may be glad to know six fragments of the Georgics, one of the most celebrated of the plays of Menander, have been discovered, and may be read in the edition just published of M. Jules Nicole.—I am yours, &c., LANE E. HARRISON.

Sesame Club, 28, Dover-street:
Jan. 20, 1898.

[Owing to pressure upon our space, we have been obliged to hold over correspondence on “A Benedictine Martyr in England” and Prof. Ratzel’s History of Mankind till next week.]

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

THE collected edition of The Bab Ballads, to which is added a selection of the songs and ballads in Mr. Gilbert’s operas, has been widely noticed. The Times’ critic somewhat discounts the “raptures” of a recent Quarterly Reviewer who hailed Mr. Gilbert as a considerable poet. But he admits that readers of this volume

“will find wit and fun in plenty; endless amusement if they are gifted with the sense of humour themselves; many charming songs, so liltily written that they seem to set themselves to music as one reads them—in short, they will find all the qualities that have won Mr. Gilbert’s popularity, and made many of his phrases and topsy-turvyisms household words.”

The Daily News’ critic considers Mr. Gilbert simply as a fanciful and brilliant humorist. He writes :

“Mr. Gilbert has been said to base his humour upon a sort of ‘topsy-turveydom’ in morals and social practices. Topsy-turveydom is, indeed, the direct subject of ‘My Dream’; it flourishes again in that delicious piece of nonsense, ‘The Periwinkle Girl’ and her aristocratic lovers; and is traceable in ‘Blue Blood,’ from Iolanthe, which imagines a state of existence wherein a title and a vast rent-roll are positive bars to success in love. It would, on the other hand, be a great mistake to say that the fun of the ‘Bab Ballads’ depends wholly, or even for the most part, on the trick of reversing social conditions. It lies more often in satire of the sort which is found lurking in the Judge’s song, and the Usher’s charge in Trial by Jury in ‘They’ll none of them be missed,’ from The Mikado and in the ‘Darned Mounseer’—the latter an obvious satire upon popular British Chauvinism, though from some unaccountable perversity of interpretation it greatly wounded the susceptibilities of the Paris Figaro.”

The Westminster Gazette, referring to our recent suggested list of forty names for an “Academy of Letters,” writes :

“In a recent symposium concerning the writers who would form a British Academy of Letters, if such an institution existed, someone had the good sense to suggest that Mr. W. S. Gilbert should be among the number. ‘What! include a comic writer?’ cried certain serious persons, who straightway proposed instead the names of certain inconspicuous solemnities. We are not ourselves enamoured of academies in any form; but if forty representative English writers have to be selected for any purpose whatever, dare anyone say that Mr. Gilbert ought not to be among them?”

“Studies in Frankness,”
By Charles Whibley.

MR. WHIBLEY’S onslaught on Puritanism in literature has pleased some critics immensely. The Pall Mall Gazette heads its review “Free, Frank, and Fearless,” and the reviewer writes in a vein of sympathetic irony :

“So great is his zeal, indeed, that he inclines us to the uncomfortable suspicion that no man can project a masterpiece till he stands, Marius-like, amid the ruins of the Decalogue, and that to rob a till is but the first step to literary greatness. Mr. Whibley’s open and wanton delight in the artistry of crime was manifest to all whose fortune it was to read his Book of Scoundrels, and so here his sympathy with needy rascallions in whom is developed the artistic sense, and with nondescript villains who point their peccadillos and adorn their crimes with tags of Horace and quotations from the classics, flashes along every line of his brilliant and masterly essay on Petronius. In fact, so insistent and so dominant are these sympathies, and—a plague on him!—so well does he write, that we would hesitate ere we entrusted him with our purse or even our life, though we will do him the justice of admitting that the conveying would be effected with distinction and the killing consummated with style.”

The Chronicle also packs its review into the title thereof: “Unfrank Studies in Frankness.”

“Though,” it says, “we find ourselves now and again revolting from Mr. Whibley’s judgments, yet there can be no dispute that the body of the book is a serious and learned contribution to letters. All the more do we regret that he should have sought to commend his solid wares by a claptrap title and a perversely paradoxical preface. . . . The preface deals mainly with those trite subjects which are dear to the heart of the Oxford examiner—art for art’s sake, genius is a law to itself, the good writer must be a good man. Over this familiar ground we are not minded to follow Mr. Whibley; but, not content with re-asserting the liberty of prophesying, he tries to carry the war into the enemy’s country. Not content with the claim that for the artist no fig-leaves exist, he would make it a note of genius to have stripped off the fig-leaves of conventionality, and laid bare the nakedness of nature. . . . Mr. Whibley insists on our admiring the great satirists, playwrights, and romancers, because of their least comely parts, though, when he comes to details, he is, as we have said, very careful to keep these parts out of sight. This is, as his favourite Aristotle would put it, to defend a hypothesis with a vengeance.”

The Speaker is genial and mildly critical. Of the essays it says :

“All are good, but we like the last best. Nothing, indeed, could well be happier than its tone and temper throughout, yet the subject, being a whimsical one, is hard to treat. Mr. Whibley dubs Sir Thomas Urquhart of Cromarty, the translator of the earlier parts of Rabelais, and the author of at least two of the most astounding books in the world, the ‘most fantastic of Scotsmen.’ Now, how fantastical Scotsmen can be, have been, and are, it is given to few authoritatively to pronounce; but that Sir Thomas was the most fantastical Scot who ever put his fantasy into print is a proposition easy to defend.”

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

MESSRS. METHUEN have just published The VINTAGE, a New Novel by E. F. BENSON; and they will publish on February 1 LIFE and PROGRESS in AUSTRALASIA, by MICHAEL DAVITT, M.P., with Two Maps, 490 pp., crown 8vo, 6s. This important Book is a description of the Life, Features, and Resources of the Seven Australasian Colonies.

THE NIGER SOURCES. By Colonel J. TROTTER, R.A. With a Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

A book which at the present time should be of considerable interest, being an account of a Commission appointed for frontier delimitation.

EXPLORATION and HUNTING in CENTRAL AFRICA. By Major A. St. H. GIBBONS, F.R.G.S. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations by C. Whymper, 25 Photographs, and Map. Demy 8vo, 15s. An account of travel, adventure, and big game shooting among the Marotse.

THREE YEARS IN SAVAGE AFRICA. By LIONEL DECLE. With an Introduction by H. M. STANLEY, M.P. With 100 Illustrations and 5 Maps. Demy 8vo, 21s. [Shortly.]

THE CRISIS IN CHINA.

FROM TONKIN to INDIA. By PRINCE HENRI OF ORLEANS. Translated by HAMLEY BENT, M.A. With over 100 Illustrations and a Map. Crown 4to, gilt top, 25s.

"Instructive and fascinating, and will certainly make one of the books of 1898. A nearly model book of travel."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The Prince's travels are of real importance . . . his services to geography have been considerable. The volume is beautifully illustrated."—Athenæum.

ANARCHISM. By E. V. ZENKER. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A critical study and history, as well as trenchant criticism of the Anarchist movement in Europe. The book has aroused considerable attention on the Continent.

A HISTORY of the GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY, 1845-95. By C. H. GRINLING. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. A record of Railway enterprise and development in Northern England, containing much matter hitherto unpublished. [Feb. 6.]

A SHORT HISTORY of the ROYAL NAVY, from Early Times to the Present Day. By DAVID HANNAY. Illustrated. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. each. Vol. I., 1200-1688.

"Its interest is such that we read it from cover to cover at a sitting, and that those who go to it for a lively and brisk picture of the past, with all its faults and its grandeur, will not be disappointed. The historian is competent, and he is endowed with literary skill and style."—Standard.

THE STORY of the BRITISH ARMY. By Lieut.-Colonel COOPER KING, of the Staff College, Camberley. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"An authoritative and accurate story of England's military progress."—Daily Mail.

"This handy volume contains, in a compendious form, a brief but adequate sketch of the story of the British Army."—Daily News.

THE LIFE of ERNEST RENAN. By Madame DARMESTETER. With Portrait. Second Edition nearly ready. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A polished gem of biography, superior in its kind to any attempt that has been made of recent years in England."—Athenæum.

"A perfect biography."—British Weekly.

A HISTORY of BRITISH COLONIAL POLICY. By H. E. EGERTON, M.A. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

"Admirably lucid and valuable."—Globe.

"Full of facts and intelligent thought."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A lucid and weighty narrative. The thoughts this well-written and able volume suggests are grave, dignified, and weighty."—Birmingham Post.

THE ODYSSEY of HOMER. A Translation by J. G. CORDERY. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"This version deserves a place of honour."—Manchester Guardian.

"His Odyssey is a worthy sequel to his Iliad."—St James's Gazette.

RELIGION and CONSCIENCE in ANCIENT EGYPT. By W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE, D.C.L., LL.D. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE MINISTRY of DEACONESSES. By CECILIA ROBINSON. With an Introduction by the LORD BISHOP of WINCHESTER, and an Appendix by Professor ARMI PAGE ROBINSON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

THE LIBRARY OF DEVOTION.

MESSRS. METHUEN have arranged to publish under the above title a number of the older masterpieces of devotional literature. It is their intention to entrust each volume of the series to an editor who will not only attempt to bring out the spiritual importance of the book, but who will lavish such scholarly care upon it as is generally expended only on editions of the ancient classics.

Mr. Laurence Housman has designed a Title-page and a Cover Design. Pott 8vo, 2s., leather, 3s.

THE CONFESSIONS of ST. AUGUSTINE. Newly Translated, with an Introduction and Notes, by C. BIGG, D.D., late Student of Christ Church.

A BOOK of DEVOTIONS. By J. W. STANBRIDGE, M.A., Rector of Bainton, Canon of York, and sometime Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. By JOHN KEBLE. With Introduction and Notes by WALTER LOCK, D.D., Warden of Keble College, Ireland Professor at Oxford.

LIGHT and LEAVEN: Historical and Social Sermons. By HENSLEY HENSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls', Incumbent of St. Mary's Hospital, Ilford. Crown 8vo, 6s. "Reasonable, vigorous, and impressive."—Scotsman. "A very interesting volume."—Guardian.

THE BEGINNINGS of ENGLISH CHRISTIANITY. By W. E. COLLINS, M.A., Professor of Ecclesiastical History at King's College, London. With Map. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [The Churchman's Library.]

WORKHOUSES and PAUPERISM. By LOUISA TWINING. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Social Question Series.]

PASSAGES for UNSEEN TRANSLATION. By E. C. MARCHANT, M.A., Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge; and A. M. COOK, M.A., late Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford, Assistant Masters at St. Paul's School. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

EASY LATIN EXERCISES on the SYNTAX of the SHORTER and REVISED LATIN PRIMER. By A. M. M. STEDMAN, M.A. With Vocabulary, Seventh and Cheaper Edition, Revised by Mr. C. G. BOTTING, of St. Paul's School. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. Issued with the consent of Dr. Kennedy.

NINE POPULAR NOVELS.—SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

|                                  |                |                              |                    |                                  |                  |
|----------------------------------|----------------|------------------------------|--------------------|----------------------------------|------------------|
| THE VINTAGE.              | E. F. BENSON.  | LOCHINVAR.            | S. R. CROCKETT.    | A CREEL of IRISH STORIES. | JANE BARLOW.     |
| TRAITS &amp; CONFIDENCES. | EMILY LAWLESS. | BYEWAYS.              | ROBERT S. HICHENS. | A DAUGHTER of STRIFE.     | J. H. FINDLATER. |
| JOSIAH'S WIFE.            | NORMA LORIMER. | A PASSIONATE PILGRIM. | PERCY WHITE.       | OVER the HILLS.           | MARY FINDLATER.  |

METHUEN & CO.'S NEW CATALOGUE and BOOK GAZETTE sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex Street, Strand.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1344.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES.—The FEBRUARY CATALOGUES of Valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW REMAINERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, are Now Ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 186, Strand, London, W.C.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

POTTER'S CATALOGUE of New and Second-hand BOOKS (No. 119, for FEBRUARY) at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SEEL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 11, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

FOR THE AUTOGRAPH COLLECTOR—A NEW MANUAL by Dr. Scott, 13 post free, 17, Cranborne Road, Fulham. Autographs purchased; a large variety for sale; lists free.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. English, 10d. per 1,000 Words. French and German, in Roman characters, 1s. 3d. per 1,000. French Translated. Samples and references.—Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Misses E. & J. Purz, 495, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 5, Furnival Street, London, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—Franchman, who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research. Translations from English and German into French.—Apply to A. BONY, 30, Alfred Place, Tottenham Court Road, W.C.

FRENCH in THREE MONTHS.—FRENCH in THREE MONTHS.—DAMIEN'S NEW SYSTEM. Privately or by post. Any age. Success certain. Commended by the Press.—10, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply Academy Office, 42, Chancery Lane, London.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.

GOULD'S BIRDS OF EUROPE, in case, £130, cost £60.—CHARLES LOWE, Book Exporter, New Street and Baskerville Hall, Birmingham.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

QUAIN PROFESSORSHIP OF PHYSICS.
This CHAIR will be VACANT by the resignation of Prof. Carey Foster at the close of the present Session.
APPLICATIONS, accompanied by such Testimonials as Candidates may wish to submit, should reach the Secretary by TUESDAY, MARCH 1, 1898.
Further information will be sent on application.
The new Professor will enter on his duties next October.
J. M. HOASSUSON, M.A., Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.

PROFESSORSHIP OF GREEK.
APPLICATIONS are invited for the GLADSTONE CHAIR OF GREEK now vacant in the above College, the applications, with twenty copies of testimonials, to be in the hands of the Registrar not later than MARCH 5th, 1898. Stipend, £575 per annum, with two-thirds of Fees from Students.—For all information concerning terms and conditions of tenure, apply the Registrar, University College, Liverpool.

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.

The University Court of the University of Edinburgh will, on Monday, 14th March next, or some subsequent day, proceed to the Appointment of an additional EXAMINER in MATHEMATICS and NATURAL PHILOSOPHY. The person appointed will be required to examine also in PHYSICS at Examinations for Degrees in Medicine and Public Health.

The period of office is four years, from 1st February, 1898. Particulars regarding remuneration may be obtained on application to the Secretary of the University Court.

Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, not later than Monday, 23rd February next, sixteen copies of his Application, and sixteen copies of Testimonials he may desire to present. One copy of the Application should be signed. Applicants who send in Testimonials must not send more than four.

M. C. TAYLOR, Secretary University Court.

University of Edinburgh,
24th January, 1898.

CENTRAL WELSH BOARD.

ANNUAL EXAMINATION, JULY, 1898.

On the 18th day of February, 1898, the Executive Committee will proceed to the APPOINTMENT of

ONE EXAMINER IN HISTORY,
ONE EXAMINER IN CHEMISTRY,
AND
ONE EXAMINER IN SCRIPTURE.

Further particulars may be obtained forthwith from the undersigned, to whom applications, containing full statements of qualifications and experience, and a copy of not more than three Testimonials, should be forwarded not later than the 12th day of February instant.

OWEN OWEN, Chief Inspector.

Central Welsh Board, Oswestry,
February 1st, 1898.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN,

Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

THURSDAY NEXT (FEBRUARY 10th), at 3 o'clock.—JEAN PAUL RICHTER, Esq., Ph.D.—THE FIRST OF THREE LECTURES ON "SOME ITALIAN PICTURES at the NATIONAL GALLERY." Subscription to this Course, Half-a-Guinea.

SATURDAY (FEBRUARY 12th), at 3 o'clock.—WILLIAM H. HADDOX, Esq., M.A., B.Mus.—THE FIRST OF THREE LECTURES ON "THE STRUCTURE OF INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC." (With Musical Illustrations.) Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

THE HARLEIAN SOCIETY, instituted in 1869

for the Publication of Inedited Manuscripts relating to Genealogy, Family History, and Heraldry. President: The Most Honourable the MARQUESS OF BUTE, K.T. Entrance Fee, 10s. 6d. Annual Subscription, £1 1s.
Prospectuses and full particulars of Publications already issued (35 Volumes), and Forms of Application for Membership, may be obtained on application to the Publishers, Messrs. MICHALL & HUGHES, 140, Vardour Street, W., or to one of the Honorary Secretaries, GEORGE J. ARMYTAGE, F.S.A., Clifton Woodhead, Brighouse, and J. P. RYLANDS, F.S.A., 2, Charlesville, Birkenhead.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE,

COOPERS HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one to the Accounts Branch P. W. D. and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.

For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

Just published, price 1s. ; per post, 1s. 4d.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY CALENDAR

FOR THE YEAR 1898.

London:
MACMILLAN & CO.

Manchester:
J. E. COANISU.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN,
RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

|  |   |
|--|---|
| TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONSfrom ONE GUINEAper annum.  | COUNTRYSUBSCRIPTIONS fromTWO GUINEAS per annum.   |
| LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (forweekly exchange of Books at thehouses of Subscribers) from TWOGUINEAS per annum. | N.B.—Two or Three Friends mayUNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION,and thus lessen the Cost ofCarriage. |

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30—34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, Brompton Road, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BASTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY

BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Office: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSIT repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

IMPORTANT.

All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, should subscribe to the

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND

BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

ESTABLISHED 1837.

Among the many attractions of its columns the following may be mentioned:—

Literary articles (including leader on some prominent topic of the moment) announcements of forthcoming volumes, notes on current events in connection with the publishing world, reviews (often illustrated) of new books and magazines, correspondence, &c., &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of

NEW BOOKS OF THE WEEK

(the most complete list issued) giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number upwards of a thousand are advertised for, thus affording readers an excellent opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and attention is particularly drawn to the fact that annual subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money-payments should be made.

|  |          |
|--|----------|
| For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland         | 8s. 6d.  |
| „ Six Months ditto ditto   | 4s. 6d.  |
| „ Three Months ditto ditto   | 2s. 6d.  |
| To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage | 11s. 0d. |

NOW READY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1897.

SIXTY-FIRST YEAR OF ISSUE OF ANNUAL CATALOGUE.

THE

ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS

FOR THE YEAR 1897.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 224, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

It contains a much longer List of Works than last year's Catalogue, including an addition of some 1,400 more Titles, but the price remains the same, viz., 5s. net, cloth limp; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

“The English Catalogue” is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications.”—Daily News.

“Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day.”—Athenæum.

“We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume.”—Daily Telegraph.

“The English Catalogue of Books” is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome.”—Scotsman.

“To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.....The entire work is, indeed, a precious record.”—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

“THE ACADEMY.”

The following have already appeared:—

|                                      |          |    |
|--------------------------------------|----------|----|
|                                      | 1896.    |    |
| BEN JONSON ... ..                    | November | 14 |
| JOHN KEATS ... ..                    | „        | 21 |
| SIR JOHN SUCKLING ... ..             | „        | 28 |
| TOM HOOD ... ..                      | December | 5  |
| THOMAS GRAY ... ..                   | „        | 12 |
| ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON ... ..        | „        | 19 |
| SIR WALTER SCOTT ... ..              | „        | 26 |
|                                      | 1897.    |    |
| SAMUEL RICHARDSON ... ..             | January  | 2  |
| THOMAS DE QUINCEY ... ..             | „        | 9  |
| LEIGH HUNT ... ..                    | „        | 16 |
| LORD MACAULAY ... ..                 | „        | 23 |
| ROBERT SOUTHBY ... ..                | „        | 30 |
| S. T. COLERIDGE ... ..               | February | 6  |
| CHARLES LAMB ... ..                  | „        | 13 |
| MICHAEL DRAYTON ... ..               | „        | 20 |
| WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR ... ..          | „        | 27 |
| SAMUEL PEPYS .. ..                   | March    | 6  |
| EDMUND WALLER ... ..                 | „        | 13 |
| WILKIE COLLINS ... ..                | „        | 20 |
| JOHN MILTON ... ..                   | „        | 27 |
| WILLIAM COWPER ... ..                | April    | 3  |
| CHARLES DARWIN ... ..                | „        | 10 |
| ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON ... ..         | „        | 17 |
| HENRY WADSWORTH LONG-FELLOW ... ..   | „        | 24 |
| ANDREW MARVELL ... ..                | May      | 1  |
| ROBERT BROWNING .. ..                | „        | 8  |
| THOMAS CARLYLE ... ..                | „        | 15 |
| PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ... ..          | „        | 22 |
| CHARLES DICKENS ... ..               | „        | 29 |
| JONATHAN SWIFT .. ..                 | June     | 5  |
| WILLIAM MAKEPEACE } THACKERAY ... .. | „        | 12 |
| WILLIAM BLAKE ... ..                 | „        | 19 |
| SIR RICHARD STEELE ... ..            | „        | 26 |
| ALEXANDER POPE ... ..                | July     | 3  |
| DOUGLAS JERROLD ... ..               | „        | 10 |
| FRANCIS BACON ... ..                 | „        | 17 |

THE JOY of MY YOUTH. A Novel.

By CLAUD NICHOLSON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

“There is very delicate work in ‘The Joy of My Youth.’ There is not much story in it, but reminiscences from the history of a sensitive man, peculiarly open to impressions and influences from without. It has a Breton background, and, indeed, there is nothing at all English about it....Its style, its sentiment, its attitude, were all made in France. It has charm and subtlety, and the childhood portion, with the blithe imaginative pictures of a beautiful and irresponsible past, must captivate all readers who have time to linger in their reading.”

“The delicate charm of this story is not realised until the reader has read more than two or three chapters. The first chapter is unintelligible until the book is finished, and then we see that the author has chosen to tell us of the end of his hero's life before he has told us of the beginning of it....Mr. Nicholson writes with rare sympathy for and appreciation of French life.”—Glasgow Herald.

“The hero is a charming child from first to last....Too delicate, too cultivated, most will vote the book; but that judgment will ignore its intention, which is fulfilled almost without a flaw.”—Bookman.

SELECTED POEMS from the WORKS

of the Hon. RODEN NOEL. With a Biographical and Critical Essay by PERCY ADDLESHAW. With 2 Portraits. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

“Mr. Addleshaw has done his work well....It is inconceivable that all will die of a poet endowed with so splendid an originality, though claiming kinship, by the rare blend of his qualities with Blake, with Victor Hugo, and with Edgar Poe.”—Manchester Guardian.

London: ELKIN MATHEWS, Vigo Street, W.

F. V. WHITE & CO'S LIST.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF JOHN STRANG WINTER'S HIGHLY-SUCCESSFUL NOVEL.

Sixth Edition.—In 1 vol., cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE TRUTH-TELLERS. By the AUTHOR of “A GAY LITTLE WOMAN.”

New Edition.—In 1 vol., picture boards, price 2s.

A RIVERSIDE ROMANCE. By Mrs EDWARD KENNARD, Author of “The Girl in the Brown Habit.”

In Illustrated paper cover, price 1s.

THE BLUE DIAMONDS. By Leila BOUSTEAD.

POPULAR SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

At all Libraries, Booksellers', and Bookstalls.

ANNIE THOMAS'S NEW NOVEL.

DICK RIVERS. By the Author of “DENNIS DONNE.”

MRS. LOVETT-CAMERON'S NEW NOVEL.

DEVIL'S APPLES. By the Author of “IN A GRASS COUNTRY.”

GIRLS WILL BE GIRLS. By FLORENCE WARDEN.

“.....A racy-told story.”—Scotsman.

A FAIR IMPOSTOR. By Alan ST. AUBYN.

“.....The developments are of an interesting kind.”—Scotsman.

AT the TAIL of the HOUNDS. By Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD.

“.....A lively and well-managed sporting story.”—Literary World.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 14, Bedford Street, Strand.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD'S PUBLICATIONS.

WORKS BY DR. ALEX. MACLAREN.

MOST RECENT, crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s., post free.

THE BEATITUDES, AND OTHER SERMONS.

“Dr. Maclaren's new volume will be received with special warmth, as containing an excellent exposition of the Beatitudes. Dr. Maclaren's work is always full of thought and knowledge and power, intensely evangelical, and un-faillingly fresh.”—British Weekly.

Uniform with the above, price 5s. each, post free.

CHRIST'S “MUSTS,” and other Sermons.

“Dr. Maclaren is our ideal preacher.”—Expository Times.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

“The work of a master of pulpit oratory.”—Freeman.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

“Every sermon glows withunction, and shows intense power.”—Methodist Recorder.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons.

“They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. Maclaren's works.”—Christian World Pulpit.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

HARPER & BROTHERS'
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

THE STORY OF HAWAII.

By JEAN A. OWEN (Mrs. VISGER),
Collaborator in the Books signed "A Son of the Marshes."
Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

Mrs. Visger lived in Honolulu for years, and being personally acquainted with the leading people, gives us a very readable book which at the present time, when interest is largely centred in Hawaii, will be widely welcomed.

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS'S NEW BOOK.

A YEAR FROM A CORRESPONDENT'S
NOTE-BOOK.

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS,
Author of "Gallegher," "Soldiers of Fortune," &c.
With about 40 Full-Page Illustrations by R. Caton Woodville, and others. 8vo, cloth ornamental, 6s.

NOTES in JAPAN. Written and Illustrated by ALFRED PARSONS. 8vo, extra cloth, 12s. 6d.

ALONE in CHINA. By Julian Ralph.
Profusely Illustrated by C. D. Weldon. Crown 8vo, ornamental cloth, 6s.

"One of the few books which may be safely recommended to the student of China as being almost necessary supplements to more elaborate works treating of its geography and sociology."—The Spectator.

SPANISH JOHN: a Romance of the '45.

By WILLIAM McLELLAN. Illustrated by Myrbach.
Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

PROHIBITED IN RUSSIA.

THE SON OF THE CZAR

(Peter the Great).

By JAMES M. GRAHAM.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Those who do not know the history of Alexis and his mistress Euphrosyne will learn a good deal of the history of Russia while enjoying Mr. Graham's well-written tale."—Publishers' Circular.

The Daily Chronicle says: "Another English book has been interdicted by the Russian censor. This time it is a novel, 'The Son of the Czar,' by Mr. James M. Graham."

THE KENTUCKIANS: a Novel.

By JOHN FOX, JUN.

Illustrated by W. T. Smedley. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

"It is interesting to note that fine novel 'The Kentuckians' is the most popular book in the States at present."—Academy.

"Bright and refreshing. There are not many such nowadays."—Review of Reviews.

"A story so strong and finely told that it gives a startling kind of pleasure by its vigour and novelty."—The World.

ILLUSTRATED BY BERNARD PARTRIDGE.

THE TINTED VENUS: a Farcical

Romance. By F. ANSTEY, Author of "The Giant's Robe," "Vice Versa," &c. Illustrated by Bernard Partridge. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 6s.

A VILLAIN OF PARTS.

By B. PAUL NEUMAN.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"We would joyfully read a story like 'A Villain of Parts' once a week for the term of our natural lives."—Chronicle.

"A more intensely exciting adventure book I have not read for years."—Truth.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SILENCE OF DEAN MAITLAND."

RIBSTONE PIPPINS.

By MAXWELL GRAY.

Cloth, 3s. 6d. [Immediately.]

HARPER & BROTHERS, London and New York.

With 2 Portraits and 2 Views. Large crown 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ARTHUR YOUNG.

With Selections from His Correspondence.

Edited by M. BETHAM-EDWARDS.

From the TIMES.—"Miss Edwards has done her task with a reserve and succinctness to be much commended. She deserves well of all who hold in honour the memory of one who ever strove manfully to make two blades of grass grow where one grew before."

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

NEW NOVELS.

JUST PUBLISHED. With 40 Full-Page Illustrations, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE KOROSKO

By A. CONAN DOYLE,

Author of "The White Company," "Rodney Stone," "Uncle Bernac," &c.

The DAILY NEWS' opinion: "A fine story, the interest of which arrests the reader's attention at the start, and holds it to the close. The characterisation throughout is strong, clear, and very delicate.... Impressive, pulsating with emotion, informed with a great air of reality, the story will sustain and enhance its author's already high reputation."

On FEBRUARY 8th.—Crown 8vo, 6s.

FOR THE RELIGION:

Being the Records of Blaise de Bernauld.

By HAMILTON DRUMMOND.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

SEELEY & CO'S LIST.

W. E. Norris's New Novel.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE FIGHT FOR THE CROWN.

By W. E. NORRIS, Author of "The Dancer in Yellow," "My Friend Jim."

A CROATIAN COMPOSER: Notes towards the Study of Joseph Haydn. By

W. H. HADGWAY, Author of "Studies in Modern Music." With Portrait. 2s. 6d. net.

"A volume full of interest, ethnical as well as musical."—St. James's Gazette.

"Will be read with interest and profit by all concerned with the study of music, and especially with the study of the national or racial elements in musical composition."—Globe.

SECOND EDITION.

IN LINCOLN GREEN. A Merrie Tale of Robin Hood. By E. Gilliat.

Illustrated. 5s.

"Thoroughly successful."—Spectator.

"Just the book to enchant a boy."—Graphic.

IN the CHOIR of WESTMINSTER ABBEY. A Story of Henry Purcell's

Days. By EMMA MARSHALL. With Illustrations. 5s.

"Mrs. Marshall's imaginative pictures of the England of other days are in reality prose poems."—Literature.

NIGHTS with an OLD GUNNER, and other Studies of Wild Life. By C J.

CORNISH. With many Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

"Interesting to any lover of wild nature."—Pall Mall Gazette. "Full of the excitement of sport."—Scotsman.

"THAT REMARKABLE SUCCESSION OF MONOGRAPHS."—Daily News.

JUST PUBLISHED, 3s. 6d. net.

THE PORTFOLIO for January.

RUBENS. By R. A. M. Stevenson. With 34 Illustrations.

MONOGRAPHS ALREADY PUBLISHED.

Price 3s. 6d. net.

ALBERT DÜRER'S PAINTINGS.
CROME and COTMAN.
TITIAN'S EARLIER WORK.

ARMOUR in ENGLAND.
PICTURE GALLERY of CHARLES I.
JOHN LA FARGE.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

RAPHAEL'S EARLY WORK.
ORCHARDSON.
CLAUDE LORRAIN.
WHITEHALL.
JAPANESE WOOD ENGRAVINGS.
WATTEAU.
ISLE of WIGHT.
RAPHAEL in ROME.

DUTCH ETCHERS.
WILLIAM BLAKE.
BELGIAN SCULPTURE.
GERARD DAVID.
REMBRANDT'S ETCHINGS.
MALTA.
WEDGWOOD.
BASTIEN LEPAGE.

RICHMOND.
VELAZQUEZ. (Two Parts.)
ROYAL ENGLISH BOOK BIND

D. G. ROSSETTI.
F. WALKER.
FAIR WOMEN.
NEW FOREST.
GAINSBOROUGH.
FRENCH BOOK BINDINGS.
ALBERT DÜRER'S ENGRAVINGS.
ITALIAN BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

London: SEELEY & COMPANY, LTD., 38, Great Russell Street, W.C.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BY THE ROARING REUSS:

Idylls of the Alps.

By W. BRIDGES BIRT.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THROUGH CHINA WITH A CAMERA.

By JOHN THOMSON, F.R.G.S.

With about 100 Illustrations. Fcap. 4to, One Guinea ret.

ADVENTURES IN LEGEND:

Tales of the West Highlands.

By the MARQUIS of LORNE, K.T.

Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SONGS OF LOVE and EMPIRE. By

E. NESBIT. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE KING'S STORY BOOK. Edited

by G. LAURENCE GOMME. Illustrations by T. Harrison Miller. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"The GERMAN EMPEROR has just ordered a copy of 'The King's Story Book.'" *Westminster Gazette.THE LAUGHTER of PETERKIN.

Crown 8vo, 6s. By FIONA MACLEOD.

"This latest and most excellent piece of work of Miss Macleod's."—*Spectator.THE PUPILS of PETER the GREAT.

A History of the Russian Court and Empire from 1697 to 1740. By R. NISBET BAIN, Author of "Gustavus III. and His Contemporaries," "Charles XII.," "Hans Christian Andersen: a Biography." With Photogravure Frontispiece and Portraits. Demy 8vo, 318 pp., 15s. net.

"An excellent piece of historical study, most illuminating us respects the light it throws on a dark and ill-known time and country."—*Spectator.THE HOUSEHOLD of the LAFAYETTES. 15s. net."One of the best and truest bits of writing we have met for a long time."—*Spectator.The PRINCIPLES of LOCAL GOVERNMENT. By GEORGE LAURENCE GOMME, F.S.A.,

Statistical Officer of the London County Council. Demy 8vo, 284 pp., price 12s.

"Clever, suggestive, and opportuna."—*The Times.OUR TROUBLES in POONA and the DECCAN. By ARTHUR TRAVERS CRAWFORD,

C.M.G., late Commissioner of Poona. Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 11s.

"We have rarely come across a book which brings us closer to the realities of Indian life."—St. James's Gazette.

BY GEORGE MEREDITH.

Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

SANDRA BELLONI.*The ORDEAL of RICHARD FEVEREL.*RHODA FLEMING.*VITTORIA.*DIANA of the CROSSWAYS.

[Just published.]

SELECTED POEMS. 6s. net.MEDALS and DECORATIONS of the BRITISH ARMY and NAVY. By JOHN HORSLEY

MAYO. Profusely Illustrated with Coloured and other Plates. 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth gilt. £3 3s. net.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE &amp; CO. WESTMINSTER.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Rt. Hon. J. CHAMBERLAIN,
in his speech at Birmingham
(Jan. 29, 1898), referred to
"SOCIAL ENGLAND" as "a great and very interesting book."

COMPLETION OF "SOCIAL ENGLAND."
SOCIAL ENGLAND.

Edited by H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L.

Vol. I.—From the Earliest Times to the Accession of Edward I.
Price 15s.

„ II.—From the Accession of Edward
I. to the Death of Henry VII.
Price 15s.

„ III.—From the Accession of Henry
VIII. to the Death of Elizabeth.
Price 15s.

„ IV.—From the Accession of James
I. to the Death of Queen Anne.
Price 17s.

„ V.—From the Accession of George
I. to the Battle of Waterloo.
Price 17s.

„ VI.—From the Battle of Waterloo to the General Election of 1889.
Price 18s.

"An examination will convince any competent judge that he has in his hands no carelessly executed mosaic, but scholarly and conscientious work, presenting in an eminently popular and attractive dress the latest results of historical research. Ably edited and ably executed."—The Times.

"We take leave of this work with the distinct impression that there is no other which yields us such a comprehensive and truthful survey of the manysided activities of English life."

Daily Chronicle.

"'Social England' may fairly be called one of the most useful and brilliant works of our time."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Mr. H. D. Traill is to be heartily congratulated on the completion of the great work on 'Social England.'.....The work is not only a host in itself but it is a great collection of clues to knowledge."—Academy.

"YOUNG BLOOD," a
New Novel, by E. W.
HORNUNG, Author of "My Lord Duke,"
"The Rogue's March," &c., will be published
shortly, price 6s.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LTD., London, Paris, and Melbourne.MACMILLAN & CO'S NEW BOOKS.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s. net.

FRANCE.

By J. E. C. BODLEY.

Vol. I. The Revolution and Modern France, &c.Vol. II. The Parliamentary System.

TIMES.—"A work to be consulted by all who would understand the forces and movements in French life."

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "PALLADIA."
A CHAPTER of ACCIDENTS.

By Mrs. HUGH FRASER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SPECTATOR.—"Instinct with gaiety and grace, its satire is legitimately directed, its sentiment is pure and tender."

VOLUME V. NOW READY.

THE EVERSLEY BIBLE.

Arranged in Paragraphs, with an Introduction by J. W. MACKAIL, M.A. In Eight Volumes, to be published Monthly. Globe 8vo, 5s. each.

Vol. V. ISAIAH to LAMENTATIONS.

* The Text is that of the Authorized Version.

GUARDIAN.—"In this form the Bible becomes as easy to read as any other book, and if only the experiment is once made they will find it at least as interesting as any other book."

Demy 8vo, 17s. net.

BIBLICAL QUOTATIONS in

OLD ENGLISH PROSE WRITERS. Edited, with the Vulgate and other Latin Originals, Introduction on Old English Biblical Versions, Index of Biblical Passages, and Index of Principal Words. By ALBERT S. COOK, Hon. M.A. Yale, Ph.D. Jena, L.H.D.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

MARCUS AURELIUS ANTO-

NINUS to HIMSELF: an English Translation, with Introductory Study on Stoicism and the last of the Stoics. By G. H. RENDALL, M.A., Litt.D., Head Master of Charterhouse School.

Now ready, Vol. IV., Concluding the Work.

THE HISTORY of GREECE

from its COMMENCEMENT to the CLOSE of the INDEPENDENCE of the GREEK NATION. By ADOLF HOLM. Authorized Translation from the German by F. CLARKE, M.A. Vol. IV. THE GRECO-MACEDONIAN AGE, the PERIOD of the KINGS and the LEAGUES, from the DEATH of ALEXANDER DOWN to the INCORPORATION of the LAST MACEDONIAN MONARCHY in the ROMAN EMPIRE. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Of its size and scope no better history exists, and few so good."

THIRD EDITION, with Appendix, containing a Reply to Critics.

SOCIAL EVOLUTION. By

BENJAMIN KIDD. Nineteenth Thousand. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

GUARDIAN.—"Mr. Benjamin Kidd is to be congratulated on having produced a remarkably stimulating and suggestive book."

NOW READY.

THE FEBRUARY NUMBER OF

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d.

Contains—

MY BEDOUIN FRIENDS.

Adventures of an Artist in the Egyptian Desert.

By R. T. KELLY.

The Second Instalment of

THE ADVENTURES OF FRANCOIS.

By S. WEIR MITCHELL.

HEROES WHO FIGHT FIRE.

By JACOB A. RIISS.

RUSKIN AS AN OXFORD LECTURER.

By J. M. BRUCE.

With Frontispiece Portrait.

&amp;c. &amp;c. &amp;c.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LTD., LONDON.

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS:                                    | PAGE    |
|---|---------|
| D'Annunzio in English ... ..                | 141     |
| Clarece Mangan ... ..                       | 142     |
| The Black Monks ... ..                      | 143     |
| Change in Corea ... ..                      | 144     |
| The Philistine Abroad ... ..                | 145     |
| Lay Sermons ... ..                          | 145     |
| American Traits ... ..                      | 146     |
| Neat Paraphrases ... ..                     | 147     |
| A View of De Quincey ... ..                 | 147     |
| BRIEFER MENTION ... ..                      | 148     |
| ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT... ..                    | 149-162 |
| NOTES AND NEWS ... ..                       | 153     |
| THE POETRY OF MR. ROBERT BRIDGES ... ..     | 155     |
| WHAT THE PEOPLE READ: IX., AN ARTIST ... .. | 156     |
| PARIS LETTER ... ..                         | 157     |
| THE WEEK ... ..                             | 158     |
| New Books Received... ..                    | 159     |
| THE BOOK MARKET ... ..                      | 159     |
| CORRESPONDENCE ... ..                       | 160     |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..                | 162     |

REVIEWS.

D'ANNUNZIO IN ENGLISH.

The Triumph of Death. Translated from the Italian of Gabriele D'Annunzio by Georgina Harding. (London: Heinemann.)

IT is three years since D'Annunzio's Triumph of Death was translated in what most orthodox of French organs, the Revue des Deux Mondes, and now a London publisher of courage, Mr. Heinemann, has given us an English version. Three years since the most spiritual of French critics, M. de Vogüé, master of a great prose style, hailed D'Annunzio as the leader of a coming Latin Renaissance: three years, and how lid the modest welcome of the Anglo-Saxon world take shape? It has been symbolised by the prosecution of D'Annunzio's American publisher on the ground of circulating immoral literature—an unsuccessful prosecution, instigated by Mr. Anthony Comstock, of New York, whose trade is virtue and whose eye is hungry for wickedness in books. And now The Triumph of Death lies before us Englished—very much so.

Amusing it is to note the condition in which poor D'Annunzio reaches English lands. The Italian master comes to us with a European reputation for poetry, for style, for voluptuousness, for occasional brutal indelicacy. Well, he reaches the eager public's timorous hands sans style, sans naughtiness, sans poetry. It is all there—the rest—all, except the essence, the spirit. I. Herelle, in his graceful French translation, failed often at D'Annunzio's poetry of nature, but he always kept a breath of poetry in the voluptuous passages he essayed. Miss Harding has sacrificed both poetry and voluptuousness. It is a safe translation: D'Annunzio is thoroughly Britannicised, and the English Mr. Comstocks and the English poets will alike be disappointed. And the result is most intensely interesting to the critic.

We say the result is interesting because it brings out most strongly the opposition between the Anglo-Saxon and the Latin worlds. The whole question is one of beauty.

D'Annunzio's great power lies in an intense appreciation of the beautiful in nature, art, and life, and in his ability to analyse his very subtle sensations and re-create a beautiful world by the most delicate verbal images, by language rich in cadence, warm-coloured and glowing with life. He is, above all things, the poet of the senses, and he will probably live in Italian literature for the qualities by virtue of which Keats and Mr. Swinburne have taken their place in English literature. Obviously, then, if D'Annunzio is to be translated, an indispensable qualification of his translator should be a fine sense of style. We cannot blame the English translator, her task was one beyond her powers. There can be no doubt that she has failed, for her version never brings with it a sense of poetry. The innumerable descriptions of nature which abound in The Triumph of Death, as Englished, show that insistent touch of commonplaceness which annihilates beauty altogether. A fine sense of style is lacking in every page, every paragraph, every line; and so D'Annunzio's essence is destroyed. Let us take the following passage, which Ouida has translated (Fortnightly Review, March, 1897), and compare it with Miss Harding's version:

Ouida: "A rock of tufa hanging above a melancholy valley; a city so silent that it seems empty: the windows are closed, in the grey lanes grass grows; a Capuchin crosses a square; a bishop descends from a closed carriage before the gate of a hospital; a tower rises in a white and rainy sky; a clock strikes the hour slowly; all at once at the end of the street a miracle in stone—the Cathedral."

Miss Harding: "A rock in the middle of a melancholy valley, and on the top of the rock a city, so deathly silent as to give the impression of being uninhabited—every window closed—grass growing in the dusty grey streets—a Capuchin friar crosses the piazza—a priest descends from a closed carriage in front of an hospital, all in black, and with a decrepit old servant to open the door; here a tower against the white rain-sodden clouds—there a clock, slowly striking the hour, and suddenly at the end of a street a miracle—the Duomo!"

It is a translator's minute touches that show whether he has or has not style. In the first version the picture is seen, in the second it is not. Miss Harding's translation may be more close to the original, but it is false to the spirit of poetry. A trifling difference which, repeated everywhere, darkens D'Annunzio's world thereby, as with a pane of opaque glass! But, further, this muddying the colour and blurring the form of D'Annunzio's creation is, we think, curiously symbolical of the average Anglo-Saxon's attitude towards art. In certain passages of the novel where an Anglo-Saxon would see "immorality," "sensuality," a Latin would see beauty—of a kind. And why? Because the artist's intensity of sensation carries along with it an æsthetic current of joy, which physiologically is a vindication of the feeling, and therefore his delight in the senses is a law of his being, a morality to himself. But the Puritan, who is not so affected by pleasure, has not this inner law of joy in his sensations, even when they are more delicate, and therefore his moral judgments on art often prove that he is affected by a non-beautiful sequence of sensations. And so the opaque translation before us is, in reality, typical of that Anglo-Saxon judgment which, having annihilated beauty by not seeing joyously the form of its ideas or emotions, pronounces a solemn judgment—in fact, on itself!

We do not, of course, deny that D'Annunzio oversteps here and there the line of good taste in art, or that at times, in a brutal mood, he passes into indecency. And we do not deny that certain passages cannot be put in English, and that other of his scenes would try the skill of a master of English, and thereby be to him a triumph. But, seriously, we do affirm that the Italian's world is primarily one of beauty, though at times he comes near ugliness; and that on the translator's fine perception of style depends whether D'Annunzio's world shall be seen or not. We say, at times D'Annunzio's work passes into ugliness, and it is precisely on the point—how far has he shown great æsthetic power in constructing his peculiar world of beauty, decadent passion and dilettanteism?—that his rank in literature depends. What is his world? It is the word-tapestry of a poet's weaving—a poet whose musical cadences and delicate analysis of subtle emotions seem to float over and around a world of nature's beauty, a world brutal with appetite, with ugly fact and morbid impulse. D'Annunzio's world is a bizarre fusing of many conflicting influences—Pagan, Christian, scientific—interacting on his delicate temperament, weary of so much richness. And thus the critical question to ask is, has not he assimilated too much? It is his quality to assimilate everything, and thus in a single novel, side by side with a pagan joy in voluptuousness, comes a scientific analysis of the melancholy strife between flesh and spirit; and the triumph of the animal in man over his higher nature is mourned by the Christian in him, studied à la Russe, and conveyed in musical prose of poetic beauty! For ourselves we think that his æsthetic sense has been rather squandered over boudoir scenes and "high life," and that unless he purifies it of dilettanteism and bends it to a higher creative ideal—as perhaps he has done in his latest romance, Le Vergini delle Rocce—his great gift as a poet will scarcely redeem his strangeness to future ages. Which triumphs, the decadent or the poet?

The question of D'Annunzio's attitude towards what is ugly in life, as we have said, determines his rank. Dostoevski is greatest as an artist when his world, the world of Crime and Punishment, is wholly morbid. But D'Annunzio has a certain air of æsthetic affectation at times, which contrasts badly with the Russian's intensity of purpose. Both L'Innocente (L'Intrus) and Il Piaceve (L'Enfant de Volupté) set forth the struggle of a man's higher and lower nature, a man who cannot shake off corrupting influences, and thereby loses his world of pure delight. Many scenes in L'Enfant de Volupté are painted with a warmth of colour that would disquiet St. Anthony, but the contrast between the heroines—the spiritual Marie and the sensual Hélène—is rendered with some delicacy of moral feeling. D'Annunzio's hero, it may be remarked, is the Modern Youth, standing not between virtue and pleasure, but between pleasure and pleasure plus virtue, who in trying to grasp everything loses his mistress, his soul, his life. As the hero, André, loses both mistresses in L'Enfant de Volupté, the novel, indeed, may be said to have a moral tendency! L'Intrus is a graver and more sombre work. It shows Russian influence, and is an able study of a man's senseless, inevitable infidelity. The exquisite portrait of the wife, Juliane, is certainly from the hand of a true artist. Les Vierges aux Rochers is a most dreamy piece of symbolistic poetry. We think D'Annunzio here touches his highest point. Here is no bizarre mixture of many influences which cannot go deep enough to create a sense of an organic, artistic whole, but, on the contrary, the artist's pure impulse towards beauty gives the romance a sense of strength and unity.

We have, we think, said enough to show that to call D'Annunzio "immoral" is worthy only of Mr. Comstock. If the English reader finds D'Annunzio's men too effeminate, affected, or corrupt for his taste, let him be thankful for the Italian's pictures—most exquisitely wrought—which go so far to establish the Anglo-Saxon in his own estimation, and enlarge his conception of life. Nothing, indeed, is more striking than the ingratitude with which our nationality resents the introduction to it of foreign worlds which do not echo our own limited tastes, business standards, moral ideas. If we are insensible to the beauty of D'Annunzio's world, it can only be because we hold art too low. And that is, perhaps, the reason why Mr. Heinemann and Miss Harding between them have presented The Triumph of Death to English eyes through a sheet of smoked glass.

CLARENCE MANGAN.

The Life and Writings of James Clarence Mangan. By D. J. O'Donoghue. (Edinburgh: Patrick Geddes & Colleagues.)

THE greatest Irish poet who has ever sung in English died half a century ago, and has at last found his first and final chronicler. Famous men, such as Mitchel and Sir Charles Gavan Duffy, have given us glimpses of him, and others less distinguished have done their parts, but Mr. O'Donoghue's work is the first to aim at completeness; and it is final because there is little or no hope of recovering from the obscure past anything of value concerning Mangan that has escaped the researches of Mr. O'Donoghue. For, as Irish men of letters know well, Mr. O'Donoghue's gift of investigation, his instinct in inquiry, his talent for amassing and remembering facts, amount to something very like genius; and when, as emphatically here, his labours are of love, when patriotism and compassion add their ardour to his spirit of research, we may be very sure that his work is as complete as sad circumstances allow Mangan's biography to be. Mr. O'Donoghue tells his story with excellent sympathy, and at the same time with sobriety; and thus, though it is his industry that we most admire, we are by no means without admiration for his art. Mangan would be the last person to appreciate the accuracy and the industry, but he would—perhaps does—feel grateful for the sympathy and the skill.

No one can thoroughly realise Mangan's life without some knowledge of Dublin; not knowledge of Ireland at large, for Mangan had practically none, save by reading; but knowledge of that Dublin "dear and dirty," splendid and squalid, fascinating and repulsive, which was Mangan's from the cradle to the grave. There is there an unique piteousness of poverty and decay, a stricken and helpless look, which seem appropriate to the scene of the doomed poet's life. It was a life of dreams and misery and madness, yet of a self-pity which does not disgust us, and of a weakness which is innocent; it seems the haunted, enchanted life of one drifting through his days in a dream of other days and other worlds, golden and immortal. He wanders about the rotting alleys and foul streets, a wasted ghost, with the "Dark Rosaleen" on his lips, and a strange light in those mystical blue eyes, which burn for us yet in the reminiscences of all who ever saw him and wrote of the unforgettable sight. And, with all his remoteness, all his wretchedness, there was a certain grimly pathetic and humorous common-sense about him, which saved him from being too angelic a drunkard, too ethereal a vagabond, too saintly a wastrel. Hard as it is to believe at all times, he was an intelligible, an explicable human being, and not some "twy-natured" thing, some city faun. All the accounts and descriptions of him, collected so indefatigably and quoted so aptly by Mr. O'Donoghue, show us a man whom external circumstances, however prosperous and bright, would not have prevailed upon to be as other men are. As has been said of other poets, "he hungered for better bread than can be made of wheat," and would have contrived to lose his way, to be "homesick for eternity," despite all earthly surroundings of happiness and ease. Sensitive in the extreme, he shrank back into the shadows at a breath, not merely of unkindness, but of unpleasantness; he shuddered and winced, blanched and withered away, at a touch of the east wind. His miseries, which dictated to him that agonised poem, "The Nameless One," were primarily of his own creation, realities of his own imagination, and, therefore, the more terrible; they were the agonies of a child in the dark, quivering for fear of that nothing which is to him so infinitely real and dread a "something." For Mangan's childhood, boyhood, first youth, though hard and harsh, were not unbearably so; many a poet has borne far worse, and survived it unscathed. A rough and stern, rather than cruel, father; office drudgery with coarse companions; stunted, but not insufficient means; a general absence of congenial sympathy and friendship—these are rude facts to face; but even a poet, all nerves and feeling, need not find life a hell because of them, the world a prison, all things an utter darkness of despair. And even Mangan's failure in love, whatever be the truth of that obscure event, would hardly account, by its own intrinsic sadness, for his abysmal melancholy and sense of doom. Further, when we find him in true depths of actual woefulness, the bondsman of opium and alcohol, living in the degradations of poverty, enchained, as St. Augustine has it, sua ferrea voluntate, by the iron chain of his unwilling will, yet it is not his fall that haunts him, but that sense of undeserved early torments and tortures, enfolding him as with a black impenetrable cloud. It was not only the lying imaginativeness of the opium eater or of the drunkard that made him tell stories of fearful things which never happened; nor was it merely his artistic instinct toward presenting his life, not quite as it was, but as it might have been, nor yet his elvish turn for a little innocent deception. Beyond a doubt, his temperament, immeasurably delicate and sensitive, received from its early experiences a shock, a shaking, which left him tremulous, impotent, a leaf in the wind, upon the water. His first sufferings in life were but the child's imagined ghosts; but the "shock to the system," to his imaginative, sensitive temperament, was lasting, and he lived in a penumbra of haunting memories and apprehensions. In Browning's words, it was:

"The glimmer of twilight,
Never glad confident morning again!"

Life had struck him in his affections and emotions: he could never recover from the blow, could but magnify it in memory and imagination, conceive himself marked by it, go apart from the world to hide it, go astray in the world to forget it. That was Mangan's tragedy.

But he did not suffer it to cloud his poetry with darkness of expression at any time, nor, at its finest times, with darkness of theme or thought. It forced him into writing a deal of unworthy clever stuff, and a deal of excellent work far below his highest ability and achievement. But not a faint shadow of unhappiness dims the radiance of his "Dark Rosaleen," its adoring, flashing, flying, laughing rapture of patriotic passion. It is among the great lyrics of the world, one of the fairest and fiercest in its perfection of imagery and rhythm; it is the chivalry of a nation's faith struck on a sudden into the immortality of music. And Mangan's next glory, his version of "O'Hussey's Ode to the Maguire," is no less perfect upon its lower, yet lofty, plane. A certain Elizabethan poet has this pleasing stanza upon the Irish of his day, as he viewed them:

"The Irish are as civil, as
The Russies in their kind;
Hard choice, which is the best of both,
Each bloodie, rude, and blind."

The "Ode to the Maguire" gives the noble side to the question, a ferocity that is heroic, in lines of the largest Homeric simplicity and greatness; and as the "Dark Rosaleen" sings the devotion of a nation to their country in oppression, so this chants that of a follower to his chief in defeat; but in neither is there the note of despair, in both the note of glory. Other of Mangan's poems upon Ireland, original or based upon Gaelic originals, have a like lustrous quality: he loved to lose himself in Ireland's past and future, and thereby made poems which will have helped to make the future Ireland. Upon such work as this he left no mark of his mental miseries and physical dishonours; indeed, his poems, though often tragic with sorrow, or trivial with levity, or both at once, are always pure and clear in every sense; in poetry, at least, he lived an innocent life. Beside his own Ireland there were two chief worlds in which he loved to wander: the moonlit forests of German poetry, often painfully full of "moonshine," and the glowing gardens or glittering deserts of the Eastern, the "Saracenic" world. He wished, half-whimsically and half-seriously, to make his readers believe that he knew some dozen languages; certain it is that he had a strong philological instinct, and much of that aptitude for acquiring a vast half-knowledge of many things not commonly known, which he shares with the very similar, and dissimilar, Poe. But his "translations" from many tongues, even when, as in the case of German, he knew his originals well, were wont to be either frank paraphrases or imitations, often to his originals' advantage. Some of his work in this kind is admirable and of a cunning art—the work of a poet to whom rhythm and metre, with all technical difficulties and allurements, are passionately interesting; yet we regret the time spent upon most of them, and lost to his own virgin Muse. He seems to have felt that he was content to earn the wages, upon which he lived from hand to mouth, by such secondary work, as though he despaired of attempting, or preferred to keep in sacred silence, his higher song. He has given us little of that. A selection from his poems can be bought for sixpence, and one could spare, may be, a hundred out of its 144 pages. But what remains is, in its marvellous moments of entire success, greater than anything that Ireland has yet produced in English verse, from Goldsmith to Mr. Yeats.

We do not endeavour to summarise Mr. O'Donoghue's volume; from Mangan's birth in 1803 to his painful and merciful death in 1849, if there be anything joyous or pleasant to record the reader forgets it in the woes and glooms that precede and follow. He had true friends, he could talk with them brilliantly, books were ever a solace and delight to him; little as he cared for fame, he knew that he deserved it, and he loved his art. His curious humour, chiefly at his own expense, was sometimes more than a Heinesque jesting, and shows him with sudden phases or fits of good spirits. But, for the rest, his life is a record of phantasmal lejections and cloudings of soul, as though he were rejected of God and abandoned of man. At almost every page, a reader fresh to his name and fame might expect the next to chronicle a suicide's end, like those of Chatterton and Gerard de Nerval; and we are grateful to Mr. O'Donoghue, that with all his passion for facts and for information, he has not striven to give us a "psychological study" in dipsomania or melancholia or neurasthenia, in the "modern manner." What he has done is to preservé, and to discover, all the essential facts that can be ascertained about a great Irishman and a great poet, of whom no adequate account existed; and he has done it with entire success. Poor Mangan is here with all his weakness and woes, but gently, reverently touched. The book is infinitely sad, but never abjectly or repulsively so. Here is the foredoomed dreamer, of fragile body and delicate soul, the innocent victim of himself, about whom we know much that is frail and pitiable, nothing that is base and mean: the voice, often tremulous in lamentation and broken by weeping, from which rose and rang the very glory and rapture of Irish song.

"Him grant a grave to, ye pitying noble,
Deep in your bosoms: there let him dwell!
He, too, had tears for all souls in trouble
Here, and in Hell."

THE BLACK MONKS.

The English Black Monks of St. Benedict. By the Rev. Ethelred Taunton. (Nimmo.)

In The English Black Monks of St. Benedict the Reverend Ethelred Taunton, a secular priest, offers us an enthusiastic—if somewhat desultory—survey of the order's fortunes during the thirteen centuries of its English history. Mr. Taunton's literary style is circumdatus varietate—full of surprises; he is not a good writer, but he is saturated with his subject, and these peculiarities serve at least to obviate any inconvenience that might have arisen from his erratic use and neglect of quotation marks.

To the modern world, habituated to the aggressive centralisation of the contemporary Roman Church, and particularly to the methods of the Society of Jesus, the Benedictine constitution seems astonishingly loose and vague. The Jesuit order came into existence primarily as a fighting force at a moment when the fabric painfully upheaved upon the rock of Peter seemed to be tottering to its fall, when whole nations were falling away from their allegiance. The Society had a soldier for its founder; its disciplinary bonds were devised to constitute it a great corporate machine which, by a touch upon the lever at Rome, could be directed and regulated with the nicety of a Nasmyth hammer. In the churches, in the schools, at the universities, at the Court, the sons of St. Ignatius were every moment under a straiter than military discipline; a discipline at the same time elastic and adaptable, which left them lightly equipped of ceremonial obligations and free to exercise for the good of the world the accomplishments which so many of them had learned from its intercourse. They were tried and trained men all of them, to whom hope meant the restoration of religious order, religious order the subjugation of the world afresh to the Holy See; and this work, none ever doubted, Providence had raised up their order pre-eminently to accomplish. But if the Society was an ecclesiastical army; the black monks were a religious horde.

The primitive Benedictine made a three-fold vow: of stability (that is, to remain attached to his monastery), of conversion of life, and of obedience to the abbot. Except for a similarity in the general course of life in the various monasteries, springing in part from the identity of the vow prescribed, and a certain association in offices of hospitality and mutual charity (as in praying for each other's dead), the monastery of St. Augustine at Canterbury, for instance, had no closer connexion with St. Alban's or Glastonbury than has the Birmingham Oratory to-day with the Oratory at Brompton. The process of centralisation was begun by the Fourth Council of the Lateran, which decreed:

"In each province or kingdom let all the abbots and priors of houses which are not abbeys meet together (saving episcopal rights) every three years in some convenient monastery, and there hold a chapter. . . . Whatever is decided and is approved of by the four presidents is to be held as binding upon all."

The English monks, in enforcing the decree, followed the line which divided the provinces of York and Canterbury. Later, by the bull Benedictina (1334), the two chapters were united. The internal discipline of the houses was further regulated by the same document. For example, it was ordained:

"One monk in twenty must be sent to the Universities for higher studies, and he is to have a fixed allowance. Superiors, under penalties, have to seek advice as to whom they send to the University. . . . In monasteries all priests are to celebrate [mass] at least twice or thrice a week. Those who are not priests confess at least once a week and communicate once a month."

All legislation had for its end the spiritual welfare of the various communities and of the individual souls which constituted them. The business of the monks was the direct service of God by the divine office and by the sacrifice of the mass. The day began at Westminster Abbey, to take an example, at 2 a.m., with the matin office or night hours. Three or four cowled brethren to every gorgeous folio, whose pages twinkled with its gilt under the shining of the rare candles that dotted the range of stalls—picture it!—and fancy the rhythmic roll of the sombre melodies that flooded the choir and overflowed into the darkness of nave and aisles. Lauds—five psalms of praise, with hymn and Benedictus—concluded the night office, and the brethren trooped back in silence to their pallets. At five the bell sounded for the first of the day-hours, prime; after which the community assembled in the chapter-house for confession of offences against the rule of the house. The penance was of a corporal kind. At six was celebrated the short chapter-mass of our Lady. Till nine the monks studied in the cloister under close supervision; then came the second day-hour, terce, followed by the High Mass, the central act of the day. Sext was sung at its close. Eleven was the hour of the first meal, except upon fast days, when it was postponed. The quality of the food varied at different houses and at different times. The quantity seems to have been ample. The drink was cider or ale, and wine was served upon feast-days, at least in those houses which had vineyards of their own either in this country or, as was often the case, in France.

The cloister was the workshop. Here some would be poring over folios, others would be transcribing or illuminating or embroidering. Each had his allotted place and work. No voice disturbed the silence; necessary communications must be made by signs. On Saturday the cloister was the scene of the weekly washing of feet, and it was here that, at intervals of ten days or so, the brethren painfully shaved each other's faces and heads.

To continue the horarium, none, the last of the "little hours," was sung at three. Work was resumed, and continued till six, when vespers were solemnly sung. A collation, consisting of a manchet of bread with a drink of beer; compline; and by eight to bed in the common dortor, which was sometimes open, sometimes divided into cells or cubicles. For recreation there was the "frayter," or common-room; and Mr. Taunton gives a description of the relaxation there enjoyed in the following depressing terms:

"It was generally in the afternoons they met here; and merry and bright would it be; for in that monastery [no monastery in particular] was one Dom Edward, a merry wight, full of jokes and stories mirthful [all this is Mr. Taunton's mirthful imagination]. At times of recreation he would amuse the brethren by some droll conceit or merry quip; a certain little gesture of his lent a point to his story, and a twinkle of his eye betrayed the coming jest. But withal, be it remembered, he was a grave doctor, learned in divinity and much looked up to; for had he not been to Rome itself, on business connected with the abbey, and seen its wonders; and had [he not] many tales to tell of the monasteries he had visited and edified?"

And so on.

Order, thrift, concentration of purpose, have the promise of this life as well as of that which is to come, and at their zenith the great abbeyes were among the most important institutions in the country.

"Their influence was felt not only in the neighbourhood of each monastery—for great landlords, such as the monks were, will always have power—but also in Parliament. There the abbots of the black monks alone outnumbered even the bishops; for no less than twenty-eight of them sat as barons of the realm, to some eighteen bishops. And there are respects in which they were more in touch with the common feeling of the country than even the bishops; for . . . the abbot was, with the exception of his attendance at Parliament, almost always living in the midst of the people."

Their growth had been gradual, their fall was abrupt. Two years sufficed to sweep away all those great institutes, and to alienate the wealth which represented the careful husbanding of centuries. But in effect their work was done. The ancient Benedictine spirit must be left behind upon the threshold of the modern world. In the modern representatives of the order a certain pride of spiritual ancestry survives, it is true; Westminster and Rivaulx have their legitimist pretenders; but whatever influence the nineteenth century Benedictine exercises upon the contemporary world must be attributed to qualities that are not the peculiar fruit of the Benedictine training, or to methods and an organisation learnt from their great rivals who sprang up to meet the needs of the sixteenth century.

CHANGE IN COREA.

Korea. By Mrs. Bishop (Isabella L. Bird). 2 vols. (John Murray.)

WITH the newspapers crammed with the movements of European fleets in Chinese waters, this comes as a very timely book. Part of it is occupied with Mrs. Bishop's visits to Corea—or as she prefers to write it, Korea—before the war. This is the Korea already made known to us by the Hon. George Curzon's Problems of the East, and Mr. Savage-Landor's Cho-sen. We here read again of the glories of the Kur-dong, or royal procession, of the fighting Korean ponies, of the curious custom in Korean cities of closing the streets at night to all but women, and of the love of Korean men for the top-knots and crinoline hats with which they consider their national existence to be in some way bound up. But these matters, though accurately observed and cleverly described by Mrs. Bishop, are not new to us. The contrary is the case with the kaleidoscopic changes in Korean manners and customs which have followed each other in quick succession since the outbreak of the war between China and Japan. A new Korea has, in fact, arisen, of which we have hitherto heard only by meagre telegrams unintelligible to most English newspaper readers, and it is this which occupies most of Mrs. Bishop's two volumes.

Before the war Korea seems to have been a China in little. Governed by a king who, though absolute over his subjects, yet owned the Emperor of China as his suzerain, and a mandarin class who looked on the tiller of the soil as a lemon to be squeezed, her people displayed all the vices of the Chinese without their industry and enterprise. But in June, 1894, Japan, in pursuance of a plan which, according to Mrs. Bishop, she had been maturing for years, suddenly landed troops at Chemulpo, assaulted the capital, captured the king, and soon after declared war against China. Then followed the driving out of the Chinese from the country and its subjugation by the Japanese army, whose discipline and behaviour towards the civilian population are described by Mrs. Bishop as being beyond praise. Inspired, as she thinks, by our example in Egypt, the Japanese set about governing Korea according to Western ideas through the captured king, who became a mere puppet in their hands. On Mrs. Bishop's second visit, in 1895, she found that the main roads had already become safe for Europeans, all allegiance to China had been solemnly renounced, a paper constitution had been promulgated, and the King and Queen had made such progress in European manners that they told Mrs. Bishop that "England is our best friend." Then came the signature of peace between China and Japan, and it seemed as if Korea, with its twelve millions of inhabitants, were going to be opened to the civilising influence of English and American missionaries, of Manchester cotton goods, and of Birmingham hardware. But those who thought so reckoned without their Oriental. Six months later the Kun-ren-tai, or Japanese-drilled native levies, rushed the Palace, murdered the Queen, and took prisoner the King and the Crown Prince. All this took place at the instigation of a newly appointed Japanese Envoy, who was promptly recalled and tried by his own government. The Kun-ren-tai, however, remained in possession of the Palace, and contrived to reign for months in the King's name, pressing forward reforms of different kinds with apparently even greater vigour than the Japanese. Increasing in audacity, they at length went a step too far, and dared to lay hands on the national top-knot. The usurpers not only cropped the heads of themselves and their royal prisoners, but issued a decree ordering the Koreans to lay aside their absurd hats and to cut their hair. This proved to be more than even Korean apathy could stand, and revolts broke out all over the country, while the King managed to escape to the Russian Legation, where eighty marines and one field-gun proved a sufficient defence. The Kun-ren-tai were put down, and some of the Queen's murderers brought to justice. But the change in the game had thrown the ball into Russian hands. To the Russians Mrs. Bishop does ample justice, and gives them much credit for the improvement they have effected in the lot of the Korean emigrants who have settled in Russian Manchuria, and for their disinterested acquiescence in the appointment of Dr. McLeavy Brown—whom they are now said to be trying to remove—to the control of Korean finance. But it is plain from what she says that Russian influence throughout the kingdom has everywhere supplanted Japanese, and she thinks that the Korean troops, whose Japanese drill-instructors have been changed for Russian ones, may prove of service in the struggle which most Eastern travellers see impending between Russia and Japan. Meanwhile, these changes seem to have worked nothing but good to Korea. In the capital, stone houses and brick-paved streets, along which bicyclists scorch, have replaced the mud huts, filthy lanes, and pack bulls described by the English travellers of 1894. Although many of these reforms are the work of Dr. McLeavy Brown, England does not seem in any hurry to profit by them. Not a single British trading ship was last year to be seen in Korean waters, there were hardly any British subjects in the three treaty ports, and very few articles of British origin imported into the country. The main cause of this, according to Mrs. Bishop, is the obstinacy of our manufacturers, who will make no attempt to meet the conditions of the native consumer. We fancy we have heard similar complaints before.

Mrs. Bishop's book is fully equipped with illustrations, maps, and appendices, giving all useful particulars of the statistics and trade of Korea. We wish we had space to do justice to the determination and courage with which her journeys were conducted under circumstances calculated to appal the strongest nerves. Besides suffering from a broken arm caused by the upsetting of a native cart, and from fever caught during the floods in Manchuria, she had to sleep night after night in the over-heated rooms, only a few feet square, of filthy Korean inns, swarming with vermin and rats, and foul with all manner of rottenness. That a delicately brought up Englishwoman should brave such hardships in the cause of science is a fact of which we should be proud, and she has certainly not been over-rewarded by the Fellowship of the Royal Geographical Society.

THE PHILISTINE ABROAD.

Little Journeys to the Homes of Famous Women.
(Putnam's Sons.)

No author's name is printed on the title-page of this book, but an advertisement at the end states it to be the work of Mr. Elbert Hubbard. We propose to notice it not for its merits, but as the specimen of how books should not be made. Mr. Hubbard is an American, volatile and youthful. He has neither reverence nor dignity. He is a stranger alike to the motions of surprise and of enthusiasm, maintaining wherever he may be a dead level of acquisitiveness and receptivity, and describing his adventures, such as they are, in an impertinent variety of journalese that maintains an equally dead level of commonplace. And this observer presumes to instruct his fellow Americans concerning the homes and customs, temperament and work, of illustrious women: Christina Rossetti and Mary Lamb, Mrs. Browning and Charlotte Brontë, Jane Austen and the Empress Josephine! That he should do so in the columns of a newspaper in America would be reasonable enough; but that his glib "copy" should afterwards attain the distinction of publication in book form in this country, that is a mistake.

Just now Mr. Mackenzie Bell's memoir of Christina Rossetti is being read. Mr. Hubbard's Little Journey to Miss Rossetti's home will therefore be as good a one as we can pick from the dozen to illustrate his method.

He begins with some reflections upon that "sporadic stuff" genius. Then, after recording the births of the four children of the elder Rossetti, within a space of three years and ten months, Mr. Hubbard says:

"The mother of this quartette was a sturdy little woman, with sparkling wit and rare good sense. She used to remark that her children were all of a size, and that it was no more trouble to bring up four than one, a suggestion brown in here gratis for the benefit of young married folks in the hope that they will mark and inwardly digest. In point of well-ballasted, all-round character, fit for earth or heaven, one of the four Rossetti children was equal to their parents. They all seem to have had nerves outside of their clothes. Perhaps this was because they were brought up in London. London is no place for children—nor grown people either; I often think birds and children belong in the country. Paved streets, stone dewalks, smoke-begrimed houses, signs reading 'Keep off the grass,' prying policemen, and zealous ash-box inspectors are insulting things to greet the gaze of the little immigrants fresh from God. Small wonder is it, as they grow up, that they take to drink and drugs, seeking in these a respite from the rattle of heels and the never-ending cramp of unkind condition. But nature understands herself: the second generation, city-bred, is impotent."

Follows a short dissertation on Bædeker, jaunty and brisk, and then a long one on Bloomsbury lodging-houses, as evidence of the parts played by environment in the Evolution of a Soul, and by way of introduction to Charlotte-street, the home of the Rossettis for several years—a "location" not far from Gower-street, says Mr. Hubbard. Then some talk with the present landlady of Number 38, ending in the engagement of a back room for seven-and-sixpence a week. On learning that her guest was an American, the landlady asked if he knew the McIntyres that lived in Michigan, which Mr. Hubbard parried by asking if she knew the Rossettis. "Oh, yes; I know Mr. William and Miss Christina. They came here together a year ago, and told me they were born here." The chronicle passes next to Number 50, Charlotte-street, the second home of the family.

"This is the place where Dante Gabriel and a young man named Holman Hunt had a studio, and where another young artist by the name of William Morris came to visit them; and here was born The Germ, that queer little chipmunk magazine in which first appeared 'Hand and Soul' and 'The Blessed Damozel,' written by Dante Gabriel when eighteen, the same age at which Bryant wrote Thanatopsis. William Bell Scott used to come here too. Scott was a great man in his day. He had no hair on his head or face, not even eyebrows. Every follicle had grown away and quit. But Mr. Scott was quite vain of the shape of his head, for well he might be, since several choice sonnets had been combed out of it."

Next, an amusing personal experience of the last surviving member of the family, Mr. William Michael Rossetti. Mr. Hubbard called upon him.

"He was most courteous and polite. He worships at the shrine of Whitman, Emerson, and Thoreau, and regards America as the spot from whence must come the world's intellectual hope. 'Great thoughts, like beautiful flowers, are produced by transplanting and the commingling of many elements.' These are his words, and the fact that the Rossetti genius is the result of transplanting need not weigh in the scale as 'gainst the truth of the remark. Shortly after this call, at an Art Exhibition, I again met William Michael Rossetti. I talked with him some moments—long enough to discover that he was not aware we had ever met. This caused me to be rather less in love with the Rossetti genius than I was before."

The five pages that follow belong partly to Dante Gabriel Rossetti, and partly to an irrelevant photographer, a friend of the author; and at last Christina is reached.

"Christina had the faculty of seizing beautiful moments, exalted feelings, sublime emotions, and working them up into limpid song that comes echoing to us as from across soft seas. In all of her lines there is a half-sobbing undertone—the sweet minor chord that is ever present in the songs of the Choir Invisible, whose music is the gladness as well as the sadness of the world."

A brief return to Dante Gabriel Rossetti, sick at Birchington-on-Sea, the date of his death given wrongly by ten years, and the Little Journey ends. Very properly does Mr. Hubbard preface his book with the caution: "No attempt has been made to tell all about the subject—there is more can be said!" Yes, and less.

To the American who cares nothing for Christina Rossetti's work and character Mr. Hubbard's essay may be a readable and congenial introduction; but any one already familiar with her poetry, and conscious of her sensitive nature and love of secluded and austere life, will resent Mr. Hubbard's loud tourist-suit and bowler-hat methods. Christina Rossetti is, of course, the extreme case. One does not so much mind Mr. Hubbard's jocularity when it is applied to certain others, although it is only with an effort that any intelligent person on this side of the Atlantic can read him patiently.

LAY SERMONS.

Practical Ethics. By Henry Sidgwick.
(Swan Sonnenschein.)

THIS is a book of a type which will probably become increasingly frequent. It consists principally of essays and addresses read before one or other of the societies which have sprung up of late years for "the promotion of ethical culture" and the study of ethical problems on a non-theological basis. Many serious people have long ago given up attending sermons, but they are none the less desirous to act rightly, and anxious to know what right conduct is. To this knowledge such books as Prof. Sidgwick's are important contributions. They are indeed of the nature of lay sermons, disquisitions on moot points of the practical life by competent laymen, who have given to ethical subjects deliberate and trained consideration. Their aim is, of course, primarily practical rather than speculative. Prof. Sidgwick is the best known living representative of the school of ethical doctrine known as Utilitarianism; but here he lays aside doctrine, and is unconcerned with speculative controversy. As to the fundamental basis of ethics, philosophers will probably differ until Doomsday; but their differences do not prevent them, or prevent mankind in general, from arriving at a pretty harmonious conception as to what kind of conduct is properly to be called moral. It is with the nature of that conception and the rules in which it can be formulated, the principles of right conduct, the media axiomata of ethics, that Prof. Sidgwick has here to do.

The nature of Prof. Sidgwick's audience gives him a certain advantage over the ordinary writer of sermons. Conduct may fall short of the moral standard either because the agent does not know what is right, or, knowing, does not will what is right. The latter, one fears, is most usually the case, and to removing this impediment of will the energies of the pulpit are naturally in the main directed. Professor Sidgwick, however, was entitled, at least in courtesy, to assume that the will to act rightly was already present in his hearers. Why, else, should they take the trouble to attend the meetings of an ethical society? He was able, therefore, to dispense with rhetoric directed to the will, and to devote himself to the more congenial task of exploring and discussing certain imperfections of moral knowledge, obscurities and perplexities of the ethical consciousness. For the harmonious conception of the nature of moral action of which we spoke is not, of course, a complete one. There are questions, upon the fringes of ethics, as to which the most diverse views prevail, questions even of every-day conduct, as to which even the most right-minded agent may well flounder for want of proper guidance. It is to such questions that Professor Sidgwick addresses himself. Some of them are questions of divided and conflicting duties, problems of casuistry proper, others are rather questions which the always progressive moral consciousness of humanity has not as yet quite brought within its scope—as to which it has not as yet declared and formulated itself.

For ourselves we may say that we have found Professor Sidgwick's discourses extremely helpful and extremely illuminating. He has many of the qualities which go to make a good moral teacher—a moral teacher, we mean, as distinct from a moral force. He is clear-headed, obviously very much in earnest, yet not without humour, and above all markedly judicious, almost painfully careful to see all round his subject and to give every point of view its due weight. We do not always agree with his conclusions, but at least they are always tenable; and, whether we agree or not, his lucid, temperate discussions are always an admirable stimulus to thought. So much for Prof. Sidgwick's general handling of his book; we have only space for a few remarks as to the individual subjects dealt with. The first two essays are introductory, setting forth the objects of ethical societies, their scope and possible value. The next two deal with the ethics of war and arbitration, and with the principle, more often acted upon than avowed, that states, in their dealings with each other, are exempt from the ordinary laws of justice, veracity, and good faith which are universally held to govern the relations of individual man with individual man. Machiavelli is discussed, but not Nietzsche, though one fancies that Nietzsche's doctrine of "master-morality" must have been in the writer's mind throughout. With the sophism that a human being is ethically responsible to the State of which he forms a part, but not ethically responsible to mankind in general, Prof. Sidgwick makes short work:

"If everything is permitted in national struggles for the sake of the nation, it will be easy to think that everything is permitted in party-struggles or class-struggles for the sake of the party or class. The tendencies of modern democracy are running strongly towards the increase of corporate sentiments and the habits of corporate action in industrial groups and classes, and so towards dividing civilised humanity by lines that cut across the lines separating nations; and history certainly does not justify us in confidently expecting that when the rules of private morality are no longer held to apply to public action, patriotism will still keep class feeling and party feeling within the bounds required by national peace and well-being. . . . In mediæval Italy, whereas in the twelfth century the chronicle ran simply 'Parma fights Piacenza,' before the end of the thirteenth it ran, 'Parma, with the exiles from Piacenza, fights Piacenza.'"

Then come a pair of essays dealing with the right and wrong of religious conformity and clerical veracity, and Prof. Sidgwick rolls over and confounds an incautious clerical controversialist who seems to have committed himself to the position that a clergyman is justified in publicly and solemnly asserting his belief in creeds which contain statements that he holds to be false. To many readers this will be the most interesting part of the book, and it certainly affords the most entertaining reading. We should not care to have to measure swords with Prof. Sidgwick. The last essay in the book, on Unreasonable Action, is perhaps psychological rather than practical in its character; but in the two which precede it, on Luxury and The Pursuit of Culture, Prof. Sidgwick approaches a subject which has wide and far-reaching implications. We are bound to say that some of his conclusions here seem to us highly disputable. For instance:

"I think it may be said that the promotion of culture, in one form or another, is more and more coming to be recognised as the main moral justification for the luxurious expenditure of the rich."

Well, it all depends on what you mean by "culture," and of course there are exceptions. But we should be inclined to say that nine-tenths of the luxurious expenditure of the rich has no relation to culture whatever, and that the other tenth is chiefly devoted to thwarting it. We do not see what other result the purchasing of bad pictures, which you do not know to be bad, or the binding of gorgeous books, which you do not intend to read, can well have. Surely culture has always flourished, and will always flourish, in spite of, and not by means of, the rich.

AMERICAN TRAITS.

Transatlantic Traits. By the Hon. Martin Morris. (Elliot Steck.)

THIS little volume, which consists of three admirably written and thoughtful essays, of which "At Sea" and "American Traits" originally appeared in the Nineteenth Century and the New Review respectively, shows a shrewdness of observation and a depth of feeling which are rare in books of travel, even when they are written by "eminent hands." Mr. Morris throughout writes with force and sincerity, and frequently with singular power and charm. He has brought to his task many excellent literary qualities, besides unflinching sincerity and a sympathy for humanity untarnished by prejudice. The essay on the people and institutions of the United States compares to its advantage with any recent work that has appeared, and certainly deserves the attention of Americans as much as M. Paul Bourget's book, or the amusing volume which Messrs. Scribner lately published, entitled America and the Americans: From a French Point of View.

It may be questioned whether an imaginary figure is conceivable incorporating the peculiarities of a people so varied as the inhabitants of the United States. The North contradicts the South, while the West gives the lie to both.

"Though American life presents a clear and effective image to the mind, this is not so much because of its strikingness in any respect as on account of its widespread monotony. The picturesque does not catch the eye, but constant repetition fixes the view."

This impression is one which the most observant travellers in America have experienced. But in spite of the near kinship and fundamental similarity existing between the English people and the Americans, yet, as Mr. Morris observes, the "two countries are as different from each other as 'a woman with a past' is from a young lady of fifteen." In America

"your grandfather's bust looks nearly as old as the Elgin marbles do here. . . . In this broad, flat, open country there are no interesting holes or corners, or nooks or crannies; there is little that is picturesque or artistic. . . . No, this is the land of the people, and of some inglorious millionaires; of cities and citizens, of stores and offices, factories and institutions, trains and trams, bells and wires . . . in short, of countless faces, facts and figures."

In other words, "the typical sights and objects in America are eminently social and economic."

"If," says Mr. Morris, "you have not a deep and sincere faith in mankind as a race, and a broad, democratic sympathy with all human efforts and struggles, keep away from this vast mob of undistinguished and indistinguishable people. It is but a colourless crowd of barren existence to the dilettante, a poisonous field of clover to the cynic."

These reflections enable us to realise how differently America impresses different observers. The satirist and the philosopher arrive at contradictory conclusions. No one without a genuine love of humanity will derive profit from these crude but vigorous social and political conditions, some of which are still in the experimental stage. "No wonder the people 'guess' most things," writes Mr. Morris; "the whole country is one immense framework of guesses."

Mr. Morris is inclined to disparage the boasted "culture" of American women. It is conspicuous, he thinks, chiefly owing to the absence of intellectual attainments in the men.

"A lady who has read enough of Ruskin or of Herbert Spencer to prate about them ignorantly seems a prodigy of learning to a man who has never heard of them. . . . Conversation at a party is often nothing but a lecture from an American girl."

The author of America and the Americans is still more severe on her. He grew very weary of the word "culture."

"I know," writes this pungent observer, "men and women in France, in Russia, in Italy, who speak and read half a dozen languages, who know and have learnt much from distinguished people all over the world, who have gone through the hard continental and university training, and who do not dream that anyone thinks them of pre-eminent culture. But here, God bless you! these women who only just know how to write their notes of invitation and their letters properly talk of culture."

Well, we abuse the word a good deal in England too.

On the subject of American journalism these two writers are also in accord. Mr. Morris describes even their best journals as a daily libel on every body and thing. Actions are never taken, simply because it is impossible to indict a whole profession. The Frenchman came to the conclusion that the stranger arriving in New York, who plunges suddenly into the newspapers, must imagine that "the population consisted of Thugs, fire-bugs, and bankrupts, who, for some unaccountable reason, spent large sums on advertising." But perhaps the finest picture of the "American spirit" in words is Mr. Rudyard Kipling's:

"Lo, imperturbable he rules,
Unkempt, disreputable, vast—
And, in the teeth of all the schools,
I—I shall save him at the last!"

This is the impression the American appears to have left on Mr. Morris, and in his Transatlantic Traits he has conveyed it with much force and admirable literary skill.

NEAT PARAPHRASES.

Poems from Horace, Catullus, and Sappho, and Other Pieces. By Edward George Harman. (Dent.)

MR. HARMAN wields a graceful and facile pen. His versions of Greek and Latin odes are pleasing exercises in a moribund art; they are full of neatly turned phrases, and witness to a considerable command of varied metre. Of course, Mr. Harman simplified his problem considerably by confining himself to paraphrase and not aiming at translation. He takes privilege to expand where he will, and reject what he will. His rendering of Horace's "Festo quid potius die" may serve for an example:

"NEPTUNE'S FEAST.

"What shall we do, my Lydè, say,
To celebrate this festal day?
See, the sun wheels to his decline,
Haste, then, 'tis time to broach the wine,
Our oldest wine shall quit its rest,
For Neptune's feast demands the best.
Neptune, the green-haired nymphs among,
We'll praise in antiphonal song;
Your lyre shall themes divide between Latona and the humes Queen.
Then, in a song, we'll celebrate
The praise of her who keeps her state
At Cnidos and the Cyclades,
Which gleam afar across the seas;
And oft-times chooseth to repair
To Paphos' sweet pellucid air,
When through the blue is borne afar
By snow-white swans her glittering car.
And last, to Night we will rehearse
A holy, high and solemn verse."

This is legitimate paraphrase, but we think that occasionally Mr. Harman carries his license too far. Thus he writes:

"Here dwells the Sibyl, here
Broad shades and pleasant greens abound,
Here, led by patient husbandry,

A thousand rills refresh the ground,
Where on the orchard's sunlit floor
Pomona sheds her bounteous store."

All this, if you please, stands for the solitary phrase, "unda mobilibus pomaria rivis." Surely the paraphrast of Horace is not called upon to paraphrase all Orelli's notes into the bargain. As with expansions, so with rejections. Mr. Harman often leaves out so much as to lose not merely the outlines, but the character of his original. To turn the "aures Capripedum Satyrorum acutas" into "listening Satyrs tame" is surely to blur the clearly visualised and thoroughly Horatian image. With the deeper poetry of Catullus and of Sappho Mr. Harman is, we think, less successful than with Horace's modish strain. But his "Vivamus, mea Lesbia, atque amemus," although he has somewhat wilfully altered the sense of the opening lines, is, on the whole, good:

"Kiss me, my love, and yet again
Kiss me, that so the eager pain
Of severance we may forget;
For when our little sun is set,
Though suns may set and rise again,
For us shall endless night remain.
Then kiss me, love, while yet we may;
Let wisdom frown so we are gay;
Kiss me, and from that honeyed store
Of kisses bring a hundred more—
A thousand kisses add to these,
And then a thousand more, nor cease
Till all the reckoning of our bliss
Is blotted out in kiss on kiss,
And envious wight may never see
The kisses thou didst give to me."

Beside this let us put, for the sake of comparison, the seventeenth century rendering, also a paraphrase, of the opening of the same ode by Thomas Campion:

"My sweetest Lesbia, let us live and love;
And though the sager sort our deeds reprove,
Let us not way them: heaven's great lampes doe dive
Into their west, and strait again revive:
But soone as once set is our little light
Then must we sleepe one ever-during night."

We venture to give two other brief specimens, by way of illustrating the variety of Mr. Harman's muse. His "Persicos Odi" is a rather happy parody:

SIR JOHN TO HIS VALET.

"I do not like your Jewish tastes,
I hate your furs and astrachan,
Melton and velvet's good enough,
Or was, to coat a gentleman.
You need not trouble to inquire
What is the latest sort of hat,
Chapman and Moore have got my size,
And yours, and can attend to that."

And we have been struck by the following, which, though modelled upon the manner of certain epigrams in the "Anthology," is not precisely a version of any one:

THE OLD GUIDE.

(As a Greek might have written it.)

"Old Hans, who fiuds his day is done,
And that no more the heights he'll scale,
That walking now where others run,
His feet must linger in the vale,
His lantern, sachel, pic, and ropes
Has hung upon a votive wall,
And down the last descent he hopes
To find his way without a fall."

A VIEW OF DE QUINCEY.

The Opium-Eater and Essays by Thomas de Quincey. With an Introduction by Richard Le Gallienne. (Nineteenth Century Classics: Ward, Lock & Co.)

THE introduction to this pretty and convenient reprint shows Mr. Le Gallienne at his best. It is modest and sympathetic, and has some felicities of expression. This, for instance, is a good little bit of appreciation, quite at the beginning.

"De Quincey is the 'scholar-gipsy' of popular mythology as Shelley and Byron make between them the ideal poet. In that mythology the poet goes for ever with wild hair and exposed throat, and the scholar is conceived in appearance as a sort of dreamy rag-and-bone man. And truly the star that is the soul of man has seldom chosen to shine in such a crazy little dusty lantern of a body as that intrusted with the genius of Thomas de Quincey. The soul seems to have thrown on its mortal vesture as carelessly as the quaint little body used hastily to clothe itself with any odd garments that chanced to be at hand."

Of course, Mr. Le Gallienne would not be Mr. Le Gallienne if he did not irritate us occasionally, and we are grateful that it is not this time by any sentimentality or vulgarity of temper, but only by the obiter dicta of his ignorance. There is certainly something of irritation in the smile with which we greet his statement that De Quincey was "one of our greatest political economists" and his careless grouping of Sir Thomas Browne along with Milton and Jeremy Taylor as one of those whose "sudden sentences and pages of impassioned prose" were rather "the sparks from their daily knife-grinding, than the work of the poet consciously aiming at beauty for beauty's sake." Surely Browne's style was as conscious and as deliberate as man's need be. Mr. Le Gallienne's version of De Quincey's retreat from Oxford is that his brilliant first day's examination "was 'merely in Latin,' and De Quincey was already weary of such easy laurels. So instead of presenting himself for the Greek examination, he quietly packed up his things the day before, and left Oxford in disgust." The usual account of the matter, and we should think the correct one, is, that De Quincey did his paper work brilliantly, and then, whether through pique or through nervousness, failed to present himself for the viva voce examination which took place some days later.

We hope that Mr. Le Gallienne is not responsible for the choice of essays to accompany the Opium-Eater in this volume. The Letters to a Young Man are well enough, and contain, in a bit of controversy with Coleridge, one of the best specimens of that humorous manner to which Mr. Le Gallienne thinks that De Quincey was too much given. But the eighty pages of Notes from the Pocket-Book of a Late Opium-Eater are really not particularly interesting bits of early nineteenth century journalism. De Quincey's best work is not of very great bulk, and if the Suspiria, the Essay on Murder Considered as one of the Fine Arts, and the three Essays on Rhetoric, Style and Language had taken the place of these Notes, we should have had it nearly all between a single pair of covers.

BRIEFER MENTION.

John Bright. By C. A. Vince. "Victorian Era Series." (Blackie & Son.)

THIS little book seems to us, in its way, a remarkable success. It is a model of what such a sketch should be—sober, well-written, with the matter well-ordered, and throughout a tone of judicial care not unmixed with enthusiasm. To most men Bright must appear as a great statesman "for the moment," a man who was right on nearly every practical question, but who was as certainly untrustworthy and even wrong whenever he passed to generalisation. He came near rivaling Burke in his oratory; but it is hard to imagine two more radically different types of mind. As a political theorist Bright's place is very low. He felt the immediate needs of the people, and expressed them with extraordinary power; but let him once exalt a particular expedient into a law of political philosophy and he became narrow and unimportant. He did a great work in his Free Trade campaign, but we cannot accept his economic dogmatism as final. His policy on education was highly valuable, but what of his view of the problem in the abstract? So, too, on the matter of foreign policy. Most of the particular acts which he condemned were no doubt worthy of condemnation, but the principles which he laid down to guide the country in her external relations would land any community in chaos. The truth is, that he was a great man of affairs, a great orator, but, as Mr. Vince well puts it, "he served his own generation rather than posterity."

To a review such as this the most important aspect of Bright is as a great master of the English tongue. The power of his speeches has been universally acknowledged, but one is apt to forget that as an epigrammatist and phrase-maker he all but rivalled Disraeli. Many have become so familiar that men have forgotten their source. "Foreign policy is simply a gigantic system of outdoor relief for the aristocracy of Great Britain"; "Dissenters are expected to manifest all the qualities spoken of in the Epistle to the Corinthians—to hope all things, to believe all things, to endure all things"; "Disraeli's notes on the Bank of Elegance"; and the description of Disraeli as the "mystery-man of politics" and "a Voltaire who wrote history far better without facts than with them," are a few examples. He invented the phrases: "Cave of Adullam," "Tory democrat," "fancy franchises," though Disraeli's comment on the last is equally effective. "Alliteration," he said, "is a popular form of language among savages. It is, I believe, the characteristic of rude and barbarous poetry; but it is not an argument in legislation."

Northanger Abbey and Persuasion. By Jane Austen. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE set of Jane Austen's novels which this volume completes does not absolutely exhaust her writings, for the two fragments, Lady Susan and The Watsons, are still copyright, having been first published as late as 1869 by Messrs. Bentley & Son. Mr. Austin Dobson has supplied scholarly introductions to Messrs. Macmillan's all but complete edition. In closing his labours Mr. Dobson gracefully corrects an error in his editing; and since the facts are interesting we quote his statement:

"In a note to the 'Introduction' to Mansfield Park the present writer announced that the first review of Miss Austen in the Quarterly was written by Sir Walter Scott, and in making this announcement he was under the impression that he was making it for the first time. Certainly, the fact was not known to Mr. Austen-Leigh, who, speaking gratefully elsewhere of Sir Walter's later praises of his aunt's work, finds fault with this particular article as inferior to Whately's. Nor does it seem to have been known to Miss Austen's most accomplished biographer, Prof. Goldwin Smith, who, after quoting Scott's commendations from the Diary, goes on to say that the Quarterly reviewed her in 1815, 'very poorly and in a doubtful strain.' Yet the information so obligingly afforded by Mr. John Murray was all the while lying perdu in a note to chap. lv. of Lockhart's Life of Scott. After explaining that he had been misled into ascribing Dr. Whately's article to his father-in-law, Lockhart adds: 'The article which Scott did contribute to the Quarterly on the novels of Miss Austen was that which the reader will find in No. XXVII. [for October, 1815]. Emma and Northanger Abbey, in particular, were great favourites of his, and he often read chapters of them to his evening circle.' If this note escaped Mr. Austen-Leigh, he unwittingly confirms its last words, for he expressly refers to his personal knowledge of the well-worn condition of Sir Walter's own copy of Miss Austen's novels at Abbotsford."

With the exception of Pride and Prejudice, which Mr. C. E. Brock illustrated, all the novels in this edition have been embellished with pen pictures by Mr. Hugh Thomson. We adhere to an opinion we have expressed that Jane Austen's stories are too true and vivid on the literary plane to need, or to be in a position to gain by, illustrations. We turn with a languid curiosity to Mr. Thomson's presentments of Anne Elliot—to our mind the most perfect of Jane Austen's creations—and we find a pretty drawing of a pretty woman which does not satisfy us. Of course it does not. For us Anne Elliot is a real person, and we should be dissatisfied with her likeness in a photograph.

A Bibliography of British Municipal History.

By Charles Gross, Ph.D. (Longmans.)

MR. FREDERIC HARRISON, if we mistake not, initiated, some two or three years ago, a great scheme for a general bibliography of English history. The project is one for all good wishes, but the book now before us may serve as a warning of its magnitude and difficulty. Prof. Gross occupies 461 pages and indexes 3,092 books, yet he only covers an infinitesimal portion of the total field. Thus he defines his own scope:

"This Bibliography comprises books, pamphlets, magazine articles, and papers of learned societies, relating wholly or in part to British municipal history; in other words, to the governmental or constitutional history of the boroughs of Great Britain, including guilds and parliamentary representation. Town histories which do not deal with any of these topics, purely topographical work, and parish histories are omitted."

Prof. Gross is already favourably known to students of municipal history by his important monograph on The Guild-Merchant, and his present work does not belie his reputation; so far as we have been able to test it, it is carried out with the utmost industry, learning, and judgment. The first third of it is devoted to general books bearing upon municipal history, and these are classified under sub-headings; the second two-thirds contains the literature of individual boroughs arranged in alphabetical order. Here, again, sub-classification is resorted to when convenient. Thus, for London, Prof. Gross selects 309 books as worthy of mention, and puts them under the following eleven heads—Bibliographies, Town Records, Chronicles, General Histories, Mediæval London, Charters, Laws and Privileges, Courts and Offices, Guilds and Companies, Municipal Reform, London County Council, and Miscellaneous. Nor has Prof. Gross contented himself with drawing up a mere catalogue: he has turned it into a catalogue raisonné by appending to at least half his entries brief notes setting forth the nature of the book dealt with, estimating its value, and referring to important documents printed in it. Thus he earns our gratitude, and, we trust, establishes a precedent for Mr. Frederic Harrison's bibliographers of the future. The work is issued as a volume of the Harvard Historical Studies, and it reflects credit on Harvard.

Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice." Edited by A. W. Verity, M.A. (Pitt Press.)

MR. VERITY'S work in this edition is as careful and judicious as ever. The amount of space devoted to notes and introductory matter appears to be greater than in some earlier volumes of the series, and, on the whole, considering that it is only advanced students who could be trusted with such an edition at all, the change is an improvement. Two or three suggestions on individual points of treatment may perhaps be of service to Mr. Verity. More stress should, perhaps, have been laid on the alteration in ethical sentiment, which makes the root idea of so delightful a play inevitably appear artificial to modern readers. Shakespeare, of course, meant his Jew to be an obvious villain, and Shakespeare's audience took him so; our sympathies, on the other hand, are almost necessarily drawn to Shylock's side. In discussing Shakespeare's "local colour," Mr. Verity, following Elze, rather pooh-poohs the notion that the poet can have been in Italy; but he does not refer to the more recent treatment of the question by Herr Sarrazia, which seems to us to throw the balance of probabilities the other way. Finally, Silvayn's Orator was, as Mr. Verity says, translated in 1596; but some, at least, of its contents seem to have had their English dress at an earlier date in Edward Aggas's Certain Tragical Cases (1590) and Munday's The Defence of Contraries (1593). These are, we repeat, suggestions rather than criticisms, and not intended to detract from our praise of Mr. Verity's admirable edition.

THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE "KOROSKO."

By A. CONAN DOYLE.

The Korosko is a Nile steamer; and we are straightway introduced to its passengers. The capture of the whole party by the dervishes, while ashore, is the beginning of adventures. These are entertaining and unpleasant by turns, and finally rescue comes from the Camel Corps. In the desert love and heroism get their chances; and when the principal characters sum up their experience, they all find that they have learned something. "It is my firm belief," says Mr. Belmont, "that there was not one of us who did not rise to a greater height during those days in the desert than ever before or since. When our sins come to be weighed, much may be forgiven us for the sake of those unselfish days." A thoroughly breezy, amusing, and wholesome story. (Smith, Elder & Co. 333 pp. 6s.)

ROUGH JUSTICE.

By M. E. BRADDON.

Miss Braddon has the secret of perpetual vigour, perpetual enthusiasm. Here is a new novel from her pen—her fifty-somethingth, we believe—and it is as well conceived and well handled as ever. The hero is a Cambridge man—a fine fellow, but down on his luck—who is tried on a murder charge and acquitted, although not without a stain. He subsequently tracks down the real criminal and wrings a confession from him. (Simpkin & Co. 392 pp. 6s.)

THE VINTAGE.

By E. F. BENSON.

The author of Dodo has travelled some distance from his first novel. Here we have the history of a people fighting to be free, the emotions of patriots, the stress of war. The scene is the Greece which Byron sought to assist to liberty, and the dedication is to Her Majesty, Olga, Queen of the Hellenes. It is not good reading for Turks. Mr. Jacomb Hood supplies eleven clever, but unnecessary, pictures; and there is a crude, but necessary, map. (Methuen & Co. 397 pp. 6s.)

THE FIGHT FOR THE CROWN.

By W. E. NORRIS.

A political novel. Home Rule is the question at issue, and Mr. Norris's puppets discuss it from beginning to end. It is, indeed, a romance of talk. (Seeley & Co. 385 pp. 6s.)

JOSIAH'S WIFE.

By NORMA LORIMER.

"Love is so cussed; it has no respect of goodness": with this sentiment the book opens. "He kept her feet warm, and he had no fear of being disturbed:" that is the end. And between these two sentences the neurotic heroine, Camela Skidmore, enjoys a year's holiday from her Baptist husband; and travels to Sicily and meets a platonic affinity; and subsequently returns to the Baptist, who suggests divorce, but is frustrated by the platonic affinity, who insists that the Baptist also must first have a year's holiday. So the Baptist does so, and on his return finds Camela chastened and penitent. (Methuen & Co. 316 pp. 6s.)

SPANISH JOHN.

By WILLIAM McLENNAN.

There is also a mere trifle of a sub-title: "Being a Memoir, now first published in complete form, of the early Life and Adventures of Colonel John McDonnell, known as 'Spanish John,' when a Lieutenant in the Company of St. James of the Regiment Irlandia, in the Service of the King of Spain operating in Italy." It is hardly necessary to say more, except that there are pictures, and the story is a brisk one. (Harper & Brothers. 271 pp. 6s.)

A LOW-BORN LASS.

By MRS. HERBERT MARTIN.

This novel begins: "Like Wordsworth's 'Lucy,' Sukey Rogers was one whom, from her earliest childhood, there was 'none to praise, and very few to love'; but here, I am afraid, the likeness must be said to cease." It is not the best way to begin a novel.

Sukey, as a child, had a friend named Bill Harris, who talked like this: "There be a cirkis comin', and wild beastses." Indeed, almost every one in the book talks like this. Sukey loved one man and married another—a barn stormer—and lives unhappy until we lose sight of her. (Hurst & Blackett. 305 pp. 6s.)

JACK RIVERS.

By ANNIE THOMAS.

There are chapter-headings in this book that will make the sentimental novel-reader's mouth water. The ingredients are mixed according to an old and favourite recipe. The hero is disinherited by his father, and a vulgarian substituted for him. The hero's fiancée therefore releases him, and marries the substitute. The hero, thus stranded, falls in love with the beautiful daughter of an artist, and wins her, and the artist's wedding present is the hero's ancestral home. (F. V. White. 240 pp. 6s.)

VINDICTA.

By FENN MARCH.

How Jermyrn Strange's life was darkened, and his Parliamentary prospects blighted, by the care of a dipsomaniac mother; how he loved in vain, and was vainly loved, and won not satisfaction but wisdom, is the theme of this story; which is a sincere, if not a remarkable, piece of work. (Horace Marshall & Son. 220 pp. 3s. 6d.)

A BRANCH OF LAUREL.

By A. B. LOUIS.

A story of religious persecution in France in the time of Louis XIII. The central figures in the drama are Père Grandier, and a jealous Abbess who brings about his execution at the stake on a false charge. A pathetic little book. (Bliss, Sands & Co. 147 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE LADY CHARLOTTE.

By ADELINE SERGEANT.

Lady Charlotte Byng is a handsome and accomplished woman, proud of her family records. Anxious to publish these, she employs Arthur Ellison to edit the "Belfield Memoirs." Ellison, being a cad, seeks his own ends, makes love to Lady Charlotte's niece, and secretly compiles a slanderous book on the family from the materials placed before him. Then, by the eternal law of improbability, his MS. is sent to Lady Charlotte for her opinion, by a publisher to whom she acts as "reader." "I wonder if I shall kill this young man?" she says as she examines the MS. The upshot may be left unindicated. A sprightly story. (Hutchinson & Co. 335 pp. 6s.)

TWO BONNIE SCOTCH LASSIES.

By E. G. HERON WATSON.

An amateurish love-story. Miss Watson describes the beauty of her heroines in the halfpenny novelette manner, and uses French and italics too freely. When one of the heroines is trying to escape from a gipsy caravan, we read: "A ditch—a deep ditch—and, thank God! it was dry, there being almost no water in it." (Turnbull & Spears. 255 pp.)

THE WHITE CAT.

By HENRY FRANCIS.

This is a pleasant love-story laid in the Chiltern Hills. We are introduced to prosperous farmers, fox-hunting squires, dairy-maids, and the whole round of village life, with a diversion to London when the plot thickens. The white cat plays a subordinate, but a continuous part in the story. (William Reeves. 290 pp. 4s. 6d.)

THE BLUE DIAMONDS.

By LEILA BOUSTEAD.

Those readers who can believe that a woman may marry her lover's twin brother by mistake, and only find it out when her husband dies, and his brother turns up, may enjoy this Anglo-Indian P. & O. story. Others will not. (F. V. White & Co. 119 pp. 1s.)

THE RAJAH OF PATMANDRI.

By HENRY FRANCIS.

This is a Hindu romance, compact of temple mysteries, and nautch girls, and tigers, and snake-charming, and captivities, and escapes—with a love-story emerging. (William Reeves. 277 pp. 4s.)

"THE SCHOOL FOR SAINTS."

BY H. W. MASSINGHAM.

THE chief literary quality of this book seems to me its reserve—its distinction. It is restless to have this quiet, sober work after a confused noise of many Crocketts. And it argues singular courage for a writer to set aside her earlier and lighter successes and begin steadily to walk the path of great literature. But I hope she will not expect any encouragement. Most English readers prefer The Mighty Atom to a dozen School for Saints. In the first place, they are not interested in saints, unless they happen to be like Father Storm; and, in the second place, the presence of scholarship and artistry in a novel will seem to them a weariness and an intrusion. The public which, through the golden mouth of Mr. Clement Scott, proclaimed Ibsen "a muck-ferreting dog," thought Jude the Obscure obscene, and neglected Meredith during the greater part of his career, will certainly vote The School for Saints a bore. Many will think it profane. Others, I have no doubt, will regard it as a Popish plot. For myself, I confess that, while I have no sympathy with its religion, I think it a most interesting and original study in religious emotion; that I find it none too long; and that I am glad that the purpose of writing it is to be developed in a sequel. That it rejects most of the conventions of the modern novel, and restores the writer to his place of analyst, appraiser, and chorus to his characters, is not a point of recommendation to me. I like to see the novelist lay aside this prerogative. But "John Oliver Hobbes" uses it with so much grace, and at times with such notable power, that I reconcile myself at last to these communings, these gentle and mystical responses to the devotions of Robert and Brigit. And finally, I express my gratitude for another charming archaism, the revival, for the purposes of the novel, of the art and practice of letter-writing. Many of Orange's letters are quite Richardsonian in length; but they are all delightful.

The book has grown out of an idea. "The school for saints" is the world; the rather unsaintly world, one would say, of Mr. Disraeli and Austrian Archdukes with morganatic wives from the Opera. Indeed, the majority of "John Oliver Hobbes's" characters appear rather to regard it as a battlefield, a playroom, a counting-house—or if as a school, a school for scandal. But, none the less, the author does contrive to suggest with great skill the presence in such a society of influences which bring about that taming, or even surrender, of the will which we call saintliness. This is how she describes the working of this influence on the fastidious temper of her hero, Robert Orange:

"He learnt that there was still an influence on this earth which neither doctrines of vanity nor the pride of life could mar. And whereas other influences made for restlessness, dissatisfaction, a sort of shame, and certainly much folly, this, on the contrary, brought strength and a sense of heirship to the peace of God. He obtained, too, his first clear and untroubled vision of time. He saw that, of a truth, a thousand years were as one day, and one day was as a thousand years—not in God's sight only, but in that school for saints which has been often called the way of the world."

The master in this school is, of course, the Roman Catholic Church. There Orange finds a rich soil for cultivating the life of the soul amid the desert of society—a society, be it remembered, of antimacassars and mid-Victorian emotions; but he does not leave it. He remains

"Half in the busy world, and half beyond it."

He is patronised by his chief, Disraeli, stands for Parliament at a by-election, wins his seat (is it not a little curious that he, a Catholic, is made to do so at a moment when his party is opposing Irish Disestablishment?), and takes part, half for love, half for principle, in the Carlist rising of that period. He suffers or is happy, falls in love, adventures his fortunes, or even flirts with an Anglican countess; but throughout he retains his devotional air. Not dissimilar from him is Brigit Duroc, daughter of a quaint parentage. She, too, is one part dévoté, one part woman of the world. She inclines to the religious life; but she can write of her friends with quite mundane sprightliness:

"Madrid, August, 1869.

"Again my plans are changed. Early this morning I was formally presented to Lady Fitz Rewes. She and I were together for a short time last night, while we were waiting for Mr. Orange's return, and she did not then appear well disposed towards me. She seemed lackadaisical and frigid—she might have been a toy nightingale with a musical box in her breast, and, whenever she opened her lips to say 'Yes' or 'No,' I expected to hear the plaintive tinkle of "Au clair de la lune." But to-day she was another creature—all smiles and curls and kindness. She may be ten years older than myself; she is very blue round the eyes, a little hollow in the cheeks. Her figure is graceful; she has quantities of flaxen hair, a pink and white complexion, a foolish rather pretty mouth, and a chin like Martin Luther's. She dresses beautifully, and her waist cannot measure eighteen inches. I had no opportunity to observe her closely, so I give you this impression—taken at a glance—for what it is worth."

Even when she runs away with Robert it is to a convent, and with a breviary in her hand:

"He made his way down to the Lady Chapel. The door stood open. He entered, fearing horribly that he would find it empty. But she was there.

'Brigit!'

'Robert!'

'Have I frightened you?'

'No. I knew you were coming.'

'Why?'

'Because you always come when I ask our Blessed Lady to send you.'

'Then this is a miracle.'

'What else? Where shall we go?'

'Will you come with me?'

'Of course.'

'But away from this place—to London?'

'I trust you in all things.'

'Can you run?'

'Like the wind.'

'Then give me your hand.'

'Put my breviary in your pocket. Yes, you may kiss it first. It's a blessed book. It belonged to a Saint. She wasn't canonised. Now wait till I take a long breath. Oh, Robert! I love to see you. But—are we to run to London?'

'No, angel, we must take a train.'

'I am ready. Where shall we go when we get to London?'

'I will take you to your convent.'

'She clapped her hands.'

'But dear Pensée? What will she think?'

'All is fair in war and —.'

'Yes,' she said, hastily, with a blush. 'Mudara means war. I will write Pensée a letter. That will do. Which hand will you have?'

'The left. Follow me.'

Perhaps the quaintness of these and some earlier scenes arises from the fact that the atmosphere of the book—an atmosphere most delicately and successfully preserved—is French rather than English. This may explain what is a puzzle to the Saxon mind—how Orange became a Catholic. The change seems to come rather as a matter of training and temperament, or even of æsthetic choice, than of conviction. Indeed, "Dizzy's" comment on the conversion does not seem entirely astray:

"'Yesterday,' he says, 'I was received into the Roman communion. I went to a little chapel I know of and made my profession to a simple parish priest—a secular. He knows my name, but nothing more of me. We have had a short correspondence, however, and the step is not sudden. I have been meditating it for several years, and my mind on that point is at last clear. I know the case against Rome by heart, and from its accusers I have learnt its defence. Disraeli, who is not unsympathetic, admits, that until a man is settled in his religious belief one may never know what to expect from him! But he condemns my proceeding on the eve of a political contest as suicidal. I replied that I could not flatter myself that I should be permitted the distinction of suffering for my creed.'"

This is an admirable sketch of the Disraelian mind; much more truthful, as it appears to me, than the scene in which "Dizzy" is made to take part in a Catholic service, and to be profoundly impressed by it. But in Orange you are only permitted to see the effect and the crown of the religious life which has run into the Catholic mould of obedience and submission. Its processes—the struggles, the journey through the valley of the shadow, the "strong convulsions to and fro"—are hidden, and are, indeed, foreign to the sedateness of the book, and of the temperaments with which it is concerned. For my part, I would rather have had more of the vie intime of Robert and Brigit, and less of Conservative politics in 1869, and the "Legitimate Causes" of Europe.

The book contains two historical portraits of great interest—Prim and Disraeli. The first is a most brilliant vignette. Of Disraeli, "John Oliver Hobbes" has made a study so careful and ingenious that she has absorbed something of the literary manner of her subject, and there are one or two pages of The School for Saints which read like a subdued edition of Lothair. I hesitate to say that the portrait, with all its cleverness, is quite successful. Disraeli was surely a more theatrical, more insincere, character than "John Oliver Hobbes" has drawn. His entry into, and final command of, English society and politics was necessarily a piece of intellectual brigandage, a kind of Fra Diavolism of modern life; and its author never quite lost the contraband air which was his true pose. But if "John Oliver Hobbes" does now and again challenge criticism from those who do not accept the religion which she commends with so much tenderness, so deep—I had almost said so pathetic—an insistence, no one who cares for English literature will do other than rejoice to see it reverting to the service of ideas, to the illumination and illustration of life as the artist, the scholar, the devotional thinker, see it. From that point of view, The School for Saints sets us again in the track where only serious students and honest and capable exponents of the literary art are to be found, and where only readers who are worth cultivating will follow her.

SOME LIVING POETS.

MR. WILLIAM ARCHER'S PREFERENCES.

MR. WILLIAM ARCHER made avowal of his poetical preferences last Friday evening when addressing the Society of Women Journalists on "Some Living Poets." A feature of his address was his plea for a more generous appreciation of young song-smiths:

"I would ask you," he said to a packed and sympathetic audience, "to turn a deaf ear to timorous and carping criticism, and have courage to enjoy, love, praise—and, let me add, to buy—the work of living men and women born within, and well within, the Victorian era—men and women whom your love can hearten, your praise rejoice, and whom your solid tribute, perhaps, may place in a position to develop their genius more fully than is possible while poetry, as the saying goes, is 'a drug in the market.'"

Coming next to the questions, "What have we?" and "What do we lack?" Mr. Archer declared that we lack two things: great narrative poems and great poetic dramas, and with the reason for this he briefly entered. What have we?

"Everything," was the reply, "except the drama and the long narrative. We are rich in the short narrative, or ballad, in contemplative, speculative, philosophic poetry, and in every form of lyric, from the ode to the versicle, from the avalanche to the single snowflake. Along two lines especially are we continuing, as well as heart can desire, the noblest traditions of English poetry. We are still great in the vision and interpretation of nature, and in the utterance of our national self-consciousness. Nor are we by any means to seek, I should say, in the exercise of that function which a poet-critic has somewhat paradoxically proclaimed the supreme function of poetry—to wit, 'criticism of life.'"

And now for Mr. Archer's own preferences. Taking first poems of nature ("it has always," he said, "been the delight of our English poets to talk about the weather"), Mr. Archer read one of Mr. Henley's Hospital Rhymes and Rhythms—the twenty-second, entitled "Pastoral," and beginning:

"'Tis the Spring
Earth has conceived, and her bosom,
Teeming with Summer, is glad."

Mr. Archer continued as follows (we quote the Daily Chronicle's report):

"I venture to say that if Chaucer could read these lines he would hail this poet one of his rightful kindred. But the spring, in spite of the cooling of the planet and the heating of the furnaces, is still very much what it was in Chaucer's time. What is new and peculiar to our age is the teeming, throbbing, clangorous life of our great cities; and this, too, the modern poet ought to interpret. Well, again I turn to Mr. Henley—this time to his London Voluntaries, and I find four pictures of London scenery which are pure masterpieces of vision and technical accomplishment.

[Here the lecturer read a passage from the dawn-poem, ending with the lines:

'The ancient River, singing as he goes
New-mailed in morning to the ancient Sea.']

Let us now take other aspects of nature, seen by other poets. Here, for instance, is a romantic landscape:

'High on a hill the convent hung,
Across a duchy looking down,
Where everlasting mountains flung
Their shadows over tower and town.

The jewels of their lofty snows
In constellations flashed at night;
Above their crests the moon arose;
The deep earth shuddered with delight.

The adventurous Sun took heaven by storm;
Clouds scattered largesses of rain;
The sounding cities, rich and warm,
Smouldered and glittered in the plain.'

Is not the last stanza a Turner in a quatrain? The writer, as many of you probably know, is Mr. John Davidson. And Mr. Davidson does not excel in romantic landscape alone. I doubt whether any poet has ever had a keener or more loving eye for English and Scottish nature.

Somewhat similar, perhaps even finer, is the phrase about the sea in Maire Bruin's appeal to the fairies in "The Land of Heart's Desire," a little play by Mr. W. B. Yeats:

'Faeries, come take me out of this dull world,
For I would ride with you upon the wind,
Run on the top of the dishevelled tide,
And dance upon the mountains like a flame.'

If Mr. Yeats had given us nothing but this magic suggestion of the 'dishevelled tide' scudding before the wind, Ireland might still have claimed him among her poets; for what is the essence of poetry if it be not that magic which makes a phrase seem predestinate from before the beginning of years, a thing the world has been waiting for?"

Mr. Archer now approached "philosophical poetry," with which he linked the names of Mr. William Watson, Mr. Francis Thompson, and Mr. John Davidson. Even Mr. Watson's feeling for nature, he thought, is mainly philosophical; his touch is too firm and definite to allow of his being a great landscapist. Mr. Archer illustrated this point by reading several stanzas from Mr. Watson's "Ode in May," which showed, he said, that poetry only needs time to assimilate the material brought to her by science. Mr. Francis Thompson had already done this in his "Anthem of Earth." Mr. Davidson, again, was nothing if not a strong thinker. Mr. Archer spoke of the difficulty of quoting speculative and philosophical poetry, but, he added:

"there is one philosophic poem—the utterance, at any rate, of a personal philosophy—which I cannot deny myself the pleasure of citing. There are poems which we recognise as predestined to immortality from the moment we set eyes on them, and this is certainly one of them. It was published ten years ago in Mr. Henley's first book of verse, and already it is a classic. Stoicism has waited all these centuries for its superbest utterance, but here it has found it at last:

'Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods there be
For my unconquerable soul.
In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud,
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody but unbowed.
Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years
Finds, and shall find me, unafraid.
It matters not how straight the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll,
I am the master of my fate:
I am the captain of my soul.'

We have among us, barely without the four-mile radius from Charing-cross, the man who wrote these four quatrains, or, rather, east them in elauing bronze; yet simply because he is alive, because the voice of our homage could reach him, and to some extent mitigate for him the 'fell clutch of circumstance,' we hesitate to hail him a great poet!"

From this branch of his subject Mr. Archer passed to "The Miscellaneous Lyric," which he boldly compared, in its modern form, to its Elizabethan models: "What raptures should we not go into, for instance, if we came across in an Elizabethan song-book Mr. Francis Thompson's little address 'To a Snowflake.' It is in this lyrical department," said Mr. Archer, that

"our women singers put forth their best strength. One, Mrs. Clement Shorter, excels rather in the ballad; but it is in the pure lyric that Mrs. Meynell, Mrs. Marriott Watson, Mrs. Hinkson, Mrs. Radford, Miss Alma Tadema are at their best. There is often a beautiful intimacy of emotion in the best work of these ladies, while its technical accomplishment is in some cases very high."

Leaving the lyrics to the ladies somewhat abruptly, the lecturer entered on patriotic poetry—selecting as its representative poets Mr. Rudyard Kipling, Mr. William Watson, and Mr. Henry Newbolt. Of Mr. Kipling he said:

“He brings home to us as no one ever did before a sense of the cost of Empire in blood and tears. When he sings of the sea is to tell how

‘We have strawed our best to the weed’s unrest,
To the shark and the sheering gull.
If blood be the price of admiralty,
Lord God, we ha’ paid in full.’

When he sings of Tommy Atkins, he tells us much more of the labours and horrors than of the glories and delights of that irrepressible gentleman’s career. And he has introduced a new note into patriotic poetry in praising the enemy and celebrating his valour. This, too, no doubt, is indirect self-glorification; but if you will listen to his ‘Fuzzy-Wuzzy’ I think you will admit that there is something more than that in it.”

Mr. Archer read “Fuzzy-Wuzzy,” and passed to Mr. Watson, whose “Purple East” sonnets he thought would, with all their defects, take a splendid place in literature. For Mr. Newbolt, too, Mr. Archer had high praise.

In the concluding passage of his lecture, he returned to his plea for our living poets. “Slight not the song-smith,” he virtually said. Here are Mr. Archer’s words:

“I have nothing to say against searching, discriminating, even exacting criticism; and I plead guilty to an extreme intolerance for poets who are no poets at all. But when a poet is a poet—this is the thought I would urge upon you—he ought to be praised and loved for his strongest work, not condemned and scorned for his weakest. If he has written one true and vital poem, he is a benefactor to his country. Take, for instance, the song I have just read you, ‘Admirals All,’ I believe that if we were offered the price of a first class line-of-battle ship to destroy, annihilate, wipe these verses out of existence, it would be very false economy to accept the offer. I believe Mr. Newbolt’s little book will be worth many battle-ships to ‘the Rodneys yet to be.’ But one of the poet’s has put the case for poetry better than I can. The poem is called ‘England my Mother,’ and the writer is William Watson.”

MR. EDMUND GOSSE’S PROTEST.

It was, perhaps, to be expected that some protest would be raised against Mr. Archer’s omissions of other people’s favourite poems. Up rose Mr. Edmund Gosse, who wrote the next day to the Daily Chronicle in an aggrieved mood.

“I would ask Mr. Archer” [wrote Mr. Gosse] “how he could enumerate the poetic forces of our time, and say nothing of Mr. Arthur Symonds, nothing of Mr. Lionel Johnson. But I appeal indignantly against the assumption that their predecessors were persons so insignificant that even with his microscope Mr. Archer cannot discover their names. What are we to think of a critic of Mr. Archer’s authority who speaks minutely of our living poets, and has nothing to tell us of Mr. Austin Dobson, or of Mr. Robert Bridges, to name but the greatest of the generation which he so audaciously ignores? There is not now living an artist in verse so exquisite, so sure of his effect, so completely master of his material, as Mr. Austin Dobson; nor, gay and epicurean as his mood is, is he incapable of sounding in a style wholly his own the deeper notes of human feeling. Since Mr. Swinburne there has been born no poet whose sudden flashing felicities, whose daring flights of lyric intuition, exceed in pure beauty those of Mr. Bridges at his best. I cannot find words of eulogy for Mr. Watson and Mr. Yeates if I am told that Mr. Dobson and Mr. Bridges are contemptible. And the mellifluous reverie of Mr. F. W. H. Myers, and the grace of Mr. Lang, and the austere, dry dignity of Canon Dixon—who is Mr. Archer that he should treat all these as unworthy of mention? I know of but one reply, namely, that they belong to the age which Mr. Archer, in the interests of a younger school, desires to blot out of the very annals of English poetry.”

MR. ARCHER EXPLAINS.

There was only one answer to Mr. Gosse’s strictures, and here it is in Mr. Archer’s words:

“What can I say to appease Mr. Gosse, except that there are only sixty minutes in an hour, and that I never dreamed of attempting to trace in sixty minutes ‘the magnificent and unbroken evolution of our poetry’? Had my lecture been the first of a University Extension course, I should have set about it very differently. . . . It is true that of the intermediate generation between Mr. Swinburne and Mr. Watson I selected one, Mr. William Ernest Henley, for special mention, because I hold that Mr. Henley ought to be not merely a critic’s poet, but a people’s poet, and that the comparatively small bulk of his writings has done him some injustice in the eyes of his countrymen. . . . For the rest, I spoke only of poets of a distinctly younger generation—poets born since 1850—and a lecturer may surely choose to speak of one generation of men without being held to ‘revile’ or disparage another. For Mr. Austin Dobson, for example, I have the warmest admiration, which I have again and again expressed. In this very lecture I quoted a famous line of Mr. Dobson’s, as one would quote a classic.”

SOME APHORISMS.

III.—SCHOPENHAUER.

THE popularity of Schopenhauer seems to be mildly increasing in this country. Mr. Bailey Saunders found it possible to issue selections of his more popular writings in volume after volume. Mr. Walter Scott has recently issued a selection from Schopenhauer’s writings, edited by Mr. W. B. Röafeldt. It is from the volume of Counsels and Maxims, translated by Mr. Saunders, that we take the following characteristic utterances. Having found life “something not to be enjoyed, but to be overcome,” he endeavours to give to others the result of his experience. “First of all,” he says, “divest yourself of all delusion.”

. The safest way of not being very miserable is not to expect to be very happy.

Next to this, look for no happiness beyond what you can find in yourselves: learn to say truly—Omnia mia—mecum porto.

The world has many bad things in it, but the worst is what is called society.

Rascals are always sociable, and the chief sign that a man has any nobility in his nature is the little pleasure he takes in others company.

To be alone is the fate of all great minds.

Certain porcupines huddled together for warmth on a cold day but as they began to prick one another with their quills they were obliged to disperse. However, the cold drove them together again when the same thing happened. At last they discovered that they would be best off by remaining at a little distance. In the same way the need of society drives the human porcupines together, only to be eventually repelled by the many prickly and disagreeable qualities of their nature. The moderate distance, which they at last discover to be the only tolerable condition of intercourse, is the formal code of politeness and manners.

By all means be polite, for politeness is like a counter; an avowedly false coin with which it is foolish to be stingy. We must not cut ourselves off entirely from our fellow-creatures, notwithstanding their depravity, for only thus do we gain experience of the world.

Experience of the world is a kind of text, to which reflection and knowledge form the commentary. Where there is a great deal of reflection and intellectual knowledge, and very little experience, the result is like those books which have two lines of text to forty lines of comment. A great deal of experience with little reflection gives us books in which there are no notes, and much that is unintelligible.

See something of human nature, but do not try to mend it.

Resolve to make use of those you cannot alter.

Above all, do not suffer yourself to be disturbed by those around you.

If you feel irritated by the absurd remarks of two people whose conversation you happen to overhear, imagine that you are listening to the dialogue of two fools in a comedy. Probatum est.

True friendship belongs to that class of things—the sea-serpent for instance—with regard to which no one knows whether they are fabulous, or exist somewhere or other.

Everything happens of necessity. Let a man do what he can and then endure what he must.

To forgive and forget means to throw away dearly bought experience.

Your friends will tell you they are sincere, your enemies are really so.

Do not tell a friend anything you would conceal from an enemy.

Give way neither to love nor to hate is one half of worldly wisdom, say nothing and believe nothing is the other half.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1898.

No. 1344, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. |    |    | HALF-YEARLY. |    |    | QUARTERLY. |    |    |
|---|---------|----|----|--------------|----|----|------------|----|----|
|   | £       | s. | d. | £            | s. | d. | £          | s. | d. |
| If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .               | 0       | 13 | 0  | 0            | 6  | 6  | 0          | 3  | 3  |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . . . .               | 0       | 15 | 3  | 0            | 7  | 8  | 0          | 3  | 10 |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0       | 18 | 0  | 0            | 0  | 0  | 0          | 4  | 6  |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices : 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE "unpublished Stevenson," which The Outlook has announced for publication, is the Valedictory Address written by Robert Louis Stevenson, as one of the Presidents of the Speculative Society of Edinburgh, in 1872. The author was too ill at that time to read the paper himself, and the duty was undertaken by his friend Mr. Charles Baxter.

Apropos of the Speculative Society, it may be interesting to put on record the fact that Mr. Charles Baxter, who practically initiated the Edinburgh edition of Robert Louis Stevenson's works, shares with Sir Walter Scott the distinction of having held office as secretary of the Society for three consecutive years. Mr. Baxter tells the interesting circumstance that in the minute books (of which the Society possess an absolutely complete set) Sir Walter invariably spelled Tuesday "Tensday." His inversion of the "ue" was persistent.

It is more than probable that the purchasers of the Edinburgh Stevenson may be offered yet another exclusive volume when that publication comes to an end. A book of fine reproductions of illustrations in black and white of scenes and characters in Stevenson's life and writings, drawn by different artists, selected by a well-known critic, and accompanied by notes and extracts from the works, would be a fitting crown to the twenty-seven Edinburgh volumes. It is possible that such a book may be forthcoming. Of course, the price will be high—two and a-half or three guineas; and unless subscribers are found to guarantee the edition, no further steps will be taken. But the scheme seems to us an excellent one.

It is perhaps a pity that Mr. Archer did not more definitely state that his remarks last week on "Some Living Poets" were to be taken more as expressing personal preferences than absolute critical judgment. What he did, in other words, was to translate into action the present fashion for anthologising: a simpler course, by the way, than to print, because one evades all copyright difficulties. Mr. Archer did not claim that the poems which he read were the best, but that they were his own selection from his not too well-stocked shelves. All this proves that Mr. Archer took his lecture much less seriously than other persons have done. Personally, we do not agree with many of Mr. Archer's remarks, but we find his point of view interesting. It is, however, a thankless task to speak either ill or well of a living poet.

FOLLOWING Mr. Archer's lecture on Friday came, on Sunday, at South Place, Finsbury, a discourse by Sir Alfred Lyall on "Heroic Poetry." According to Sir Alfred Lyall heroism on the sea has done more for the poet than heroism on land; but he cannot think that poets have sufficiently risen to the occasion. There certainly are fine sea ballads. Campbell's "Battle of the Baltic," Browning's "Hervé Riel," Tennyson's "Rovenge," come to mind at once. There is also a good sea fight in the late William Cory's Ionica. Sir Alfred Lyall alluded enthusiastically to Mr. Kipling, although he deplores a little his "lack of nobility" and the absence of "the grand style" in his work; but to his frontier ballads—such as "East and West"—the lecturer gave the highest praise. To Mr. Kipling, he suggested, we should look for the authoritative ballad of the winning of Dargai.

SIR ALFRED LYALL naturally made no quotations from his own poetry; but no other critic engaged in such an examination would be right in omitting reference to Verses Written in India. Sir Alfred Lyall therein shows himself to understand the meaning of heroism as well as any man: from no anthology of heroic verse could his "Theology in Extremis" be excluded. But Sir Alfred Lyall has done more than the battle poet usually does; he has shown himself to have sympathetic understanding of the feelings also of the other side. Only a generous, comprehensive mind, gifted with true imaginative sympathy, could have produced "The Old Pindaree," "Rajpoot Rebels," and "A Sermon in Lower Bengal."

WE quote, for the benefit of readers who may be unacquainted with Sir Alfred Lyall's work, the poignant stanzas entitled "Badminton":

"Hardly a shot from the gate we stormed,
Under the Morce battlement's shade;
Close to the glaciis our game was formed,
There had the fight been, and there we played.

Lightly the demoiselles tittered and leapt,
Merrily capered the players all;
North, was the garden where Nicholson slept;
South, was the sweep of a battered wall.

Near me a Mussulman, civil and mild,
Watched as the shuttlecocks rose and fell;
And he said, as he counted his beads and smiled,
'God smite their souls to the depths of hell!'"

Verses Written in India, which appeared first in 1889, is now in its fourth edition.

THE writer of the Speaker's article on Lewis Carroll explains that "grumious" was the invention of the devil—the printer's devil. He himself wrote "frumious" and very properly has been fuming-furious ever since. He then asks, "What is Jabberwocky doing in your pages?" adding slyly, "Jabberwock, my dear ACADEMY, Jabberwock." But as it happens, we both are right. Jabberwock was the name of the beast, Jabberwocky the name of the poem.

THE late Mr. W. C. T. Dobson, R.A., was almost unknown to the present generation of picture-lovers. But twenty or thirty years ago his pictures of rustic child-life had always their little crowd at Burlington House. He handled colours, especially water-colours, with much skill and refinement, but was never a great artist. Mr. Dobson's name being among the Honorary Retired Academicians, his death leaves no gap to be filled.

AT the General Assembly which met on Wednesday night at the Royal Academy to elect two new members to fill the places of the late Mr. J. B. Burgess and the late Sir John Gilbert, and to appoint an Associate to the existing vacancy, Mr. Benjamin Williams Leader and Mr. John Seymour Lucas were selected as Academicians, and Mr. Charles Napier Hemy as Associate. The Daily News gives the following details of the elections:

FIRST ELECTION.—First "Scratching": Mr. Lucas, 15; Mr. Leader, 14; with Mr. Macbeth, Mr. Waterlow, and Mr. Swan, qualified for the blackboard; with support to Mr. Abbey, Mr. Colin Hunter, Mr. Storey, and Mr. Bodley. Second Scratching: Mr. Leader, 20; Mr. Lucas, 15; followed by Mr. Macbeth, Mr. Swan, and Mr. Waterlow. Ballot: Mr. Leader, 28; Mr. Lucas, 21. Mr. Leader elected.

SECOND ELECTION.—First Scratching: Mr. Lucas, 23; Mr. Macbeth, 8; followed by Mr. Swan, Mr. Hunter, Mr. Waterlow, Mr. Murray, Mr. Abbey, Mr. Storey, and Mr. Brett. Second Scratching: Mr. Lucas, 24; Mr. Macbeth, 11; followed by Mr. Swan, Mr. Waterlow, and Mr. Hunter. Ballot: Mr. Lucas, 35; Mr. Macbeth, 14. Mr. Lucas elected.

ASSOCIATES' ELECTION.—First Scratching: Mr. East, 10; Mr. Farquharson, 7; Mr. Napier Hemy, 6; followed by Sir George Reid, Mr. Cope, Mr. Corbett, Mr. Belcher, Mr. Aston Webb, Mr. A. Goodwin, Mr. T. Graham, Mr. G. Joy, Mr. Lorimer, and Mr. A. Stokes. Second Scratching: Mr. East, 11; Mr. Hemy, 9; followed by Mr. Farquharson, Mr. Cope, Sir George Reid, Mr. Corbett, Mr. Belcher, and Mr. Webb. Ballot: Mr. Hemy, 26; Mr. East, 25. Mr. Napier Hemy elected.

WE gathered, the other day, on reading the Daily Chronicle, that literature was about to lose M. J. K. Huysmans in the cloister's shade. Now we read that the priest to whom M. Huysmans applies for counsel advises him to remain at his post at the Ministry of the Interior until he has earned his retiring pension; which is excellent advice. He also believes that M. Huysmans will do more proportionate good by his new forthcoming novels, Sainte Lydwine and L'Oblat, than by taking the cowl at an age when his character is formed"; which is arguable.

THE French translation of Mr. Meredith's Essay on Comedy will have a preface by Mr. Arthur Symons.

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "In your issue of January 22 you announced that a second edition of Mr. Stephen Phillips's Poems, in which several misprints will be corrected, was about to be issued. It would also contain a revision of the poem of "The Wife," amounting to a considerable re-writing. This is hardly welcome news to the purchasers of the first edition. Would it not be possible in such a case, as well as an act of justice, for the publisher also to issue a few pages containing the emendations for the behoof of the earlier buyers? They should be of uniform size with the original volume, so that they could be inserted within the cover; and a small charge would doubtless willingly be paid."

MR. E. H. COOPER, who wrote The Marchioness Against the County, is the right kind of author. He sends the following missive to the Pall Mall Gazette:

"Having been for some days past under the charge of Parisian surgeons, I have only just seen your review of my novel, The Marchioness Against the County. When your reviewer calls my dear 'Helen' a 'typical stage-child, high-flown, fantastic, and a prodigy of accomplishments,' I, of course, suffer a relapse, which bewilders Dr. Faure-Miller. But when he speaks of her later on as an 'infant prodigue,' evidently under the impression that 'enfant prodigue' means 'infant phenomenon,' I laugh and recover. In gratitude for my recovery I will give him a French dictionary if you will send me his address."

We have reasons for believing that the "stage-child's" diary, quoted by Mr. Cooper, is a genuine document.

A CURIOUS literary product reaches us from Messrs. Longmans, in the shape of Thoughts and Words, three volumes of extracts from classical and modern authors of every degree of talent. The volumes are bound in vellum stamped with the author's arms and signature—Stephen Dowell. Mr. Dowell tells us that this portentous Commonplace-Book is the fruit of an attack of influenza which left him dependent on literary recreation. The work has little or no plan, the second volume being frankly devoid of any, while the third centres round tobacco, and some "pretty pieces of poetry put together in the Engadine to please a lady." The three volumes contain nearly 1,400 pages, and they may grace a drawing-room table, or refine conversation in the smoke-room. On the other hand, they seem to add a new terror to the influenza.

Literature tells a pleasant story of a lady who was ransacking one of the "Periodical" volumes of the Catalogue in the British Museum Reading-room, and who, on being offered assistance by an official, exclaimed: "Oh, thank you, I have to go to Exeter this afternoon, and I'm just looking for Bradshaw." Someone should make a collection of British Museum stories and traditions. The compiler might include the remark which fell from a working man the other day, when he and his wife were inspecting the Elgin marbles. After a long silence he was heard to say to his partner, "Well, these ancient Greeks licks me, sometimes I thinks they was civilised, and sometimes I thinks they wasn't."

UNDER the title of The Cockney Columbus, Mr. David Christie Murray renders an account of the visits he paid to America and Australia in the spring of last year. Mr. Murray has a good deal to say in his Preface on the relations between the United States and Great Britain, and incidentally he reproduces words which he addressed to the fiftieth gathering of the Association of State Teachers, held in New York during his visit. Mr. Murray touched upon the vexed subject of American school-books, and the kind of teaching regarding England which is conveyed in them to American boys and girls. He said:

"When I visited your country I made acquaintance with certain books employed in schools which seemed to me to deal with long-buried controversy with an acrimony, which, however just and natural at one time, had grown out of date and needless. You can afford to teach your children now that the England of to-day regrets and condemns nothing in its history as it regrets and condemns that time. There are, thank God, many forces which tend to unite us to each other, but there are some influences of disruption too, and I take these school-books to be one of the latter. Truth has a right to be told, and Englishmen have no right to shrink from it. But in this case, more than in most, the whole truth is desirable. Side by side with the history of arrogance and folly, set down the history of regret. Teach the story of the valour of your forefathers—your children have a claim to hear it—but let it be known to your charges in their tender years, that not even in their own land is that valour more esteemed than it is among your old-time enemies. Tell them there is no name in English annals more revered by Englishmen than that of Washington."

WE quote the following from the Daily News:

"Among big sales of recent novels, the following may be mentioned. A quarter of a million copies of Mr. Farjeon's Australian story, Grief, have been sold in England, Australia, America, and South Africa. Ten thousand copies of Mrs. Craigie's The School for Saints have been sold, and a second edition will be issued at the end of this week or beginning of next. Forty thousand copies of Dr. Weir Mitchell's Hugh Wynne have been sold in America alone, while in this country the sale has been large.

THE story-teller does not often hit upon so taking a motto as this prefixed to Traits and Confidences, a collection of stories by the Hon. Emily Lawless. The lines are from The Cunninge Craftsmanne:

"The littel teller tells hys littel minde
In littel tales to readers colde or kinde,
Some in plain wordes, and some in wordes
more blinde,
So much is tolde, yet muche remaynes
behinde."

A CORRESPONDENT of the Boston Literary World refers in strong terms to Stevenson's Father Damien:

"As a masterpiece of vindictive writing that letter bids fair for a long life, but should be classed as much among pure fiction as Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Dr. Hyde did not publish any attack on Father Damien. He simply, in a private letter, stated facts that were well known in Honolulu. His correspondent saw fit to print what had not been intended for the public, and thereby brought down this torrent of abuse, which must be received as any other unjust calumny. Dr. Hyde as a man is as superior to R. L. Stevenson as Stevenson himself as a writer is to the generality of scribblers. But 'Ephraim is joined to idols; let him alone.'"

Our only comment on such a letter is that it should have appeared several years earlier.

THE New York correspondent of a Boston paper suggests that Mr. Wells has an ingenious American rival. He writes: An extraordinary romance, by Garrett P. Serviss, entitled Edison's Conquest of Mars, is appearing serially in the Evening Journal here. It introduces Mr. Thomas A. Edison as one of the chief figures, and certain imaginary inventions of his are made striking features of the plot. Mr. Edison has publicly expressed his annoyance at being used in this way, but he says that he knows of no means of obtaining redress. The case is a very curious violation of literary ethics, and it is surprising that a man with the excellent reputation of the author should be the offender. Mr. Edison could probably find redress if he cared to take the matter into the courts and to endure further annoyance.

THE old poet's plea:

"O for a book in a shadie nook!"

is amplified and particularised by Mr. Clinton Scollard in the current Scribner's. This is his wish:

"If I stray wood-ward, not for me
The loudest warbler in the tree,
But rather one that sings apart
The simple songs that touch the heart
And lo, although I may aspire,
Be mine the temperate desire—
Not for the missal-marvel old
Illumed with meissial gold,
Not for the rare black-letter text
O'er which his foul a Caxton vent,
Nor what some seek through fine and fnow
A priceless Shakepeare folio!

BUT only this—one little book
Wherethrough do bird and bee and brook,
In their melodious employ,
Sing on and on and on of Joy;
And where, amid the Maytime flowers,
Love without rival, rules the hours.
One little book—whose title date
Reads quaintly, 1648;
In Saint Paul's churchyard, we are told,
Sold at the Crown and Marygold.
One little book—if fortune please—
Herrick, a 'firft' HESPERIDES!"

MESSRS. W. & R. CHAMBERS will have ready on March 15 their new English Dictionary, pronouncing, explanatory, and etymological, which has been in progress for some years under the editorship of Mr. Thomas Davidson, one of the assistan editors of Chambers' Encyclopædia. The book is in one volume, and is copiously illustrated.

FOR discovering what a forthcoming novel is about there is nothing like the advance notice. Take Mr. Robert Buchanan's new story, for example. We might have supposed it to be in his customary melodramatic manner, but for the following description: "Mr. Robert Buchanan's The Rev. Annabel Lee is likely to cause considerable discussion in religious circles. The author states that his object in writing this novel is to show that if all religions were destroyed and perfect material prosperity arrived at, humanity would reach not perfection but stagnation. Mr. Buchanan starts with the twenty-first century from the birth of Christ, when among the new race of men and women, sickness, poverty, disease and crime were practically unknown; when everywhere the sun shone down on happy human organisation familiar with the laws of life and eager in the pursuit of social happiness. Into this scheme of life enters a beautiful and charming maiden, the Rev. Annabel Lee, who is not satisfied with the existing condition of things, and is eager to lead her race back to the precepts of a forgotten Christianity. So lofty, pure and beautiful is she that her personality holds the reader spellbound to the last page." Knowing this, we shall be able to come to the book itself with an unprejudiced mind—or to avoid it.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN will issue in the course of the present month, under the title of Songs of England, a collection of the more distinctly national lyrics of the Poet Laureate, which at present are scattered throughout his various works. The volume will be published at a shilling.

UNDER the title of The Saving of Ireland, Messrs. Blackwood are to publish, in time for the re-assembling of Parliament, a new book by Sir George Baden-Powell, dealing generally with the economic, financial, and political aspects of the Irish problem, and especially with the Financial Relations Commission and the extension of local government in Ireland.

MR. WILLIAM REEVES will publish in a few days a new threepenny journal, entitled The Eagle and the Serpent, dedicated to the Philosophy of Life enunciated by Nietzsche, Emerson, Thoreau, Goethe, and Spencer.

"IOTA" (Mrs. Mannington Caffyn), author of A Yellow Aster, has finished a new novel, entitled Poor Max, which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are bringing out on the 15th inst.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW & Co. write: "We are preparing to publish, early in the spring, Vol. V. of The English Catalogue of Books, 1890-1897. As we wish to make it as complete as possible, may we ask those of your readers who have published books between January 1st, 1890, and December 31st, 1897, for the full titles, sizes, prices, month and year of publication, and authors' and publishers' names, to be sent as soon as possible, addressed to Editor, English Catalogue of Books, care of Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Fetter-lane, London."

MR. ANDREW TIER, of the Leadenhall Press, E.C., who wishes to be referred to for rare examples or collections, has, we understand, a profusely illustrated work nearly finished dealing with old books for children.

A NEW Dictionary of the Bible has been projected, and is about to be published by Messrs. T. & T. Clark, of Edinburgh. It is described as a Dictionary of the Old and New Testaments, together with the Old Testament Apocrypha, according to the Authorised and Revised English Versions, and with constant reference to the original tongues. Every effort has been used to make the information it contains reasonably full, trustworthy, and accessible. Articles have been written on Persons and Places, the Antiquities and Archaeology of the Bible, on its Ethnology, Geology, and Natural History, and an explanation is given of every archaic word. To all but minor articles the names of the authors are appended.

MISS DIXON, formerly of Girton College, Cambridge, has been engaged for more than a year past, so far as indifferent health would allow, upon a translation of selected letters from the voluminous correspondence of Petrarch, never before translated into English. The selection was made in the first instance from Fracassetti's sympathetic but very prolix Italian translation by Miss Helen Zimmern, who proposed also to contribute a brief historical introductory paragraph to each letter. For various reasons, the work has now passed entirely into the hands of Miss Dixon, as sole editor as well as translator. Miss Dixon will probably re-model the work upon an entirely different and more adequate basis, publishing it eventually in the form of a Life and Letters.

TO MESSRS. George Bell & Son's "Cathedral Series" are added volumes on Winchester and Lichfield cathedrals, written respectively by Mr. Philip W. Sergeant and Mr. A. B. Clifton. Each book is profusely illustrated with photographs.

The Story of the Malakand Field Force is the title of a book by Lieut. Winston Spencer Churchill, of the 4th Queen's Own Hussars, which will be published by Messrs. Longmans & Co. early in February. The text will be illustrated by maps and plans.

MR. GEORGE MOORE's new novel, Evelyn Innes, on which he has been engaged for a very long time, may be expected in the spring.

MESSRS. DENT & Co. will publish this month a Book of Cats drawn and written by Mrs. W. Chance, containing between thirty and forty reproductions of that lady's pencil drawings.

THE POETRY OF MR. ROBERT BRIDGES.

AMONG the poets of our own day who have never quite come to their inheritance we should be inclined to give Mr. Robert Bridges the first place. That he should not be more popular is, of course, nothing; but that he should not be more heartily and unhesitatingly proclaimed by the critics does, we must own, fill us with amazement. For, surely, that little volume of lyrical poems, so carefully winnowed from divers earlier and more ephemeral pamphlets, so patiently purified from all but the pure gold of song, should be, if it is not, one of the booklover's most cherished possessions. There is scarcely a thing in it we would have away, scarcely one that is not far on the road towards perfection. Popularity, we fancy, Mr. Bridges has never sought, and would hardly know what to do with. His is essentially the poetry of a scholar and a recluse; if you will not listen to his Muse in her own shy recesses, she certainly will not come out to bawl for your hearing in the streets. Somewhat deliberately, Mr. Bridges stands aside from the more clamant interests of his age; its religious, political, humanitarian upheavals make no appeal to him; the still, sad music of the toiling world finds but little echo in his solitude of song. He has stood aside from it all; he rarely takes you into his confidence, but he tells you so much:

"And country life I praise,
And lead, because I find
The philosophic mind
Can take no middle ways;
She will not leave her love
To mix with men, her art
Is all to strive above
The crowd, or stand apart."

But though the world, and the troubles and problems of the world, be excluded, there is still, even in these latter days, enough to sing about. There is the sheer physical beauty of external things, to which Mr. Bridges is abundantly sensitive. He does not reproduce the somewhat outworn pastoral convention: no shepherds flaunt their be-ribboned crooks in his pages, but he does, for all that, feel the country a good deal as the pastoralist feels it. It is to him a refuge, a place of cool retreat from the mid-day sun of life. And, of course, he observes more precisely, more subtly than the pastoralist—to whom, good, honest fellow, one flower was much the same as another—ever dreamt of observing. Here is a delicate description of a secret nook beside the silver Thames:

"A rushy island guards the sacred bower,
And hides it from the meadow, where in peace
The lazy cows wrench many a scented flower,
Robbing the golden market of the bees:
And laden barges float
By banks of myosote;
And scented flag and golden flower-de-lys
Delay the loitering boat."
And on this side the island, where the pool
Eddies away, are tangled, mass on mass,
The water-weeds, that net the fishes cool,
And scarce allow a narrow stream to pass;
Where spreading crowfoot mars
The drowning nenuphars,
Waving the tassels of her silken grass
Below her silver stars."

And here a vignette of autumn, wonderfully imaginative and curiously felicitous in the easy movement of its liberal metre.

"But, ah! the leaves of summer that lie on the ground!

What havoc! The laughing timbrels of June,
That curtained the birds' cradles, and screened their song,

That sheltered the cooing doves at noon,
Of airy fans the delicate throng,—
Torn and scattered around:

Far out afield they lie,
In the watery furrows die,
In grassy pools of the flood they sink and drown,

Green-golden, orange, vermilion, golden and brown,

The high year's flaunting crown
Shattered and trampled down."

Of metre Mr. Bridges is a master, as befits one who has written learnedly and with insight on the rhythms both of Milton and of Keats. He delights in metrical experiment, and, by skilful resolution of syllables and shifting of accent, manages to secure an almost inexhaustible variety of effect. He has left the English lyric a far more flexible thing than he found it, and one seems already to trace his influence in the versification of such younger writers as Mr. Stephen Phillips and Mr. Laurence Binyon. Another point to which Mr. Bridges has paid considerable attention is the relation of verse to musical setting. We do not know whether many of his lyrics have actually been set, but there are not a few which sing themselves as you read them. Such are the fine lines beginning, "Awake, my soul, to be loved, awake, awake!" and the still finer ones, of which these are the first three stanzas:

"I made another song,
In likeness of my love:
And sang it all day long,
Around, beneath, above;
I told my secret out,
That none might be in doubt.

I sang it to the sky,
That veiled his face to hear
How far her azure eye
Outdoes his splendid sphere;
But at her eyelids' name
His white clouds fled for shame.

I told it to the trees,
And to the flowers confest,
And said not one of these
Is like my lily drest;
Nor spathe nor petal dared
Vie with her body bared."

After, perhaps before, his nature-poetry, it is as a love-poet that Mr. Bridges excels. The lines just quoted have the simplicity, the exaltation of the best Caroline work. And there are many other poems in which the passion of love finds high and romantic expression. This is, perhaps, one of the finest:

"I will not let thee go,
Ends all our month-long love in this?
Can it be summed up so,
Quit in a single kiss?
I will not let thee go.

I will not let thee go.
If thy word's breath could scare thy deeds,
As the soft south can blow
And toss the feathered seeds,
Then might I let thee go.

I will not let thee go.
Had not the great sun seen, I might;
Or were he reckoned slow
To bring the false to light,
Then might I let thee go.

I will not let thee go.
The stars that crowd the summer skies
Have watched us so below
With all their million eyes,
I dare not let thee go.

I will not let thee go.
Have we not chid the changeful moon,
Now rising late, and now
Because she set too soon,
And shall I let thee go?

I will not let thee go.
Have not the young flowers been content,
Plucked ere their buds could blow,
To seal our sacrament?
I cannot let thee go.

I will not let thee go,
I hold thee by too many bands:
Thou sayest farewell, and lo!
I have thee by the hands,
And will not let thee go."

It will give a good idea of Mr. Bridges's width and range of feeling if we contrast with the vigour and intensity of this some stanzas from the "Elegy on a Lady, whom Grief for the Death of her Betrothed Killed." This elegy, we dare maintain, with its solemn movement and hymeneal imagery, to be one of the half-dozen noblest threnodies in the language:

"Reach down the wedding vesture that has lain
Yet all unvisited, the silken gown:
Bring out the bracelets, and the golden chain
Her dearer friends provided: sere and brown
Bring out the festal crown,
And set it on her forehead lightly:
Though it be withered, twine no wreath
again;

This only is the crown she can wear rightly.

Cloke her in ermine, for the night is cold,
And wrap her warmly, for the night is long,
In pious hands the flaming torches hold,
While her attendants, chosen from among
Her faithful virgin throng,
May lay her in her cedar litter,
Decking her coverlet with sprigs of gold,
Roses, and lilies white that best befit her.

Sound flute and tabor, that the bridal be
Not without music, nor with these alone;
But let the viol lead the melody,
With lesser intervals, and plaintive moan
Of sinking semitone;
And, all in choir, the virgin voices
Rest not from singing in skilled harmony
The song that aye the bridegroom's ear rejoices.

Let the priests go before, arrayed in white,
And let the dark stoled minstrels follow slow;
Next they that bear her, honoured on this
night;

And then the maidens, in a double row,
Each singing soft and low,
And each on high a torch up-staying:
Unto her lover lead her forth with light,
With music, and with singing, and with praying."

If we were asked to define Mr. Bridges's crowning literary characteristic, we should say that it was style, in the ultimate sense of style—that is, distinction. He has such a perfect mastery of his medium; he moves so easily, and with such liberal tread, that he accomplishes the last feat of the consummate artist, and cheats you into believing that art is nature. Take such lines as the following:

"Many an afternoon
Of the summer day
Dreaming here I lay;
And I know how soon,
Idly at its hour,
First the deep bell hums
From the minster tower,
And then evening comes,
Creeping up the glade,
With her lengthening shade,
And the tardy boon,
Of her brightening moon."

What could be more absolute in its simplicity than this? the words follow their precise prose order; and yet, if you try to imitate the effect, what more difficult, what more tantalising?

We have spoken of Mr. Bridges chiefly as the lyricist of his Shorter Poems. And it is in these that he is most undeniable and convincing. But they are only a part of his complete achievement. His plays reveal an astonishing command of blank verse, and an unexampled power of catching the precise manner—Euripidean, Terentian, Shakespearean, Miltonic—he may choose. His "Eros and Psyche," a metrical version based upon Apuleius, is a delightful essay in narrative verse, and his sonnets—at present only attainable in an expensive privately printed form—are so interesting that it is to be hoped they will soon be more completely given to the world. But it is upon the lyrics that we take our stand.

WHAT THE PEOPLE READ.

IX.—AN ARTIST.

I FOUND him walking restlessly up and down in his studio with two long slips of printed paper in his hand—proofs.

"New story of Kipling's," he said excitedly. "About a ship that caught fire. I've got to illustrate it for a Christmas number. Splendid! There's a picture in every paragraph. Listen!"

And he read me out a sentence.

"Can't you see it?" he said. And he stepped up to his easel and began sketching in rough outlines with a bit of charcoal. "Like this, you know—no—so!"

The lines began to take the semblance of human figures.

"But, of course, you don't see it as I do," he continued.

The outlines suggested but little to me. Perhaps because I was thinking of something else.

"Do you find Kipling easy to illustrate?" I asked.

"Well, he's easy enough—in a sense," he replied—"when you have the knowledge of his costumes, technicalities, and so on. And you have to know an uncommon lot to throw any light on Kipling. Look at the Jungle Stories, for instance. But the difficulty is in the selection. Because, to my mind, Kipling writes in pictures—if you understand me."

"And you consider that a merit?"

"Certainly I do."

"Tell me, do you regard that as a criterion of excellence? The writing in pictures, I mean. Because, you know, I'm trying to find out what sort of books various people like. And I should think you are a fairly typical black-and-white artist. You read a good deal, I suppose?"

"I'm always reading stories that I have to illustrate."

"Yes; but what do you read when you read for your own pleasure? What qualities do you look for in a book?"

"That's rather hard to say," he replied. "You see, I'm not literary. I know when I like a book, but I don't know that I can say why I like it. In fact, I don't believe I've ever asked myself the question."

He sat down on the pedestal upon which he posed his models, and wrinkled his brows in thought.

"Well, do you like this?" I asked, picking up a book from the table. It was The Autobiography of a Boy.

"It didn't interest me very much," he said slowly; "in fact, I've not been able to get through it."

"Why not?"

He was obviously delving down into his mind after the reasons of things visible; and I let him alone for a few moments. "I don't know," he said, "whether I can make it clear to you. I don't even know if I can see it clearly myself. But I think the books I like are those that call up a series of pictures before my mind's eye. Now, I've just been reading The Story of Ab, and that's a case in point. Yes, I'm sure that's it."

He rose, and walked up and down the studio, talking quickly, jerkily, but with every indication that a chance thrust of the spade had struck at the root of things.

"I never thought of it before," he continued; "but every day when I am reading stories for illustration I feel it. You can read, and read, and never see anything. I don't profess to be a great reader. But I've read a bit of most things. Meredith—James—they describe what people are thinking. Now I want to see the—the outcome of thought; what it leads to." And he made that circular motion of the thumb which is the masonic sign of the artist. "You can't see people thinking, can you?"

I was not so sure of that.

"Now I come to think of it," he proceeded, "I am always looking for the picture when I read. Daudet gives you pictures one after the other. Do you remember Sapho? When the man carried Sapho upstairs, and got so tired at the end? There's a picture!"

"But it is more. It is emblematic of the end."

"That comes into the picture—into my picture."

"What about English writers—Stevenson, for instance?"

"I haven't read much Stevenson. But Rider Haggard, now—there you have pictures before you all the time. Anthony Hope too. By Jove! how I'd like to illustrate The Prisoner of Zenda."

He walked quicker and quicker up and down the studio.

"Well, well," he said, stopping short and picking up the proof again; "I must get to work. There's the Century, and Harper's, and Scribner's over there, and some illustrated French papers too. After all, those are the things I read first. The best things, you know, are published outside England."

I sat down, and began burrowing in the heap.

"The worst of it is," he said, after another ten minutes over the proof, "that Kipling doesn't leave anything for the illustrator to do. The story is all pictures."

C. R.

PARIS LETTER.

A VIEW OF GOETHE.

(From our French Correspondent.)

M. EDOUARD ROD has republished from the Revue des Deux Mondes his sober and excellent study of Goethe. Around no literary figure of modern times, except Napoleon, has such a vast literature gathered. Goethe may be said to stand upon an imposing statue made up of other people's books about him. Nobody has inspired so much pretentious and inflated cant as that of the Goethian worship, and to my thinking if there is a bigger bore than this it is the Olympian of Weimar himself. Goethe with his lamentable Werther, the eternal enigma of his Faust, his train of Lotties, and Minnies, and Fredericas, and Lillies, is a figure to provoke exasperated lassitude. Carlyle, with his false air of prophet shouting to the multitude, has ordered us to admire him under penalty of being called a fool or a knave, and writes wildly of the beauty of his life. Certainly in his relations with women Goethe was Olympian enough, reading the word as a superlative indifference to the common laws of conscience and honour and heart that rule the lives of merely honest and sincere beings.

For this reason it is a pleasure to open a book like M. Rod's on this fatiguing theme, and discover Goethe judged as a man, and found wanting; judged as a genius, and admitted to be somewhere below his Creator. For so long we had almost been asked to believe that from the middle of the last century or so the universe was solely a matter of Goethe's genius. Upon mention of his name our ears were continually assaulted with the inevitable words "culture" and "universality." It was an intellectual pose to have sounded the depths of the second part of Faust, a feat, I am confident, Goethe himself never accomplished. The greatness of this German bourgeois was such an obsession that I have always felt I would cheerfully make the tour of half the world to avoid touching at Weimar. Judge, then, how refreshing to turn from Carlyle's high-coloured enthusiasm for the Autobiography to M. Rod's sensible recognition of its affinity to that other equally insincere and affected autobiography of Chateaubriand, Mémoires d'Outre-Tombe:

"Chateaubriand does not hide his intention to compose his attitude, and lacking in vanity from excess of pride, he composes it admirably. Seemingly more modest, Goethe is perhaps less sincere: without having the air, he corrects even more his life, he rounds his gestures even more carefully. The connexion lies in the fact that both great works are the portraits which the two great men, having attained an equal height, who were equally the spoiled children of life, wished to leave of themselves."

M. Rod's sane and lucid study is the result of disenchantment. He, too, worshipped once at the shrine of Weimar, but returning, years after, to a fresh acquaintance, he found his god singularly diminished in effulgence and supremacy. The value of this new appreciation lies in its honesty and its sincerity. He resolutely pricks a hole in the vast Goethian legend to let in a little modern air and light, and instead of the awe-inspiring Olympian of eighty years ago—"the teacher and exemplar of his age," as Carlyle called him, the semi-divinity, who loves every woman he meets, by right of his inspired personality, his universality and his culture, and the moment he wins her tearfully rides away, also by the same indisputable right, and consoling her with the printed tale of their relations—we see the mere creature of literature Goethe always was, whose friendship was literature, whose love was literature; literature his hate, his pain, and all his life's experience. He well defines this celebrated olympism, so belauded by an admiring Europe, as the everyday egoism of the unlettered multitude lifted to the state of superior power by refinement and intelligence.

"A crowd of persons practise this olympism without suspecting it, with the serenity of unconsciousness, in the peace of irreflection. You do not admire them for that; but you are not angry with them either; you consider them as average samples of our ordinary humanity, who exercise without nobility, though with all correctness, their calling as man."

And speaking of his meaner faults—his vanity, ambition, literary jealousy—M. Rod exclaims:

"Alas! we see that he is a man, subject to all the weaknesses of men; his 'olympism' does not enoble his nature, and can only breed illusion in himself as to the portion of the divine it contains."

The measure of Goethe's gentlemanhood is given in the note he sent a friend with a copy of Goetz de Berlichingen for Frederica after his base desertion of her: "Poor Frederica will be to some extent consoled since the faithless one (of the drama) is poisoned." G. H. Lewes, in his delightful and radiant story of Goethe, says, I remember, that it was, after all, an honour for Frederica to have been deserted by Goethe. Certainly, her sorrow brought her fame, if that could be any consolation for a broken heart; but it would be better to love a shoeblack of decent feeling than the Olympian monster who could write those words to a third party fresh from the tragedy of breaking a girl's heart.

On the subject of his artificiality, M. Rod writes of the Tasso:

"The real Tasso, born at an unpropitious epoch, ill at ease in his surroundings, the victim of dangerous suspicion, was nevertheless a great poet, but already an artificial poet; Goethe's Tasso, product of an imagination fixed in certain prejudices by a despotic intelligence, remains a great poet, but still more artificial."

Each work here is dissected in an agreeable form. M. Rod's style lacks charm and distinction, but the nature revealed in his work is always sympathetic by reason of simplicity, directness, absolute sincerity. He has no humour, no irony, no delicacy of touch. But he has originality; he thinks for himself, thinks deeply and thinks well. In this study of a great European legend, of a great literary monument, he makes no effort to fascinate us by false brilliancy, or to captivate us by a personal charm. He simply and truthfully concerns himself with the subject of his study, and produces a book that is well worth reading, and is as useful as it is interesting. His feeling for common humanity opposed to the privileged few is fine and generous. Writing of the contradictory elements of Faust, he says:

"A work which contains the thought of an entire life could not enclose itself in a system, nor represent a single face of truth; necessarily it is multiple and contradictory as are ever great minds that reflect the spectacle of things, the microcosms that reproduce the changing images of the world in movement."

M. Augustin Filon has written a French version of the English novel, which is not without interest as a curious adaptation of our second-rate style and manner. M. Filon knows his London, and has rendered well the squalid and dreary atmosphere of Bloomsbury. Not possessing any special talent, utterly without distinction or originality, he has been able to achieve what a better French writer would never have attempted—a dull, middle-class English novel, without structure, without a notion of composition, with all the flaring faults of the flippant English novel. M. Filon's own taste in fiction may be measured by his assertion in the Revue des Deux Mondes—where many a strange thing is asserted on the question of foreign literature—that the noblest work of fiction of modern times is The Woman Who Did. A critic of the English drama and the English novel in this state of mind is a creature to be wondered at and sorrowed over. But we see at once how admirably adapted he is, by taste and temperament, to write a second-rate, diffuse, and preposterous English novel, airing threadbare views, revealing a kindly insignificant individuality, with just enough interest of a kind to "go down." "Down," indeed, Babel is sure to go with the people who like that sort of thing: the disinterested and noble German Freethinker and Socialist who eradicates two horrid little gutter-sparrows of Bloomsbury in accordance with his peculiar views—a French boy and a Jewess—to find in the end that both are monsters of selfishness. Fides, the inhuman Jewess, probably gives voice to M. Filon's own views upon Girton:

"Poor girls! If you knew the trouble they have to put into their brains a little of what is in the brains of their brothers. They speak of determinants, potentials, and read the Queen and the Lady's Pictorial in private, and look in their glass."

They might do worse. They might read Babel.
H. L.

THE WEEK.

HISTORY AND CITIZENSHIP.

AN eminent statesman said the other day that the "spirit of unrest" was abroad in the world. History is being made at a great rate in many lands. France, Germany, Russia, Greece, England, Canada—in all these countries notable events are happening, have just happened, or seem about to happen. And suddenly the flashing and moving lights are reflected in the stream of literature. This week works on history and sociology leaven the publisher's lump.

A more timely and important book than Mr. J. E. C. Bodley's France could not have arrived. Mr. Bodley has resided seven years in France, and during that time he has applied himself closely to the study of the political condition of that country. The results of his inquiries are embodied in these volumes. Mr. Bodley thus explains their scope:

"The capital subject of these volumes is Political France after a century of Revolution. The plan of the work needs little explanation. The Introductory Chapter is not an essential part of it, but it may be of utility, as it contains a description of the influences encountered by a student of public questions in France. The relations of the great Revolution with modern France are then examined, and this gives an opportunity of a view of certain phases of French life which would otherwise be neglected in a political treatise. The Executive and Legislative Powers are the special matters which form the basis of the remainder of the work. Their operation under the régime which has subsisted in France during the last quarter of the nineteenth century leads to the study of various conceptions which the French have had, during a hundred years of political experiment, of the functions of a Chief of the State and of Parliamentary Institutions."

Mr. Bodley touches on the difficulty of vouching for complete accuracy in a work of this kind. In illustration of his point he tells the following anecdote:

"There was a point of electoral jurisprudence on which the text-books were obscure, and though not of international importance, it is interesting to students of comparative procedure; so I wrote to a Deputy who is a Parliamentary authority, to clear it up, and incorporated his answer in my text. Later, being invited by the experienced and intelligent Mayor of a village to be present at a poll over which he presided, I repeated the question to him, and he gave a completely different reply. Finally, I referred it to a Senator, and he demonstrated so clearly that both the Deputy and the Mayor were wrong, that I adopted his version."

After France, Russia. Prince Serge Wolkonsky, who last year lectured on Russian history and literature before various clubs and universities in the United States, has gathered his addresses into a volume, Russian History and Literature. The lecturer knew the difficulty of expounding Russian history to audiences whose knowledge of the subject was in the last degree slight and fragmentary. His book, however, will make a wider appeal, and supply a more real need, because of the limitations imposed on it by the public ignorance.

Two colonial books call for notice: A History of Canada, by Mr. Charles G. D. Roberts, is a bulky octavo filled with arranged and compressed information. Mr. Roberts, who is also known as a novelist, was formerly Professor of Literature at King's College, Windsor, Nova Scotia. He divides the history of Canada into the three periods of: "The French Dominion," "The Struggle for Responsible Government," and "Canadian Dominion." Mr. Roberts opens his book in an eloquent strain:

"The stage on which the drama of Canadian History unfolds may seem to the world an obscure one. A closer view, however, will reveal that on this stage some of the gravest problems of history have been pressed to a solution; and we may reasonably expect to find in this drama an answer to some of the weightiest questions of modern politics. Battles were fought on the Rhine, the Elbe, the Danube; German, Austrian, Spanish thrones were shaken to their full; navies grappled in the Caribbean, and Mahratra hordes were slaughtered on the rice fields of India, to decide the struggle which ended only upon the Plains of Abraham."

This is rather "purple," but it is the right note for the historians of Canada to strike.

In his book, Life and Progress in Australasia, Mr. Michael Davitt sets down his observations of the seven Australasian colonies made during a seven months' journey through them. His purpose is not to write a history, but to interest his readers in Australasia and its peoples. The book runs to nearly five hundred closely printed pages, and touches on an immense number of subjects.

THE fourth and concluding volume of Mr. Frederick Clarke's translation of Adolf Holm's History of Greece has just been published.

A NEW edition of Mr. Benjamin Kidd's Social Evolution, making the nineteenth thousand of this important work, is issued by Messrs. Macmillan.

E. V. ZENKER's work on Anarchism has been translated into English, and is issued by Messrs. Methuen & Co. The author says that the work grew out of the astonishment he felt when he found how dim was the understanding of Anarchism possessed by a middle-class audience to whom he addressed himself on the day of the bomb outrage in the French Parliament. Zenker's attitude is one of scientific hostility to Anarchism in its violent forms. He admits he does not love Anarchism, and he has the candour to quote a remark which Elisée Reclus wrote to him by way of warning when he undertook the work: "We cannot understand what we do not love." Herr Zenker admits that "Anarchists will simply deny my capacity to write about their cause, and call my book terribly reactionary." He claims to be a coldly scientific and impartial observer, and his hope is to advance the dis-ussion of the subject to a point at which the Anarchist will see fit to abandon his worst argument, the bomb.

AMONG other works of historical or political interest may be mentioned The Diplomats' Handbook for Africa, by Count Charles Kinsky; The Niger Sources, by Lieut.-Col. J. K. Trotter, R.A.; and The Social Mind and Education, by George Edgar Vincent, Professor of Sociology at Chicago University.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- CHRISTIAN INSTITUTIONS. By Alexander V. G. Allen, D.D. T. & T. Clark. 12s.
 THE BIBLE REFERENCES OF JOHN RUSKIN. By Mary and Ellen Gibbs. George Allen.
 THE HOLY BIBLE. (Eversley Edition.) Vol. V.: ISAAH TO LAMENTATIONS. Macmillan & Co. 5s.
 A HISTORY OF NORTHUMBRLAND. Vol. IV.: HEXAMSHIRE: Part II. By John Crewford Hodgson. Simpkin Marshall.
 THE GENTLENESS OF JESUS, AND OTHER SERMONS. By Mark Guy Pearse. Horace Marshall & Son.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- PICTURES OF RUSSIAN HISTORY AND RUSSIAN LITERATURE. By Prince Serge Wolokonsky. Kegan Paul.
 FRANCE. By John Edward Courtney Bodley. 2 vols.
 A HISTORY OF CANADA. By Charles G. D. Roberts. Kegan Paul.
 STEWART CLARK: ONE OF NATURE'S NOBLEMEN. By S. E. S. C. Ballière, Tindall & Cox.
 THE LIVES OF THE SAINTS. By the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, M.A. John C. Nimmo. 5s.
 SOCIAL HOUSES WITH CELEBRITIES: BEING THE THIRD AND FOURTH VOLUMES OF "GOSSIP OF THE CENTURY." By the late Mrs. W. Pitt Byrnes. Edited by her Sister, Miss R. H. Busk. Ward & Downey. 2 vols.
 A YEAR FROM A CORRESPONDENT'S NOTE-BOOK. By Richard Harding Davis, F.R.G.S. Harper & Brothers. 6s.
 THE HISTORY OF GREECE. By Adolf Holm. In 4 vols. Vol. IV. Macmillan & Co. 7s. 6d.
 ANARCHISM: A CRITICISM AND HISTORY OF THE ANARCHIST THEORY. By E. V. Zenker. Methuen & Co.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

- THE LAY OF THE NIBELUNGS. Metrically translated from the Old German Text by Alice Horton, and edited by Edward Bell, M.A. George Bell & Sons. 5s.
 TEMPLE WAVERLEY NOVELS: ROB ROY. By Sir Walter Scott. 2 vols. J. M. Dent & Co.
 THE NINETEENTH CENTURY IN FRANCE: SELECTIONS FROM THE BEST MODERN FRENCH LITERARY WORKS, WITH ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS. By Paul Charvel. Digby, Long & Co.
 RAYS FROM THE STARRY HOST. By "Lucas & Non Lucendo." The Roxburgh Press.
 MARCUS AURELIUS ANTONINUS TO HIMSELF. By Gerald H. Rendall. Macmillan & Co.
 THOUGHTS AND WORDS. By Stephen Dowell. 3 vols. Longmans, Green & Co. 31s. 6d.
 SONGS OF LOVE AND EMPIRE. By E. Nesbit. Archibald Constable & Co. 5s.
 THE UNNAMED LAKE, AND OTHER POEMS. By Frederick George Scott. William Briggs (Toronto).
 THE TEMPLE DRAMATISTS: THE TRAGIC REIGN OF SELIMUS. Edited by Alexander B. Grosart. J. M. Dent & Co. 1s.
 THE TRAGEDY OF CORIOLANUS. Edited by Edmund K. Chambers. Blackie & Son.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

- LIFE AND PROGRESS IN AUSTRALASIA. By Michael Davitt, M.P. Methuen & Co.

EDUCATIONAL.

- A MANUAL OF FRENCH PROSE CONSTRUCTION. By J. G. Anderson, B.A. Blackie & Son. 5s. ELEMENTARY PHYSICS. By John G. Kerr, M.A. Blackie & Son. 1s. 6d. PEARLS FOR SCHOOL AND HOME. By Wendell P. Garrison. Longmans, Green & Co. (New York). A DICTIONARY OF THE FRENCH AND ENGLISH LANGUAGES. By F. E. A. Goss. George Bell & Sons. 12s. 6d.

THE BOOK MARKET.

QUO VADIS? IN AMERICA.

WE quote below returns of the best-selling books in six large cities of the States, gathered by the American Bookman. It will be seen that the extraordinary popularity of Quo Vadis? continues. This novel is named in nearly all the Bookman's lists, and it still heads many. The vogue of the book is such that it is probably more talked about than read—which is the surest sign that it is read a great deal. We are drawn to this conclusion by reading a "Literary Conversation" which appears in the current Century Magazine. Miss Arabella Morris and Miss Catherine Harlem are two-days' old acquaintances at a hotel; and their conversation soon takes this turn:

"Do you like historical novels?"

"I like Miss Yonge ever so much."

"I don't mean that kind. I mean those new foreign books—like Quo Vadis? for instance?"

"Oh, yes. You mean by Henryk Sienkiewicz—if that's his name. I never feel quite sure of those foreign names. It was the longest time before I could get Paderewski's name right."

"Dear Paddy!—wasn't he just divine!"

"Wasn't he! Why, I know girls who kept his photograph just wreathed in fresh flowers every day."

"So do I. But one never cares so much about authors as about musicians. I wonder why?"

"Well, it's different. Now, this Sienkiewicz—what does he look like?"

"Why, he's the image of my Uncle Charlie. But—there!—you don't know Uncle Charlie, do you? No matter; he is very dashing, you know—sort of military."

"It is wonderful how men can think of such things. Just imagine all that about Nero, and the lions, and the martyrs, and the early Christians, and catacombs, and things—why, it makes my head ache to think of a man's knowing so much. How do you suppose they do it?"

"I suppose it is their business—the same as anything else. Then there are great libraries; there are tons of books about things in them—miles of shelves full."

"Yes; but how can Sienkiewicz know just when to make them say the things they do say?"

"I'm sure I don't know. And yet he seems to bring it all before you so, just as if you saw it. Those scenes in the arena must have been blood-curdling."

"Exciting, too. That chariot-race in Ben Hur, they say, was as real as if you were there."

"I don't think there has been anything better than that."

"Not even in Quo Vadis?"

"I don't know, really. Of course, that is a translation, you know, and a translation can't be the same as the original."

"No; I notice that in all the French books; and it must be harder to translate from such a tongue as the German."

"Why from the German?"

"How do you mean?"

"I mean, such a book as Quo Vadis?"
 "But Quo Vadis? isn't a translation from the German."

"What is it then?—Norwegian?"

"No, my dear; it is from the Polish."

"Are you sure?"

"Or Hungarian. Anyway, it is in some of the languages nobody knows. I don't remember for certain. Maybe it is Austrian. But I know it wasn't German."

"Well, I don't exactly remember—for I haven't read it."

"Haven't you? Why, I thought from the way you spoke that you knew all about it. You quite scared me with your knowledge."

"Scared you? Why—haven't you read it either?"

"Not yet."

IN the following lists, the books are placed in order of their popularity:

NEW YORK, DOWNTOWN.

1. Quo Vadis? By Sienkiewicz.
2. Hugh Wynne. By Mitchell.
3. Captains Courageous. By Kipling.
4. Story of an Untold Love. By Ford.
5. The Choir Invisible. By Allen.
6. Free to Serve. By Rayner.

BOSTON, MASS.

1. Quo Vadis? By Sienkiewicz.
2. Hugh Wynne. By Mitchell.
3. Alfred, Lord Tennyson. By His Son.
4. Farthest North. By Nansen.
5. Harvard Episodes. By Flandrau.
6. Free to Serve. By Rayner.

CHICAGO, ILL.

1. Quo Vadis? By Sienkiewicz.
2. The Choir Invisible. By Allen.
3. The Christian. By Caine.
4. Hugh Wynne. By Mitchell.
5. A World Pilgrimage. By Barrows.
6. Rubáiyát of Doc Sifers. By Riley.

CINCINNATI, O.

1. Quo Vadis? By Sienkiewicz.
2. The Choir Invisible. By Allen.
3. The Kentuckians. By Fox.
4. Hugh Wynne. By Mitchell.
5. In Kedar's Tents. By Merriman.
6. The Story of Jesus Christ. By Phelps.

CLEVELAND, O.

1. Quo Vadis? By Sienkiewicz.
2. The Choir Invisible. By Allen.
3. The Honourable Peter Stirling. By Ford.
4. Hugh Wynne. By Mitchell.
5. The Christian. By Caine.
6. Lochinvar. By Crockett.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

1. Hugh Wynne. By Mitchell.
2. Quo Vadis? By Sienkiewicz.
3. Lochinvar. By Crockett.
4. Old Virginia. By Fiske.
5. Corleone. By Crawford.
6. Equality. By Bellamy.

THE STATE OF THE BOOK TRADE.

A COUNTRY BOOKSELLER'S VIEWS.

WE have received the following interesting communication from a bookseller in a quiet sea-side town. It reflects his opinions, and echoes the discontent which has lately found expression in our columns. We give the letter as the unsolicited, personal view of a correspondent.

"To love books is one thing, but to sell them is another. The truly great books seem to offer mild reproaches for their imprisonment on my shelves. Often I wonder whether residents in seaside resorts ever realise that they require the wisdom and joy only to be found in the classics. Judging by my experience as a bookseller, I am forced into the contrary opinion. The stress and tumult of modern civilisation seemingly has not here awakened any cravings for the companionship of the immortals. They are unacknowledged and slighted—those mighty intellects, who, amid the noisy seuffle of the present day, can impart to the loving reader the hush of the remote region in which they worked.

Circulating libraries abound, and militate against the sale even of the 'boomed' novelists. A year ago I bought the standard edition of a novelist resident in the neighbourhood, but up to the present only two copies have been sold. Booksellers are accustoming themselves to the cheap and nastily got-up books now sold by drapers. A greater surprise than this has been provided for the trade in this town during the past few months. Not long ago a large draper here sold quantities of paper-covered novels, bearing the imprint of a well-known firm of publishers. These books were sold at about one-sixth of their published price. It has lately been brought to my notice that another publishing house, dealing principally in semi-religious fiction, has appointed a large firm of general dealers as their agent. Drapers, therefore, can now buy these books almost on the same terms as the trade. The selling price of these books has been left to the discretion of the trade, who have endeavoured to recuperate themselves from this source as a partial set-off against the small discounts allowed by other firms. Drapers will, of course, sell this line at a much lower price.

May I mildly suggest that booksellers do not care to be coffined before they are dead, thus diverting custom to those gentlemen who drive in the nails?

Seemingly, bookselling pure and simple is doomed in the provinces. Trumpery ornaments and fancy goods are now taking the room once sacred as the home of books, for they yield a better profit. Truly, men cannot live on their personal love of books. The publishers seem indisposed or unable to render effectual assistance. Cannot the booksellers help themselves? What obstacles prevent the trade from combining into a company with their own printing offices, thus enabling them to deal direct with the authors? Good and popular books could thus be produced and sold at a living profit to the members of the company. Buying their own materials and ignoring the publishers altogether, they could, I believe, put books on the market which, for cheapness and excellence, would excel all others, and, at the same time, revive the languishing condition of the trade.

Combination and amalgamation during the past few years have been the ruling features of commerce. Nearly every other trade but bookselling has recognised the weakness of units and the might of numbers in combination. Why should the trade lag behind?"

Z.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME REMARKS ON "JULIUS CÆSAR."

SIR,—Mr. Tree's "Julius Cæsar" is a triumph of actor-management. It is also, in my humble opinion, a grievous insult to Shakespeare. Shakespeare wrote a play of which the central character was an idealised Brutus. It was the story of how a noble-minded Roman, partly from a traditional worship of "Liberty," partly through being worked upon by astute plotters like Cassius, took the life of Julius Cæsar. How for a few hours it looked as if all were going well with him and his fellow-conspirators, until the fiery Antony, by a successful appeal to the greed of the mob, turned the tables on them so that they fled from Rome, only to fall at Philippi under the avenging swords of Antony and Cæsar's nephew Octavius. That is the play as Shakespeare—a considerable dramatist after all—conceived it. Here it is as Mr. Tree conceives it:

There was a Roman named Antony, who was an intimate friend of Cæsar, wore a distinctive costume, and always stood in the middle of the stage. When Cæsar was killed he came into the Senate-house and made a speech over the body. He was left making facial contortions over it when the curtain fell. After Cæsar's death this Antony made a great speech in the Forum, and was loyally cheered by a splendidly drilled crowd of supers, as an actor-manager should be. He subsequently hurled defiance at the conspirators on the plains—or hills—of Philippi, and delivered a famous speech over the body of Brutus. And that's all.

It is hardly wonderful after this that the dramatic critic of the Standard should have complained pathetically that "the play really, to all intents and purposes, ended with the winning over of the mob by the pleading of Antony"; and that the quarrel scene in Brutus's tent—one of the most famous scenes in Shakespeare—which is at present retained in the Her Majesty's acting version, is not "of the very faintest concern" to the audience! Was I not right, then, in saying that the new "Julius Cæsar" is a triumph of actor-management? Mr. Tree has seized his opportunity of focussing the attention of the house upon himself, and the play is left in ruins.

Now the question is, is this what the play-going public want? Do they go to Her Majesty's to see Shakespeare's "Julius Cæsar" or to see Mr. Tree? If the former, then the present performance is an unqualified failure, for the whole proportions of the play are spoiled by the present arrangement, a relatively minor character is thrust violently into the front place, and the action of the drama becomes incoherent. Any performance of "Julius Cæsar" which impressed a leading dramatic critic with the opinion that the tent scene between Brutus and Cassius was superfluous, and was not of the faintest concern to the audience, stands condemned on the face of it. If Mr. Tree was bent on playing the principal part at his own theatre, he should have played Brutus. But I imagine that he could not make up his mind to let anyone else deliver Antony's oration. If this is so, the only course for him was to become a sort of Shakespearean Prisoner of Zenda, double the rôles of Brutus and Antony, deliver both orations in the Forum, and after killing himself (as Brutus in act v., get up and make the last speech (as Antony) over his own body. Perhaps Mr. Tree will try this arrangement at a special matinée?

But it is not the purpose of this letter to scoff at Mr. Tree, and I can even admire the ingenuity with which he has arranged the acts in his production, so that at the fall of the curtain he may always be, so to speak, in possession of the house. It is the privilege of the actor-manager, apparently, always to have the last word. My purpose is rather to point out the sorrowful fact that "Julius Cæsar" is unsuited for modern professional representation. It should only be played by amateurs. Almost every line in the play is pure poetry. This is true even of the speeches of the minor characters. The full value of this poetry can only be brought out by actors who think of their lines more than of themselves. How many such are there on the London stage to-day? Your professional actor will not "leave his damnable faces and begin" to speak his lines in a straightforward manner. He must gulp and snivel and "put tears into his voice," and employ all the other tricks which spoil the rhythm of blank verse. He overloads his production with set scenes, and lengthens it out with tiresome artifices such as the red roses at which poor Mr. Fulton has to grimace at Her Majesty's nightly. And then half a dozen scenes are cut out in order to prevent the play from being unduly long! Every possible effort is made to distract the attention of the audience from the verse to the actor. And the verse of "Julius Cæsar" is too good for this fooling. The result of all this is that Mr. Tree's production, in my opinion, in spite of the money and ingenuity and taste that he has lavished upon it, is nothing like so effective as the performance given by amateurs at Oxford in 1889, with Mr. Bourchier as Brutus and Mr. Holman Clarke as Cassius. The mounting on that occasion was comparatively simple, though then also Mr. Alma Tadema designed the scenery and costumes, if I remember right. The play was played through as it is printed, with practically no editing and no "cuts," and it lasted only some three hours. At Her Majesty's, when I saw it, in spite of numerous "cuts," it lasted three hours and a half, while the noise of "setting" the heavy scenery behind (with a view to reducing the "waits") spoiled some of the finest scenes, notably that in Brutus' orchard, which was given to the accompaniment of the muffled thunders of scene-shifting.

How, then, should "Julius Cæsar," be played? The first point is, that nothing should be permitted to interfere with the value of the verse. The educated amateur who appreciates blank verse and loves the play will speak it better than any professional actor we have. Again, an agreeable voice, a cultivated intonation is absolutely essential for every actor in the cast who has to speak blank verse. The high-pitched cockney twang is impossible in "Julius Cæsar." The play must be given entire, as it is written. Only so will it be intelligible and convincing to the audience. It is not a miracle of construction, but it tells its story clearly enough when actor-managers allow it to do so and do not cut out the other fellow's lines. The time that would be occupied by these discarded scenes and lines would be more than made up if all the unnecessary posturing and grimacing over blood-red roses and Cæsar's body were left out. What business has Calpurnia in the Senate-house at the end of Her Majesty's first act? The only actor in the present production who shows any perception whatever of how to play seems to me to be Mr. Waller. His Brutus is at times quite admirable. This emboldens me to urge him to reconsider his rendering of a famous passage. Brutus is a Stoic. It is his creed to repress all outward emotion. In the tent scene his stoicism breaks down, and he calls Cassius names, and Mr. Waller did this excellently. With such a Cassius, indeed, it must have been easy. I did it myself, and I hope sincerely that "it is impossible that ever Rome shall breed his fellow." But, after the reconciliation, Brutus must regain his Stoic self-command. Shakespeare realised this, and his Brutus says in a low, repressed tone—

"No man bears sorrow better. Portia is dead."

Mr. Waller says—"Portia (sob) is (sob) d-d-d-e-a-d," and, in very deed, "makes no use of his philosophy." In the same way it is ridiculous for Brutus to snort and gulp over the details of Portia's end. He tells them (in Shakespeare) in the baldest, briefest form, and his tone is an even, monotonous level.

"Impatient of my absence,
And grief that young Octavius with Mark Antony
Have made themselves so strong; for with her death
That tidings came; with this she fell distract,
And, her attendants absent, swallowed fire."

Mr. Waller's elaborate shudder over the announcement spoils an impressive situation. Cassius—and the audience—may be trusted to do the shuddering if the lines are properly delivered.
ST. JOHN HANKIN.

ROBERT FERGUSSON.

SIR,—With reference to the notice, in the ACADEMY of 22nd ult., of my new Life of Robert Fergusson, I have no thought or wish to traverse either your reviewer's singular allegation of lack of judgment on my part because I have traced (for the first time) his paternal and maternal descent, or his purely imaginary "demerits" that I have not taken pains to reproduce the environment of the poet, and reconstruct the Edinburgh and St. Andrew's of 150 years ago. I am perfectly willing to leave the book to speak for itself on these matters, confident that the man who cannot actualise to himself the conditions of Robert Fergusson's brief life from my abundant data will be pronounced by every capable and impartial reader to be a dunderpate, or so hurried and perfunctory in his reading of the relative chapters as to bewray mere dipping here and there.

But whilst overpassing these things, I respectfully claim leave, at once and absolutely, to challenge a very much more serious thing. Your reviewer says, as within his personal knowledge: "R. L. Stevenson had abundant reasons for the terms 'drunken' and 'vicious.'" It surely is not asking too much that these "abundant reasons" be produced. For, certes, not only did Stevenson himself never give one scintilla of proof or authority for his monstrous accusations, but, when questioned, could give nothing more than Dr. David Irving's mendacities, of "dissoluteness" and "dissolute associates" and "habitual dissipation"—mendacities that were at once squelched by the venerable Edinburgh citizen, Thomas Sommers (1804), and his testimony from intimate knowledge, since confirmed by witness upon witness, as my book shows.

More than that—as Stevenson applies identically the same terms of "drunken" and "vicious" to himself—I ask your reviewer, are we expected to credit such morbid self-condemnation? I, for one, must decline. Alike in relation to Fergusson and himself, Stevenson was blazingly rash of speech. Nor does this stand alone. His sorely-repent-of Essay on Burns abides as a sad monumental evidence of how apt he was to leap at conclusions, and to put things exaggeratedly and, so, falsely. It is heart-breaking to me to feel compelled thus to write of one I loved, and whose memory I cherish. I hold among my literary treasures a long, closely written, and extremely remarkable letter to myself, that was meant to herald others on our Scottish poets. But, alas! when it reached me its writer was gone. I am very far, therefore, from wishing to say one harsh word of this fine spirit, this Scot of Scots. But speaking from fullest personal knowledge, after investigations carried on for long years, I declare solemnly that neither had Stevenson nor any other one atom of ground for charging Fergusson with being "vicious." As for the "drunken," I have, indeed, written ill if I have not satisfied the readers of my book that, in his giving "a slice of his constitution" (Burns's phrase), he was victim of the ways of the time, and deserves supremest pity, not detestable moralising; while to allege that "love" was absent from the life of one who was so lovable and full of love, tenderness and sweetness, by universal testimony, is no less stupid than false.

It is all very well to tell me I am "controversial"; but finding the virus of Irving's poisonous chatter working everywhere—alike in British, German, French, Italian biographical dictionaries and elsewhere—how could I be other than fired to expose and, having exposed, to denounce? Easy, too, to bring together the several places wherein I so expose and denounce, and thus convey the idea that the book consists of gratuitous controversy; but let each be taken in its place, and I particularly affirm each will be found warranted by the facts.

For "puir Robbie's sake," I am glad of the warm welcome being given to my book, and, as an old contributor to the ACADEMY, I feel sure I shall not appeal in vain for righteous and clement judgment of him.

ALEXANDER B. GROSART.

Dublin: Jan. 25, 1898.

BECKY SHARP—AFTER.

SIR,—I do not think you can have referred to the last chapter of Vanity Fair before quoting the portion of Thackeray's letter in your current issue or you would have called attention to the fact that it does not really carry matters any further, and contradicts some of the statements in the book.

For instance, the book says: "She (Becky) never was Lady Crawley, though she continued so to call herself." The letter:

"Mrs. Rawdon was obliged to lay down the title which she had prematurely assumed."

Again, the book: "Colonel Rawdon Crawley died . . . six weeks before the demise of his brother." The letter: "Colonel Crawley . . . had died of fever three months before his brother."

And in particular, the book: "All his (Jos.'s) available assets were the two thousand pounds for which his life was insured," of which Becky only got half. And the letter: "The late Jos. Sedley, Esq. . . . left her two lakhs of rupees."

I saw in one of the papers that Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. intended publishing the letter at the end of the book. I hope they will reconsider this decision.—Yours truly,
Jan. 30, 1898. THOS. H. TERRY.

"A BENEDICTINE MARTYR IN ENGLAND."

SIR,—I should be very grateful if you would allow me space to give an explanation of a passage in my book, A Benedictine Martyr in England, to which your reviewer has taken exception. I do this in no captious spirit, but I think that the point is one which merits elucidation. I had said, speaking of the process of beatification of the English martyrs now going on at Rome, that as it was impossible to prove the requisite number of miracles for each member of a band of over three hundred martyrs, it was desirable to invoke them in a body, so that the miracle, if granted, might serve for the cause of the beatification of all.

Now I can well understand that this whole matter may seem very ridiculous to a non-Catholic who does not believe in miracles at all; but granted the two facts that miracles are required at Rome for canonisations, and that those brought forward as evidence of sanctity are submitted to the most rigorous and searching examination before they are accepted (and these are facts that no competent person will deny), I cannot see what there was either immoral or ridiculous in my remark. Your critic says, however:

"But, let alone the ethics of this proceeding, does Dom Camm really suppose that the Pope will be unable to determine which of the candidates it was that actually answered to this general invocation?"

I allow, Sir, that I cannot understand the drift of this remark, though that may be owing to my "very extraordinary condition of intellect." But I suppose your reviewer thinks it unfair to ask the prayers of more than one martyr at a time, for he assumes that all will get the credit for the grace which has been really granted through one or few. But if all were not worthy of canonisation, I assume that God would not grant the grace in such a manner as to conduce to that end. For if it were not His will that all should be thus honoured, no doubt He would either not grant it at all, or, at any rate, would not allow it to be used as a proof of the heroic sanctity of those invoked.

As to the Pope's supposed superhuman powers, your reviewer really staggers me! Does he really suppose that I, or any other Catholic, believe that the Pope is inspired? For if a miracle was granted in answer to a general invocation, the Pope could certainly not decide if one or other of the candidates alone obtained the grace, even by a special revelation of a most extraordinary kind. No Catholic believes that the Pope has this kind of power; all we believe is, that when deciding questions of faith and morals, as doctor or teacher of the Universal Church, he is preserved by the Divine assistance from falling into error. This is a very different matter.

Please excuse my prolixity, and receive my best thanks.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

BEDE CAMM, O.S.B.

St. Thomas's Abbey, Erdington.

[Dom Camm proposed that the martyrs in question should be invoked collectively, in order to get over the impossibility of proving the requisite number of miracles for each member of the band individually. Now this impossibility could only exist, should the prayers of some of them be inefficacious: were they all efficacious, it would be as easy to prove over three hundred miracles, or whatever the number required may be, as one. Therefore I thought, and think, that the proposal to obscure the individual issues by a collective invocation was a bit of shady ethics. I also suggested that it would probably be futile. And now I observe that Dom Camm, changing his ground, practically admits this. For he says that a miracle so obtained would not be allowed to serve as a proof of the heroic sanctity of anyone not really worthy of the honour of beatification. That is precisely what I hinted; and if so, what end does the general invocation serve, which could not be served without it? I did not say that the Pope was inspired, or that I thought that Dom Camm thought he was inspired: let it be that "he is preserved by the Divine assistance from falling into error"; that is enough for my argument. To beatify a martyr on the ground of a miracle which his prayers had had no share in securing would surely be an error; and whether it be so technically or not, the question whether a particular dead person is to be regarded as in a state of beatification is essentially a question of faith. But if Dom Camm means that God would intervene to prevent heroic sanctity being ascribed to the unworthy in some other way than through the decision of the Pope in a cause of beatification, then in what way?—THE REVIEWER.]

TRANSLATOR AND CRITIC.

SIR,—Even experts, and I make no doubt that the reviewer of Vol. II. of the translation of Ratzel's History of Mankind in your issue of January 15 is an expert, should make quite sure before criticising details that they have mastered a writer's view of his subject. Your reviewer is not unnaturally surprised to find America spoken of as "the East," on p. 10. If he had read the opening chapter of the work he would have seen that Prof. Ratzel regards the Atlantic Ocean as being, for ethnographical purposes, the great dividing barrier, and consequently makes the American continent the most easterly seat of mankind. Strange as it may seem to us in England, America really is east of somewhere. East is, therefore, not a mistake for west here; nor is it on p. 260. On p. 246, on the other hand, west is a sufficiently obvious misprint for east.

I can assure your reviewer that "Wied" and not "Neuwied" is, and always has been, the title of the princely family to which the eminent explorer belongs. In a well-known German work published at Coblenz, I find "Die Fürstin von Wied," "ein fürstl. Wiedsches Lustschloss," and so on. Neuwied, known to English travellers on the Rhine, is the capital of the principality.

As to Monbattu or Mangbattu, I can only say that though I am not an ethnologist myself, I have some such among my friends, and it was by one of the most distinguished among these that I was told to write Monbattu. In the case of an unwritten language it seems somewhat absurd to speak of the "proper" form of a word. Schweinfurth, I presume, heard Monbattu, Junker something that he renders by Mangbattu—a combination of letters, by the way, indicating in German a sound for which we in England should have to write "Mankpattu," or thereabouts.

As to your criticism of my English, I must admit that while some of the phrases you demur to are perfectly correct, and seem to me adapted to convey the desired meaning to the most obtuse of readers, others (including a good many that you do not quote) are terribly clumsy. To this, as well as to your remark about "erroneous statements," I can only say that I did not undertake to re-write Prof. Ratzel's work. In a science, too, of which many of the technical terms employed by English writers, as it is, are merely bald translations from the German, I did not feel any particular call to improve the vocabulary.—Yours faithfully,

A. J. BUTLER.

Wood End, Weybridge.

[No doubt America "really is east of somewhere," but for the ordinary reader it lies west of England. After Junker's explicit statement Monbattu should not be revived, at least without a warning note (Travels, Keane's English ed., ii., p. 254). Nor need Mangbattu be transliterated Mankpattu any more than Monbattu, Monputtu. The German traveller's full name is Maximilian von Wied-Neuwied, as on the title-page of his Reise nach Brasilien, 3 vols., Frankfurt-a-M., 1820). "Of Wied" never could be right, von being here a part of the title, and this title is territorial, derived both from Wied and Neuwied, which is a district as well as a "capital." It has always formed part of the title when given in full. The "remarks" about "erroneous statements" were fully borne out by references to Chimus, Dakotas, Yakuts, &c., &c., which should have been corrected by the translator, because here and there he does essay to control the original. Of course "a good many" of the un-English phrases were necessarily excluded from the list given.—YOUR REVIEWER.]

EDUCATION FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE IN INDIA.

SIR,—In the ACADEMY of January 29, 1898, pp. 134-5, there were two letters in answer to my communication of January 22.

To the first of these letters, written, as it is, with courtesy and fairness, I have no urgent reasons to reply.

To the second I take exceptions which might be even serious did I take the letter au sérieux. That second correspondent claims to know exactly and positively that "Mr. Wren makes no pretence of 'educating' anybody." I want the correspondent to understand that I do make a pretence, and a very serious one, of "educating" the minds of such pupils as Mr. Wren desires me to teach constitutional and political history. If such a claim be "preposterous," then I am glad to inform the correspondent that I do really entertain such a preposterous claim. People do vary in their ways of being preposterous, do they not?—Yours faithfully,

EMIL REICH.

BACCHYLIDES.

SIR,—I am indebted to Miss Jane Harrison, whose identity it was not easy to discover under the form which the printer unfortunately gave to her signature, for calling my attention to M. Jules Nicole's pamphlet. I had, however, already seen it, and as it only contains an additional eighty-nine lines of the Georgos to add to the twenty-seven which we already possessed, I must admit that it leaves me still desirous for a complete play of Menander. I do not even know that I can exactly call myself "a lover of Menander," for it is difficult to be very ardent about anyone who leads such a fragmentary existence; but I should certainly like a chance of adding him to the number of my friends. I hope that these remarks will not be thought "airy" in the serious boudoirs of the Sesame Club, and am,—Yours faithfully,

THE REVIEWER.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

THE reviews of Mrs. Steel's book clash and dovetail in a curiously interesting manner. We start with the Daily Chronicle, which quotes a statement by Mr. W. D. Howells, that English writers "are beginning to do some short stories; our people, on the other hand," &c. "A good beginning," at all events, is the Chronicle's answer, and for proof—this book.

"There are eighteen examples of the short story, all marked by that happy, vivid art of story-telling which Mrs. Steel has at command, and all distinguished by the facile and skilled manipulation of the raw staple and material which places the writer among the exemplars of the craft."

In classifying the stories, this critic says:

"Lastly, we have certain others, like the admirable example that supplies the title, which are short stories of unimpeachable orthodoxy—stories that satisfy the whole law and canon of the art, stories that even 'our people'—the countrymen of Mr. Howells—might not disdain to have produced, and will, we undertake, read with enjoyment, and possibly—for we are of a sanguine habit—with profit."

THE Saturday Review takes quite another line. This critic sees Mrs. Steel through Kipling spectacles, and sees her stature diminished thereby:

"With a surprising pertinacity, Mrs. Steele still endeavours to compete with Mr. Kipling on his own peculiar ground. . . . With no uncertain gesture, Mrs. Steel herself indicates the standard by which she must be tried. For it is one thing to follow a pioneer upon the road he opens—none may be blamed for doing so; but it is another business when one artist deliberately selects another's motive for his own treatment. Everyone has a perfect right to do so, of course; only, if the performance falls short, the conveyance comes to be judged as theft. Mrs. Steel, having duly absorbed 'The Mark of the Beast' and the 'Mowgli' stories, elects to write 'The Blue-throated God,' and the result is a series of variations, producing an effect of confusion, woven about another's theme. Mr. Kipling invented a good thing, and called it 'Without Benefit of Clergy.' Mrs. Steel reads it, and presently she writes 'On the Second Story,' which is a good enough story, but not a masterpiece. Mr. Kipling presents hard-handed England in India as none other has done, and Mrs. Steel, perceiving a curious mirage of the same objective, gives us such conventional anomalies as the soldier in 'At the Great Durbar,' and Craddock the engineer in 'In the Permanent Way' and 'The King's Well.'"

The Times associates Mrs. Steel with Mr. Kipling in a kindlier manner:

"Comparison, though so favourite a form of criticism, is always odious, but in one particular at least we venture to think the gentleman has the advantage of the lady. In his pictures in black and white he does not give us too much of the tar-brush; whereas Mrs. Steel is not so careful in this matter. This is most noticeable in her last book, In the Permanent Way, where the stories are so taken up with the native that the settler is almost neglected. This seems hard since he alone will read them. The fact is, that the stories of the East without something Western in them are, like water without the whisky, a little insipid."

The Spectator makes much the same distinction, but in a still more complimentary way:

"While her only rival in this field of fiction is Mr. Kipling, her work, if it lacks his vivid virility of style, is marked by an even subtler appreciation of the Oriental standpoint—both ethical and religious—a more exhaustive acquaintance with native life in its domestic and indoor aspects, and a deeper sense of the moral responsibilities attaching to our rule in the East. Indeed, if Mrs. Steel shows any partiality, it is not towards Western modes of thought."

The Daily Telegraph's critic notes the prevailing mood of Mrs. Steel's stories:

"Of all the stories in Mrs. F. A. Steel's new book there is hardly one that does not end in tragic fashion. The book is not a sad one, for it is pervaded by the authoress's own keen humour; nevertheless, it is full to overflowing with the pain and mystery of life, with perplexed and tangled questions, which press in vain for an answer. India, Mrs. Steel seems to say, can certainly not expect a solution of the problems which oppress her from the narrow creed of her alien masters, official even in their religion; the thronging crowd of her own deities is dumb, and even the great faith of Mahomet has nothing better to offer than a certain fierce resignation. It is curious to observe how, in spite of this deep-rooted scepticism, the predominant interest of these stories is in the main religious."

"The Nigger of the Narcissus,"
By Joseph Conrad.
In reviewing Mr. Conrad's book, the Speaker says that Mr. Crane's Red Badge of Courage has much to answer for.

"That remarkable feat of the imagination has inspired a whole school of descriptive writers of a new class, who aspire to make visible to us the inside of great scenes—battlefields, shipwrecks, moving incidents of every kind. Mr. Conrad, who has given us more than one remarkable study of Eastern life, has now followed in the footsteps of Mr. Stephen Crane, and in The Nigger of the Narcissus has painted for us a picture of sea-life as it is lived in storm and sunshine on a merchant-ship, which in its vividness, its emphasis, and its extraordinary fulness of detail, is a worthy pendant to the battle-picture presented to us in The Red Badge of Courage."

The critic points out that there is no plot in the story, that the nigger is of little importance in the tale, and that what gives its character to the book is the account of the great storm in which the Narcissus is all but lost.

"Whether it be a true one or not, none can say who have not passed through such a scene. But it looks like the truth; and to have painted it in such a fashion that its vivid colouring bites into the mind of the spectator is a very notable achievement."

The Daily Telegraph's critic also associates Mr. Conrad's tale with The Red Badge of Courage:

"The style, though a good deal better than Mr. Crane's has the same jerky and spasmodic quality; while a spirit of faithful and minute description—even to the verge of the wearisome—is common to both."

But he allows that Mr. Conrad is an artist; nor does he stint his admiration to his descriptions of weather:

"There are few characters among the crew of the Narcissus which do not stand out with vivid and life-like presentment; we know them all as though we, too, had partaken in the lengthy cruise, and had laughed and grumbled at all their idiosyncracies and failings. Old Singleton, the Nestor of this company, with his immense knowledge and his impressive taciturnity; blue-eyed Archie, with his red whiskers; Belfast, with his touching fidelity to the nigger; Mr. Baker, the chief mate, with his grunts and his sovereign common sense; little Captain Allistoun, as hard as nails, and with a will tempered like the finest steel; Donkin, the wastrel and outcast of metropolitan life, shifty, indolent, and sly; and the nigger, James Wait himself, with his mysterious authority and his racking cough—one and all are our familiar friends before the voyage is over."

"Oppressively monotonous, and yet, at the same time, enthralling," is the verdict of the Manchester Courier on Mr. Conrad's story.

"The Great Stone of Sardis." Mr. FRANK STOCKTON's latest story reminds two reviewers of Jules Verne's stories, and to a third it suggests a comparison with Mr. H. G. Wells's extravaganzas.

"The Great Stone of Sardis," says Literature, "is a compound book. The Dipsey and the hydraulic thermometer divide the interest with the scientific experiments and inventions of Mr. Rowland Clewe at the Sardis works, New Jersey. In a way this latter part of the tale is well managed; we are led very skilfully through the Artesian Ray and the Great Shell up, or, rather, down to the Great Stone, and the secret of the book is ingenious enough in its manner. But what a poor manner it is! How that initial date, 1947, chills the imagination, and in what a torpid humour we listen to the catalogue of 'scientific' marvels! And then there is the garnishing which is deemed necessary for such stories as these; Mrs. Block gives comic relief, and Mrs. Raleigh looks after the love interest, and through it all one remembers the curse which Stevenson pronounced on the Jules Verne school of fiction. But The Great Stone of Sardis has its uses. It serves to remind us how utterly remote the wonder of romance is from the wonder of external things, and how admirably Rossetti spoke from the romantic standpoint when he said that he neither knew nor cared whether the earth went round the sun or the sun round the earth."

The Standard critic is doubtful about Mr. Stockton's science.

"Mr. Stockton has not the scientific knowledge which serves Mr. Wells, and gives to his stories such a high degree of plausibility. Our author seems to postulate, for instance, that his Artesian Ray has a certain physical effect upon the matter through which it penetrates: for how, otherwise, when it is again turned on, could it, so to say, start at the point where its effect had previously left off? And such a notion as this seems to show a complete misconception of the nature of light, and of the vibrations of the luminiferous ether."

The Artesian Ray does not trouble the Westminster Gazette:

"The best stroke in the book is Mr. Stockton's idea of the effect of his Artesian Ray on the human body."

THE BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL.

Ask for the BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL at any stationer's. THE BLACKLEAD PENCILS are made in 5 Grades: H.B.; H; B; H.H.; E.B.; finest Bavarian Lead, equal to the highest quality of Artists' Pencils. COLOURED CRAYON PENCILS in Blue, Red, Yellow, Green, and Black, tough and smooth, rich in colour.

HOW USED.—Start the paper with a pin or any pointed instrument—a slight pull—off it comes, and the lead pencil is sharpened. Thirty Fresh Points to every Pencil. The only wear is from use, not from whittling away or breaking the lead.

No wood chips are left on the floor, nor any dirty marking-stuff on your fingers.

If your stationer does not sell them send 1s. for set of sample pencils to—

BLAISDELL PAPER PENCIL CO., LTD.,
48, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S LIST.

New Catalogue, comprising over 3,000 Standard and Reference Works, Gift-Books, Novels, &c., post free on application.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY CLASSICS.

Edited by CLEMENT K. SHORTER.

Crown 8vo, tastefully bound, gilt top, neat edges, art canvas, full gilt, with Photo-gravure Frontispiece to each Volume, and Introductions by Dr. ROBERTSON NICOLL, EDWARD DOWDEN, LL.D., RICHARD GARNETT, C.B., LL.D., EDMUND GOSSE, FREDERIC HARRISON, and others. 2s. 6d. each.

"A series of reprints of literary masterpieces.....These books will educate the eye as well as the intellect, and at a modest price of half-a-crown are within the reach of everybody. Beautiful books they are, and their intrinsic value is increased by bibliographical notes and introductions by experts."—Illustrated London News.

VOLUMES NOW READY.

1. SARTOR RESARTUS. By Thomas Carlyle.
2. ALARIC at ROME, and other Poems. By Matthew ARNOLD.
3. HEROES and HERO WORSHIP. By Thomas Carlyle.
4. PROMETHEUS BOUND, and other Poems. By ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.
5. BELLS and POMEGRANATES. By Robert Browning. First Series.
6. PAST and PRESENT. By Thomas Carlyle.
7. BELLS and POMEGRANATES. By Robert Browning. Second Series.
8. CONFESSIONS of an OPIUM EATER. By Thomas DE QUINCEY.

TO BE FOLLOWED BY

9. CRANFORD. By Mrs. Gaskell. [Ready immediately.]

The TIMES says: "'Haydn's Dictionary of Dates' is the most universal Book of Reference in a moderate compass that we know of in the English Language."

TWENTY-FIRST EDITION.

Containing about 1,250 Pages, 12,000 Articles, and 140,000 Dates and Facts.

Revised, Corrected, and Enlarged, with New and Important Matter.

Medium 8vo, cloth, 21s.; half-calf, 28s.; full or tree calf, 35s.

HAYDN'S DICTIONARY OF DATES AND UNIVERSAL INFORMATION.

A COMPLETE RECORD OF ALL NATIONS AND TIMES.

CONTAINING A HISTORY OF THE WORLD.

By BENJAMIN VINCENT,

Hon. Librarian of the Royal Institution of Great Britain, Cor. Mem. Hist. Soc. New York, &c.

"By far the readiest and most reliable work of the kind for the general reader within our knowledge."—Standard.

"So altogether indispensable that it is difficult to imagine a period when it was not in existence."—Spectator.

*.* Specimen Page post free on application.

NEW CHEAP EDITION, 7s. 6d.

ON THE CARS AND OFF.

Being the Journal of a Pilgrimage along the Queen's Highway, from Halifax, in Nova Scotia, to Victoria, in Vancouver Island.

By DOUGLAS SLADEN,

Author of "The Japs at Home," &c.

WITH ADDITIONAL MATTER ON

"K L O N D I K E."

By P. A. HURD, Editor of the Canadian Gazette, the Outlook, &c.

Profusely and beautifully illustrated with 19 Collotype Pictures of Canadian Scenery, and over 80 Cuts in the Text.

Medium 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Will invite and reward attention by the profusion and intrinsic attractiveness of its illustrations, and by the lively and genial tone of the letterpress..... The book is appropriately dedicated to Lord Dufferin, whose recommendation of its merits is at once pertinent and sufficient..... Mr. Sladen may well feel that he needs no higher recommendation of his work than that of the popular Governor-General."—Times.

"Mr. Sladen writes with a kindly cynicism and much freshness of observation..... He appears to have understood thoroughly the character of the inhabitants, and the problems and possibilities of Canada; and we know of no work in which a pleasanter account of what is to be seen in our great colony can be found."—Daily Chronicle.

GUY BOOTHBY'S POPULAR NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, special design, 6s. each.

Profusely Illustrated by STANLEY L. WOOD, and others.

BUSHIGRAMS.

"Intensely interesting. Forces from us, by its powerful artistic realism, those ebony sensations which it should be the aim of the humane writer to elicit, whether in comedy or tragedy. The book will enhance Mr. Boothby's reputation and bring him into the very front rank of emotional writers, as well as confirm our opinion of him as a most powerful imaginative author."—Manchester Guardian.
"We can think of no book which would come as a greater godsend to the man whose stock of after-dinner stories is getting dangerously low."—Bookman.

THE FASCINATION OF THE KING.

"Of great and sustained interest. The story is exciting enough to please the most exacting reader."—Forshire Post.
"A brilliant tale dramatically and vigorously told."—Daily News.

DOCTOR NIKOLA.

THE BEAUTIFUL WHITE DEVIL.

A BID FOR FORTUNE.

IN STRANGE COMPANY.

THE MARRIAGE OF ESTHER.

NEW GIFT-BOOKS.

A BEAUTIFUL VOLUME.—Crown 8vo, art buckram, gilt, gilt top, 5s.

POEMS OF THE LOVE AND PRIDE OF ENGLAND.

Edited by F. and M. WEDMORE.

"Of all the books that we have included under the heading of 'Gift-Books' there is not one which it should be as great a pleasure to give and to receive as this."—The Spectator.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. each.

Profusely Illustrated by HAROLD COPPING.

BY JOHN STRANGE WINTER.

PRINCESS SARAH.

"No matter of what age, no girl will find aught but pleasure in this fascinating story. 'Princess Sarah' is that ideal book—a thoroughly cleanly, wholesome story of self-sacrifice without any preaching or lachrymose situations."—Truth.

BY ETHEL TURNER.

MISS BOBBIE.

"Miss Turner can be both humorous and pathetic, and so cleverly are these qualities blended in 'Miss Bobbie' that the story fascinates the reader at the outset, and holds his attention unflinchingly to the end."—St. James's Budget.

BY ETHEL TURNER.

THE BEST GIFT-BOOKS.

Royal 8vo, cloth gilt bevelled, gilt edges, 6s. each.

VOLUMES V. AND VI. OF THE

WINDSOR MAGAZINE

CONTAIN:

|                          |                     |                                   |
|--------------------------|---------------------|-----------------------------------|
| The CHRISTIAN.           | By HALL CAINE.      | Illustrated by J. Barnard Davis.  |
| The SKIPPER'S WOOING.    | By W. W. JACOBS.    | Illustrated by W. Owen.           |
| The DORRINGTON DEED-BOX. | By AURUCA MORRISON. | Illustrated by Stanley L. Wood.   |
| 'UNIVERSITY TALES.       | By MAX PERMEGON.    | Illustrated by T. S. C. Crowther. |

Or, in other words, a 6s., a 5s., and two 3s. 6d. Novels.

And also Stories and Articles by the BEST MODERN AUTHORS, including

|                  |                 |                      |
|------------------|-----------------|----------------------|
| RUDYARD KIPLING. | GUY BOOTHBY.    | PRINCE RANJITSINHJI. |
| ANTHONY HOPE.    | MORLEY ROBERTS. | ETHEL TURNER.        |
| GAMBLER BOLTON.  | ADA CAMBRIDGE.  | J. HOLT SCHOOLING.   |

And about 1,200 Illustrations by

|                  |                  |              |
|------------------|------------------|--------------|
| ROBERT SAUBER.   | HERBERT RAILTON. | G. MONTEARD. |
| STANLEY L. WOOD. | HAROLD COPPING.  | And others.  |

THREE SPLENDID NEW NOVELS.

BY FRANCIS PREVOST.

FALSE DAWN. 6s.

"There is a mingled delicacy and power.... Intensely interesting..... The book is one to be read and remembered."—Speaker.
"Beautifully written, with real and rare powers, both of psychology and of 'word-painting.'"—Academy.

BY "GRAHAM IRVING."

TEMPTATION. 3s. 6d.

"Told with exceptional ability. It is without doubt a remarkable novel."—Bookseller.
"Decidedly a clever novel, which cannot fail to be interesting to all readers."—Pall Mall Gazette.

BY ADA CAMBRIDGE.

AT MIDNIGHT. 3s. 6d.

"Plot—plot thick and strong—characteristics 'At Midnight.' Miss Cambridge shares with Miss Ethel Turner the distinction of being the most refined, polished, and truly literary among Australian writers of fiction."—Daily Mail.
"Written with that compactness of plot, crispness of dialogue, and swiftness of action which make the successful story."—Glasgow Herald.

WARD, LOCK & CO., LIMITED, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.
Melbourne and New York.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1345.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

SOTHERAN'S PRICE CURRENT OF LITERATURE,

No. 572, just published, for FEBRUARY, contains the usual selection of good Books in Literature, Art, and Science. Post free from H. SOTHERAN & Co., Booksellers, 140, Strand, W.C.; and 37, Piccadilly, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,

Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

POTTER'S CATALOGUE of New and Second-hand BOOKS (No. 119, for FEBRUARY) at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

FOR the AUTOGRAPH COLLECTOR—A NEW MANUAL by Dr. Scott, 1s. post free, 17, Cranley Road, Fulham. Autographs purchased; a large variety for sale; 11s.6d. free.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. English, 10d. per 1,000 Words. French and German, in Roman characters, 1s. 3d. per 1,000. French Translated. Samples and references.—Miss E. M. 15, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS OF ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilised world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principal or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs. Steadman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

FRENCH in THREE MONTHS.—FRENCH in THREE MONTHS.—DAMEN'S NEW SYSTEM. Privately or by post. Any age. Success certain. Commended by the Press.—10, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER—PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 60, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

ESTABLISHED 1851. BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand. TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

THE ANNIVERSARY MEETING

will be held at the MUSEUM of PRACTICAL GEOLOGY, Jermyn Street, S.W., on THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17th, at 5 p.m. ADDRESS by the President, Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I. HUBERT HALL, Director and Hon. Sec. 115, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

QUAIN PROFESSORSHIP OF PHYSICS.

This CHAIR will be VACANT by the resignation of Prof. Carey Foster at the close of the present Session. APPLICATIONS, accompanied by such Testimonials as Candidates may wish to submit, should reach the Secretary by TUESDAY, MARCH 1, 1898.

Further information will be sent on application. The new Professor will enter on his duties next October. J. M. HOASARON, M.A., Secretary.

UNIVERSITY of ABERDEEN.

LECTURESHIP ON EDUCATION.

The UNIVERSITY COURT will, at a meeting early in April, proceed to APPOINT under Ord. No. 17, and (as limited thereby) for a period not to exceed five years, a LECTURER on the THEORY, HISTORY, and ART of EDUCATION, who will be required to give a Full Course of Lectures qualifying for Graduation, and also, if so required, a Course of at least Fifty Lectures on such portions of Psychology and Ethics as underlie Educational Theory. The person appointed will be required to enter at the end of April ensuing on the duties of the Summer Session, and undertake the due supervision of the practical training, &c., of the Queen's Students. Further particulars may be obtained from ROBERT WALKER, Esq., M.A., Secretary of the University Court, with whom applications, with fifteen copies of Testimonials, should be made; the candidate think fit to submit any, are to be lodged not later than 6th April ensuing.

University of Aberdeen, 7th February, 1898.

McGILL UNIVERSITY, MONTREAL.

CHAIR OF CHEMISTRY.

The Board of Governors is prepared to receive applications for the additional CHAIR of CHEMISTRY, newly instituted by Mr. W. C. McDonald. Candidates should produce evidence of special qualifications in Organic Chemistry. Applications, accompanied by any testimonials which the Candidate may desire to submit, should be forwarded to the undersigned on or before the 31st March next. W. VAUGHAN, Secretary.

McGill University, Montreal.

THE HARLEIAN SOCIETY, instituted in 1869

for the Publication of Inedited Manuscripts relating to Genealogy, Family History, and Heraldry. President: The Most Honourable the MARQUESS of BUTE, K.T. Entrance Fee, 10s. 6d. Annual Subscription, £1 1s. Prospectuses and full particulars of Publications already issued (65 Volumes), and Forms of Application for Membership, may be obtained on application to the Publishers, Messrs MITCHELL & HUGHES, 140, Wardour Street, W., or to one of the Honorary Secretaries, GEORGE J. ARMSTRONG, F.S.A., Clifton Woodhead, Brighouse, and J. P. RYLANDS, F.S.A., 2, Charlesville, Birkenhead.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways. For particulars, apply to Secretary at College.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application. Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.

30 - 34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY.

REPRODUCTIONS IN PERMANENT CARBON OF FAMOUS WORKS OF ART FROM PUBLIC AND PRIVATE COLLECTIONS.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI. A New Series of Autotypes of Notable Works by this Painter, including many now on Exhibition at the New Gallery.

The Collection includes—

|  |   |
|--|---|
| ROSETTIS OWN PORTRAITS. Sept. 20, 1855, and October, 1861. | A VISION OF FIAMETTA PORTRAIT OF ROBERT BROWNING. |
| PROSEPIERRE LAINI. 1871.                                   | SILENCE PERILASCURA.                              |
| LAINI. 1871.   | LA PIA.   |
| STUDY FOR FOUND.   | THE LAMP OF MEMORY.                               |
| ROSA TRIPLETT.   | LA GHIARELANDATA.                                 |
| THE LOVING CUP.  | BEATA BEATRIX.                                    |
| THE BLESSED DAMOZEL.                                       | THE ANNUNCIATION.                                 |
| VENUS VERTICORDIA.   |   |

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING. Now ready, a Series of Reproductions of Works by

|               |                |
|---------------|----------------|
| JOHN CROME.   | E. T. DANIELL. |
| J. S. COTMAN. | T. LOUND.      |
| J. J. COTMAN. | J. PHELAN.     |
| M. E. COTMAN. | J. RUSSELL.    |
| J. STARK.     | H. BRIGHT.     |
| R. LABROOKE.  | J. W. WALKER.  |

Complete Prospectus on application.

Those interested in Art, and in the recent developments of the Photographic Reproduction of Pictures, are invited to inspect the Company's extensive Collection of Autotypes and Autogravures of all Schools now on view at their Gallery, 74, New Oxford Street, where they may also be seen a series of examples, framed in mouldings of special designs, made in oak, walnut, and other hard woods.

Catalogues and Price Lists on application to

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid. GOULD'S BIRDS of EUROPE, in case, £130, cost £400.—CHARLES LOWE, Book Exporter, New and old and Baskerville Hall, Birmingham.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S OLIPHANT'S LIST.

NEW BOOKS.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s. net.

FRANCE.

By J. E. C. BODLEY.

Vol. I. *The Revolution and Modern France, &c.*Vol. II. The Parliamentary System.

TIMES.—"A work to be consulted by all who would understand the forces and movements in French life.....a work which is the worthy outcome of well-spent years and which will take rank with Mr. Bryce's 'America,' and Sir D. M. Wallace's 'Russia,' among the few books which enable nations to understand nations."

ATHENÆUM.—"A book of political philosophy in which the philosophy is so much disguised by the lightness produced by constant illustration that it will be possible for the general reader to digest its contents without knowing how much philosophy he has read..... In this respect it may be compared with the works of Tocquville and Mr. Bryce, but it is easier to read than either of those remarkable books, and it strikes us as sounder in its philosophy than was the more famous of the pair."

STANDARD.—"His book is one from which it is hard to part, not only from the deep interest of the subject, but also because of its great literary merits: for it is clear in thought, lucid in expression, and admirable in style."

Fifth Edition. Extra crown 8vo, 12s. 6d.

A HISTORY of the INDIAN

MUTINY, and of the Disturbances which accompanied it among the Civil Population. By T. RICE HOLMES. Fifth Edition, Revised throughout, and slightly Enlarged. With 5 Maps and 6 Plans.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE GLOBE CHAUCER.

Edited by ALFRED W. POLLARD, H. FRANK HEATH, MARK H. LIDDELL, and W. S. McCORMICK. [GLOBE LIBRARY.]

NEW BOOK BY THE LATE LEWIS CARROLL.

THREE SUNSETS, and other

Poems. By LEWIS CARROLL. With Twelve Fairy-fancies by E. GERTRUDE THOMSON. Fcap. 4to, cloth extra, gilt edges, 4s. net.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "PALLADIA."

A CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

By MRS. HUGH FRASER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SPECTATOR.—"Instinct with gaiety and grace, its satire is legitimately directed, its sentiment is pure and tender."

THIRD EDITION, with Appendix containing a Reply to Criticisms.

SOCIAL EVOLUTION. By

BENJAMIN KIDD. Nineteenth Thousand. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The TIMES.—"We do not hesitate to say that 'Social Evolution' is a book that no serious thinker should neglect, and no reader can study without recognising it as the work of a singularly penetrating and original mind."

Crown 8vo, 4s. net.

OTIUM DIDASCALI. Trans-

lations into Greek and Latin Verse. By WALTER HOBHOUSE, M.A., Headmaster of Durham School, late Student and Tutor of Christ Church, and formerly Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LTD., LONDON.

OLIPHANT'S LIST.

NEW BOOK BY DR. WHYTE.

Now ready, price 2s., art linen, gilt top.

FATHER JOHN of the GREEK CHURCH:

AN APPRECIATION.

With some Characteristic Passages of his Mystical and Spiritual Autobiography, Collected and Arranged by ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D.

By the Same Author.—SECOND EDITION, price 2s.

SANTA TERESA:

An Appreciation, with some of the Best Passages of the Saint's Writings Selected, Adapted, and Arranged by ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D.

The BOOKMAN says: "As an introduction to the study of the life and works of one of the most remarkable women of any age, Dr. Whyte's monograph is admirable."

FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES.—New Vols.

Each 1s. 6d., cloth; with gilt top, 2s. 6d.

JAMES THOMSON,

The Author of "Rulo Britannia," "The Seasons," &amp;c.

By WILLIAM BAYNE.

ROBERT FERGUSON.

By Dr. A. B. GROSART.

The SCOTSMAN says: "The book will be welcomed as a worthy addition to that wonderfully entertaining and instructive series of biographies, the 'Famous Scots.'"

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

By Prof. GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

NORMAN MACLEOD. By John Wellwood.

THE "BLACKWOOD" GROUP. By Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS.

FLETCHER of SALTOUN. By G. W. T. Omond.

TOBIAS SMOLLETT. By Oliphant Smeaton.

JAMES BOSWELL. By W. Keith Leask.

KIRKCALDY of GRANGE. By Louis Barbé.

List of the FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES post free.

Now ready, price 2s. 6d., cloth.

A SECOND EDITION OF

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

By Rev. GEORGE JACKSON, B.A., of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission, Edinburgh.

"These are, in the best sense of the words, sermons for the times, and we recommend them to all who want to settle the problems and difficulties of life according to the spirit and genius of Jesus Christ." The Young Man.

THE CHINESE CRISIS—BOOKS TO READ.

A CYCLE of CATHAY: China, South

and North, with Personal Reminiscences. By W. A. P. MARTIN, D.D., LL.D., ex-President Emeritus of the Imperial Tungwen College, Peking. With Map and Numerous Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

TIMES.—"It is perhaps the most valuable contribution that has been made to our knowledge of China in recent years."

THE GIST of JAPAN: the Islands,

their People, and Missions. By Rev. R. B. PEERY, A.M. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations. 5s.

ATHENÆUM.—"Mr. Peery's volume portrays with admirable truth and justice the Japanese people."

OLIPHANT'S NEW UNIFORM EDITIONS OF

ANNIE S. SWAN'S

FAVOURITE NOVELS.

Handsome bound in cloth, gilt back and side, price 3s. 6d. each.

SHEILA.

THE GATES of EDEN. With Portrait.

THE GUINEA STAMP.

BRIAR and PALM.

MAITLAND of LAURIESTON.

ST. VEDA'S.

A LOST IDEAL.

WHO SHALL SERVE?

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON &amp; FERRIER, 21, Paternoster Square, and Edinburgh.

Hodder &amp; Stoughton's Publications

NOW READY.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE SECOND VOLUME OF

THE BOOK OF

THE TWELVE PROPHETS,

Commonly called the Minor.

Containing:—Zephaniah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Obadiah, Haggai, Zechariah I.-VIII., "Malachi," Joel, "Zechariah" IX.-XIV., and Jonah.

With Historical and Critical Introductions.

By GEORGE ADAM SMITH, D.D., LL.D., Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis, Free Church College, Glasgow.

COMPLETING

THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE

In 49 Volumes.

Edited by the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.

A complete List of the Volumes in the Expositor's Bible will be forwarded post free on application.

THE EXPOSITOR'S GREEK TESTAMENT.

Edited by the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D., Editor of the Expositor.

THE FIRST VOLUME, of 880 pages, handsomely bound in buckram cloth, consists of

THE GOSPELS of ST. MATTHEW, ST. MARK, and ST. LUKE. By the Rev. Professor A. B. BARON, D.D.—THE GOSPEL of ST. JOHN. By the Rev. Professor MARCUS DODS, D.D.

The price of each volume is 2s., but for those who subscribe in advance the price for Two VOLUMES is 30s.

"Dr. Bruce's commentary on the Synoptics is a notable piece of work. It is cheering and refreshing to find these books, with which our inner life is so closely bound up, treated frankly and honestly as well as adequately for English readers, and without in so believing and reverent a spirit that the treatment need not repel the most orthodox. .... All is set forth with great frankness and admirable common sense, and often in racy language, not without an occasional Scottish flavour."—Athenæum.

THIRD EDITION.

SOME LESSONS of the REVISED

VERSION of the NEW TESTAMENT. By the Right Rev. BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D., Lord Bishop of Durham. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The work is marked on every page by the same reverence and the same sympathetic and scholarly insight to which we are accustomed in Dr. Westcott's great commentaries. Anything which Dr. Westcott has to say needs no recommendation to secure it a wide and respectful hearing. The present work should be, in the immediate effects of its influence, as important as any that has appeared from him." Guardian.

ELEVENTH THOUSAND

THE IDEAL LIFE, and Other Un-

published Addresses. By HENRY DRUMMOND. With Introductory Sketches by W. ROBERTSON NICOLL and IAN MACLAREN. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

"These addresses are written in a singularly beautiful style, and contain much beautiful thinking, showing that the writer had pondered deeply on some of the most spiritual aspects of religion."—Glasgow Herald.

SIXTEENTH THOUSAND, WITH NEW PREFACE.

THE MIND of the MASTER. By the Rev. JOHN WATSON, M.A., D.D. (IAN MACLAREN). Crown 8vo, printed on antique paper, gilt top, 6s.

"These sermons are wise and healthy utterances free from the petty doctrinism and puerile ecclesiasticism which are so fashionable in some quarters."—Pall Mall Gazette.

SECOND EDITION

OTHER PEOPLE'S LIVES. By ROSA

NOUCHETTE CAREY, Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A gentle, fragrant book."—Academy.

DAVID LYALL'S LOVE STORY. By

the Author of "The Land o' the Leal." Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

"The stories are in their own way, as near perfection as anything we have read for a long time past. .... The author has succeeded in producing a book, every line of which is pure and wholesome, every line of which is truly realistic." Bookman.

London: HODDER &amp; STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

CONTENTS.

|   | PAGE    |
|---|---------|
| REVIEWS :   |         |
| The Autobiography of Arthur Young                 | 167     |
| Fragments of Romance                              | 168     |
| Harriet Beecher Stowe                             | 169     |
| The Quest of Happiness                            | 170     |
| Hogarth as Topographer                            | 171     |
| Dean Farrar's Latest                              | 171     |
| BRIEFER MENTION                                   | 172     |
| FICTION SUPPLEMENT                                | 173-176 |
| NOTES AND NEWS                                    | 177     |
| REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED                          | 179     |
| TOLSTOI AND MAUPASSANT                            | 180     |
| JOAQUIN MILLER, BROWNING, AND THE PRINCE IMPERIAL | 181     |
| THE BOOK MARKET                                   | 182     |
| COLUMBUS SIENKIEWICZ                              | 182     |
| THE WEEK  | 183     |
| CORRESPONDENCE                                    | 183     |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED                             | 184     |

REVIEWS.

ARTHUR YOUNG.

The Autobiography of Arthur Young: with Selections from his Correspondence. Edited by M. Betham-Edwards. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THIS is a book by no means to be lost sight of in the cloud of unimportant biographies of unimportant people which are issued from week to week. It is the autobiography of a man with a very brilliant pen, who was, moreover, gifted with a very singular capacity, on the one hand, for self-revelation, on the other for unsparing and pungent criticism of his contemporaries. And even if written by another, the life of Arthur Young would still have its absorbing interest for students of human nature in general and of the late eighteenth century in particular. Although a crank, he was a crank of genius. His Travels in France is, of course, a classic, and his Tour in Ireland closely approaches it. He failed in the management of three or four farms, and on one is said to have made more than 2,000 profitless experiments; but he was among the earliest of scientific agriculturists, and his researches were of incalculable benefit to others, even if they went near to ruining himself. Of his private life and distinctly remarkable character but little has hitherto been known. He left, however, an elaborate memoir in MS., somewhat voluminous, and touched by the religious melancholia of his later years, but written with an alert intelligence, and full of valuable social and personal matter. From this and from twelve folio volumes of correspondence the contents of the present volume have been drawn, with some abridgment, but with few additions. So far as we can judge, the editorial work has been excellently accomplished, and we are indebted to Miss Betham-Edwards for her timely rescue of a real bit of literature, overflowing with instruction and entertainment.

Arthur Young was heir to a small ancestral property in Suffolk. Speaking of his grandfather, he records that "with only a part of the present Bradfield estate he lived genteelly and drove a coach and four on a property which in these present days just maintains the establishment of a wheelbarrow." His father was a man of strong personality and obstinate whims. You trace him in the features of his son. Both father and mother were devout; the mother, indeed, after a daughter's death, "never looked into any book but on the subject of religion," and Young regrets that her expostulations affected so little the course of his early life. After a scrambling education Arthur Young found himself thrown on the world without a profession at twenty. His first venture was a periodical called The Universal Museum, for which he tried in vain to enlist an important contributor.

"I waited on Dr. Johnson, who was sitting by the fire so half-dressed and slovenly a figure as to make me stare at him. I stated my plan and begged that he would favour me with a paper once a month, offering at the same time any remuneration that he might name. 'No, sir,' he replied, 'such a work would be sure to fail if the booksellers have not the property, and you will lose a great deal of money by it.' 'Certainly, sir,' I said, 'if I am not fortunate enough to induce writers of real talent to contribute.' 'No, sir, you are mistaken, such authors will not support such a work, nor will you persuade them to write in it; you will purchase disappointment by the loss of your money, and I advise you by all means to give up the plan.' Somebody was introduced, and I took my leave."

The Universal Museum did fail, and Young began a career of mingled journalism and farming, in which he was far more successful with the pen than the plough. Besides various essays and journals of tours, he issued a publication called The Annals of Agriculture, which won him a high reputation, and secured him no less an admirer, and even contributor, than George III. His Majesty gave Young a Spanish Merino ram, and some delightful comments in a diary of the period are the result. The diarist opines that the future "shall pay more homage to the memory of a Prince that gave a ram to a farmer than for wielding the sceptre obeyed alike on the Ganges and the Thames." At a later period, unfortunately, a coolness arose, and a friend explained it by asking Young,

"in a very significant manner, whether I had not said something against the King's bull, as it was commonly reported that I had fallen foul of his Majesty's dairy; so I suppose the man who showed me the cattle reported to the King every word I had said of them, and possibly with additions. Who is it that says one should be careful in a court not to offend even a dog?"

Young's interest in things pertaining to agriculture appears to have been a remarkably catholic and intelligent one. It covered both the scientific and the economic sides of the question. He was in constant correspondence with such inquirers as Priestley and such reformers as Bentham. But it was in practical experiments, new crops and new methods, that his interest was deepest. We find him comparing the value of different kinds of grasses for pasture, and promoting the neglected cultivation of potatoes, cabbages, and turnips. At one time he is rating the farming world for their stupidity in failing to see the merit of chicory or succory as a food for sheep; at another time he is testing on the same long-suffering animals the virtues of a clothing of oilskin or canvas daubed with tar. Unfortunately, "the clothed sheep jumping hedges and ditches soon derobed themselves." But he is not so exercised with beeves and meadows as to have no eye for humanity; his description of an Irish landlord of the "Castle Rackrent" type deserves quoting:

"His hospitality was unbounded, and it never for a moment came into his head to make any provision for feeding the people he brought into his house. While credit was to be had, his butler or housekeeper did this for him: his own attention was given solely to the cellar that wine might not be wanted. If claret was secured, with a dead ox or sheep hanging in the slaughterhouse ready for steaks or cutlets, he thought all was well. He was never easy without company in the house, and with a large party in it would invite another of twice the number. One day the cook came into the breakfast-parlour before all the company. 'Sir, there's no coals.' 'Then burn turf.' 'Sir, there's no turf.' 'Then cut down a tree.' This was a forlorn hope, for, in all probability, he must have gone three miles to find one, all round the house being long ago safely swept away. They dispatched a number of cars to borrow turf. Candles were equally deficient, for, unfortunately, he was fond of dogs, all half-starved, so that a gentleman walking to what was called his bedchamber, after making two or three turnings, met a hungry greyhound, who, jumping up, took the candle out of the candlestick, and devoured it in a trice, and left him in the dark. To advance or return was equally a matter of chance, therefore, groping his way, he soon found himself in the midst of a parcel of giggling maid-servants."

In 1793 Young was appointed Secretary to the newly established Board of Agriculture, and thenceforward divided his time between London and his small estate at Braxfield. He was always in pecuniary difficulties, and in a few years a blow fell upon him which profoundly affected his character. This was the death of his dearly loved daughter, known as "Bobbin." Young had married early and not very wisely. He was fond of his wife, but she was foolish and illiterate, and they quarrelled incessantly. But it is clear from the letters and diary that "Bobbin" was the apple of her father's eye. She died through the ignorance of her doctors, and Young was inconsolable, until he came across the writings of Wilberforce, which converted him into what is called "a professing Christian" of a singularly gloomy and morbid type. From this time onward his diary is filled with expressions of religious devotion and of repentance for the "follies" of his early life. Mingled with these are mordant criticisms on those still in the world. The Christian graces certainly did not soften the asperity of his pen. Here is a sample entry:

"9th.—Dined with Mr. and Mrs. Balgrave. Balgrave is a good-tempered Suffolk parson, neglects the duty of his church, idle, indolent, drinks his bottle of port, and reads his newspaper, but what is called a respectable character, no views, nor any imprudent follies."

And, again:

"Lord Preston swears; it hurts me to hear him. I certainly ought to convert such people and reproach myself, and confess the sin every day in my catalogue to God; but I go on and do it not. If I had wit I could laugh at it, but I have no more wit than a pig."

With this last bit of self-criticism the reader will hardly be inclined to agree. On the contrary, Young's wit and distinctly mundane shrewdness pierce often enough through religious sentiments which have hardly grown habitual to him. Immediately after his bereavement he observes, with some want of grammar:

"After a day passed in deep sorrow, Mr. Partridge read one of his sermons on the intermediate state of departed souls, and which I afterwards found was one of Jortin's."

And from time to time the old Adam breaks out. He regards himself as dead to the world:

"I have no pleasures, and wish for none, saving that comfort which religion gives me; and the sooner I make it my only pleasure the wiser I shall be. I go to no amusements, and read some Scriptures every day; never lay aside my good books but for business. I have dined out but little, and wish for no more than I have."

Two lines later he remarks, "New servants, all; and the cook, a two-handed Yahoo, and cannot boil a potato."

Young must have been a thorn in the side of his chiefs at the Board of Agriculture. His private criticisms do not mince matters. Both Sir J. Sinclair and Lord Carrington, he thought, mismanaged the business of the office shamefully. Lord Carrington was a man of no religion, and moreover, of no birth:

"He has made immensely by the loan; and the richer he grows, so much the worse. The eldest girl said to Mr. H. when he called: 'My papa used to have prayers in his family; but none since he has been a peer.' What a motive for neglecting God! Also he is a Dissenter and a democrat. A Unitarian he may be, but certainly no democrat. The Lord shew mercy to him, and, by interrupting his prosperity or lowering his health, bring him to repentance."

Presently Lord Carrington does a kindness to Young; gives him, in fact, an interest in the loan here referred to. The secretary's comment savours, perhaps, more of religion than of merely human gratitude:

"I thanked him much. Such a thing never entered my thoughts, and consequently surprised me much. He was very kind and considerate, and I am certainly much obliged to him for it. . . . I was thankful to God for this, and meditated much on it. If God had not been willing it would not have entered his head, and I find it comfortable to attribute everything to God, as, indeed, everything ought certainly to be attributed, and the more we trust entirely to Him the better I am persuaded it is for us."

It is a curious contrast, this querulous, bitter, self-absorbed old man, with the brilliant Arthur Young of whom Fanny Burney writes: "Last night, whilst Hetty, Susy, and myself were at tea, that lively, charming, spirited Mr. Young entered the room. Oh, how glad we were to see him!"

We have by no means exhausted the interest of the biography. There are many letters from, or reminiscences of, Young's wide circle of acquaintance: Chesterfield, Dr. Burney, and Burke play their parts; most remarkable of all, perhaps, that Earl of Bristol who was also Bishop of Derry: "He was a perfect original—dressed in classical adorning." He was "so long absent from Ireland that the Primate wrote him three letters of remonstrance, and the answer he sent him was to do up and send in three blue peas in a blue bladder." He was an enthusiast in agriculture, and thought little of theology, and his letters are vastly entertaining. But it is Arthur Young himself, whose melancholy career and salient personality form the chief attraction of this fascinating book.

FRAGMENTS OF ROMANCE.

THE WORKS OF ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.
—Vol. VII.: Romances. (Edinburgh Edition.)

THE issue of the Edinburgh edition of the works of Robert Louis Stevenson draws to a close. One volume only, containing St. Ives, remains to be published. It will follow hard upon the heels of this, which is made up of various fragments that seemed to the editor, Mr. Sidney Colvin, of too good a quality, or too interesting, to be lost.

The pecuniary advantage to an author or his heirs of a limited edition of his works is often considerable—in this instance magnificent. The price of the Edinburgh edition has risen over 100 per cent. The original cost was £12 10s. A set changed hands the other day for £28. Speculation in limited editions is good sport for virtuosos, but the poor man comes badly out of such undertakings. There are people, and their number is not few, who must read and possess every published line of a favourite author. To slender-pursed Stevensonians such a laudable ambition is hopeless, as the Edinburgh edition contains writings by R. L. S. which are not to be found elsewhere. That was one of the baits held out to purchasers, to say nothing of the pleasure, to an orderly mind, of having an author in uniform size and binding. The Stevenson shelf of those who bought the volumes as they were issued by half-a-dozen publishers with half-a-dozen ideas as to size and shape, is as jumpy as a line of legal volunteers drawn up on parade. It is to be hoped Mr. Charles Baxter and Mr. Colvin will arrange with the various owners of Stevenson copyrights to bring out a cheap unlimited Edinburgh edition. We can hardly suppose any of the original subscribers will be so selfish as to wish to deprive others of a complete set of this author's works.

The present volume contains four fragments. The longest is that sombre and distinguished beginning of a masterpiece, Weir of Hermiston, which has already been published. Of the other three fragments, one, The Great North Road, was posthumously published in the Illustrated London News for the Christmas of 1895; the others, Heathercat and The Young Chevalier, are here printed for the first time.

There are but eight chapters to The Great North Road, which was written as long ago as 1884, when Stevenson was living at Bourne-mouth. His reasons for not finishing this romance of the highway we shall never know, nor what adventures that ingenious and fertile brain devised for these buccaneers of the road. He turned from this fragment to finish The Dynamiter, and he never sought The Great North Road again. Yet he was hopeful about the piece, although conscious of difficulty ahead.

"I thought to rattle it off like Treasure Island, for coin," he wrote to Mr. Henley, "but it has turned into my most ambitious design, and will take piles of writing and thinking; so that is what my highwayman has turned to. . . . I quail before the gale, but so help me it shall be done."

It was not Stevenson's usual way to quail before the gale. Moreover, the notion of writing a romance of the highway had long been in his mind, and we have Mr. Colvin's assurance that this fragment was not laid aside from any dissatisfaction with what he had done. Nevertheless, we are inclined to think that he was not altogether satisfied, and that the letter to Mr. Henley was written in a buoyant mood which did not recur. He was very ill in those days, and undertrained for so serious an effort. In truth, the fragment is a little laboured: it suggests the study rather than the open road. He turned aside to other work. He could afford to be prodigal.

The fragment of The Young Chevalier is much shorter than The Great North Road. It contains but a prologue and some four pages of the first chapter, but the mind of the master is upon those pages. The scene in the wine-shop at Avignon, where the "prologial episode" passes, is true to his gay and fearless outlook upon life: his love for the bright eyes of danger, his contempt for drones. Here is the opening of the first and only chapter. Is it not inviting? Do not the phrases live? Is not the picture clear and romantically touched?

"That same night there was in the city of Avignon a young man in distress of mind. Now he sat, now walked in a high apartment, full of draughts and shadows. A single candle made the darkness visible; and the light scarce sufficed to show upon the wall, where they had been recently and rudely nailed, a few miniatures and a copper medal of the young man's head. The same was being sold that year in London to admiring thousands. The original was fair; he had beautiful brown eyes, a beautiful bright open face; a little feminine, a little hard, a little weak; still full of the light of youth, but already beginning to be vulgarised; a sordid bloom came upon it, the lines coarsened with a touch of puffiness. He was dressed, as for a gala, in peach-colour and silver; his breast sparkled with stars and was bright with ribbons; for he had held a levée in the afternoon and received a distinguished personage incognito. Now he sat with a bowed head, now walked precipitately to and fro, now went and gazed from the uncurtained window, where the wind was still blowing, and the lights winked in the darkness."

The first suggestion for this story came from Mr. Andrew Lang, who, in reading the curious Tales of the Century, had been struck by a long essay on Prince Charles's mysterious incognito. He sent the notion and documents to Stevenson in Samoa, who received the idea gladly. The subject is referred to again and again in Vailima Letters.

"There are only four characters," Stevenson observes; "Francis Blair of Balmile (Jacobite Lord Gladsnuir), my hero; the Master of Ballantrae; Paradau, a wine-seller of Avignon; Mary-Madeleine, his wife. These last two I am now done with, and I think they are successful, and I hope I have Balmile on his feet; and the style seems to be found. It is a little charged and violent; sins on the side of violence; but I think will carry the tale."

There are no data to show how the story would have finally shaped itself in his fancy. "Often," adds Mr. Lang, "since Mr. Stevenson's death, in reading Jacobite MSS. unknown to me or to anyone when the story was planned, I have thought, 'He could have done something with this,' or 'This would have interested him.' Eheu!"

Heathercat, like The Young Chevalier, belongs to the last three years of Stevenson's exile in the Pacific, and is also here published for the first time. It is a story of Covenanting life in Scotland, and runs to three chapters. The author's scheme was to shift the narrative across the Atlantic, first to the Carolina plantations and next to the ill-fated Scotch settlement in Darien. About this time Mr. Crockett was at work upon his Covenanting romance—The Men of the Moss Hags. To Mr. Crockett Stevenson addressed some playful letters; it seemed to amuse him that they should be worrying at the same subject. One day he forwarded to the author of The Men of the Moss Hags a sketch of a trespass board and gallows, with R. L. Stevenson in the act of hanging S. R. Crockett, and on the board the words: "Notice.—The Cameronians are the property of me, R. L. Stevenson.—Trespassers and Raiders will be hung." In an accompanying letter he said, "I have made many notes for Heathercat, but do not get much forrader. For one thing, I am not inside these people yet. Wait three years and I'll race you." That particular race was never run. Shortly before his death he wrote to a friend that he had laid the story on the shelf, and so the awful Haddo never met retribution, and the battle between the boy Heathercat and the boy Croyer remains among the unfought fights of history. It is not a very spirited piece so far as it goes; the narrative is somewhat loose, and far behind the chapters of Weir of Hermiston, which conclude the volume.

As that little masterpiece has been published, widely read, and criticised, no more need be said about it here. But we may give ourselves the pleasure of quoting the dedication, although the lines are not new. Addressed to his wife, they express the thought that was ever in his mind—the thought of home.

I saw rain falling and the rainbow drawn
On Lammermuir. Harkening I heard again
In my precipitous city beaten bells
Winnow the keen sea wind. And here afar,
Intent on my own place and race, I wrote.
Take thou the writing; thine it is. For who Burnished the sword, blew on the drowsy coal,
Held still the target higher, chary of praise
And prodigal of counsel—who but thou?

So now in the end, if this, the least, be good,
If any deed be done, if any fire
Burn in the imperfect page, the praise be thine."

He was at work upon the book, of which these lines form the dedication, on the morning of his death—"Singular that I should fulfil the Scots destiny throughout, and live a voluntary exile, and have my head filled with the blessed, beastly place all the time."

HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

Life and Letters. Edited by Annie Fields.
(Sampson Low & Co.)

"Is this the little woman who made the great war?" Abraham Lincoln did, as a fact of history, put the question in this form, and the fact stands, inasmuch as he did so publicly, by way of welcome to Harriet Beecher Stowe when the author of Uncle Tom's Cabin first saw the President of the dis-United States. Nothing more was known of the interview, for they spoke apart, and Mrs. Stowe—in spite of a certain notorious incident—was a woman who knew how to add to fame the grace of privacy, and she never related her talk with Lincoln. "Is this the little woman who made the great war?" is, perhaps, a phrase to be suspected of the easy falsity of epigram; nevertheless, even with a little discount, it confesses the original motive of the Civil War, clear among the complications of State rights and State politics. That motive was obscure in its day. Abolition was, as it were, the secret of the North—a secret which the right hand kept from the left, and the heart from the lips. There would have been a disunited North, as well as a disunited North and South, had the truth been known too soon—nay, had it not been a thousand times denied. Under protection and licence of the playfulness or gallantry of a speech to a woman more than one truth has been published in the easiest and least challengeable form; and Lincoln blurted out the initial and fundamental truth with the tact of the freedom of the moment.

Mrs. Beecher Stowe was a woman of small mind, of moderate talent, of no more than sufficient education, of popular ability, of unbounded zeal, and, therefore, armed at all points to take the mind of a nation. The facts of slavery were ready for use by such a woman turned novelist—the fewer facts the better and the more manageable. Seldom has reformer had more fiery matter than these: mothers whose skins were dark had no right to so much as a day of their children's infancy; the marriage of slaves was of no validity, and the form a mere burlesque; white citizens sold their own children in open market; to educate these outcasts to the point of reading and writing was illegal. Doubtless our own social conditions clamour for reform, and the freedom of contract between man and man may be a nominal rather than an essential liberty. But at least we have the name, which means that we have also an ideal of aim; and depressing as the actual condition of the negro population in the States may be to-day in some of its aspects, it creates a disquietude for a nation rather than for all mankind. England had hopes, perhaps, from the American Civil War, and from Emancipation, which have not been wholly realised; but whenever that reform had been carried out, the transition stage must have been one of defect and peril, and in postponement was no remedy.

Happy was it for Mrs. Beecher Stowe that she lacked the profundity and the prevision to realise to the full the difficulties of the position. Optimism is the reformer's secret; it tallies with his intuitions, and leaves behind the man of cold experience whom tradition tethers. Readers, in the main, are, or were, optimistic; and the popular enthusiasm evoked by Uncle Tom's Cabin, if it did not mould the opinion, at least forced the hands, of even eminent English statesmen. The book probably beat all the records. It sold more than any book has ever sold in the United States, and in England it made the writer a celebrity akin to that of a female Garibaldi. The book appeared serially at first, the opening chapter in The National Era of Washington for April, 1850. Some passages pieced together from letters written and generally addressed to her absent husband—a Professor in somewhat weak health and spirits—by Mrs. Stowe just before this date, add to the interest of the book's romantic commercial history:

"You are not able to bear anything, my dear husband, therefore trust all to me. I am already making arrangements with editors to raise money. . . . Then comes a letter from my husband" [this she says to her sister-in-law] "saying he is sick abed, and all but dead; don't ever expect to see his family again; wants to know how I shall manage in case I am left a widow; warns me to be prudent, as there won't be much to live on." . . . "Christmas is coming and our little household is all alive with preparations, everyone collecting little gifts with wonderful mystery and secrecy. To tell the truth, dear, I am getting tired—my neck and back ache." . . . "As long as the baby sleeps with me nights I can't do much at anything, but I will write that thing if I live." . . . "When I have a headache and feel sick, as I do to-day, there is actually not a place in the house where I can lie down and take a nap without being disturbed. If I lock my door and lie down, someone is sure to be rattling the latch before fifteen minutes have passed." . . . "There is no doubt in my mind that our expenses this year will come two hundred dollars, if not three, beyond our salary."

The story was at last ended in the National Era for April, 1852. Then the first thing she did, when the thing got into volume form, was to send copies, accompanied by letters, to Dickens, Macaulay, Lord Carlisle, the Duke of Argyll and Lord Shaftesbury. Mr. Jewett, the Boston publisher, young and fortunate, had sold three thousand copies before the letters of acknowledgment and congratulation began to pour in—nearly the first to come was Jenny Lind's. "God wrote the book," was the cry of the author in the first flush of the great notoriety which we may call even great fame; and there was no pose or elation in the attribution, but only a refuge she humbly created for her own modesty. "It is not fame or praise that contents me," she writes to her husband amid the prosperity that enriched all her nature: "I seem never to have needed love so much as now. I long to hear you say how much you love me."

Popularity came by leaps and bounds. Over three hundred thousand copies of the book were sold within a year, and eight presses, running night and day, were hardly able to keep pace with the growing demand for it. The praises of George Sand, who introduced the book to France, were on the scale of the sales—or a little beyond. "The life and death of a little child and of a negro slave—that is the whole book!" she wrote.

"The affection that unites them, the respect of these two perfect ones for each other, is the only love-story, the only passion, of the drama. I know not what other genius but that of sanctity itself could shed over this situation a charm so powerful and so sustained. All is so new, so beautiful, that one asks one's self, in thinking of it, whether the success of the work is, after all, equal to the height of its conception."

The events of Mrs. Stowe's visits to England are sufficiently familiar. She found ducal houses like fairy palaces, thanks, it would seem, to the noiseless-stepping servants who anticipated her wants. A final zest must have been added to the kindly lionising of Mrs. Stowe indulged in by the Duchess of Sutherland and others when they were able to whisper that the Queen herself was perusing over the pages of the story that had been taken in England, no less than in America, to the great popular heart. The sympathy between Mrs. Stowe and the great people she met—George Eliot among the number—was personal rather than intellectual. As a result, we do not find much insight in her records of meetings that might otherwise have been memorable. The best account by far is that of her visit to Charles Kingsley, the enthusiasm of whose Churchmanship has been put into shade elsewhere by comments, kind or angry, on its breadth; and who is better known as a talker by his stammering than by his at the same time valiantly voluble tongue. It was no new thing to Mrs. Stowe to go to the house of complete strangers, yet her "heart fluttered" as she drove up in the dark to the house of the author of Westward Ho! She writes to her husband:

"We were met in the hall by a man who stammers a little in his speech, and whose inquiry, 'Is this Mrs. Stowe?' was our first positive introduction. He is tall, slender, with blue eyes, brown hair, and a hale well-browned face, and somewhat loosely jointed withal. His wife is a real Spanish beauty. How we did talk and go on for three days! I guess he is tired. I'm sure we were. He is a nervous, excitable being, and talks with head, shoulders, arms, and hands, while his hesitance makes it the harder. Of his theology I will say more at another time; but he is, what I did not expect, a zealous Churchman."

She met another great talker in Macaulay, whose attitude towards her was less indulgent than that of others; and each formed of the other an unfavourable opinion which neither took the trouble to conceal.

Mrs. Stowe did not hit on any other novel with a supreme purpose; and her subsequent works were read mainly because they were by the author of Uncle Tom's Cabin. At the end she faded serenely out of life. "My mind wanders like a running brook, and I do not think of my friends as I used to, unless they recall themselves to me by some kind action." Sadly she says she is "like the still silkworm who has spun out all his silk and can spin no more." Then she became what is sometimes called "absent," and again "like a little child." The power of her mind was gone, but she wandered about, pleased with flowers, and arrested by singing, especially the singing of hymns. She was eighty-five years of age, although "a little child," when she died in the July of 1896.

THE QUEST OF HAPPINESS.

The Quest of Happiness. By Philip Gilbert Hamerton. (Seeley & Co.)

To write of happiness it is perhaps well that one should know something of the opposite condition of life. Few men on this hypothesis were better qualified to expound the science of happiness than the late Philip Gilbert Hamerton, who, in this unfinished book, for it is published as a fragment of the author's original scheme, has left behind him an admirably practical philosophy of life. "It was written," we are told, "when the author was held in the clutches of a mortal disease, and knew that he was nearing the end of life." Almost at the gate of the other world, for which, be it observed, he carried none of the passports furnished by religion, he paused to reflect upon the abundant provision made in this world for the happiness of those who are qualified to avail themselves of it, his aim being to show that in most cases the prize is more nearly within our reach than the habitual pessimist is apt to suppose. His science of happiness Hamerton learnt in the school of adversity. "His childhood," it appears, "was exceptionally lonely and miserable, for his mother died when he was an infant, and he was brutally treated by a dissolute and drunken father." At school his "lack of physical strength and his morbid sensitiveness prevented him from taking part in the usual boyish games." After a brief career in the army, for which he was constitutionally unfitted—another unpleasant experience—he devoted himself to poetry and art, and here he suffered the disappointment of failure. As a pis-aller, and under stress of circumstances which compelled him to earn a livelihood, he turned to literature—a hard task-mistress, too—and wrote the Painters' Camp, which from the first caught the fancy of the reading public. Thus success, when it did come, came to him from a quarter in which he had not looked for it. He was practical-minded enough to accept with a cheerful heart such gifts as the gods chose to send him, but "the particular success for which he had always longed was never his."

Upon these experiences Hamerton founds his philosophy.

"Happiness," he writes, "enough, and much more than I ever expected, has been mine, but it has been very various in character and always very difficult to keep. The effect upon me has been as if an interesting volume were snatched out of my hands when I was in the middle of it, and another substituted, quite as interesting but not what I wanted at the time."

In eighteen chapters, dealing with such subjects as occupation, natural gifts, the exercise of the senses and other faculties, reality and the pursuit of the ideal, the author sets forth the principles which he deduces from his own life and his observation of the world around. They may be very briefly expressed: "Indulge your dreams of the ideal if you will, but make the most of the disappointing reality, because it will be found that that too has its good side," or, in other words, "Adjust your life to the universe as it exists." Such is the message that Hamerton gives to those who consult his pages. He repeats it in many forms.

"The power of seeing things as they really are without being biased by the desire to have them as we think they ought to be, is of all gifts the most desirable, with a view to a rational though not an intoxicating kind of happiness."

This is one of his sayings, and another, more subtle and true, is that "the interest of human life which never ends is due chiefly to the imperfect and precarious character of our happiness," such as it is. In fact, he lands himself in something like a paradox. Speaking of the pursuit of happiness, which he thinks as desirable as the pursuit of wealth, learning, or reputation, he observes

"that the happiness we attain, though it is not the ideal, is still worth and more than worth the trouble and pains we take for its acquisition; that if we do not get all the happiness we had counted upon, we get very much that we have never deserved and that has never entered into our calculations, and, finally, that owing to certain peculiarities in our nature, there are good reasons for believing that complete felicity, supposing it to be possible, would be unsuitable for us, and is therefore undesirable."

A "practical philosophy" we have called this, and no doubt the attempt to practice it by those who cared to make the quest of happiness a definite pursuit, like that of education, would, so far as it was operative, prove beneficial. It is difficult to imagine the spirit of resignation which it inculcates proving detrimental. Whether the fundamentals of the problem of happiness are here, however, may be doubted. At Mrs. Hamerton's instance a chapter is added to the book, entitled "Some Real Experiences." This the author had rejected as fitting in badly with his plan; but it seems to us that some of these experiences point to a truer theory of happiness than that upon which Mr. Hamerton insists. Here is one:

"A well-preserved old Frenchman told me that the mere boon of life itself appeared to him infinitely precious. His own happiness was in seeing and thinking, perhaps more especially in seeing. He enjoyed these pleasures intensely, even in age, notwithstanding the anxieties and humiliations which in his own case had accompanied a transition from easy circumstances to poverty. On the whole he had enjoyed his existence on earth and should leave this world with regret, though fully assured of another and still more interesting existence in a future state."

Does not this experience—and there are others equally significant in a negative sense—indicate that the faculty of happiness is at bottom a natural endowment, that some organisations are productive of happiness as others are of the reverse, circumstances in all cases counting for little? Joy and sorrow, pleasure and pain—what are they? Merely an efficient or an inefficient expenditure of nerve-energy! If an organ contains an abundance of stored-up nerve-force, it responds pleurably to a stimulus; in the contrary case it responds painfully or not at all. The feeling of being well or ill, happy or unhappy, joyful or oppressed—a mere question of nerve-force! When our organs—stomach, limbs—are over-charged with this vital principle we feel a craving to employ them, and the consequent discharge of the stored-up energy gives us relief or pleasure. Life is then worth living. When, on the other hand, our systems are feeble, and the stimulus of air in our lungs or food in our stomachs is in excess of the nerve-energy which is there to meet it, the result is weariness or pain. Life is then a burden. Work out this principle in detail and it will be found to hold good. If you exercise an appetite too freely you use up the nerve-energy that keeps it active; it ceases to respond, and you are satiated with what was at first a pleasure.

In fine, the measure of happiness belonging to all of us is great or small according to our constitutions; it can be filled up to the brim by the simplest means—by the so-called necessities of life, in fact—and you can no more add to it by an habitual indulgence in luxuries than you can pour a quart of beer into a pint pot. Where the bare necessities of life are wanting, there is, of course, pain. But a beef-and-beer-fed Socialist has no reason to envy the millionaire his ingots. After exerting himself for half a lifetime to accumulate money, the rich man who is gifted with common sense is but too apt to sit down and marvel at the vanity of it all. He longs to his ingots, of course, because he knows of nothing better to do; but the Socialist, if he got them, would probably feel that he had been grasping at a shadow. Every human organisation possesses a working basis of its own. Circumstances such as the accession of wealth or the loss of position may exalt or depress the nervous system; but the effect is temporary. The nerves will not permanently remain in an abnormal state of tension or laxity. Inevitably they return to the mean. Mark Tapley and Scrooge are equally themselves again.

Mr. Hamerton has left us an interesting look on a subject which lies close to all hearts, but its value consists in its being the record of an individual view of life. It is on an unsafe basis for a generalisation.

HOGARTH AS TOPOGRAPHER.

William Hogarth. By Austin Dobson. (Kegan Paul.)

MR. DOBSON has amplified still further his biography of Hogarth. The volume before us is enlarged and revised from the first edition of 1891, which was itself an expansion of a smaller volume in the "Great Artists" series. Although the present edition may be considered to be Mr. Dobson's finished monument to Hogarth, it is not necessary that we should examine in detail a work which, in its main features, is known to the reading public. Rather we choose to touch on a side issue. Hogarth's amazing industry as a topographer of London is brought home afresh by the beautiful illustrations in this book, and to this side of his genius it may not be improper to draw attention once more.

Hogarth's own life looms through his London pictures. He lived in London all his days, and in one district after another. Thus, he drew his first breath in Bartholomew Close. He was apprenticed in Cranbourne-alley, Leicester Fields. He lived in Long-lane, Smithfield, with his widowed mother and sisters. In his most impressionable years he studied drawing in Covent Garden. He brought his young wife to "summer lodgings" in Lambeth. As a young man he took long walks; we hear of him at Highgate, and at the "Bull and Bush" inn at Hampstead. At last he settled in Leicester Fields, close to every scene of gaiety and fashion. Had he been an ordinary observer his knowledge of London must have been extensive and peculiar. But an eye that missed nothing, a memory that never failed—is it wonderful that eighteenth century London lives in the backgrounds of his prints so vividly as to produce a positive illusion, a queer obsession? One might pore over the engravings of the Four Times of Day until the air of Dr. Johnson's London fills one's lungs. For these prints appeared in 1738, the year in which Johnson's satire, London, took the town by storm. One may say of them, as Lamb said of the "Gin-lane" print, they are "perfectly amazing and astounding to look at."

Three of these scenes are laid in London, the fourth takes us to Islington. In the "Morning" picture we are outside the low dark door of Tom King's Coffee House in Covent Garden. It is five minutes to eight. Two boys are going to school. A starched old maid is crossing the square to enter St. Paul's Church, a little dismayed at having to pass some boisterous market women and porters who are grouped round a fire. Behind these some of Tom King's customers are quarrelling as they leave the coffee house. A fruit porter, in the distance, is leaning on a rail, tired by his early spell of work. The houses rise in quiet dignity, in early morning cleanness. It is all convincing. Truly, if it makes the student believe that King's Coffee House stood in front of St. Paul's portico, Hogarth misleads him; for King's stood opposite Tavistock-row. Except for this licence, Hogarth gives us the very Covent Garden of 1738.

In his "Noon" plate—beautifully reproduced in Mr. Dobson's volume—we are as near to reality. The scene is Hog-lane, a street now lost in the Charing Cross-road. But there, above the houses, rises the tower of St. Giles's Church as we see it to-day. In the "Evening" there is less to recognise; but how faithful to history is the glimpse of the New River, the rural freshness, and the milking of a cow by a dairymaid. The maid belongs, perhaps, to Mr. Pocock's farm; and one is pleased to think that, having milked her cow in "Noon," we see her again crying "Milk Below" in the "Enraged Musician." A well set-up lass she is, and she has made nothing of the walk from Islington to St. Martin's-lane, where now we meet her.

The fourth plate, "Night," is an exaggeration. The Salisbury coach upset at Charing Cross and lying in a bonfire was not a typical incident. The humours of the piece, too, are low, and one's eye, seeking something familiar, rests gratefully on the equestrian statue of Charles I. in the background. But the Barber's sign is interesting: "Shaving, bleeding, and teeth drawn with a touch—ecce signum." Hogarth threw immortality like a spray over such trifles.

A faithful record of eighteenth century London is the twelfth plate of "Industry and Idleness." The Industrious Apprentice, become Lord Mayor, is turning into Cheapside on his triumphant way back to the Mansion House. His state carriage is seen passing the spot in which the Peel statue now stands, and the spectator, looking south from St. Martin's-le-Grand, sees St. Paul's Churchyard in the background, the east end of the Cathedral projecting into his view. The Cheapside houses, the distant Cannon-street, the roofs and windows alive with sightseers, are all the very mintage of the time. This series, indeed, is a panorama of London. In Plate V. the Idle Apprentice is being rowed past Cuckold's Point to his ship; we see the bleak Thames of that day with four weird, lonely windmills beckoning on its north shore, while lower down, dreadfully distinct in the distance, a river pirate's body swings above the waves from a gibbet. In Plate VI. we have a faithful picture of a City street, with the base of the Monument closing the background. In Plate VIII. we are in the Guildhall; in Plate XI. at Tyburn, on the edge of London, and above the many-headed scene of execution the hills of Hampstead smile far away. One might multiply Hogarth's triumphs of topographical exactness to a fabulous extent. As Mr. Dobson says: "He gives us, unromanced and unidealised, the actual mise-en-scène, 'the form and pressure,' the authentic details and accessories, of the age in which he lived."

DEAN FARRAR'S LATEST.

Allegories. By Frederic W. Farrar. (Longmans.)

"THERE he goes, quoting two more poets in one line!" said Festus." Nor could Festus have more happily hit off a leading feature in his creator's own literary method. Dean Farrar must have an extraordinary memory to garner up all these stray fragments of verse that flow so readily from his magnificent pen. The quality of them is, of course, to say the least of it, fluctuating; but you cannot have everything, and, after all, a bad quotation is better than no quotation at all. As with quotations, so with epithets and imagery. The gorgeous pages glitter like the windows of a Burlington Arcade shop.

"The softly verdant meadows sprinkled with their golden flowers, the great trees with their waving boughs, the sun in the blue heavens with its glories of crimson sunset and rosy dawn, the strong mountains, the sweet and balmy air, the yellow wealth of harvests, the crystal of the running streams, the stars shedding their spiritual lustre through the purple twilight, the innocent mirth and laughter of young voices—the glory, and the wonder, and the power, and dread magnificence of nature delighted him."

How rich in colour; how sumptuous it is! And if the adjectives, for all their profuseness, seem a little conventional and obvious, what of that? Meadows are "verdant," the heavens are "blue," the dawn is "rosy," why not say so?

For our part, were we to set out after a popular literary success, we should pray the gods to give us precisely the literary equipment and the literary temper of Dean Farrar. Not to be afraid of the obvious; to sit straight down and paint away with the crude palette of the house painter, to treat literature as a tabula rasa, to symbolise as if nobody else had ever symbolised from John the Divine to Maurice Maeterlinck: that surely is the secret of fame. But, if you begin to look back, to criticise yourself, to ask whether this or that thought is quite your own, or, still worse, whether this or that sentence is written quite as well as you could write it, then it is all up with you; you become a mere man of letters. But from this fate Dean Farrar's robustness of purpose, no less than his pulpit training, has happily saved him.

These Allegories are allegories of the moral development of youth—something like Hogarth's Rake's Progress, only not so coarse. One of them, The Life Story of Aner, ends thus:

"The bark touched the shore. No trumpets sounded for him on the other side, but two bright forms, clad with wings, met him and took him by the hand. They clothed him in white raiment. They entered a gate of pearl, and through a sea of heavenly light he saw a rainbow round a throne, in sight like unto an emerald. Aner flung himself upon his face. The wounded hand of Inrah raised him, and when he dared to look up he saw the glory of his father's countenance, and his father smiled on him, and welcomed his weary wanderer home."

Now, we maintain that to write like this, in all good faith, as if you were at the beginning of things, is a sign of genuine self-confidence; and the value of self-confidence as a literary quality, has, perhaps, hardly been sufficiently recognised. The last, and most ingenious, story in the book is a sort of allegorisation of Eric. As it does not profess to be anything but an allegory, the sickly sentimentality, which makes the real schoolboy kick Eric across the classroom and speak rudely of it as "rot," does not so much matter. Nevertheless, we expect, and hope, that the schoolboy will do some kicking, if it is only for the sake of the pretty, long-haired children and the large-winged angels of the illustrations.

BRIEFER MENTION.

Portrait Miniatures. By George C. Williamson, Litt.D.

MINIATURE painters flatter themselves that 1895 saw a renaissance of their art. Those, however, who visit a modern exhibition will feel that this boast is only partly justified. The trail of the coloured photograph is still over it all, and the few works inspired by real artistic temperament stand out from a background of wearied conventions and commercial sentiment. If the revival is to come, it must be largely through studying the spirit and not the letter of the past. To this desirable result Dr. Williamson's capital handbook may contribute no little. Less sumptuous in design than Dr. Lumsden Propert's monumental treatise, to which, of course, it owes much, it will be an excellent introduction to the subject for many would-be artists and would-be collectors for whom that magnificent quarto is an unattainable delight. The letterpress is lucid and full of information; the illustrations, though as examples of process-work they contrast ill with Dr. Propert's, will yet give more than an idea, at least, of the style of composition affected by the great masters. The greatest of these, in their respective days, were doubtless Holbein, Hilliard, and Cosway, and of each of these Dr. Williamson has his adequate account to give. Of the missal miniature he says nothing, but adds a chapter on enamel miniatures, and another on foreign work. While upon this subject we may correct an error which most recent writers upon Holbein have fallen into. Holbein was in England on a first visit for three years from 1526. But Dr. Williamson, following Dr. Propert, will not attribute to him any court miniatures of this period, on the ground that he was merely the private guest of Sir Thomas More, and cannot be shown to have had anything to do with the court. Yet from the State papers so laboriously calendared by Dr. Brewer we learn that in 1527 "Master Hans and his company" were engaged in decorating a new revels house in the tiltyard at Greenwich. And who should "Master Hans" be if not Holbein? No other painter so named can be traced in England at the time.

Index to the Prerogative Wills of Ireland, 1536-1810. By Sir Arthur Vicars, F.S.A., Ulster King of Arms. (Ponsonby.)

OF recent years a vast amount of silent, patient, often wearisome, and almost always unremunerative labour has been devoted to the task of organising and rendering accessible the immense and ill-ordered mass of materials that exist for genealogical research. The extent to which this disinterested and ill-requited toil is going on around us throughout the land is probably unknown outside the limited class of professional experts, except to the comparatively few who dabble as amateurs in heraldry and genealogy, or who have occasion to resort to official assistance in such matters. When we say that this is obviously one of those taxonomic duties which ought to be undertaken by the State, it is hardly necessary to add that with us it is mainly neglected by the State. Not wholly so, it is true, for here and there, in the usual spasmodic and incomplete manner in which similar public responsibilities are dealt with in this country, Record Commissions, Record Reports, Rolls publications, and so forth, have immediately or incidentally effected something in this direction. Still, the bulk of the work remains yet undone, and the bulk of what has been done has been carried out by the various antiquarian societies in the capital and the provinces, or by casual and sporadic individual zeal. The growing sense, however, of the waste of power and of the discouragement that is apt to attend independent and unco-ordinated activity of this kind may be seen, for instance, in the formation of such bodies as the "Committee for the Transcription and Publication of Parish Registers": a field of industry in which drudgery must verily, like virtue, be its own reward. Sir Arthur Vicars's Index to the Prerogative Wills of Ireland is a valuable contribution to the sum of excellent work already turned out in this department of investigation. He has arranged and, for the first time, given to the public the indexes compiled for the Irish Record Commission by his predecessor in office, Sir William Betham. For the purposes of the genealogist wills are all-important, giving, as they frequently do, particulars concerning several generations of a family, such as names, kinship and alliances, property and social position, besides autographs, and, when of earlier date, seals of arms. To criticise such a book as this is impossible. Its merit must lie in its completeness and in its scrupulous accuracy, points which a reviewer has no opportunity of testing; but that the handsome volume before us possesses these essential qualities the name of the present Ulster King of Arms will be sufficient guarantee.

Memorials, Journal, and Correspondence of Charles Cardale Babington. (Cambridge: Macmillan & Bowes.)

PROF. BABINGTON was a field botanist of high repute. He worked hard at classification, wrote the best of handbooks, and became the leading authority on the innumerable forms assumed by the common bramble. He was also a learned antiquarian, a non-smoker, and a friend to missions. If Prof. Mayor had expanded his obituary notice in the Eagle into a memoir of a hundred pages, we should have been grateful. We are not grateful for an ill-arranged tome of five times that length which contains among other things a diary extending over sixty-six years, with entries of about one line for each day, and forming apparently a complete record of such exterior facts of the Professor's life as the flowers he picked and the men he met at dinner. The voluminous correspondence, also, almost entirely technical in character, is of no general interest, and can be of very little scientific value. It is a pity for the posthumous reputation of many men that the preparation of their biographies falls into the hands of relatives with no literary understanding and no sense of proportion.

THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

SHREWSBURY.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

Romantic history after Mr. Weyman's customary bravo recipe. The narrator was born near Bishop's Stortford in 1666 ("my father, a small yeoman"), and subsequently he became the protégé of Charles, Duke of Shrewsbury, and the participator in the great events of 1695 and 1696. The pages are busy with intrigue, plot and counter-plot, blows and counter-blows. Readers who take up the book and glancing at it find a too liberal allowance of "D—s" are warned that it is not an oath, but someone's name thus presented in deference to the narrator's sense of delicacy. The story has two dozen pictures. (Longmans & Co. 410 pp. 6s.)

FOR THE RELIGION.

By HAMILTON DRUMMOND.

"Being the records," adds the author, "of Blaise De Bernauld." The period is that just anterior to Dumas' Chicot cycle. Mr. Drummond, who is known to novel-readers for his Gobelin Grange, has a vigorous pen and a nice feeling for romance. Here are a few chapter-headings: "Why Marcel Rode Post from Paris"; "Why the King Sent to Carmeaux"; "The Finding of the Witch-wife." (Smith, Elder & Co. 344 pp. 6s.)

CLEO THE MAGNIFICENT.

By "Z. Z."

Morgan Druce is a poet; Cleo is an adventuress of considerable personal attraction. Morgan is dreaming away his life and avoiding facts when he meets her. He is in love with another woman, but he marries Cleo, and his eyes are opened. Thus does Cleo become his "Muse of the Real," which is the author's sub-title. Morgan wins his way back to serenity through hard work and privation. A sound piece of work. (W. Heinemann. 313 pp. 6s.)

AGAINST THE TIDE.

By MARY ANGELA DICKENS.

A study in homicidal mania and twins. The twins are a girl and a boy, Hilary and Darrent; and the homicidal maniac marries their elder sister. Those who know Miss Dickens's earlier novels will feel sure that this is carefully written and carefully thought. It is, indeed, an engrossing story, with a plot possessing merits of novelty. (Hutchinson & Co. 357 pp. 6s.)

ACROSS COUNTRY.

By JOHN GILBERT.

Here we have a sporting romance of the uncompromising kind. If you do not care for the pigskin, you will not care for the hero, Jack Merton, who is more centaur than man. The book is written with a sprightly, though undistinguished, pen. (Digby, Long & Co. 255 pp. 3s. 6d.)

GILBERT MALLOY.

By CAMPBELL H. SADLER.

Mr. Sadler is a Salopian, and proud of it. In the wish to make us all Salopians, at least in spirit, he wrote this romance of old Shrewsbury. The reason that it ends mournfully is that Mascagni's opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana," does—which is a naïve confession. By way of frontispiece you see the author's physiognomy, and various photographs delay the tale. (Mowbray & Co. 280 pp. 3s. 6d.)

A FORGOTTEN SIN.

By DOROTHEA GERARD.

This is the story of a mercenary marriage. The financial crash which threatens Robert Morell is averted, and the marriage of his young daughter Esmè involves, after all, no sacrifice of her happiness. The character of her wayward and wealthy lover, Charles Dennison, is subtly drawn; and the scene in the stock-broker's office, when Mr. Morell learns that Brazilian Stars are "dished," is well told. (Wm. Blackwood & Sons. 319 pp. 6s.)

A CHRISTMAS ACCIDENT, AND OTHER STORIES.

By ANNIE ELIOT TRUMBULL.

These stories, which appeared in various American magazines, are good specimens of the American short story of domestic humours. The first tells how the Gilttons and Bilttons lived unhappily as next-door neighbours by reason of Mr. Gilton's and Mr. Bilton's quarrelsomeness. The Gilttons had money, but no children or happiness; the Bilttons were numerous and cheerful, but poor. After many disagreements caused on one occasion by the butcher's boy leaving the Gilttons' joints at the Bilttons' door (once the Bilttons consumed an entire Gilton dinner under pure misapprehension), a reconciliation is brought about by a happy device. (Hodder & Stoughton. 233 pp. 3s. 6d.)

A DAUGHTER OF ASTREA.

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM.

An extravaganza that opens on a Pacific island, where stands "the sacred temple of the people of Astrea," and ends in Piccadilly. It is perhaps needless to say that a beautiful maiden is about to be sacrificed and that the hero saves her. The rest is high priests and rubies and temple shades. But a white-robed high priest who leaves the "Hills of Rubies," pursues his victim with a steamer-load of bloodthirsty natives, and who turns up later at the Empire Music-hall in "faultless evening dress," is a somewhat strained link between barbarism and civilisation. (J. W. Arrow-smith. 191 pp. 1s.)

A WOMAN TEMPTED HIM.

By WILLIAM WESTALL.

A woman tempted him with £10,000 to compass the death of his friend, the heir to millions. A clergyman's wife too! He was proof against the bribe; and the heir, of his own accord, skated on unsafe ice and was drowned. Suspicion and exoneration followed. A rather clever, but in the main a sordid, story. (Chatto & Windus. 301 pp. 6s.)

JOHN ARMSTRONG.

By MAJOR GREENWOOD.

This story is laid at Norwich, and is almost entirely medical in its interest, the chief incident being a libel action brought by Dr. John Armstrong, against a surgeon who charged him with having performed a reckless operation at St. Barnabas's Hospital, resulting in the death of the patient. We cannot think that this long novel is calculated to interest the ordinary reader. (Digby, Long, & Co. 322 pp. 6s.)

REVIEWS.

The Tragedy of the "Korosko." By A. Conan Doyle. Illustrated. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

Mr. Doyle went to Egypt in the capacity of war correspondent to the Westminster Gazette. The impressions gained during this expedition he has worked up into a romance. That about sums up all that need be said of The Tragedy of the "Korosko," which is a rather lightly constructed work, unworthy, quâd literature, of the author of The White Company and Micah Clarke. Nevertheless, Mr. Doyle's light work has qualities which make it worth reading, if not exactly worth keeping: it is fluent, and the plot seldom falters. In the present instance, a party of tourists visiting the rock of Abousir, beyond the Second Cataract, are pounced upon and carried off by Dervishes. Their donkey boys, escort, and two of themselves fall victims to the necessity for introducing scenes of Baggara bloodshed and brutality. The rest are bound, gagged, and hustled off across the desert, until they fall into the hands of the Emir Abderrahman, who insists that they shall become converted or die. A moolah is deputed to attend to their spiritual needs, and, with the aid of a typical Frenchman, who is one of the victims, they endeavour to protract his ministrations and soothe suspicion until a rescue party should have time to get on their track. Mr. Doyle, however, makes a couple of his Irish Catholics give the game away, and the scene which follows is one of the finest in the book:

"'Sure we're in God's hands, anyway,' said Mrs. Belmont, in her soothing Irish voice. 'Kneel down with me, John, dear, if it's the last time, and pray that, earth or heaven, we may not be divided.'

'Don't do that, don't!' cried the Colonel anxiously, for he saw that the eye of the moolah was upon them. But it was too late, for the two Roman Catholics had dropped upon their knees, and crossed themselves. A spasm of fury passed over the face of the Mussulman priest at this public testimony to the failure of his missionary efforts. He turned and said something to the Emir.

'Stand up!' cried Mausoor. 'For your life's sake, stand up! He is asking for leave to put you to death.'

'Let him do what he likes!' said the obstinate Irishman. 'We will rise when our prayers are finished, and not before.'

'Don't be a fool, Belmont!' cried the Colonel. 'Everything depends on our humouring them. Do get up, Mrs. Belmont! You are only putting their backs up!'

The Frenchman shrugged his shoulders as he looked at them.

'Mon Dieu!' he cried, 'were there ever such impracticable people? Voilà!' he added with a shriek, as the two American ladies fell upon their knees beside Mrs. Belmont. 'It is like the camels; one down, all down! Was ever anything so absurd?'

But Mr. Stephens had knelt down beside Sadie and buried his haggard face in his long thin hands. Only the Colonel and M. Fardet remained standing. Cochrane looked at the Frenchman with an interrogative eye.

'After all,' he said, 'it is stupid to pray all your life, and not to pray now when we have nothing to hope for except through the goodness of Providence. He dropped upon his knees with a rigid military back, but his grizzled, unshaven chin upon his breast. The Frenchman looked at his kneeling companions, and then his eyes travelled to the angry faces of the Emir and moolah.

'Sapristi!' he growled. 'Do they suppose that a Frenchman is afraid of them?' and so with an ostentatious sign of the cross he took his place beside the others. Foul, bedraggled and wretched, the seven figures knelt and waited humbly for their fate under the shadow of the palm-trees."

Of course, in the end the party are rescued from their dreadful predicament by a flying squadron of "Gippies" from Wady Halfa; and the incident gives Mr. Doyle his chance to throw in a pretty description of desert warfare. There are many touches of an observant eye also scattered throughout the book, and little revelations of "purpose" crop out here and there, not always so intimately blended with the regular strata as artistic considerations would demand. As the purpose is, however, mainly the defence of our position and work in Egypt there is little cause for complaint on this score, though some who do not know the reptile French press of Egypt, and the jealousy of which Frenchmen in Egypt are capable, may think that an unfair use has been made of M. Fardet and his political ravings. To such there always remains an interesting subject for study in the history of the barrage at the Delta, as told in the French Cairene newspapers. And when they have perused the intricacies of that entertaining narrative, which is itself as good as a novel, they will perhaps be less inclined to resent the use which Mr. Doyle has made of his, in many ways charming and gallant, Frenchman.

* * * *

The Confession of Stephen Whapshare. By Emma Brooke.
(Hutchinson & Co.)

The chief fault of this story is a certain crudeness; and we say this in full view of the fact that the writer has published several novels, one of which was conspicuously successful. Stephen Whapshare is a strong, self-educated man of the people who, in his youth, marries a saintly and invalid wife. Her whims and piety keep him always in a morbid atmosphere, and his manhood is sapped for the lack of the living, breathing world. Then the other woman, Ellinor, comes on the scene and tempts him to break his chain. He gives his wife an overdose of chloral, and she dies; but he finds himself no nearer liberty, for his crime stands before him, and he dare not accept the other woman's love. In the end they separate to work out their own salvations, and he wins peace only by finding a man more wretched than himself and setting him on the road to happiness. The book closes with a sort of religious ecstasy.

The work has power, which lies chiefly in the epic sequence of the narrative, the imaginative use of landscape, the frequent subtlety in the characterisation, and the real vigour and charm of much of the phrasing. Occasionally this same fashion of writing is overdone, and the note is too high-pitched and hysterical. But the main fault is this—that the book which begins in drama shades off into rhetoric and ends incoherently. In the early chapters, the strong man and his helpless, self-indulgent, pietistic wife are very real people, and their quick estrangement has the irony of fine work. But with the murder reality leaves the tale. We find ourselves in the wastes of turgid self-analysis, where every mood and every speech is strained and histrionic. The writer no longer thinks of the human drama: it is now a story of mental states where action is less important than the moral lesson it symbolises. Finally, it all ends with logical correctness, but without proper emotional effect, since a statement of religious beliefs is no fitting consummation to a tale of the "hunger for life." The incident of Pete Labrum all but revives interest, save that it is too obviously introduced for its ethical significance and not for its pure narrative quality. The book is clever in its way, but in our judgment the writer has been tempted to forget that emotion is not touched by a mere narrative of emotion and to fall from fiction to rhapsody.

* * * *

This Little World. By D. Christie Murray.
(Chatto & Windus.)

The plot of This Little World is simple enough. A village youth and a village maiden leave their native hamlet—one to become a great artist, the other to become a famous singer; and in the end they marry one another. Mr. Murray, however, is independent of his plot, and succeeds in interesting us by the delicacy of his characterisation. The ex-pugilist and his fellow-villagers at Wood Side are excellently drawn; so, too, are half a score of minor characters, such as Sloman, the picture dealer, and Cassidy, the Irish friend of Jack Cutler, the artist. Any artist who is disturbed by the criticism of the provincial press may listen to Mr. Cassidy, who thought there was a coalition against Jack:

"'Coalition be hauged!' said Jack. 'These notices come from every corner of Great Britain.'

'Don't ye believe it, me boy,' said Cassidy. 'They go to every corner of Great Britain, but they're written, every loine of 'em, in Fleet-street. Did ye ever see a first noight at the theatre? There's sixty critics there, we'll say, and ye'll fancy that ye'd get sixty opinions, wouldn't ye? Ye'll not get two. They'll get together in the bar, and the little fry will listen to what the big fish have to say, and the biggest fish among the big fish will bark the other Johnnies down.'

'That's a pretty simile, Bill,' said Jack."

It is pleasant to be able to congratulate Mr. Murray on having written a—is it a thirty-third?—novel as good as this.

* * * *

A Man of the Moors. By Halliwell Sutcliffe.
(Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.)

THIS book affords one more proof that there is abundance of novel-writing capacity wasted for lack of patience and care and labour. We propose to show what Mr. Sutcliffe ought to have done if he had been in less hurry and more anxious to give us of his best.

First, then, Leo Ruddick, and the besotted "thing" who is legally his wife, and the young woman he is in love with, should have been ruthlessly eliminated; they have appeared before in the fiction of the moors, they formed the chief dramatis personae of Jane Eyre. Here they are not only a plagiarism, they are superfluous. Secondly, the leading women need bracing and tightening up. The heroine is the ill-used wife of a drunken stonemason. She is divorced before being married to the hero. Mr. Sutcliffe has not half thought her out. On the one hand, she is ill-used to such an extent that it leads to her early death; she is nightly assailed with foul language, and goes through unutterable horrors. Nevertheless, she has refinement and charm enough to captivate an artist, a gentleman, and a squire of dames united, in the person of Griff Lomax. The novelist entirely fails to make this affair credible. And the other married woman of the tragedy is a still more flagrant contradiction in terms. Her action is constant, passionate, unconventional; but he describes her—is forced to describe her by the exigencies of the story—as a shallow society fool. One way or the other, Mrs. Ogilvie cries aloud for revision.

Second, when he does get a woman fairly right he is apt to spoil a good idea with rhetoric: for example, old Mother Strangers, drunkard, witch, and murderess, is extremely well conceived, and wanted only working out to become remarkable. The author, too, saw what was needed. He invented a superstition for her—that when an old clock tumbled she would die. In his own words:

“Sitha, lad! It wobbles summat fearful, does th’ owd clock. First to right, then to left, it wobbles reg’lar. Tick-tack, tick-tack goes the inside—an’ tick-tack, tick-tack goes th’ outside, keeping time. It’s a sign, Joe: I’m noan long for this world, now that th’ owd clock has ta’en to wobbling. Five-and-eighty year we’ve bided together—tick-tack, tick-tack, me an’ th’ clock—and now it’s started to dither. Tha’ll noan hev a grandam sooin, Joe.”

What a grim, horrible humour might have been brought to play here! But the author was in too much of a hurry; perhaps he thought it more effective to make the old hag’s deathbed the scene of a final and melodramatic attempt at murder. And so, for want of patience and consideration, the opportunities of good work are passed by, and the space filled with commonplace sensationalism.

We write thus seriously because Mr. Halliwell Sutcliffe shows trace of a very high ability indeed. Almost without exception his men are well conceived and skilfully presented. The best of them is a squire of the old school, who apparently has lived up to the advice he bestows on another: “Ride straight, drive level, never repent of your sins, and die as I find you, a jolly good fellow.” Indeed, the hero, the preacher, the inn-keeper, all the rogues and wastrels of the Yorkshire moor, are full of life—as wild, pagan, drinking, swearing, fighting crew as one could wish to see. If Mr. Sutcliffe would only forget all he has read in other novels and paint this life, as seen by his own eyes, he would make a book worth keeping.

THE NEW CHILD’S GUIDE TO LITERATURE.

THE monthly magazine edited by Mr. Arthur Pendenys, and called The Books of To-day and the Books of To-morrow, contains many good things. Here is a sample:

Q. What are Bacchy-lides?

A. Well, when you pronounce it like that, I should say a society of women who smoke. But you may as well ask me, What are Keats?

Q. Then what is Bacchylides?

A. Bacchylides was a Greek poet.

Q. When did he flourish?

A. In the fifth century B.C.

Q. Then why is there all this talk about him now?

A. Because his works have recently been discovered and published.

Q. Are the poems good reading?

A. Not unless you know Greek.

Q. And then?

A. Then they are not exciting.

Q. What are they about?

A. Among other things, the Isthmian Games.

Q. Will you repeat one? [He repeats one.]

A. Thank you, I prefer Barnum’s Olympia.

Q. Who is Stephen Phillips?

A. Another poet.

Q. Is he Greek too?

A. No, he’s English, but he has the Greek spirit.

Q. What rot! How old is he?

A. He is not yet thirty.

Q. Where does he live?

A. He lives at Ashford.

Q. But I thought the Poet Laureate lived there?

A. There are two Ashfords.

Q. I am glad that: I was afraid he might be a Conservative journalist. Has he always been in the poetry business?

A. No, he was once an actor. He was considered to be one of the best Ghosts in the provinces.

Q. What are the titles of his poems?

A. One is “Christ in Hades,” another “The Woman with the Dead Soul.”

Q. How ripping! Is he a good poet?

A. It is not known; but he writes good poetry.

Q. Is it as good as The Bab Ballads?

A. Hush!

PATHOS AND THE PUBLIC.

A REFERENCE we saw the other day to the collection of “Most Pathetic Lines in Literature,” made some years ago by the Pall Mall Gazette, led us to look up our back files of that paper; and we take leave to glean in that forsaken field. It was on January 15, 1894, that the following “Occasional Note” appeared in the Pall Mall Gazette:

“We were talking at dinner, and some foolish fellow asked what was the most pathetic line or two lines in the poetry of all languages? Readers and correspondents, answer. We, as the bookmakers, will offer four against the field and stand our chance:

Insatiabiliter deflebitur, æternumque
Nulla dies nobis mœrorem e pectore demet.

LUCRETIVS.

Tendebantque manus ripæ ulterioris amore.

VIROILL.

I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me.

SHAKESPEARE.

Ich werde Zeit genug an Euch zu denken haben.

GOETHE.

Beat these, any of you, if you can.”

The readers of the Pall Mall Gazette took up the challenge. Scores of “most pathetic lines in literature” poured into the editor’s box, and were duly printed. As time went on, and as the great heart of the public became wrung, the space allotted to these chips of pathos grew, until it seemed as if the Pall Mall Gazette were about to dissolve in tears. But the editor at last cried “Enough!” and the rage for pathetic lines subsided. The lines remain, and we print below a selection:

Comfort? Comfort scorned of devils! This is truth the poet sings,
That a sorrow’s crown of sorrow is remembering happier things.

TENNYSON.

Never morning wore
To evening but some heart did break.

TENNYSON.

Lear. . . . Do not laugh at me;
For as I am a man I think this lady
To be my child, Cordelia.

Cordelia. And so I am, I am.

SHAKESPEARE.

Through the sad heart of Ruth, when, sick for home,
She stood in tears amid the alien corn.

KEATS.

If the hand that I love lay me low,
There cannot be pain in the blow.

BYRON.

O dark, dark, dark, amid the blaze of noon,
Irrecoverably dark, total eclipse,
Without all hope of day.

MILTON.

Had we never lov’d sae kindly,
Had we never lov’d sae bliudly,
Never met—or never parted,
We had ne’er been broken hearted.

BURNS.

A feeling of sadness and longing,
That is not akin to pain,
And resembles sorrow only,
As the mist resembles the rain.

LONGFELLOW.

I am dying, Egypt, dying, only
I here importune death awhile until
Of many thousand kisses the poor last
I lay upon thy lips.

SHAKESPEARE.

So sad, so strange, the days that are no more.

TENNYSON.

For some they have died, and some they have left me,
And some are taken from me; all are departed,
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

CHARLES LAMB.

My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar,
And I must pause till it come back to me.

SHAKESPEARE.

Deep as first love, and wild with all regret—
Oh, Death in Life! the days that are no more.

TENNYSON.

When dreamless rest is mine, I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long to-night.

(?)

But O the heavy changes, now thou art gone,
Now thou art gone and never must return!

MILTON.

No more, no more, oh, never more on me
The freshness of the heart like dew shall fall!

BYRON.

O the insufferable eyes of these poor might-have-beens,
These fatuous, ineffectual yesterdays!

W. E. HENLEY.

The pale moon is setting beyond the white wave,
And time is setting with me, O!
Farewell, false friends; false lover, farewell!
I'll never mair trouble them nor thee, O!

BURNS.

The only loveless look, the look wherewith you passed:
'Twas all unlike your great and gracious ways.

COVENTRY PATMORE.

Gilt with sweet day's decline,
And sad with promise of a different sun.

COVENTRY PATMORE.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike the inevitable hour,
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

GRAY.

Fear no more the heat of the sun
Nor the furious winter's rages,
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone and ta'en thy wages.

SHAKESPEARE.

I was so young, I loved him so, I had
No mother, God forgot me, and I fell.

EDWARD BERDOE.

To sit in your straight-laced heaven
Where saints and angels sing,
And never hear a pheasant caw,
Nor the whirr of a partridge wing.

A LINCOLNSHIRE POACHER.

I do love you so
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot
If thinking on me then should make you woe.

SHAKESPEARE.

And to be wroth with what we love
Doth work like madness on the brain.

COLERIDGE.

It was a childish ignorance, but now 'tis little joy
To know I'm farther off from heaven than when I was a boy.

TOM HOOD.

We thought her dying when she slept,
And sleeping when she died.

HOOD.

The heartless and intolerable
Indignity of "earth to earth."

COVENTRY PATMORE.

My long-lost beauty, hast thou folded quite Thy wings of morning light?

O. W. HOLMES.

The moving finger writes: and having writ,
Moves on: nor all your piety nor wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a line,
Nor all your tears wash out a word of it.

EDWARD FITZGERALD'S Omar Khayyám.

It is not in the shipwreck, or the strife,
We feel benumbed, and wish to be no more,
But in the after-silence on the shore,
Where all is lost except a little life.

BYRON.

She never told her love.

SHELLEY.

A wise man is as foolish as a child,
And wanton if a woman whispers "Wait!"

EDMUND GOSSE.

SOME APHORISMS.

IV.—"GUESSES AT TRUTH."

THE Guesses at Truth of the brothers Augustus and Julius Hare appeared anonymously in 1827. The work was written by the two brothers in conjunction at Oxford, but it had its special origin in the commonplace book of Augustus and in the enthusiasm of Julius. In 1838, after the death of Augustus, Julius Hare brought out a new and revised edition of the Guesses. "Many parts were re-written, much more added, essays of considerable length overshadowed the pithy, pregnant sentences which had before been its characteristic, and the share of the surviving brother in the work became by far the larger." A Second Series of the Guesses appeared in 1848. The present Eversley volume contains the two series. It is the eighth reprint issued by Messrs. Macmillan, who included it in their "Golden Treasury" series more than twenty-five years ago. The following sentences may be taken as typical of the work in its earliest form.

Some people carry their hearts in their heads; very many carry their heads in their hearts. The difficulty is to keep them apart, and get both actively working together.

Since the generality of persons act from impulse, much more than from principle, men are neither so good nor so bad as we are apt to think them.

I could hardly feel much confidence in a man who had never been imposed upon.

The man who will share his wealth with a woman has some love for her; the man who can resolve to share his poverty with her has more . . . of course supposing him to be a man, not a child, or a beast.

Many a man's vices have at first been nothing more than good qualities run wild.

Truth, when witty, is the wittiest of all things.

Self-depreciation is not humility, though often mistaken for it. Its source is oftener mortified pride.

Be what you are. This is the first step toward becoming better than you are.

Crimes sometimes shock us too much; vices almost always too little.

Many Italian girls are said to profane the black veil by taking it against their will; and so do many English girls profane the white one.

Our appetites are given to us to preserve and to propagate life. We abuse them for its destruction.

None but a fool is always right; and his right is the most unreasonable wrong.

When a man says he sees nothing in a book he very often means that he does not see himself in it; which, if it is not a comedy or a satire, is likely enough.

What a person praises is perhaps a surer standard, even than what he condemns, of his character, information, and abilities. No wonder, then, that in this prudent country most people are so shy of praising anything.

Mere art perverts taste; just as mere theology depraves religion.

The feeling is oftener the deeper truth, the opinion the more superficial one.

Temporary madness may perhaps be necessary in some cases to cleanse and renovate the mind; just as a fit of illness is to carry off the humours of the body.

Is not every true lover a martyr?

Contrast is a kind of relation.

Half the failures in life arise from pulling in one's horse as he is leaping.

Curiosity is little more than another name for hope.

After casting a glance at our own weaknesses, how eagerly does our vanity console itself with deploring the infirmities of our friends.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1898.

No. 1345, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .                   | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. . .                    | 0 15 3  | 6 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Kilmarnock "Burns," which was purchased by Mr. Sabin at Edinburgh last Monday for the price of 545 guineas, was not a commission, but a speculation on the part of the purchaser. The interest of the Edinburgh public in the sale was intense, and the room in which Mr. Dowell, the auctioneer (who is over eighty years of age), performed his duties, was packed to suffocation. The dealers, too, were there in force; for no such "Burns" has come into the market for years. Thirty guineas was the first bid, which the auctioneer ignored. Then fifty, then seventy-five, then a hundred! The bidding ran quickly up to 300 guineas. Only then did Mr. Sabin join in the contest. He had gone down to Edinburgh with the firm intention to bring the book back with him to London.

MR. RICHARDSON, a Glasgow bookseller, dropped out at the 300-guineas stage. He remarked patriotically afterwards that he wished he had run the volume up to 750 guineas. The battle was now between Mr. Pearson and Mr. Sabin, both of London. They raised their bids, by five pounds a bid, rapidly, until 500 guineas was reached. Loud cheers now broke out. Mr. Sabin wavered, and allowed himself a long and risky pause. But the cheering had heartened him, and he bid another five guineas. The bidding of the two dealers then became slow, and there were hesitations. The figure crept up to 540 guineas, bid by Mr. Pearson. Mr. Sabin said, "545." There was a long silence, and the hammer fell amid cheering such as, it is said, had never been heard in any auction room. Mr. Sabin still holds the book, and its destination is uncertain. He admitted it might go to America, though he did not desire it.

THE next day an old gentleman called on the auctioneer and inquired with suppressed excitement what would be the value of a copy of "Burns" printed in 1600.

WE quote from the Daily News the following sonnet by Canon Rawnsley, addressed to Mr. Ruskin in honour of his seventy-ninth birthday:

"Born in our monster Babylon, to decree
The blasting of all Babylons—and ordained
To be her avant-courier who has reigned
Longest and best—we give God thanks for thee.
Tho' conquering hosts encompass land and sea,
And men of arms her Empire have maintained,
Thou art her mightiest warrior, thou hast gained
By power of wisdom wider sovereignty.
Wherefore to thee, for whom this day has brought
The golden crown thy eightieth year shall wear,
We bring the tribute of our love and praise,
And borne from far-off centuries we hear
Proud acclamation of the seer who wrought
Undying splendour for Victorian days."

LONDONERS are very slow to avail themselves of that which they can have for nothing. When Mr. Birrell, Q.C., M.P., is announced to lecture at the Westminster Town Hall you can hardly get a seat for love or money. When, in his capacity of Quain Professor of Law at University College, he delivered his first discourse at the Old Hall, Lincoln's Inn, his audience, though there was nothing to pay, consisted of some thirty people, including several journalists, and half a dozen natives of India, wiser in their generation than their white-skinned fellow-subjects. It is true that "Copyright" is not at first sight a very attractive subject to the general public, in spite of the fact that every one now writes; but Mr. Birrell has the happy gift of making dull things interesting.

LAMARTINE, as a minister, took a very different view of copyright from that which he had expressed before his elevation to office. Upon which Mr. Birrell remarked: "When a literary statesman says that he is going to speak not as a writer, but as a politician, we know that it is a strange grace to an odd kind of meat—he is going to eat his own words." One of the reasons why the copyright question did not begin to "burn" until comparatively recently is that in olden days "the British author after his first publication usually disappeared—or only reappeared in the pillory." The terms of copyright vary remarkably in different countries. In Mexico, Guatemala, and Venezuela—"three not very literary States"—it is perpetual, while in the United States it lasts only twenty-eight years, though a further period of fourteen years can be granted if the author, his widow, or one of his children is alive at the expiration of the first term.

These extracts will be sufficient to show the sort of fare to be expected by anyone who is in the neighbourhood of Lincoln's Inn at half-past four on Mondays and Fridays.

MR. AUSTIN DOBSON writes: "In your last week's 'Notes and News,' apropos of Mr. Clinton Scollard's graceful verses in Scribner, you quote—'The old poet's plea:

"O for a book in a shadie nook!"

The reference is, I presume, to the following, which I have seen in different places, but transcribe now from Alexander Ireland's Book-Lover's Enchiridion, 1885, p. 35:

'O for a Booke and a shadie nooke, eyther in-a-doore or out;
With the grene leaves whisp'ring overhede,
or the Streete cryes all about.
Where I maie Reade all at my ease,
both of the Newe and Olde;
For a jollie goode Booke whereon to looke,
Is better to me than Golde.'

Ireland entitles this 'Old English Song.' But I am under the impression that the late Mr. John Wilson, bookseller, of 12, King William-street, Charing Cross, told me, some time before his death in 1889, that he was the author of the lines, which he had inserted in one of his second-hand Catalogues, where, I fancy, I saw it. Mr. Wilson was a bookseller of that elder race who loved books almost too well to sell them. His knowledge, to which I have often been indebted, was exceptional; and he was, withal, a modest, kindly man. Perhaps some of your readers may have heard this story, and may be able to confirm my recollection."

IN commenting upon Mr. St. Loe Strachey's lecture on "Tennyson" at Toynbee Hall last week, Canon Barnett remarked on the field offered by the East End to the true poet. The East End, moreover, he said, wants poets and poetry. So, he added (we quote from the Telegraph's report): "Let the poets come among them and sing. Their hearts would break, of course, but true poets accept heartbreak as a part of the conditions of their mission."

MEANWHILE, an anonymous poet, who has some claim to be heard, has been at work in the East End to some purpose. His theme is the attempted rescue of a tiny child from burning, in a lamp accident at Mile-end, by Alfred Henry Wood, a little boy aged twelve, who, in his endeavours, was himself burnt to death. The poet, whose ballad is printed in the Morning Leader, begins:

"Yer tells us it's bloo blood as tells, and points to military swells as types of British
'ardi'ood;
I ain't sergestin' that's no lie; but how're yer going to classerfy such types as little Alfred Wood?"

And this is the conclusion:

"There's heroes in this week's Gazette, though Alfred Wood ain't mentioned yet; but many a 'art beats 'igh with pride
To be of that syne blood as 'e—bloo blood or red blood it may be—wot dared the fierce red death, and died."

There ain't no blyme to carst on them w'ich wears some sparklin' diadem by w'ich their noble breedin's showed ; But this I knows from wot I reads, if noble blood means noble deeds, yer'll find it off the Mile-end-rd.

West-end and Mile-end's just abart a hour's ride on a 'bus apart ; and though, as Mr. Kiplin' said,

The 'East is East and West is West,' till some'th'n puts 'em on the test yer can't tell w'ich is better bred."

THE following reminiscence of Walt Whitman is offered by Joaquin Miller in one of the footnotes to the new complete edition of his poems, to which we make reference elsewhere. Joaquin Miller was visiting Longfellow at the time of Garfield's assassination. He writes : "A publisher solicited from each of the several authors then in and about Boston some tribute of sorrow for the dead. The generous sum of 100 dollars was checked as an earnest. I remember how John Boyle O'Reilly and I went to big-hearted Walt Whitman, and wrestled with him in a vain effort to make him earn and accept his 100 dollars, 'Yes, I'm sorry as the sorriest ; sympathise with the great broken heart of the world over this dead sovereign citizen. But I've nothing to say.' And so, persuade as we might, even till past midnight, Walt Whitman would not touch the money or try to write a line. He was poor ; but bear it for ever in testimony that he was honest, and would not promise to sell that which he felt that God had not at that moment given him to sell. And hereafter, whenever any of you are disposed to speak or even think unkindly of Walt Whitman, remember this refusal of his to touch a whole heap of money when he might have had it for ten lines, and, maybe, less than ten minutes' employment. I love him for it."

In another place, speaking of the different methods of authors, Joaquin Miller says of Bret Harte : "He once told me that his first line was always a cigar, and sometimes two cigars. I reckon Walt Whitman could write anywhere. I once was with him on top of a Fifth Avenue omnibus, above a sea of people, when he began writing on the edge of a newspaper, and he kept it up for half an hour, although his elbow was almost continuously tangled up with that of the driver."

THE translation by Mr. J. G. Frazer, author of The Golden Bough, with introduction and commentary, of Pausanias's Description of Greece, is to be published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. on February 18. The introduction covers nearly a hundred pages, and the Commentary fills four ample volumes. Mr. Frazer has spent many years upon this great work, and that his Commentary has grown to such bulk will be evidence of the thoroughness with which he has accomplished his task. Account has been taken in the addenda, which are contained in the fifth volume, of the latest discoveries in Greece up to within the last few months. The illustrations, which are numerous—are not intended so much as works of art in themselves, but as elucidations of the text, being mainly confined to reproductions of monuments and objects actually described by Pausanias, or, in the too numerous cases where the originals have disappeared, of others which are thought to give some idea of their character.

MR. FRANCIS GRIBBLE'S new novel, Sunlight and Limelight: a Story of the Stage Life and the Real Life, will be published next week.

IN an account of Mr. Gladstone which is published in the Youths' Companion we find him saying, apropos of international copyright : "What should it matter where a book is printed? A book is made in the head." But we cannot agree with the sentiment. It is important, for example, that such a novel as Miss Dickens's Against the Tide (Hutchinson & Co.), which is noticed in this week's "Fiction Guide," should have been printed in England and not in Holland. The purposes of copyright do not here enter into the case : loyalty to British printers, the best in the world, does.

MR. FISHER UNWIN'S Library of Literary Histories is to begin with Mr. R. W. Frazer's Literary History of India, which is now ready. Few men are more steeped in Eastern lore than the author of Silent Gods in Sunsteeped Lands and the History of British India. When Mr. Frazer was a civil servant in India, his knowledge of Sanskrit enabled him to get "within the veil," behind which the natives, taught by long experience of subjection, live their real lives.

AT the same time we are not greatly enamoured of the title which the publisher has found for the series. From a sort of advertisement of the library we gather, after some mock-heroics about "the trumpet-call of battle," the "panorama of kings and queens," "imperishable masterpieces," and so forth, that it is with "the literature of nations" that the series is intended to deal. Why don't they say so in the title? A "literary history" is not necessarily a history of literature ; the late Mr. Froude might have used the adjective to distinguish his work from that of Mr. Freeman. Marcel Schwob, we presume, is writing the history of French literature—not really a literary history of France. But probably the ambiguity was ingeniously contrived to give occasion for the picturesque advertisement. Without it there would have been no excuse for talking of "the panorama of kings and queens" and for boasting that "the poets are the true masters of the earth."

MR. HENLEY'S contribution to the first number of The Outlook is by way of being a reply to the criticisms on his recent Essay on Burns which the Burns' Night brought forth. Some of them were sufficiently provocative of retort. Mr. Henley swiftly sums up these festivities : "Half-read M.P.'s and sheriffs, and divines and provosts flushed with literary patriotism, call on their countrymen to drink the Immortal Memory. And the Immortal Memory is drunk, and 'Tam o' Shanter' is recited, and there are potatoes pottle deep, and everybody goes home to bed convinced once more that Burns is the greatest poet in time."

BUT Burns is not the greatest poet in time ; moreover, he is the "Poet of the Uncritical"—that is Mr. Henley's assertion ; and if we would sift the mystery of these false eulogies to the bottom, we should find that Thomas Carlyle is the fount and origin of the evil. In his Edinburgh essay on Burns, Carlyle, "that rare and excellent hater of all things magnificated and insincere," who "couldn't drink, and therefore hated liquor," who "danced never to the tune of Light o' Love," proves himself practically the father of "all them that babble in Burns' Club." So Mr. Henley roundly affirms. We should like to hear Carlyle on the matter.

Punch's "Animal Land" continues to be very funny. Abandoning politicians, for the time being, at any rate, the witty zoologist who is responsible for the series comes this week to literature and art. We have the Zolafite, the Trimmadome or Willirich (Mr. W. B. Richmond, R.A.), and the Ruddikipple, with appropriate cuts by the ingenious Mr. Reed. The Zolafite is thus described :

"This Animal is very bold and currageous. He is very clever at his work but he gets very broad in places. The lower down things are the harder he tries to get them out. The Troof is buried very deep just now and that is what he is looking for. So they are all dancing with rage and say he is a Itallian."

And this is the account of the Ruddikipple, whose name we need hardly translate :

"This little Animal is very strong and viggrous and knows everything. If anybody tries to beat it it brings out a fresh tail and then nobody can't touch that either. It stirs everbody up so it would make a pew-opener want to die for his country. If a Lorryitshews his nose it just squashes him flat."

Punch has rarely had a better idea, and it is being worked out admirably. Rumour has it that the new Buffon is Mr. Seaman.

LORD TENNYSON is just now engaged upon writing new notes to certain of his father's poems, which will see the light in a forthcoming edition. Maud will be out of copyright next year ; but by incorporating new matter of such interest as Lord Tennyson's notes are likely to be, the publishers will probably be able to retain a monopoly, even when cheap rival editions appear.

CANON RAWNSLEY is endeavouring to excite interest in the proposed Caedmon memorial at Whitby. A committee has been formed to erect a cross of Anglian design, hewn from Northumbrian sandstone, to the memory of the first English poet ; and it will be placed in the churchyard of St. Mary's, Whitby, in what is probably part of the actual burial ground where the dust of Caedmon lies. He died in the year 680.

REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED.

RICHARD JEFFERIES.

NO critic is able to pronounce an absolute and final judgment; he can only record his own impressions, and their value depends on the reasonableness and honesty with which they are set forth. I shall make no apology, therefore, for beginning this paper with a personal explanation that is as likely to raise doubts of the writer's competence as to inspire faith in his verdict. It is this: never do I remember to have read for pleasure a book on natural history. I have lived an outdoor life, and loved it. The smallest living thing interests me, and clouds and sunsets, dim woodlands and high mountains, wheat and woodland, tilth and vineyard, hive and horse and hill, have for me an inexhaustible attraction. But even when boxed up in town I would never dream of reading natural history for amusement. It is not that it has been neglected, either. I have gone over nearly the whole corpus of works in natural history, but the books have been used exclusively to clear up doubtful points, to supplement an incomplete knowledge acquired from personal observation. To say that they have been almost invariably read through the index will plainly show the part they have played.

But, on the other hand, a poet's description of nature has always attracted me beyond measure if only it were of the very first quality. If it were not that, then it was as dull as natural history itself. I remember when a child someone gave me a copy of Thomson's "Seasons," and I detested it; but the same poet's "Castle of Indolence" was charming. Long before these lines were fully understood they had rooted themselves in my mind:

"I care not, Fortune, what you me deny;
You cannot rob me of free Nature's grace;
You cannot shut the windows of the sky
Through which Aurora shows her brightening face."

This Aurora was not to my boyish mind a goddess or abstraction; she was a rich-eyed, red-lipped girl who "oft in visions of the night, and oft in fancy's airy dream," peeped through the panes of a little window when moonlight fell on it, and the slender sprays of a small red rose made a trembling shadow on the floor.

Gray's "Elegy," which it is the fashion to decry at present by readers "corrupted with literary prejudices," as Dr. Johnson has it, gives, in my opinion, as no other poem does, the very atmosphere, physical and intellectual, of the village. In town life the individual is lost in the crowd, but in the country the steady march of the generations is plainly visible: the child playing; manhood at toil; old age passing where "the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep." Gray's vein of thought is inevitable among those who "live the life" there, and it comes out in the best interpretations of the elegy—Burns, for instance, and in that most touching of the essays of Jefferies, "My Village"; the sentiment of which is but an expansion and personal application of the verse:

"Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield,
Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke!
How jocund did they drive their team a field!
How bow'd the woods beneath their sturdy stroke!"

No, it was Johnson's strength that he would not let himself be "corrupted with literary prejudices"; that he possessed natural manhood enough to recognise a fine rendering of the simple melancholy of the village graveyard. "Had Gray often written thus," he concludes, "it had been vain to blame and useless to praise him."

But, independent of "atmosphere," independent of feeling, a mere description, if it be done supremely well, abides in the memory. I remember reading for the first time these two lines in "Hamlet," which I have ever since regarded as a perfect model of their kind:

"There is a willow grows aslant the brook,
That shows his hoar-leaves in the glassy stream."

Simple, definite, concrete—that is the sort of description which appealed most directly to me. If there is vagueness, it must be to make room for romance. I could picture the willow scene on our own brook; but, to take another example of Shakespeare's inimitable power, the pleasure derived from the following lines is partly due to the large play which is given to the imagination of the reader:

"On such a night
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea banks, and waved her love
To come again to Carthage."

But one feels that in descanting upon Shakespeare's unsurpassable open-air pictures nothing can be said in praise that the reader will not think short of the truth. And the same might almost be asserted of Milton. Take the scenes in these familiar lines from "L'Allegro." They are beheld as from some watch-tower in the skies:

"Russet lawns and fallows gray
Where the nibbling flocks do stray,
Mountains on whose barren breast
The lab'ring clouds do often rest,
Meadows trim with daisies pied,
Shallow brooks with rivers wide."

My purpose in dwelling upon such familiar examples is to establish the tradition and the taste with which those whose minds have been nourished on the best English literature approach a writer on country life. The first prose work exclusively devoted to it that came into my hands was The Compleat Angler, and it was accepted not as literature, but as a guide to fishing. I instinctively liked the book and with a boy's zeal carried it to the waterside and straightway began to put Piscator's instructions to a literal and practical test. He was not a brilliant success. An Irish vagabond named Donagan, who haunted the same stream, could give me much more useful advice than he. I discovered that the pleasure to be derived from Izaak Walton was exactly that which made certain lines of poetry linger in my ear and imprint themselves on my mind.

He lives not as natural history but as literature; his place on the shelf is beside "The Elegy" and "The Castle of Indolence," not along with Macgillivray and Yarrell and Seebohm and Newton.

A second book that came into my possession was White's Natural History of Selborne; was this for reading or for consultation? After a while it was silently placed beside Yarrell. Often, indeed, was it taken down, for if one were in a difficulty—if one had seen a bird or beast and wished to know more about it—a more precise, clear and satisfactory authority did not exist. But for pleasurable continuous reading Gilbert White was too "dry"; he gave no picture, no atmosphere: he was matter-of-fact of the matter-of-fact eighteenth century. He does not belong at all to the same class as Walton.

During the present century there have been three writers whose treatment of nature has had for me a peculiar interest. The first and greatest of them was Lord Tennyson; the second, R. L. Stevenson; and the third, Richard Jefferies. Even yet the pitiful circumstances under which the last-mentioned died render it difficult to judge his work coldly and soberly. Besides, this is at least one case in which biography is necessary to criticism. Jefferies left behind him some eighteen volumes of prose, not counting those "prelusive gymnastics," Jack Brass, The Scarlet Shawl, Restless Human Hearts, and so forth, published before he fell under Mr. Greenwood's influence. Eighteen volumes in ten years, during several of which he was cramped by illness, are far too many. But the facts of his life more than excuse and explain this too diligent printing. Jefferies from birth was extremely poor, and with him poverty was real and grim, not a mere genteel hard-up-ness. Lord Tennyson at times felt the lack of money, and Stevenson spoke ominously of "Byles the Butcher"; neither of them, however, had the slightest experience of Want as it stared Jefferies in the face; neither of them was ever in the position where he must write or starve. Confronted with this horrid alternative, Jefferies wrote much that it is kindest to forget; a man working with a pistol at his head does not compose masterpieces; that he should be able to compose at all is a kind of miracle. The evils of poverty, again, were deepened by illness. He was not strong even as a child; he became a thin, weak-chested lad, and suffered intense pain during the last years of his life.

Want of money means a great deal more than being forced to do hack-work. It handicapped Jefferies from the start, as he got a very imperfect schooling. To understand it you must compare Somersby and Coate. Alfred Tennyson and Richard Jefferies drank in their impressions of nature much in the same way. Both were fond of rambling, and there was not so very much difference between the Downs of Lincolnshire and the Downs of Wiltshire. The rectory boy, however, had all the gear and tackle of education at his disposal: the farm lad was left very much to his own devices, and at an age at which the other entered Cambridge he began to work as a reporter. Still more striking is the contrast later on. Tennyson, after his juvenile failures, was welcomed by the critics and neglected by the public; but he had at college formed a little band of friends and admirers who gradually widened the circle. Jefferies was friendless; no literary acquaintance was made at Coate Farm. He was neglected till the very day of his death, though critics (to their credit, be it said) were not unjust or unkind, and he never had any chance of forming such a band of friends as had helped Lord Tennyson and were even then helping R. L. Stevenson. As to the general public itself, people sometimes talk as though it could not now be capable of "stoning its prophets" as it did in old time, but human nature is human nature still. The public is, and always has been, slow to recognise genuine literary merit, and when it feels its sin, and is contrite, it blunders still worse and hugs some Bottom the Weaver to its large bosom, fondly imagining that thus is the wrong of the centuries redressed.

The Story of My Heart is a pathetic book, because in it the author unconsciously reveals the train of evils which attend poverty. It deals with many of the questions raised by In Memoriam, that have been in the air during the last fifty years and more. But where Tennyson is a well-equipped philosopher Jefferies is but a splendid Pagan; he has not followed the progress of thought; he only puts a series of passionate questions to Nature such as might be asked by an intellectual but ill-equipped savage. Indeed, he might almost be a savage in his worship of "the sun burning in heaven," his faith in physical perfection, his belief that there is something greater even than God. His cri du cœur was uttered also by Stevenson in a famous essay, as it had been uttered in throes of shaking faith by Ruskin:

"There is nothing human," Jefferies says, "in the whole round of nature. All nature, all the universe that we can see, is absolutely indifferent to us, and except to us human life is of no more value than grass. If the entire human race perished at this hour what difference would it make to the earth?"

If Jefferies had been able, like Tennyson with his dirges, to carry this little book about many years in his pocket, and think and reconsider the points, and discuss them with the ablest men of his day, it might have become a very remarkable contribution to literature. But when he wrote it the shadow of death was approaching. In those passages that are most steeped in natural magic we feel the presence of disease, even when it intensifies the sweetness and the beauty, as, for instance, in the following passage, somewhat damaged as it is by the lavish use of f's:

"Leaving the shore I walk among the trees; a cloud passes and the sweet short rain comes mingled with sunbeams and flower-scented air. The finches sing among the fresh green leaves of the beeches. Beautiful it is in summer days to see the wheat wave, and the long grass, foam-flecked of flower, yield and return to the wind. My soul of itself always desires; these are to it as fresh food."

The Story of My Heart is a failure in one way, but of the utmost value in another. Of his best work we are compelled to ask, Is it literature, or merely natural history? Does it range with Walton and the poets, or with Gilbert White and the zoologists? The first impression is that the Game-keeper at Home, Wild Life, The Amateur Poacher, and many of the smaller essays, fall "betwixt and between"; too rambling and unmethodical for science, too literal and matter-of-fact for literature. Yet there will be found in them a growing wistfulness of wonder, a melancholy grace, a deeper meaning, that invite the reader's return. They are saved by their style, and on the way to become classics. Those three, at least, are literature.

But there is no author who stands more in need of editing than Jefferies. He, unfortunately, scattered his books up and down among several publishers. Otherwise it would easily be possible to form out of them a single volume that would stand first of its kind, for in the essay, be it remembered, his skill touched its zenith. In these busy days, however, it is too much to expect that people will wade through a great many volumes for one paper here and another there.

I have not deemed it necessary to say anything about his novels. In one of his recently published letters Lord Tennyson declared that he was no bibliophil; he had not even read all Spenser; he contented himself with the consummate flower of an author's best work. With that most agree. It is good to cull the best he has to offer, but to go grubbing through the failures and half-successes of a writer is abhorrent. After making one determined attempt to read the novels of Richard Jefferies I gave them up in despair. An exception should be made, however, in favour of his stories for children, Wood Magic and Bevis; pleasanter and healthier books for boys cannot be desired by those who love to see children forming a sound taste at the outset. P.

TOLSTOI AND MAUPASSANT.

It is easy to see that Tolstoi's remarkable article on Guy de Maupassant, translated in Chapman's Magazine, has little to do with literary criticism. It is an exposition not so much of Maupassant's qualities as of the great Russian's attitude towards life and morals. Tolstoi's judgment on Maupassant is that, with all his defects, he was a great writer, that he had a piercing vision of the contradictions and the tragedy of human passions, that his talent was injured by the low moral standards of his Parisian circle, from which he was emancipating himself when madness and death ended his career. Had the emancipation been achieved, whither would Maupassant have been led? He was beginning to weary of those artistic variations of debauchery to which, at the bidding of Paris, he had dedicated many of his stories. Sur L'Eau, which Tolstoi calls the best of his books, breathes the passion for solitude, a dangerous symptom, for solitude, if it is to bring peace, must be loved not with passion, but with serenity. Maupassant was no contented chronicler of lubricity like Catulle Mendès; he had fitful glimpses of an ideal humanity purged from grossness, selfishness, and perfidy. Tolstoi sees this in Le Horla, that appalling fantasy of an ulterior stage of our physical evolution. To most of us this story is interesting simply as a delirium of imagination. To Tolstoi, the idea of a being who is an active intelligence without a carnal envelope is a symbol of Christian perfection. In the best of Maupassant's short stories he sees nothing but this half-conscious revolt against the carnal. They deal with "all the phases of woman and of her love; and there has hardly ever been a writer who has shown with such clearness and precision all the awful aspects of that very thing which seemed to him to afford the supreme welfare of existence."

This is really what endears Maupassant to Tolstoi, this presentment of the "awful aspects" of woman. The early Fathers regarded her as the chief instrument of evil, and Tolstoi, who is the reincarnation of a Christian Father, hails Maupassant as a disciple struggling towards the light, and savagely attacks Renan for having darkened the good counsel with the exasperating urbanity of paganism. It is queer to find the author of Bel Ami tenderly criticised as a possible champion of Christian ethics, while the author of Marcus Aurelius is held up to scorn and loathing, as if his vindication of woman's beauty as "one aspect of the divine plan" were an atrocity to be expected from the man who wrote L'Abbesse de Jouarre. For every writer there is, in Tolstoi's mind, but one test: is he for or against the ascetic ideal? Renan had left the Church; he was not indifferent to cookery; his lectures at the Sorbonne drew the most ravishing toilettes in Paris, though, as Mme. Darmesteter has told us, he put them to flight on one occasion by proposing that the audience should join him in reading Hebrew in the original. It is natural that Tolstoi should judge that unlucky drama about the imprisoned abbess and her lover as if it represented the whole spirit of Renan's teaching. It is equally natural that he should argue as if long and desperate contemplations of woman in her "awful aspects" drove Maupassant to suicide because he was not sufficiently enlightened to seek refuge in Tolstoi's ideal of ascetic Christianity. This is the bond of sympathy between the author of the Kreutzer Sonata and the greatest master of the short story. I daresay Tolstoi has sometimes reflected that if he had lived in Paris, like Turgéneff, when Maupassant's brief career was beginning, he would have reclaimed this pupil of Flaubert, and made him an apostle of those doctrines which, were they capable of practical application, would moralise the human race off the face of the earth.

Thus it is that Tolstoi's judgment in this article is somewhat too rarefied for poor average mortals. We cannot all be hermits, who write down marriage, and mortify the affections (in old age) for the sake of some amiable hypothesis that Nature, if we only scold her enough, will turn ascetic too, and grow babies on the gooseberry bush! If Turgéneff, who foresaw, even in Anna Karenina, the unfortunate twist in Tolstoi's intellect, can read the article on Maupassant in the shades, he must smile at some of the illustrations of Tolstoi's point—that no artist can divorce himself from the moral relation of his work. A painter exhibited a marvellous picture of a religious procession. Tolstoi was distressed because he could not tell from the picture whether the artist believed in religious processions or not. He put the question, and was told, probably with some irony, that the painter had no views on the subject. So Tolstoi describes him as one who “represented life without understanding its meaning.” It would be as reasonable to say that an artist who paints a portrait without believing in the moral character of the sitter cannot seize the significance of the human countenance. This is like Mr. Ruskin's theory that no agnostic can paint a landscape. Such confusion of thought generates an intolerance more irrational than that of any advocate of “art for art's sake.” After all, that formula answers itself, because it is impossible for any truthful art in literature to be disengaged from a moral standpoint. The unflinching blackguardism of Duroy in Bel Ami, as Tolstoi admits, is the most convincing moral. But when your moralist insists that a religious procession shall be painted only by a man who yearns to carry a banner, and that a story of depravity is best told by a novelist who perceives that the “awful aspects” of woman demand the crucifixion of our fundamental instincts, the plea of art for morality's sake becomes an excuse for eccentric fanaticism.

But no student of Maupassant's writings can fail to see that, despite any excess of moral prepossession, Tolstoi has the keenest appreciation of the art of this great storyteller, and of his insight into the depth and variety of life. Such an appreciation ought to abash those critics who have lightly dismissed him as a mere raconteur, a contriver of droll anecdotes. There are anecdotes, no doubt; we can all regale one another with “Le Signe” and “Les Epingles”; but readers who recall only these things do not know their Maupassant. In his twenty volumes live such stores of penetrating irony, pathos and tragedy, that for some years now I have rarely heard of a sombre truth rising abruptly from the deeps that has not reminded me of a story from the hand which wrote Une Vie. And what a style! In Une Vie, says Tolstoi, it is “wrought to such perfection that it surpasses, in my opinion, the performance of any French writer of prose.” I read every day grave discussions of that anæmic product called the English short story, made without blood or bones, a pulpy mass of commonplace streaked with humour (save the mark!) or sickly sentiment. You would not expect a critic of European fame to say of such fiction that it surpassed the performance of any writer of English prose. Doubtless, in our tales, the public has the tye it deserves—the dear public, which, in exalted moments, may imagine that the prose of Mr. Kipling is an imperishable tradition of literature!

L. F. AUSTIN.

JOAQUIN MILLER, BROWNING, AND THE PRINCE IMPERIAL.

NEARLY thirty years ago London literary society was amused by the apparition of Joaquin Miller, the poet of the Sierras. In sombrero and serape, with unshorn locks, and riding boots reaching to his waist, this child of the West cut a sufficiently picturesque figure among our own decorous “biled shirt” bards. He came, he saw, and in the main he conquered. He had detractors, it is true, but the late Lord Houghton stood his friend, and not a few persons bought his poems, and many young men quoted them and dreamed of emigration; and then the Buffalo Bill of poesy vanished as suddenly as he had come, and until the other day he was but a name. A few weeks ago, however, the news reached this country that Joaquin Miller, who has been describing the scenes at Klondyke for a New York paper, was severely frostbitten, having been caught in a blizzard, and is now cooped up in the cabin of a little ice-bound steamer on the Yukon river waiting for the liberation which the warm weather will bring somewhere about July. Almost simultaneously Messrs. Whitaker & Ray, of San Francisco, have forwarded to us the complete edition of his poems, which they have just prepared—a considerable volume of upwards of three hundred double-column pages.

In the notes to this book he partially tells again the story of his English visit in 1870-71, much of which—his pilgrimage to Newstead Abbey, his conversation with Rossetti, and so on—has been already related in his book Memorie and Rime. His new reminiscences are well worth reading. Thus:

“I had taken rooms at Museum-street, a few doors from the greatest storehouse of art and history on the globe, and I literally lived in the British Museum every day. But I had already overtaxed my strength, and my eyes were paining terribly. Never robust, I had always abhorred meat; and milk, from a child, had been my strongest drink. In the chill damp of England you must eat and drink. I was, without knowing it, starving and working myself to death. Always and wherever you are, when a bit of hard work is done, rest and refresh. Go to the fields, woods, to God, and get strong. This is your duty as well as your right.

Letters—sweet, brave, good letters from the learned and great—were so many I could not read them with my poor eyes and had to leave them to friends. They found two from the Archbishop of Dublin. I was to breakfast with him to meet Browning, Dean Stanley, Houghton, and so on. I went to an old Jew close by to hire a dress suit, as Franklin had done for the Court of St. James. While fitting on the clothes I told him I was in haste to go to a great breakfast. He stopped, looked at me, looked me all over, then told me I must not wear that, but he would hire me a suit of velvet. By degrees, as he fixed me up, he got at, or guessed at, some facts, and when I asked to pay him he shook his head. I put some money down and he pushed it back. He said he had a son, his only family now, at Oxford, and he kept on fixing me up: cane, great tall silk hat, gloves and all. Who would have guessed the heart to be found there?

Browning was just back from Italy, sunburnt and ruddy. ‘Robert,’ you are browning,’ smiled Lady Augusta. ‘And you are August-a,’ bowed the great poet grandly; and, by what coincidence—he, too, was in brown velvet, and so like my own that I was a bit uneasy.

Two of the Archbishop's beautiful daughters had been riding in the Park with the Earl of Aberdeen. ‘And did you gallop?’ asked Browning of the younger beauty. ‘I galloped, Joyce galloped, we galloped all three.’ Then we all laughed at the happy and hearty retort, and Browning, beating the time and clang of galloping horses' feet on the table with his fingers, repeated the exact measure in Latin from Virgil; and the Archbishop laughingly took it up, in Latin, where he left off. I then told Browning I had an order—it was my first—for a poem from the Oxford Magazine, and would like to borrow the measure and spirit of his ‘Good News,’ for a prairie fire on the plains, driving buffalo and all other life before it into a river. ‘Why not borrow from Virgil, as I did? He is as rich as one of your gold mines, while I am but a poor scribe.’ And this was my first of inner London.

Fast on top of this came breakfasts with Lord Houghton, lunch with Browning, a dinner with Rossetti to meet the great painters; the good old Jew garmenting me always, and always pushing back the pay.”

Joaquin Miller's English book, Songs of the Sierras, was only moderately popular. Its “literary” quality was disappointing: readers wanted an entirely new note, whereas instead the child of the untrammelled West was found to have read his Byron to some purpose. He did not utter the spontaneous and barbaric yawp that was wished. He was also too fluent, too careless of form. His lines tumbled out, as a waterfall tumbles over a rock. The rush was fine, but individual beauties were lacking. There was no nicety of epithet. People prized the poet for his glow, his generous creed, his simplicity; but few readers turned to the book again, and that is, perhaps, the best proof of a poet's failure. Yet there are haunting passages even in these loose Songs, which are not songs at all. Thus, in “Arizonian”:

“So I have said, and I say it over,
And can prove it over and over again,
That the four-footed beasts in the red-crown'd clover,
The pied and hornéd beasts on the plain
That lie down, rise up, and repose again,
And do never take care or toil or spin,
Nor buy, nor build, nor gather in gold,
As the days go out and the tides come in,
Are better than we by a thousand-fold;
For what is it all, in the words of fire,
But a vexing of soul and a vain desire?”

And the beginning of the lawless ballad, “With Walker in Nicaragua,” is memorable:

“He was a brick: let this be said
Above my brave dishonour'd dead.
I ask no more, this is not much,
Yet I disdain a colder touch
To memory as dear as his;
For he was true as God's north star,
And brave as Yuba's grizzlies are,
Yet gentle as a panther is,
Mouthing her young in her first fierce kiss.

But Ouida-esque enthusiasm is not poetry, nor is poetry, as Joaquin Miller affirms in his new volume, adequately described by the one word, “heart.”

Here is another extract from the new reminiscences :

"Born to the saddle, and bred by a chain of events to ride with the wind until I met the stolid riders of England, I can now see how it was that Anthony Trollope, Lord Houghton, and others of the saddle and 'meet' gave me ready place in their midst. Not that the English were less daring; but they were less fortunate—may I say less experienced? I recall the fact that I once found Lord Houghton's brother, Lord Crewe, and his son also, under the hands of the surgeon in New York—one with a broken thigh, and the other with a few broken ribs. But in all our hard riding I never had a scratch.

One morning Trollope hinted that my immunity was due to my big Spanish saddle, which I had brought from Mexico City. I threw my saddle on the grass and rode without so much as a blanket. And I rode neck to neck; and then left them all behind and nearly everyone unhorsed.

Prince Napoleon was of the party that morning; and as the gentlemen pulled themselves together on the return he kept by my side, and finally proposed a tour through Notts and Sherwood Forest on horseback. And so it fell out that we rode together much.

But he had already been persistently trained in the slow military methods, and it was in vain that I tried to teach him to cling to his horse and climb into the saddle as he ran, after the fashion of Indians and vaqueros. He admired it greatly, but seemed to think it unbecoming a soldier.

It was at the Literary Fund dinner, where Stanley and Prince Napoleon stood together when they made their speeches, that I saw this brave and brilliant young man for the last time. He was about to set out for Africa with the English troops to take part in the Zulu war.

He seemed very serious. When about to separate he took my hand, and, looking me all the time in the face, placed a large diamond on my finger, saying something about its being from the land to which he was going. I refused to take it, for I had heard that the Emperor died poor. But as he begged me to keep it, at least till he should come back, it has hardly left my hand since he placed it there.

Piteous that this heir to the throne of France should die alone in the yellow grass at the hand of savages in that same land where the great Emperor had said: 'Soldiers, from yonder pyramids twenty centuries behold your deeds.'

Joaquin Miller's visit ended suddenly. A return of blindness and general sickness disabled him; and the news of the illness of his sister recalled the wanderer home. Since then he has played many parts and published several books.

THE BOOK MARKET.

A TAX ON PUBLISHERS.

A TALK WITH MR. T. FISHER UNWIN.

MR. EDWARD MARSTON'S letter in Tuesday's Times on the tax imposed on publishers by the copyright regulation, which compels them to supply five copies of every book to the national libraries, was a clear statement of an undoubted grievance.

Mr. Marston began by presenting a few figures without, at first, disclosing his object. He wrote:

"I have made a few rough calculations which may not be uninteresting to many of your readers. From these calculations I think I shall not be very far out in assuming that the number of titles of new books recorded in these eight years will not be less than 50,000, exclusive of American books. By counting the titles recorded on several pages and adding up the prices of the books so counted I am brought to the conclusion that the average published price of these 50,000 books is at least 5s. a copy. By multiplying these 50,000 books by five I arrive at the number of volumes which British publishers have presented to the British Museum and the four other public libraries of Oxford, Cambridge, Edinburgh, and Dublin during the eight years referred to—viz., 250,000 volumes, which, if taken at the average of 5s. per volume, amounts to the prodigious sum of £62,500. If I go back, as the previous volumes of The English Catalogue enable me to do, I estimate—roughly, of course—that, taking the whole period of Her Majesty's reign, say sixty years, the number of books (including the above estimate for Volume V.) may be taken as 300,000, five copies of each of which have been presented by British publishers to the British nation—say, 1,500,000 works, which, taken at 5s. a volume, amount to £375,000. Three hundred thousand volumes to each library!"

"Now"—says Mr. Marston, whose whole letter is an interesting contribution to the discussion of the rumoured new Copyright Act—

"how is it and why is it that publishers alone should be subjected to such an enormous tax as this? What do they get in exchange for it? No other profession or trade, so far as I know, is so taxed, and publishers are not, by reason of it, relieved from any other tax which the 'body politic' has to pay. It may be said that it is a tax of venerable antiquity and that publishers go into business knowing that this liability hangs over them; it is the law, and they submit."

UNABLE to solve Mr. Marston's questions, an ACADEMY representative went to seek further information where it was likely to be forthcoming. Mr. T. Fisher Unwin has before now expressed his views strongly on the same question, and to him the representative appealed.

"I have been out of town and therefore have not seen Mr. Marston's letter," said Mr. Unwin, "but I'll send for it now. My own view is a very simple one. Why should publishers be taxed more than other classes? They contribute by their calling to the enlightenment of the country, so that if their case is to be exceptional I think it would be more reasonable to subsidise than to tax them."

"Do you look upon the five-copies clause in the Copyright Act as involving a serious strain on a publisher's treasury?"

"Certainly, and especially in the case of expensive illustrated books. I recently published a costly volume of drawings by Charles Keene. Well, five copies of such a volume—the whole edition being a matter only of a few hundreds—are a serious drain. Then, again, the British Museum demands a copy of every new edition of a book which has already been sent to it—however trivial the alteration in the text may be. Even books imported from America—if they are issued with an English publisher's imprint—must be sent to the Museum. Reprints of non-copyright works must also be sent; every new edition of Pilgrim's Progress, for instance. I suppose I send five hundred books a year myself to the five libraries which benefit under the Act. So you see the Act is fully enforced. What I complain of is, that we get no return for our books."

"What return would you suggest?"

"Well; I think the act of delivering five free copies of a book to the State should of itself give us copyright. The receipt for the book should be a certificate of copyright."

"In lieu of the fee and formalities at Stationers' Hall."

"Yes. And, another thing: the State might do what Stationers' Hall fails to do—it might register titles for us, and so save us the continual inconvenience of duplicating each other's titles through ignorance. Surely this would be little enough to ask in return for many tons of books per annum. Understand me, I don't object to give one copy of a book to the State; but five copies are too many. In America two copies only are required. But at this moment a number of the separate States are applying to have compulsory copies of books supplied to their libraries. So that American publishers may be in evil case soon. And, after all, if five copies, why not fifty? That would be only logical. The illogical thing now is, that we give something—in fact, a great deal—for nothing."

COLUMBUS SIENKIEWICZ.

WE showed last week that the Polish novel, Quo Vadis, translated by Jeremiah Curtin, is still the favourite work of fiction all over America.

"Let Peary seek his Arctic goal;
His countrymen prefer a Pole
Less brumal and uncertain;
And Roe and Howells the prolix
Must bow to Henry Sienkiewicz,
Democratized by Curtin.

Of all that Sienkiewicz has writ
Quo Vadis is the favourite
From ocean unto ocean;
And Trilby's antics, once the rage,
Are tame beside this crowded page
Of Christian emotion.

In Michigan they will not look
At aught but Sienkiewicz's book,
Nor gentlemen, nor ladies.
In Illinois and Maryland
No reader will extend a hand
Except to reach Quo Vadis.

Ohio, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Mississippi, Tennessee, Louisiana,
Wisconsin, Texas, Washington,
North Carolina, Oregon,
Virginia, Montana,

And Delaware and Idaho,
Columbia, New Mexico,
Nebraska, Maine, Missouri,
Rhode Island, California,
Connecticut and Florida
All share the Polish fury."

THE WEEK.

THE week's output of books presents few marked characteristics. History and travel rather predominate in a short list. A military text-book, a book on the Round Towers of Ireland, a book on Women's Education, and a railway history; these make somewhat cold fare. A new edition of Chaucer and a new translation of Dante give literary relief, and a book of adventurous travel brightens all.

MR. GRANT RICHARDS has just issued a new rendering of the Inferno of Dante, by Mr. Eugene Lee-Hamilton. The novel feature of Mr. Lee-Hamilton's rendering is his retention of the feminine syllable at the end of each line. "The rhyme," says the translator,

"is comparatively unimportant. Its maintenance precludes the English translation from keeping the feminine syllable, and forces him to depart from closeness of meaning and literal expression."

Abandoning the rhyme, and employing the feminine ending, Mr. Lee-Hamilton begins thus (we quote his lines here purely to show their form):

"Midway upon the footpath of our lifetime
I found myself within a dusky forest,
For the straightforward way had been lost sight of.
Ah me, how hard the task is to describe it,
That forest, wild and briary and mighty,
Which in mere thought, reneweth all the terror!"

ALL students of Chaucer will be glad that the Globe edition of his works is at last published. Mr. Alfred W. Pollard, who has edited the text with the assistance of several scholars with whom he shares the title-page, relates the somewhat chequered career of the undertaking. Messrs. Macmillan, it seems, have contemplated this edition since 1864, and Mr. Pollard's own labours began ten years ago. Probably only the most enthusiastic Chaucerians will echo Mr. Pollard's wish that in "the near future the student may have not merely two texts from which to choose, but half a dozen."

MR. HARRY DE WINDT's new book of travel, Through the Gold-fields of Alaska to Bering Straits, has only to be opened to excite interest and curiosity; the photographic illustrations being numerous and striking. Mr. De Windt made his Alaskan journey in company with his servant, George Harding, and they were piloted over the Chilkoot Pass by one Joe Cooper, an old-timer, who was returning to the Yukon gold-fields. Mr. De Windt says:

"Had my original scheme succeeded, this work would have borne the alluring title of 'New York to Paris by Land': a journey which, so far as I know, has never yet been accomplished, though I do not, for one moment, suggest that it never will be. My cloud, however, has its silver lining, seeing that the first part of our voyage lay through a region then known by name to perhaps a dozen white men, but now a byword throughout the civilised world: Klondike. I may add that Harding and I were the first Europeans to reside for any length of time alone and unprotected among the Tchuktchis of Siberia. But for these facts this book might well have been entitled, 'The Record of a Failure!'"

A GOOD many recent books have been inspired, more or less directly, by the Victorian Era Exhibition held at Earl's Court last year. Such a book is Progress in Women's Education, a volume composed of papers read at the Saturday Conferences of the "Women's Work Section." The Countess of Warwick edits the volume, and in her preface writes as follows:

"Victor Hugo was right when he described the nineteenth century as the 'woman's century.' The advance has been so marked that it has been felt in every department of human effort, but more especially in the realm of Education.

John Knox taught the Scotch people, three hundred years ago, that every scholar made is an addition to the wealth of the community—doubtless he meant 'wealth' in its wider and nobler sense—but it has been reserved for the present age to interpret this truth in its relation to women as well as to men.

We have only now 'to take occasion by the hand, and make the bounds of freedom wider yet.'"

PRINCE KRAFT ZU HOHENLOHE-INGELFINGEN's Letters on Strategy is, we think, the third volume that has been issued in the "Wolseley Series," though it is numbered as the second. The Letters form two bulky volumes, and a brief Introduction by the editor, Capt. Walter H. James, introduces us to the author, who is now deceased. Prince Kraft zu Hohenlohe-Ingelfingen was an able soldier, and in the wars of 1866 and 1870 commanded the German Artillery of the Guard. He also directed the artillery operations against Paris. Captain James says that these letters

"are not to be taken up lightly, or to be dipped in here and there, but conscientiously studied they form a valuable means of instruction in strategical matters, and for this reason they are placed before the British military reader."

Military, also, is Mr. T. Rice Holmes's History of the Indian Mutiny, of which a fifth and carefully revised edition is issued by Messrs. Macmillan. The author says:

"Among the more important alterations and additions are those which relate to the Afghan War, the battle of Sacheta and the events which led up to it, the battle of Chinhat, the defence of the Lucknow Residency, Havelock's campaign, Lord Canning's Oudh proclamation, and the vexed question of Sir Colin Campbell's responsibility for the protraction of the war."

HENRY O'BRIEN's standard work on the Round Towers of Ireland is revived in a new edition, of only 750 copies, which Messrs. W. Thacker & Co. have issued. O'Brien's career (he was born 1808) and the merits of his theory that the round towers of Ireland have a Persian origin, are examined in a lengthy introduction signed "W. H. C." The work itself begins on the ninety-seventh page.

MR. CHARLES H. GRINLING has written a History of the Great Northern Railway in a large octavo volume of over 400 pages. In his preface Mr. Grinling says:

"I am not afraid to claim that the book forms a fifty years' record of the fortunes of all the great trunk systems connecting London and the North."

Concerning his authorities Mr. Grinling says:

"Without seeking access to the private archives of the Great Northern Company, and so placing myself under obligations which could have been met only by a sacrifice of partiality, I have, nevertheless, been able to obtain information of the most intimate and authentic character with respect to all the chief events with which my History deals."

THE purpose of Mr. John Earle's Simple Grammar of English Now in Use, a work which is likely to be serviceable to young, and, for that matter, seasoned writers, is thus explained by the author:

"This is a book not of Philology, but of Grammar. In other words, it treats language not in its physical aspect, as sound or syllable, but in its mental aspect, as discourse of thought. The aim is not scientific, but educational; not the mechanism of the mother tongue, but its mental action in practical use. The leading of Nature teaches us that grammatical study should begin at the point where the use of speech is consciously apprehended by the young. That is to say, it should begin with language not as a fabric, but as the representation of thought."

A feature of this grammar is its numerous illustrative quotations from modern authors.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SIR WALTER SCOTT ON JANE AUSTEN.

SIR,—Would you allow me to point out that Mr. Austin Dobson, in the note on Scott's review of Miss Austen's Emma which you quoted (ACADEMY, Feb. 5, 1898) from his introduction to Northanger Abbey and Persuasion, has not yet explained the matter quite completely. He writes that the fact of Scott's authorship, announced by himself on the authority of Mr. Murray in the introduction to Mansfield Park, "was all the while lying perdu in a note to chap. iv. of Lockhart's Life of Scott." But the fact has twice appeared in print during the last ten years.

(1) Though Prof. Goldwin Smith ("Great Writers"), as Mr. Dobson shows by his quotation from p. 35, did not know it, the information is given in his own volume, published in 1890—see Mr. John P. Anderson's "Bibliography," p. iv.—an inconsistency I find noted by a pencil reference in my copy.

(2) The article is described, at some length, as Scott's, and quoted (though by a printer's error dated 1818) in the preface to my edition of Sense and Sensibility (J. M. Dent & Co., 1892), where it is compared with the familiar entries in Scott's Journal.—I am, sir, &c.,
R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON.

"FOUNDER."

SIR,—As you have "crowned" Mr. Henley's essay on Burns, I suppose it is fair to conclude that you consider it good English. May I ask, then, for information about the word italicised in this sentence: "The poet who founded two pocket-copies of that very silly and disgusting book, The Man of Feeling"? (p. 275). I may add that I have looked in Skeat's big Dictionary and the new revised largest Webster without finding any meaning which does at all.

In Stevenson ("Men and Books"), Some Aspects of Robert Burns, p. 52, I find: "He carried a book in his pocket . . . and wore out in this service two copies of The Man of Feeling"; so that I conclude "wore out" to be the general sense. As a student of English I am much interested in new and old usages of words; and so hope that you may be able to satisfy me as to "founder."

I may add that the correspondencies between Mr. Henley and his predecessor in their essays on Burns are such as to demand, perhaps, a larger acknowledgment of the work of Stevenson than the "crowned" essay contains.—Yours, &c.,

VERNON RENDALL.

Norwood: Feb. 10.

D'ANNUNZIO IN ENGLISH.

SIR,—As a reader of Gabriele D'Annunzio before his name was known on this side the Channel, I would fain point out that, excellent as is Ouida's version of the passage quoted by your reviewer in his criticism of the English translation of Il Trionfo della Morte, she omits one or two little touches that seem to me important. I submit the following rendering:

"Orvieta! Have you never been there! Imagine a melancholy valley. In its midst rises a volcanic rock, crowned by a city silent as death, with closed windows and narrow, dusky streets where the grass flourishes. A monk crosses the square. Before the hospital is drawn up a funeral-looking carriage, from which a decrepid servant assists a bishop to alight. A tower soars into the wet, cloudy sky; a clock slowly strikes the hour, when suddenly at the bottom of a street behold a marvel—the Duomo!"

But D'Annunzio is quite untranslatable. Those who have only read him in French cannot form an adequate idea of his subtle charm, while his genius is so utterly opposed to our habits of thought as to make him appear repulsive even in a Bowdlerised English edition. To thoroughly enjoy D'Annunzio you must not only read him in Italian, but you must think in Italian, and, for the time, try to forget you are the native of a foggy island. Those who can thus assimilate a little of the Latin spirit are the only Englishmen who can properly appreciate such works as Il Trionfo della Morte.—I am, Sir, yours obediently,

F. H. PICTON.

Exmouth: Feb. 4.

MARS IN FICTION.

SIR,—After reading Mr. Wells's War of the Worlds, and being almost persuaded that the invasion of the earth by Martians is an event which future generations will have to consider seriously, I am reminded that the history of Mars can furnish a striking instance of the fulfilment of fiction. When describing the works of the astronomers on the island of Laputa, in Gulliver's Travels, Swift makes Gulliver say:

"They have likewise discovered two lesser stars or satellites, which revolve round Mars, whereof the innermost is distant from the centre of the primary planet exactly three of its diameters, and the outermost five; the former revolves in the space of ten hours, and the later in twenty-one and a half."

The satellites are two of the minutest objects in the solar system and were only discovered in 1877—that is, a century and a half after they were described by Gulliver. And not only was Mars given the number of satellites it is now known to possess, but by making one of them revolve round the planet in less time than the planet takes to rotate on its axis, Swift imagined a condition of things which would even now be considered impossible if it were not established by the evidence of our eyes. Observations show that the innermost moon of Mars actually does revolve round the planet three times in the course of a Martian day, its period of revolution being only 7 hours 39 minutes, whereas the planet rotates in 24 hours 37 minutes.

With this remarkable coincidence in mind, one hesitates to say that Mr. Wells's romance is beyond the limits of possibility.—I am, yours, &c.,

R. A. GREGORY.

ROBERT FERGUSSON.

SIR,—It is no pleasure to me to dwell on the more painful aspects of Fergusson's career; and if Dr. Grosart will look over the review of his book again he will find that it conveys no moral censure whatsoever. My point of view is simply that the admiration which depends on swathing a figure in moral linen is no compliment to its object.

With your permission I will cite the passage which seems to have excited Dr. Grosart's indignation:

"Stevenson in his Edinburgh has frankly stated the truth: 'Love was absent from his life, or only present, if you prefer, in such a form that even the least serious of Burns' amourettes was ennobling by comparison.' We have no desire to enlarge upon the point. It was a cold caught while (after he had dosed himself with 'a searching medicine') he was electioneering that brought on Fergusson's madness and death—a death not altogether unlike that of Burns himself."

Now first take his comment on the quotation from Stevenson:

"To allege that 'love' was absent from the life of one who was so lovable and full of love, tenderness, and sweetness by universal testimony is no less stupid than false."

Without such plain proof it would be impossible to believe that Stevenson's words could be so violently wrested from their meaning. What can one do but ask Dr. Grosart to read the passage again?

Next, he entirely omits to mention "the searching medicine" either in his letter or his book; yet he cannot help knowing exactly what it refers to. "A medicine remarkable for its searching effects upon the system," are the words of Chambers. Others say quicksilver right out, and make no secret of the object for which it was taken. Why, after replying to a dozen trivial slanders, does he slur over the accusation implied here?

What Stevenson meant by "vicious" is, plainly enough, illicit sexual intercourse. In dealing with this in the book Dr. Grosart quotes Sommers, a friend of the poet's, who naturally made out the best possible case for him. Yet the sum and substance of what Dr. Grosart quotes from Sommers is that the latter spent many innocent hours with the poet, and that his companions "were, indeed, of a social cast, but not of that debauched turn which the word dissolute bears." All this might be true without falsifying the adjective used by Stevenson, who had every opportunity of learning, not the stories of early biographers only, but the traditions still, during his youth, current in Edinburgh. In the early eighties I had myself frequent opportunities of learning what these were; and till Dr. Grosart discovered a lily-like purity in Fergusson I never heard the assertion disputed.

At the same time, no one greatly blamed the poet either. He was gifted with a lively spirit, and he lived in a time when people were not so strict about morals. It would have been a miracle had he been a Galahad.

As to Stevenson applying the term "vicious" to himself, I honour him for it, just as I honour St. Paul for calling himself "the chief of sinners"; but it would be an ill-return of his noble and humble candour to accept the statement in the spirit of a grubbing literalist, and proceed to ask when and how he fell: whether in the mind only, and as a consequence of original sin, or in act. No; let us be content to honour him for being so frankly unpharisaical, and let the rest be. If Fergusson had only left behind a similar declaration!

THE REVIEWER.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"The Triumph of Death." By D'Annunzio. The critics have expended all their powers of insight and of judgment on this remarkable novel. Three points (for convenience we condense four into three) have engaged their attention. These are:

The Translation.

The Story.

D'Annunzio's Art and Morality.

The translation has been taken on trust by a good many critics. The Daily Chronicle writes of "the apparently quite competent version before us." The Daily News says the translation has been done with "skill and fluency," but "it fails, as all translations must fail, to give the matchless charm of D'Annunzio's style." Literature points out the inevitable loss to the book by translation, but says, "with the exception of the use on two occasions of the objectionable phrase 'egged on,' the translator's English is excellent." The Outlook accepts Miss Harding's translation as "an excellent piece of work." From these generalities one passes to Mr. Arthur Symons's admirable review of the book in the Saturday Review. Mr. Symons allows that Miss Harding has a good knowledge of Italian, and that her version reaches "a general level of readable, not ungraceful, English." But he picks many faults in detail, faults of omission and commission, concluding this part of his review as follows:

"It was with an actual shock that I read this sentence, which might be taken from a 'penny dreadful': 'Anything more lugubrious than those peals of demented laughter ringing out into the solemn silence of the night would be impossible to imagine.' One does not even need to know Italian to recognise the difference between such a sentence as that and such a sentence as this: 'E nulla era più lugubre di quelle risa folli in quel silenzio della notte alta.' As I have said, Miss Harding is not an artist in translation."

Apart from the verbal accuracy of the translation there is the question of omissions. The critics agree that D'Annunzio's story contains passages which could not have been rendered in English. But they differ in their estimates of Miss Harding's discretion. The Daily News says: "We note with approbation that some of the most unpleasantly erotic passages have been omitted." Literature makes light of the omissions: "The expurgation of certain sentences does not detract from the abounding interest and vitality of the book." The Outlook says: "Certain passages have been toned down, but the naked analysis is scarcely disturbed." The ACADEMY, on the other hand, reviewing the book last week, wrote: "D'Annunzio teaches the eager public's timorous hands sans style, sans naughtiness, sans poetry. It is all here—the rest—all, except the essence, the spirit. M. Herelle, in his graceful French translation, failed often at D'Annunzio's poetry of nature, but he always kept a breath of poetry in the voluptuous passages he essayed. Miss Harding has sacrificed both poetry and voluptuousness. It is a safe translation: D'Annunzio is thoroughly Britannicised, and the English Mr. Tomstocks and the English poets will alike be disappointed. And the result is most intensely interesting to the critic."

Mr. Symons formulates the same charge definitely, thus:

"Now, what I have to complain of in the English translation is that by its suppression of passages on the ground of morality it has done its utmost to make an immoral book of a book which is not immoral. Let me give an instance. On p. 361 of the original there is a long paragraph, taking up almost the whole of the page, in which the philosophic condemnation of lust, that, being essentially sterile, it is against the whole intention of nature, is defined with a seriousness which is almost solemnity. This passage comes in the midst of a scene of admirable, but certainly hazardous, invention; it supplies the moral of that scene, gives it its significance in the story, it shows the profound meaning of what might otherwise be a mere anecdote. This passage is omitted in the translation; the scene remains, but the moral has gone."

Coming now to the story, we find considerable divergence. Here are a few salient opinions. The Daily News says:

"A sickly pessimism breathes through this story. The hero is a brooding, morbid creature, making insatiable claims upon life and love. From first to last the book is a study of moral disease. Every grace of style, all that the perfection of presentation can achieve, all the resources of art are used to deck the theme, but they cannot disguise its unwholesomeness."

The Daily Chronicle may be said to agree:

"In the last analysis, whatever disguises they may assume, his [the hero's] soul-states are only two—desire and satiety—and his history consists in the steady encroachment of satiety upon desire, until the suicidal mania which has haunted him from the outset becomes homicidal to boot. He presents an appalling and highly moral example of the havoc wrought by idleness and sensuality upon an initially morbid nature. Appalling and (in its way) edifying the spectacle certainly is; but it falls short of tragic impressiveness because we do not feel it to be inevitable."

The Outlook denies originality to the story, which, it says, is "compact of the stalest, the most outworn, elements."

The Westminster Gazette is less severe:

"There is, at least, a sense that the story is a narrative, and not an analysis of small, corrupt, and decadent emotions. M. D'Annunzio has, at least, this in common with Tolstoi, that he seems to be telling you things because they happened so, and not because, for some morbid purpose of his own, he wished them to happen so. Moreover, there are in his work remarkable gifts of style and imagination to which no reader of literary gifts can be indifferent."

The Saturday Review awards only praise to the story:

"Here is a man and a woman—I can scarcely remember their Christian names; I am not even sure whether we are ever told their surnames—and in this man and woman I see myself, you, everyone who has ever desired the infinity of emotion, the infinity of surrender, the infinity of possession. Just because they are so shadowy, because they may seem to be so unreal, they have another, nearer, more insidious kind of reality than that reality by which Tristan is so absolutely Tristan, Antony so absolutely Antony. . . . Here, then, is a book which, though it deals with matters of the senses, deals with them philosophically, not as the mere stuff for a story."

The ACADEMY reviewer asked last week: "What is D'Annunzio's world?"

"What is his world? It is the word-tapestry of a poet's weaving—a poet whose musical cadences and delicate analysis of subtle emotions seem to float over and around a world of nature's beauty, a world brutal with appetite, with ugly fact, and morbid impulse. D'Annunzio's world is a bizarre fusing of many conflicting influences—Pagan, Christian, scientific—interacting on his delicate temperament, weary of so much richness. And thus the critical question to ask is, Has not he assimilated too much? It is his quality to assimilate everything, and thus in a single novel, side by side with a Pagan joy in voluptuousness, comes a scientific analysis of the melancholy strife between flesh and spirit; and the triumph of the animal in man over his higher nature is mourned by the Christian in him, studied à la Russe, and conveyed in musical prose of poetic beauty!"

Lastly, what have the critics to say on the art and moral effect of this astonishing story? The Daily News says: "The book is a masterly rendering of an ignoble theme." Literature says:

"To D'Annunzio alone among many is given the power of expression which dignifies and magnifies, and in all things he is an artist. To him, on his own confession, as to Flaubert, has been given the desire of style, the right word and the right expression; but the conciseness and compression of Flaubert has changed in him to the volubility of passion. . . . Without in any way wishing to encourage excesses possible in other tongues, it may be hoped that the publication of such a volume as this will open the way to a broader and freer view of the world than is generally permitted in novel form here."

The Outlook sums up thus:

"We do not believe that D'Annunzio will commend himself to English taste, nor do we think it well that he should do so. That his book is immoral we should be disposed to deny; for in his picture of the utter annihilation inevitable to unregulated passion he is at least as stern a moralist as M. Zola. But that it is bad art badly applied we confidently affirm."

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY."

The following have appeared, and the numbers containing them can still be obtained:—

|   |             |
|---|-------------|
|   | 1896.       |
| BEN JONSON ... ..                         | November 14 |
| JOHN KEATS ... ..                         | " 21        |
| SIR JOHN SUCKLING ... ..                  | " 28        |
| TOM HOOD ... ..                           | December 5  |
| THOMAS GRAY ... ..                        | " 12        |
| ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON ... ..             | " 19        |
| SIR WALTER SCOTT ... ..                   | " 26        |
|   | 1897.       |
| SAMUEL RICHARDSON ... ..                  | January 2   |
| THOMAS DE QUINCEY ... ..                  | " 9         |
| LEIGH HUNT ... ..                         | " 16        |
| LORD MACAULAY ... ..                      | " 23        |
| ROBERT SOUTHEY ... ..                     | " 30        |
| S. T. COLERIDGE ... ..                    | February 6  |
| CHARLES LAMB ... ..                       | " 13        |
| MICHAEL DRAYTON ... ..                    | " 20        |
| WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR ... ..               | " 27        |
| SAMUEL PEPYS .. ..                        | March 6     |
| EDMUND WALLER ... ..                      | " 13        |
| WILKIE COLLINS ... ..                     | " 20        |
| JOHN MILTON ... ..                        | " 27        |
| WILLIAM COWPER ... ..                     | April 3     |
| CHARLES DARWIN ... ..                     | " 10        |
| ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON ... ..              | " 17        |
| HENRY WADSWORTH LONG-FELLOW ... ..    | " 24        |
| ANDREW MARVELL ... ..                     | May 1       |
| ROBERT BROWNING ... ..                    | " 8         |
| THOMAS CARLYLE ... ..                     | " 15        |
| PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ... ..               | " 22        |
| CHARLES DICKENS ... ..                    | " 29        |
| JONATHAN SWIFT ... ..                     | June 5      |
| WILLIAM MAKEPEACE }THACKERAY ... .. } | " 12        |
| WILLIAM BLAKE ... ..                      | " 19        |
| SIR RICHARD STEELE ... ..                 | " 26        |
| ALEXANDER POPE ... ..                     | July 3      |
| DOUGLAS JERROLD ... ..                    | " 10        |
| FRANCIS BACON ... ..                      | " 17        |

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Week ending Thursday, February 10.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

FATHER JOHN OF THE GREEK CHURCH: AN APPRECIATION: WITH SOME CHARACTERISTIC PASSAGES OF HIS MYSTICAL AND SPIRITUAL AUTOBIOGRAPHY. Collected and arranged by Alexander Whyte, D.D. Olyphant, Anderson & Ferrier. 2s.

INTERPRETATIONS OF LIFE AND RELIGION. By Walton B. Battershall, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

THE WOLSELEY SERIES: LETTERS ON STRATEGY. By General Prince Kraft zu Hohenlohe-Ingelfingen. Edited by Capt. Walter H. James. In 2 vols. Vols. I. and II. Kegan Paul.

MANY MEMORIES OF MANY PEOPLE. By M. C. M. Simpson. Edward Arnold. 16s.

A POPULAR HISTORY OF THE INSURRECTION OF 1798. By the Rev. Patrick F. Kavanagh. Centenary edition. 2s. 6d.

A HISTORY OF THE INDIAN MUTINY. By T. Rice Holmes. Fifth edition, revised and enlarged. Macmillan & Co.

FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES: JAMES THOMSON. By William Bayne. Olyphant, Anderson & Ferrier.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLE LETTERS.

SHADOWS AND FIREFLIES: A BOOK OF VERSE. By Louis Barsac. Unicorn Press.

AN INQUIRY INTO THE ART OF THE ILLUMINATED MANUSCRIPTS OF THE MIDDLE AGES. By John Adolf Brunn. Part I.: CELTIC ILLUMINATED MANUSCRIPTS. David Douglas.

POEMS AND SONNETS. By James Renwick. Alexander Gardner.

THE NEW QUEST. By Angus Rotherham. David Nutt. 6s.

THE WORKS OF GEOFFREY CHAUCER. Edited by Alfred W. Pollard and Others. Macmillan & Co. 3s. 6d.

THE INFERNO OF DANTE. Translated with Plain Notes by Eugene Lee-Hamilton. Grant Richards. 5s.

THREE WOMEN. By Ella Wheeler Wilcox. W. B. Conkey Co. (Chicago and New York).

HERNANI: A DRAMA. By Victor Hugo. Translated into English Verse by R. Farquharson Sharp. Grant Richards.

HAIL, CLAN CHATTAN! By the Rev. A. Cluny Macpherson. Grant Bros.

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

THE ARRANGEMENT OF ATOMS IN SPACE. By J. H. Van T. Hoff. Second and revised edition. Translated and edited by Arnold Eiloart. Longmans, Green & Co.

EVOLUTIONAL ETHICS AND ANIMAL PSYCHOLOGY. By E. P. Evans. William Heinemann.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

A FLOWER-HUNTER IN QUEENSLAND AND NEW ZEALAND. By Mrs. Rowan. John Murray.

THE ROUTES AND MINERAL RESOURCES OF NORTH-WEST CANADA. By E. Jerome Dyer, F.R.G.S. George Philip & Son. 6s.

TWO THOUSAND MILES OF WANDERING IN THE BORDER COUNTRY.—LAKELAND AND RIBBLESDALE. By Edmund Bogg. Edmund Bogg (Leeds).

THROUGH THE GOLD-FIELDS OF ALASKA TO BERING STRAITS. By Harry de Windt, F.R.G.S. Chatto & Windus.

THE ROUND TOWERS OF IRELAND; OR, THE HISTORY OF THE TUATH-DE-DANAANS. By Henry O'Brien. A new edition. W. Thacker & Co. 12s. 6d.

THE HISTORY OF THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY, 1845-1895. By Charles H. Grinling. Methuen & Co. 10s. 6d.

INDIAN VILLAGE FOLK: THEIR WORKS AND WAYS. By T. B. Pandian. Elliot Stock.

THE STORY OF HAWAII. By Jean A. Owen. Harper & Bros. 5s.

EDUCATIONAL.

THE WORKS OF HORACE. Rendered into English Prose. With Life, Introduction, and Notes. By William Coultts, M.A. Longmans, Green, & Co. EASY PROBLEM PAPERS. By C. H. P. Mayo, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. PROGRESS IN WOMEN'S EDUCATION IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE. Edited by the Countess of Warwick. Longmans, Green & Co. 6s. EXERCISES ON GRADATION. By H. R. Heatley, M.A., and Rev. A. Sloman, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. 1s. 6d. A SIMPLE GRAMMAR OF ENGLISH NOW IN USE. By John Earle, M.A. Smith, Elder & Co. PRINCIPLES OF ENGLISH GRAMMAR FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS. By G. R. Carpenter. The Macmillan Co. 4s. 6d.

SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

With 2 Portraits and 2 Views. Large crown 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of ARTHUR YOUNG.

With Selections from His Correspondence.

Edited by M. BETHAM-EDWARDS.

From the TIMES.—"Miss Edwards has done her task with a reserve and succinctness to be much commended. She deserves well of all who hold in honour the memory of one who ever strove manfully to make two blades of grass grow where one grew before."
From the MORNING POST.—"A volume full of sidelights on the social and political events of the time."

READY THIS DAY. 2 vols., large crown 8vo, 15s.

ITALIAN LITERATURE. By the late

JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS. (Vols. IV. and V. of the NEW and CHEAPER EDITION of "THE RENAISSANCE IN ITALY," in 7 vols.)

READY THIS DAY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A SIMPLE GRAMMAR of ENGLISH NOW IN

USE. By JOHN EARLE, M.A., Rector of Swanwick, Rawlinsonian Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Oxford, Author of "English Prose: its Elements, History, and Usage," "The Philology of the English Tongue," &amp;c.

RELIGIO MEDICI, and other Essays. By

Sir THOMAS BROWNE. Edited, with Introduction, by D. LLOYD ROBERTS M.D., F.R.C.P. Revised Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

NEW NOVELS.

JUST PUBLISHED. With 40 Full-Page Illustrations, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE KOROSKO.

By A. CONAN DOYLE,

Author of "The White Company," "Rodney Stone," "Uncle Bernac," &amp;c.

The DAILY NEWS' opinion: "A fine story, the interest of which arrests the reader's attention at the start, and holds it to the close. The characterisation throughout is strong, clear, and very delicate.....Impressive, pulsating with emotion, informed with a great air of reality, the story will sustain and enhance its author's already high reputation."

READY THIS DAY.—Crown 8vo, 6s.

FOR the RELIGION: being the Records of

Blaise de Bernauld. By HAMILTON DRUMMOND.

London: SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

Now Ready.

With 17 Photogravure Illustrations, demy 8vo, cloth, price 16s.

THE TWO DUCHESSSES.

Family Correspondence of, and relating to, Georgiana Duchess of Devonshire; Elizabeth, Duchess of Devonshire; the Earl of Bristol (Bishop of Derry and Countess of Bristol; Lord and Lady Byron; the Earl of Aberdeen; Sir Augustus Foster, Bart.; and many Eminent Personages of the Period 1777-1859

Edited by VERE FOSTER.

From the TIMES.—"For the rest we have from various pens pictures and glimpses of a host of famous personages whose names live in the history of politics, letters, art, and society at the end of last century and the beginning of the present. We cannot but be grateful to Mr. Vera Foster for the treat he has given us."

From the DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"The latter portion of the book bristles with sparkling characterisations and entertaining anecdotes, for the most part new to the reading public, and in all cases indisputably authentic."

From the PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"This very interesting book..... Wellington and Nelson, and, above all, Napoleon, figure largely in these pages and many characteristic anecdotes and letters are for the first time given to the world."

London: BLACKIE &amp; SON, LIMITED, 50, Old Bailey.

NOTICE.

IN response to complaints as to the difficulty of obtaining this paper, we publish a LIST OF AGENTS from whom "THE ACADEMY" may be obtained. We shall be pleased to receive applications for agencies from Booksellers and Stationers and to supply them direct or through their London Agents.

LONDON.

Wholesale. Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, Strand
CASSEL & LAMB, Balaishury Square
DAWSON & SON, Bream's Buildings
KENT & CO., Paternoster Row
KINGSBURY & CO., Racquet Court, E.C.
MARLBOROUGH & CO., Old Bailey, E.C.
H. MARSHALL & SONS, Temple Avenue, London
STIMPkin, MARSHALL & CO., Stationers' Hall
Mr. GEORGE WICKERS, Strand
Messrs. H. WILLIAMS & CO., 48, Old Bailey, E.C.
TERRY & CO., Hatton Garden
Mr. E. W. ALLEN, 4, Ave Maria Lane, E.C.
Mr. POULTER, Temple
Messrs. COWIE & CO., 17, Gresham Street, E.C.
FARRINGTON & CO., St. Bride Street
RICHIE & CO., Red Lion Court
Mr. ROGERS, 32, Portland Street, Soho
Messrs. STECKERT & CO., Star Yard, W.C.
Mr. B. F. STEVENS, 4, Trafalgar Square
LONDON and SUBURBAN DISTRIBUTING AGENCY, Bouvarie Street
Mr. WALTERS, Bell Yard, Temple Bar

London, E.C.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Liverpool Street Station (Main Line)
Book Stall, Cannon Street
Ludgate Hill Station
Mr. BLENKINS, Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane
Mr. SMITH, 14, Carstar Street, Chancery Lane
Mr. MANNERS, 68, Fetter Lane
Mr. KELLY, 2, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane
Mr. WALKER, Mitre Court, Temple
Mr. JENKINSON, Shoe Lane, Fleet Street
Mr. WALKER, Imperial Arcade, Ludgate Hill
Mr. COLE, 97, Queen Street, Cheapside
Mr. BERRY, Cullum Street, Fenchurch Street
Mr. STYLES, Fishmonger Alley, Fenchurch Street
Mr. ABBOTT, 32, Eastcheap
Mr. ATKINSON, London Bridge
Messrs. W. H. EVERETT & SON, Royal Exchange
Mr. POTTLER, Royal Exchange
Mr. BLAIR, Royal Exchange
Mr. DAVIES, 1, Finch Lane, Cornhill
Messrs. LEATHWAITE & SIMMONS, 1, Pope's Head Alley, Cornhill
Mr. R. GRAVATT, King Street, Cheapside
Mr. OWEN, 35, Little Britain
Mr. RALPH, 67, Little Britain

London, W.C.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stalls, Easton (Express side)
King's Cross, G.N.R.
St. Pancras, Mid. R.
Charing Cross
Mr. WOOD, Portsmouth Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields
Mr. BUNDOCK, St. Martin's Court, St. Martin's Lane
Mr. PERKS, 41, St. Martin's Lane

London, S.W.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stalls, Waterloo Station
(Main Line)
(Loop Line)
Victoria (L.B. & S.C.) Stn.
(L.C. & D.)
(District)
Richmond
Mr. BLACKBURN, 14, Lowndes Street, Lowndes Square
Messrs. RASTALL & SON, Eccleston Street, corner of Ebury Street
Mr. LOVELL, 149, Fulham Road
Mr. NEWBURY, 196, Fulham Road
Mr. H. S. EDWARDS, 308, Fulham Road
Messrs. H. SPORNE & SON, 270, Fulham Road
Messrs. LANGLEY, 694, King's Road
Mr. STONE, 610, King's Road
Mr. J. SUTTON, 69, Cheyne Walk, Chelsea
Mr. CHANNON, 82, Brompton Road
Mr. MONK, 9, Montpelier Road, Brompton Road

London, S.E.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, London Bridge Station (Main, S.E.R.)
London, W.
Messrs. SMITH & SON, Paddington Station.
Book Stall, Kensington
Mr. ANDREWS, 1, Bridge Street, Hammersmith
Mr. KETTON, 70, North End Road, West Kensington Station
Messrs. HOBBS & CO., 154, Earl's Court Road
Mr. BATES, 2, Station Buildings, Gloucester Road Station
Mr. HALL, 17, Bute Street, West Kensington Station

PROVINCIAL TOWNS.

Bath.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R. G.W.R.
STANFORD & MANN, New Street
Mr. ASTON, Smallbrook Street
Mr. BEACON, Pershore Street

Birmingham.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.
L. & N.W.B.
Bradford.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R. L. & Y. & G.N. Ry.
Messrs. BILLBOROUGH & KITCHINGHAM, Dale Street
Mr. W. H. CLOUGH, 28, Forster Square
Mr. HOPPER, Bridge Street
Mr. TROTTER, Cheapside

Brighton.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Bristol.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.
Carlisle.
Mr. STEWART, 36, Botchoygate, and English Street
Messrs. MUIR & CO., English Street
Messrs. CHAS. THURNHAM & SON, English Street
Messrs. MENZIES, Railway Station

Cheltenham.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.
Chester.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.
Mr. ASTON, Market Square
Mr. MOUNTFORD, Northgate Street
Mr. O. W. THOMAS, Northgate Street
Messrs. MINSHILL & MEESON, Eastgate Row
Mr. AINSWORTH, 54, Foragate Street

Cambridge.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Messrs. DEIGHTON, BELL & CO., Booksellers

Croydon.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Mr. EARLDLEY, Chester Bridge
Mr. W. DISHART, 39, Nantwich Road

Durham.

Mr. CALDCLEUGH, Junr., 6, North Street
Mr. JOHN PALMER, Saddler Street
Mrs. SLACK, North Road

Darlington.

Mr. WALKER, Railway Station
Exeter.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Queen Street

Gloucester.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.
Ipswich.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Jarrow.

Messrs. ROBINSON & CO., Ormaond Street
Keswick.

CHAPLIN'S LIBRARY
Liverpool.
Messrs. SMITH & SON, Castle Street (Wholesale)
Book Stall, Lime Street Station
Exchange
Central
Mr. McKEON, 8, Exchange Street East
Mr. WINTERBOTOM, Moorfields
Mr. PARTINGTON, Ronahaw Street

Leeds.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Wellington Street
Railway Station
Central do.
Messrs. GOODALL & SUDDICK, New Station
Mr. JOHNSON, 1, Call Street
Mr. BURNSTON, 48, Briggate, and Covered Market
Mr. CORNWALL, Upper Mill Hill
Mr. N. G. MORRISON, Bishopsgate
Mr. E. JOWETT, 51, North Street
Mr. RICHARD JACKSON, 16, Commercial Street
Mr. JAMES MILLS, 39, Bond Street

Leicester.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.
Manchester.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Depot (Wholesale)
Book Stall, Exchange Ry. Station
London Rd., L. & N.
W. B. Station
ditto, M.S. & L. R.
Station
Central Ry. Station
Victoria Ry. Station
Mr. JOHN HEYWOOD (Wholesale Newsagent)
Mr. ABEL HEYWOOD, Oldham Street
Messrs. MORRIS & CO., 42, Deansgate
Mr. WHEELER, Pall Mall
Mr. POWELL, Corporation Street

Malvern (Great).

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stalls
Newcastle-on-Tyne.
Mr. C. C. ROSS, 35, Side, Dean Street
Mr. WATMOUGH, 40, Newgate Street
Mr. J. COCHRANE, 291, Westgate Hill
Mr. J. A. DE LACY, 218A, Westgate Road
Mr. RENDER, Newgate Street
Mr. MACKEY, New Bridge Street

Nottingham.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.
Northwich.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Therpe Station

Oxford.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Messrs. WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Booksellers

Peterborough.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Preston.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Portsmouth.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Plymouth.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall (Millhay)
Reading.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Stafford.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Stockton.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Mr. J. R. WOOD, Caxton House

Southampton.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Southport.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, L. & Y. R.

Shields (North).

Mr. CLARKE, Nile Street
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S, Railway Station

Shields (South).

Mr. LAWSON, Fowler Street
Mr. LEARMOUNT, 75, King Street

Sheffield.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Victoria Station
Thirsk.
Mr. WALKER, Railway Station

Tunbridge Wells.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, S.E.R.
Warrington.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Windsor.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.
S.W.R.
Wimbledon.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

York.

Mr. BENTLEY, 63, Coney Street
Mr. GILBERTSON, Silver Street
Mr. A. W. OUTHWAITE, 35, Market Street
Mr. SAMPSON, 13, Coney Street, and Book Stall, Ry. Stn.
SCOTLAND.

Edinburgh.

Mr. ARCHIBALD, 2, Dalry Road, Haymarket
Mr. W. G. B. ARCUS, 43, Broughton Street
Mr. ELLIOTT, 17, Princes Street
Mr. FAIRGRIEVE, 7 & 9, Cockburn Street
Messrs. GRANT & SON, 107, Princes Street
Mr. GARDNER, Dundas Street
Mr. JAMES HAIG, 1, Antigua Street
Messrs. KEITH & CO., 68, Princes Street
Mr. WM. KAY, 5, Bank Street
Messrs. MOODIE BROS., 9, Antigua Street
Miss MACK, 10, Clark Street
Messrs. MENZIES & CO., Hanover Street (Wholesale)
Waverley Station (two Stalls)
Central Station (Caledonian)
Mr. MacPHAIL, 33, St. Andrew's Square
Mr. ROBINSON, 111, Leith Street
Mr. F. M. SLOAN, 19, Broughton Street
Mr. W. M. URQUHART, 46, Queen's Ferry Road

Glasgow.

Mr. BLYTHWOOD, Sauchiehall Street
Mr. WM. BARR (Wholesale), 15, Dumbarton Road
62, Sauchiehall Street
Mr. M. DICKINSON, 102, Sauchiehall Street
Mr. GRAHAM (Wholesale), 108, Eglinton Street
Mr. GRAHAM'S Book Stall, College St. Station, G. & S.W.R.
Queen Street Station
Mr. HIGGINS, 13, Stobcross Street
Mr. HOLMES (Wholesale), St. Enoch's Square
Mr. KEARNEY, High Street
Mr. HOOD, 229, Argyle Street
Mr. WM. LOVE (Wholesale), 221, Argyle Street
Messrs. MENZIES & CO. (Wholesale), 90, West Hill Street
Central Station (two Stalls)
Mr. MOORE, Charing Cross
Mr. ROBERTSON, 142, Dumbarton Road
Mr. STEWART, 147, George Street
Mrs. WALKER, 230, Dumbarton Road
Messrs. WILSON & KING (Wholesale), 83, London Road

Leith.

Mr. GEORGE ELLIOTT, 71, Elm Row, Leith Walk
Mr. CHARLES DRUMMOND, 49, Duke Street
Mr. FRASER, 174, Leith Walk
Mr. A. HAROLD, 8, Eastern Road
Mr. C. HUNTER, 79, Brunswick Street, Leith Walk
Messrs. JOHN NAYLOR & CO., 147, Great Junction Street
Lockerbie.
Messrs. MENZIES & CO., Railway Station

Stirling.

ENEAS MACKAY, 43, Murray Place
IRELAND.

Dublin.

Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville Street
AMERICA.

New York.

Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM & SONS
Preston.
Messrs. GALIGNANI, 224, Rue de Rivoli

IMPORTANT.

All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, should subscribe to the

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND

BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

ESTABLISHED 1837.

Among the many attractions of its columns the following may be mentioned:—

Literary articles (including leader on some prominent topic of the moment) announcements of forthcoming volumes, notes on current events in connection with the publishing world, reviews (often illustrated) of new books and magazines, correspondence, &c., &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of

NEW BOOKS OF THE WEEK

(the most complete list issued) giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number upwards of a thousand

OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS

are advertised for, thus affording readers an excellent opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and attention is particularly drawn to the fact that annual subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money-payments should be made.

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland ... ..         | 8s. 6d.  |
| „ Six Months ditto ditto ... ..   | 4s. 6d.  |
| „ Three Months ditto ditto ... ..   | 2s. 6d.  |
| To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage ... .. | 11s. 6d. |

NOW READY.*BOOKS of the YEAR 1897.

SIXTY-FIRST YEAR OF ISSUE OF ANNUAL CATALOGUE

THE

ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS

FOR THE YEAR 1897.

Royal 8vo. pp. over 224, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

It contains a much longer List of Works than last year's Catalogue, including an addition of some 1,400 more Titles, but the price remains the same, viz., 5s. net, cloth limp; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

“The English Catalogue” is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications.”—Daily News.

“Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day.”—Athenæum.

“We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume.”—Daily Telegraph.

“The English Catalogue of Books” is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is a source of a wide and hearty welcome.”—Scotsman.

“To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.... The entire work is, indeed, a precious record.”—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

FOUNTAIN PENS AND STYLOS

The objections to them,
and how they have been met.

Ceteris paribus everyone would rather use a fountain pen that carries its own ink, and can, therefore, be used anywhere and at any moment, in preference to an ordinary pen, which has to be dipped in the ink every minute or so.

But fountain pens have acquired a bad name from two or three general objections to them. “A fountain pen is all very well,” people say, “but it has to be carried upright, otherwise the ink comes out in your pocket; in fact, the ink spills and makes a hideous mess on the smallest provocation. By way of compensation, when you want to write, the ink retires to the barrel (if it isn't all spilled into your pocket) and refuses to emerge until the pen has been shaken and thumped until it squirts out a blot on the carpet.”

This used to be true; but the CAW PEN has met the difficulty. It does not have to be carried upright; it can be carried sideways, upside down, or in any position whatever. The ink cannot possibly spill, because it is in a hermetically closed chamber, screwed tight. There is no air-hole.

The pen can be jerked or thrown about as much as you please; it cannot spill. On the other hand, until the CAW PEN is opened for use the nib (which is a gold one of the finest quality) is immersed in the ink. Consequently it writes at once, without giving any trouble.

The CAW PEN is not merely the only fountain pen which anyone cares to use who has once seen it as a pocket pen, but it is so convenient for desk use that it supersedes all other pens whatever.

It is easily filled, and having a wide mouth does not clog with air bubbles during that operation. Prices from 12s. 6d.

“Caw pens have a reputation beyond their neighbours.”—Westminster Budget.

The objection to Stylographic Pens is that the point rarely suits the writer's hand, and cannot be adjusted.

The CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN can be adjusted in an instant. It has not all the advantages of the CAW FOUNTAIN PEN; but for people who prefer a stylo this is the best stylo on the market. Prices from 5s.

British Depot—

46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.

AN IMPORTANT NEW BOOK,
THROUGH CHINA WITH A CAMERA

By JOHN THOMSON, F.R.G.S.

100 Illustrations. One Guinea net.

“This most notable book of travel.... I should say the finest series of pictures of China ever published.”—Daily Mail.

CONSTABLE'S POPULAR EDITION OF
The WORKS of GEORGE MEREDITH.

With Frontispieces. Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

THE ORDEAL of RICHARD FEVEREL.
RHODA FLEMING.

SANDRA BELLONI.*VITTORIA.

DIANA of the CROSSWAYS. [Just published.
Others to follow at short intervals.]

SELECTED POEMS. By George Meredith.

Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

“These selected poems are a literary treasure.”—Scotsman.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SONGS of LOVE and EMPIRE. Poems by

E. NEBBIT. Crown 8vo, 6s.

“It is poetry, it is true poetry, it is poetry which must live.”

Fall Mail Gazette.

THE PUPILS of PETER the GREAT. By

R. NISBET BAIN. Frontispiece and Portraits. Demy

8vo, 318 pp., 15s. net.

“An excellent piece of historical study, sober, broad, and sympathetic in treatment, most illuminating as respects the light it throws on a dark and ill-known time and country.”—Spectator.

BY the ROARING REUSS: Idylls and

Tales of the Alps. By W. BRIDGES BIRTT. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 5s.

ADVENTURES in LEGEND: Tales of the West Highlands. By the MARQUIS of LORNE, K.T.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LAUGHTER of PETERKIN. By

FIONA MACLEOD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

“Miss Macleod's latest and most excellent piece of work.”—Spectator.

THE PRINCIPLES of LOCAL GOVERN-

MENT. By GEORGE LAURENCE GOMME, F.S.A.,

Statistical Officer to the London County Council.

Demy 8vo, 12s.

“His criticisms on the existing system show a thorough mastery of a complicated subject.”—Daily Chronicle.

2, WHITEHALL GARDENS, WESTMINSTER.

THE BLAISDELL*SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL.

Ask for the BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL at any stationer's. The BLACKLEAD PENCILS are made in 5 Grades: H.B.; H; B; H.H.; B.B.; finest Bavarian Lead, equal to the highest quality of Artists' Pencils. COLOURED CRAYON PENCILS in Blue, Red, Yellow, Green, and Black, tough and smooth, rich in colour.

HOW USED.—Start the paper with a pin or any pointed instrument—a slight pull—off it comes, and the lead pencil is sharpened. Thirty Fresh Points to every Pencil. The only wear is from use, not from whittling away or breaking the lead.

No wood chips are left on the floor, nor any dirty marking-stuff on your fingers.

If your stationer does not sell them send 1s. for set of sample pencils to—

BLAISDELL PAPER PENCIL CO., LTD.,

46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

EPPS'S COCOA.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE ON ‘FOODS AND THEIR VALUES,’ BY DR. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., &c.—“If any motives—first, of due regard for health, and second, of getting full food-value for money expended—can be said to weigh with us in choosing our foods, then I say that Cocoa (Epps's being the most nutritious) should be made to replace tea and coffee without hesitation. Cocoa is a food; tea and coffee are not foods. This is the whole science of the matter in a nutshell, and he who runs may read the obvious moral of the story.”

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1346.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

LATEST CATALOGUES.

- No. 272.—Russia and Poland. 583 nrs.
  - " 273.—Impressions of the 15th and 16th Cent. 1,399 nrs.
  - " 274.—Austria, Bohemia, Hungary, Greece, &c. 704 nrs.
  - " 277.—Islam: its History and Progress. 1,013 nrs.
  - " 278.—Geography, Travels, Americana. 710 nrs.
  - " 280.—Spanish and Portuguese Books. 733 nrs.
  - " 281.—Fide Aria. I. Periodicals & Antiquity of Middle Ages. 635 nrs.
  - " 282.—" II. Painting and Engraving. 1,250 nrs.
  - " 283.—" III. Architecture, Sculpture, Industrial Arts. 1,236 nrs.
  - " 284.—Political Economy. 1,073 nrs.
- Will be sent on application by MAARINS NUNOFF, Bookseller, The Hague (Holland).

POTTER'S CATALOGUE of New and Second-hand BOOKS (No. 119, for FEBRUARY) at reduced prices, post free. Sport and Travel a Speciality.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 66191. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

FOR THE AUTOGRAPH COLLECTOR—A NEW MANUAL by Dr. Scott, 1s. post free, 17, Crondale Road, Fulham. Autographs purchased; a large variety for sale; lists free.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. English, 10d. per 1,000 Words. French and German, in Roman characters, 1s. 3d. per 1,000. French Translated. Samples and references.—Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Misses E. & J. PERR, 425, Manston House Chambers, London, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALRYMPLE, 5, Furnival Street London, E.C.

FRENCH IN THREE MONTHS.—FRENCH IN THREE MONTHS.—DAMIENS' NEW SYSTEM. Privately or by post. Any age. Success certain. Commended by the Press.—10, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER—PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.) Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.

FOR SALE.—BARGAINS, previous to Retiring.—Funch, up to 1850, from Vol. 1, handsome half-morocco, £12 (cost £40).—Hall's Royal Gallery, 4 vols., atlas folio, £24 (cost £150).—Abbotford Scott, 12 vols., 2s. (cost £20).—Lewis's Topographical Dictionary, complete set, 7 vols., 4to, 30s. (cost £20).—Dickens's David Copperfield, first edition, 12s.—Little Dorrit, 10s. CHARLES LOW, New Street, and Baskerville Hall, Birmingham.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

QUAIN PROFESSORSHIP OF PHYSICS. This CHAIR will be VACANT by the resignation of Prof. Carey Foster at the close of the present Session. APPLICATIONS, accompanied by such Testimonials as Candidates may wish to submit, should reach the Secretary by TUESDAY, MARCH 1, 1898. Further information will be sent on application. The new Professor will enter on his duties next October. J. M. HOANCAON, M.A., Secretary.

PRIFYSGOL CYMRU.—UNIVERSITY OF WALES.

The University Court is about to proceed to the APPOINTMENT of EXTERNAL EXAMINERS for DEGREES in the following Departments for the Year 1898:—GEOLOGY (One Examiner). ENGINEERING (One Examiner). MINE SURVEYING (One Examiner). POLITICAL ECONOMY (One Examiner). Candidates for Examinerships must send in their names to the Registrar, with any attestations of their qualifications as they may think desirable, on or before Monday, March 14th, 1898. Information in regard to the work and stipends of Examiners may be obtained on application to IVOR JAMES, Registrar. Town Hall Chambers, Newport, Mon.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

EXAMINER IN POLITICAL ECONOMY. The University Court of the University of Glasgow will shortly proceed to APPOINT an ADDITIONAL EXAMINER in POLITICAL ECONOMY for DEGREES in ARTS and LAW. The appointment will be as from 1st January, 1898, to 31st December, 1899, at an annual fee of £10 10s. Candidates should lodge twenty copies of their application and testimonials with the undersigned on or before 28th February, 1898. ALAN E. CLAPPERTON, Secretary of the Court. 91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.

SIR JOHN MILLAIS' WORKS. EXHIBITION NOW OPEN, From 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—NOTICE is HEREBY GIVEN that the President and Council will proceed to ELECT, on TUESDAY, March 8th, a TURNER ANNUITY. Applicants for the Turner Annuity, which is of the value of £50, must be Artists of repute in need of aid through the unavoidable failure of professional employment, or other causes. Forms of application can be obtained by letter addressed to the SECRETARY, Royal Academy of Arts, Piccadilly, W. They must be filled in and returned on or before Saturday, March 5th. By order, FRED. A. EATON, Secretary.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.—ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS in SEPTEMBER, 1898.—SIX OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS, Three (£150, £60, and £50) in Science and Three (£100, £50, and £30) in Arts.—Particulars, and copies of Examination Papers, on application to the DEAN, Guy's Hospital, London Bridge, S.E.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.—PRELIMINARY SCIENTIFIC (M.B. Lond.) CLASSES are held throughout the year. Special instruction is given for the July Examination. Fee, 16 Guineas.

THE HARLEIAN SOCIETY, instituted in 1869

for the Publication of Inedited Manuscripts relating to Genealogy, Family History, and Heraldry. President: The Most Honourable the MARQUESS of BUTE, K.T. Entrance Fee, 10s. 6d. Annual Subscription, £1 1s. Prospectuses and full particulars of Publications already issued (65 Volumes), and Forms of Application for Membership, may be obtained on application to the Publishers, Messrs. MITCHELL & CO., 140, Wardour Street, W., or to one of the Honorary Secretaries, GEORGE J. ARBYTAKE, F.S.A., Clifton Woodhead, Brighouse, and J. P. RYLANDS, F.S.A., 2, Charlesville, Birkenhead.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways. For particulars, apply to Secretary at College.

THE SONS of Dr. SPIERS are about to Publish a SUPPLEMENT to Dr. SPIERS'S "FRENCH-ENGLISH and ENGLISH-FRENCH DICTIONARY." They would be very grateful for suggested ADDITIONS and CORRECTIONS.—Please address to Professor VICTOR SPIERS, King's College, London.

A LADY desires ENGAGEMENT as STENOGRAPHER and TYPIST (Remington). Seven years experience in literary work. Excellent references.—Address L. E., 9, Rupert Road, Bedford Park, W.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum. COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum. LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum. N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address. The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C. Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich. The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view. PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archæologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS,

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London. TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand. TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCOIS RAVENSCHROFF, Manager.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for

11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply Academy Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S LIST.

JOHN STRANGE WINTER'S NEW STORY.
At all Booksellers' and Bookstalls, in illustrated paper cover, 1s.

IN the SAME REGIMENT. By the AUTHOR of "A GAY LITTLE WOMAN."

NEW EDITION, in 1 vol., picture boards, price 2s.
JOAN and MRS. CARR. By the AUTHOR of "SHEBA."

In Illustrated paper cover, price 1s.
THE BLUE DIAMONDS: a Tale of
Ceylon. By LEILA BOUSTEAD.

POPULAR SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

At all Libraries, Booksellers', and Bookstalls.

JEAN MIDDLEMASS'S NEW NOVEL.
BLANCHE CONINGHAM'S SUR-
RENDER. By the AUTHOR of "DANDY."

ANNIE THOMAS'S NEW NOVEL.
DICK RIVERS. By the Author of "DENNIS DONNE."

MRS. LOVETT-CAMERON'S NEW NOVEL.
DEVIL'S APPLES. By the Author of
"IN a GRASS COUNTRY."

GIRLS WILL BE GIRLS. By FLORENCE WARDEN.
".....A racy-told story."—Scotsman.

A FAIR IMPOSTOR. By Alan
ST. AUSYN.
".....The developments are of an interesting kind."—Scotsman.

AT the TAIL of the HOUNDS. By Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD.
".....A lively and well-managed sporting story."—Literary World.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 14, Bedford Street, Strand.

NOW READY.

TOURISTS VADE MECUM of FRENCH
COLLOQUIAL CONVERSATION. A careful selection of every-day Phrases in Constant Use, with VOCABULARIES, TABLES, and the Exact Pronunciation of every Word. An Easy Method of acquiring a knowledge of French sufficient for all purposes for Tourists or Business Men on a Trip from London to Paris. Special attention has been devoted to the section on Cycling and Photography. Price 1s., 61 pages, fcap. 8vo, limp cloth.

THE POPULAR GERMAN READER. No. 1.

MY CHILD-WIFE. (From "David Copperfield," by Charles Dickens.) With Translation and Imitated Pronunciation, by F. HUNDEL. Deigned to facilitate the translation of English into German at sight. Price 6d., 32 pages, crown 8vo, in wrapper.

HIER UND DA: A Collection of Wit,
Humour, Satire, and Interesting Extracts, in English and German, on the same page. Price 6d., 32 pages, crown 8vo, in wrapper.

NEW SHORTHAND WORK.

BRIEF REPORTING NOTES in SHORT-
HAND. With printed key, and the matter counted and timed for testing of speed either in Shorthand or Type-writing. 61 pages, demy 8vo. Price 6d.; cloth, 1s.

SIR ISAAC PITMAN & SONS, Limited, 1, Amen-corner, London, E.C., Bath, and New York.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

THE VICTORIAN ERA SERIES.

Under the General Editorship of
J. HOLLAND ROSE, M.A.
In course of Publication in Monthly Volumes, price 2s. 6d. each.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CHARLES DICKENS:

A Critical Study.

By GEORGE GISSING,
Author of "New Grub Street," &c.

VOLUMES PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED.

JOHN BRIGHT. By C. A. Vince,
M.A., late Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge.

THE ANGLICAN REVIVAL. By J. H. OVERTON, D.D., Rector of Epworth and Canon of Lincoln.

THE RISE of DEMOCRACY. By
J. HOLLAND ROSE, M.A., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge.

The subsequent Volumes of the Series will be Published successively on the 15th of each month.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

A THEORY OF LIFE DEDUCED

FROM THE

EVOLUTION PHILOSOPHY.

By SYLVAN DREY.

34 pp., stiff wrapper.
Price One Shilling.

London: WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, W.C.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THOMAS BEST JERVIS,
Lieut.-Colonel Bombay Engineers, H.E.I.C.'s Service, Director of the Topographical and Statistical War Department. A Biography by his Son, W. P. JERVIS.
"The biographer has done his work with judgment and discretion, and has produced a work of considerable general utility and interest."—Glasgow Herald.

NEW NOVEL. In crown 8vo, price 6s.

THE MEDHURSTS OF MIN-

DALA. The Story of the Development of a Soul. By G. M. WATERHOUSE.
"The book possesses considerable force of description as well as of character delineation, which well sustains the reader's sympathetic interest."—Christian.
"Thoroughly readable, with plenty of go."—British Weekly.

NEW VOLUMES OF FAIRY TALES.

In crown 8vo, cloth, illustrated, price 6s.
ELSIE'S ADVENTURES IN
FAIRYLAND. By BEDFORD POLLARD, Author of
"The Adventures of a Grecian Hero," &c.
"A charming story. We advise all children to read it."
Pall Mall Gazette.
"Will form an admirable gift."—Bazaar.
"Will attract both boys and girls. The volume is well illustrated."—Dundee Advertiser.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. Illustrated.

PRINCES THREE and SEEK-

ERS SEVEN. Four Fairy Tales by MARY COL-
QUHOUN. Illustrated by EMILY BARNARD.
"Full of incident, marvellous and otherwise. . . .
Will be eagerly read."—Daily News.
"Four capital fairy stories, which might be read with pleasure by people of any age."—Standard.

In crown 8vo, paper cover, price is.

THE HEART of a SERVANT.

By J. E. A. BROWN, Author of "The Heart of a Girl,"
"The First Four Things," &c.
"Abounds in apt, striking, and edifying thoughts and comments, which cannot fail to render it valuable and interesting to a wide circle of readers."
Family Churchman.
"Sets forth admirably the honourable position and great privileges of domestic service."—Church Bells.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

ZANZIBAR AND PEMBA.

TRAVELS in the COASTLANDS of BRITISH EAST AFRICA and the ISLANDS of
ZANZIBAR and PEMBA.

By W. W. A. FITZGERALD, F.R.G.S., F.R.C.I.
With 15 Maps, 117 Illustrations, and Appendices.
Demy 8vo, 28s. [This day.]

NEW BOOK BY FRANCES MACNAB. BRITISH COLUMBIA FOR SETTLERS.

By FRANCES MACNAB,
Author of "On Veldt and Farm."
With 3 Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Shortly.]

WITH UPWARDS OF 100 ILLUSTRATIONS.

THE BUILDING of the EMPIRE:

The Story of England's Growth from Elizabeth to Victoria. By ALFRED THOMAS STORV, Author of
"The Life of John Linnell," &c. With Portraits of Queen Elizabeth and Victoria in Photogravure, and upwards of 100 Portraits and Illustrations. 2 vols., large crown 8vo, 14s.

The World says: "An important and interesting historical work is published by Messrs. Chapman & Hall, under the title 'The Building of the Empire.' The author traces the growth and development of the Empire from the time when England, shut off from dominion on the European continent, began to extend her power over the wider seas. The book is not due to the inspiration of the Diamond Jubilee, for it has occupied Mr. Storr for several years, and the collecting of the portraits and illustrations from contemporary prints has entailed long and laborious research. The two volumes cover the period from Elizabeth to Victoria."

THE GADSHILL EDITION OF CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

Edited by ANDREW LANG.

VOLUME 22.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS. With Inroduction and Notes by ANDREW LANG. And 10 new Photogravure Illustrations by Charles Green.
Square crown 8vo, 6s. [In a few days.]

* * The illustrations for this volume have been specially drawn for the Gadshill Edition by Charles Green, and have not appeared in any other edition.

VOLUMES ALREADY PUBLISHED IN THIS EDITION.

|                               |  |
|-------------------------------|--|
| PICKWICK PAPERS2 vols.    | OLD CURIOSITY SHOP.2 vols.             |
| OLIVER TWIST.2 vols.      | BARNABY RUDGE. 2 vols.                     |
| NICHOLAS NICKLEBY.2 vols. | DAVID COPPERFIELD.2 vols.              |
| MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT.2 vols. | BLEAK HOUSE. 2 vols.                       |
| DOMBEY and SON.2 vols.    | CHRISTMAS BOOKS.LITTLE DORRIT. 2 vols. |
|                               | A TALE of TWO CITIES.                      |

The Guardian says: "The Gadshill Edition is all that the lover of Dickens can desire. It will be more complete than any that have appeared. . . . It is handsome in form, easy to hold, and pleasant to read. The utmost pains have been taken to restore the illustrations to their original freshness, and, if we may judge from the first two volumes, these pains have had the success they deserved. Mr. Andrew Lang promises an introduction to each work. No one is so well fitted for the work as Mr. Lang."

THE CENTENARY EDITION OF THOMAS CARLYLE'S WORKS.

Edited by H. D. TRAILL.

VOLUME XVI.

THE HISTORY of FREDERICK the
GREAT. Volume V. With 2 Portraits. Square crown
8vo, 3s. 6d. [In a few days.]

VOLUMES ALREADY PUBLISHED IN THIS EDITION.

|   |   |
|---|---|
| SARTOR RESARTUS.FRENCH REVOLUTION.3 vols. | CROMWELL'S LETTERSand SPEECHES. 3 vols.               |
| HEROES and HEROWORSHIP.PAST and PRESENT.  | LIFE of STEBLING.FREDERICK the GREAT.Vols. I.-IV. |

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "In the matter of printing, paper, and binding nothing is left to be desired, while to add to the value of the production there is an admirable critical introduction from the pen of Mr. H. D. Traill. It is a handsome edition."

CHAPMAN & HALL, LTD., LONDON.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.

JUST PUBLISHED.

At all LIBRARIES, BOOKSTALLS, and BOOKSELLERS'.

ANDREE AND HIS BALLOON

By H. LACHAMBRE and A. MACHURON
(who accompanied the Expedition to Spitzbergen).

ANDREE AND HIS BALLOON

With Coloured Frontispiece and 40 Full-Page Illustrations from Photographs.

With a short Biography of ANDREE.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

ANDREE AND HIS BALLOON

THE KINGDOM of the YELLOW ROBE—SIAM.

By ERNEST YOUNG, late of the Education Department, Bangkok, Siam. With many Illustrations by E. A. NORBURY, and from Photographs. Large demy 8vo, 15s.

DEBATEABLE CLAIMS (Essays on Secondary Education). By JOHN CHARLES TARVER, Author of "Some Observations of a Foster Parent." Crown 8vo, 6s.

THROUGH CHINA WITH A CAMERA

By JOHN THOMSON, F.R.G.S. Fully Illustrated. Fcap. 4to, One Guinea net.

"I should say the finest set of pictures of China ever published."—Daily Mail.

ADVENTURES in LEGEND (Historical Tales of the West Highlands). By the MARQUIS of LORNE, K.T. Crown 8vo, 6s. Illustrated.

The WORKS of GEORGE MEREDITH.

In CONSTABLE'S POPULAR 6s. EDITION. With Frontispieces.

DIANA of the CROSWAYS. [Just published

RHODA FLEMING; VITTORIA SANDRA BELLONI; RICHARD FEVEREL

Others at short intervals.

SELECTED POEMS. By George MEREDITH. 6s. net.

NEW POEMS. By Francis Thompson. 6s. net.

A NEW VOLUME OF POEMS BY E. NESBIT,

SONGS of LOVE and EMPIRE.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"FIDELIS," and other Poems. By C. M. GEMMER. Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. net.

"The beautiful poem, 'A Reverie,' in whose tender pathos and stately movement we find an abiding charm."—Literature.

BY the ROARING REUSS: Idylls of the Alps. By W. BRIDGES BIRTT. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NEW VOLUME in CONSTABLE'S HISTORICAL NOVELS SERIES, Edited by LAURENCE GOMME, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., is

WESTWARD HO! By Charles KINGSLEY.

ALREADY PUBLISHED IN THIS SERIES.

HAROLD. By Lord Lytton.

THE CAMP of REFUGE. By Charles MACFARLANE.

THE PUPILS of PETER the GREAT.

By R. NISBET BAIN. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

THE LAUGHTER of PETERKIN. By FIONA MACLEOD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ODD STORIES. By Frances Forbes-ROBERTSON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

2, WHITEHALL GARDENS, WESTMINSTER.

DEIGHTON BELL & CO.

CAMBRIDGE

Just published, crown 4to, 6s.

THE PSALMS

In Three Collections.

Translated with Notes by

E. G. KING, D.D.

Part I. FIRST COLLECTION (Pss. I.-XLI). With Preface by the BISHOP of DURHAM.

Extracts from Preface by the Bishop of Durham.

"The Psalter is as inexhaustible as the aspirations of the human soul, and I cannot but think that Dr. King has made an original and suggestive contribution to the understanding of it..... The notes require careful study, but, if I may speak from my own experience, they will repay it..... They constantly remind me of Bengel's pregnant sentences—and I know no higher praise—which point to a conclusion rather than develop it..... Dr. King appears to me, as far as I may presume to judge, to have a natural sympathy with the characteristics of Hebrew thought and of Hebrew poetry..... It will be seen from what I have said that the book, while based upon a critical foundation, is especially adapted for meditative and, in the fullest sense of the word, devotional reading. It is this which gives it a peculiar claim on our attention at the present time."

SEVENTH THOUSAND.
PASTOR PASTORUM

OR,

The Schooling of the Apostles by our Lord.

By the Rev. H. LATHAM,
Master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d.

"There are not many books of which it can be said that they deserve to be read and read again, but 'Pastor Pastorum' belongs to this select class."—Saturday Review.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

A SERVICE of ANGELS.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Originality of treatment and freshness of style make Mr. Latham's 'Service of Angels' a delightful book."—Church Quarterly Review.

A PAPER ON THE FOUNDATIONS OF PROJECTIVE GEOMETRY.

(Read before the Aristotelian Society, Dec. 13, 1897.)

By E. T. DIXON, M.A.

Demy 8vo, 2s. net.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

DCC EXERCISES

Including Hints for the Solution of all the Questions in CHOICE and CHANCE.

With a Chapter on the Summation of Certain Series, and a Gresham Lecture on the Applications of the Laws of Chance.

BY

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITWORTH, M.A.,
Late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

CHOICE AND CHANCE

An Elementary Treatise on Permutations, Combinations, and Probability, with 640 Exercises. Fourth Edition. Price 6s.

Price 7s. 6d. net.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY CALENDAR

FOR THE

ACADEMICAL YEAR 1897-1898.

Containing New Regulations for the Theological Tripos, the Moral Sciences Tripos, the Historical Tripos, and New Regulations for Degrees in Music.

Cambridge: DEIGHTON BELL & CO.
London: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S

NEW BOOKS.

READY THIS DAY.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE.

Translated with a Commentary.

By J. G. FRAZER, M.A., LL.D. (Glasgow), Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

In 6 vols. Illustrated with about 30 Maps and Plans, 4 Photogravure Plates, and upwards of 200 Engravings in the Text. 8vo. £8 6s. net.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s. net.

F R A N C E.

By J. C. E. BODLEY.

Vol. I. The Revolution and Modern France, &c.
Vol. II. The Parliamentary System.

TIMES.—"A work to be consulted by all who would understand the forces and movements in French life..... a work which is the worthy outcome of well-spent years and which will take rank with Mr. Bryce's 'America' and Sir D. M. Wallace's 'Russia,' among the few books which enable nations to understand nations."

SPECTATOR.—"We have in this work a most lucid, able, impartial and comprehensive treatment of the political situation in France..... A work which may be compared with Taine's study of England..... a competent and genuine survey by a trained political thinker of the France of to-day..... it presents through every page a most luminous exposition, not alone of politics, but of the temper, feeling, and genius of the French people."

STANDARD.—"His book is one from which it is hard to part, not only from the deep interest of the subject, but also because of its great literary merits: for it is clear in thought, lucid in expression, and admirable in style."

NEW NOVEL BY ROLF BOLDREWOOD.

PLAIN LIVING: a Bush Idyll.

By ROLF BOLDREWOOD, Author of "Robbery under Arms," "The Miner's Right" &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Fifth Edition. Extra crown 8vo, 12s. 6d.

A HISTORY of the INDIAN

MUTINY, and of the Disturbances which accompanied it among the Civil Population. By T. RICE HOLMES. Fifth Edition, Revised throughout, and slightly Enlarged. With 5 Maps and 6 Plans.

ATHENÆUM.—"May be accepted without scruple as a standard authority..... Is worthy of a warm welcome. It is convenient in form, and the maps and plans are excellent."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"Mr. Holmes's narrative is as interesting as it is instructive, and we might quote passages after passage as specimens of his quietly effective style."

THE GLOBE CHAUCER.

Edited by ALFRED W. POLLARD,
H. FRANK HEATH, MARK H. LIDDELL, and W. S. McCORMICK.

Crown 8vo, uncut edges, 3s. 6d.; Prize Edition, in full gilt back and top, 3s. 6d.

GLOBE.—"Much time, labour, and skill have been bestowed upon the volume, and the result is a cheap, handy, and trustworthy presentation of Chaucer's Works which will hold the field, we may be sure, for many a year to come."

NOW READY, 5 vols., in Box, 12s. 6d.

TENNYSON'S DRAMATIC

WORKS. Miniature Edition. Vol. I. Queen Mary. Vol. II. Harold. Vol. III. The Cup; the Falcon. Vol. IV. Becket. Vol. V. Promise of May; Foresters.

NEW BOOK BY THE LATE LEWIS CARROLL.

THREE SUNSETS, and other

Poems. By LEWIS CARROLL. With Twelve Fairy-fancies by E. GERTRUDE THOMSON. Fcap. 4to, cloth extra, gilt edges, 4s. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

CONTENTS.

|   | PAGE    |
|---|---------|
| REVIEWS:  |         |
| Twenty-one Minor Poets                                | 193     |
| Decadent, Mystic, Catholic                            | 196     |
| Heroes, Ancient and Modern                            | 198     |
| Mr. Justin McCarthy's "Gladstone"                     | 199     |
| Crazy Arithmetic                                      | 199     |
| BRIEFER MENTION                                       | 199     |
| FICTION SUPPLEMENT                                    | 201-204 |
| NOTES AND NEWS  | 205     |
| SIR THOMAS BROWNE                                     | 208     |
| WHAT THE PEOPLE READ: X., AN AMBASSADOR OF COMMERCE   | 209     |
| THE LONDON OF THE WRITERS: VI., THE COCKNEY SENTIMENT | 209     |
| PARIS LETTER  | 210     |
| THE WEEK  | 211     |
| THE BOOK MARKET                                       | 212     |
| DRAMA   | 218     |
| CORRESPONDENCE  | 213     |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED                                 | 214     |

REVIEWS.

TWENTY-ONE MINOR POETS.

A FEW weeks ago, when our shelf whereon the productions of the song-smiths of the day are stacked would hold no more, it occurred to us to give these volumes the attention that memoirs and books about cathedrals receive. So we emptied the shelf and the slim volumes were read. We found plenty of fluent, cultured, melodious verse—plenty of little birds with agreeable twitters, but no larks. The result of our labour is below. Something is quoted from each songster. We offer you, as it were, a slice from the breast. If the taste is to your palate, there is more of the bird for the asking.

By Severn Sea. By T. Herbert Warren. (Murray.)

THE President of Magdalen belongs to the reflective school of poetry. His verse is quiet, reserved, urbane; every syllable has been carefully weighed; every epithet tested; and the file has gone over all again and again. Hence we have a matured volume, as excellent as study and pains can make it. Mr. Warren certainly does not sing because he must, but because he likes so, and here are the fruits of his scholarly enjoyment. We like the book not a little. It reflects the kindly courteous temperament of a lover of good literature, of the best literary traditions, and of the West of England. There is much that we would willingly quote, but we must confine ourselves to these stanzas from his address to the author of Lorna Doone:

"Prose poet of the fabled West,
Ere school and railway had begun
To fuse our shires and tongues in one,
And equalise the worst and best.

While Devon vowels fluted yet
By Dart and Lynn their mellow length,
While flourished still in Saxon strength
The consonants of Somerset.

Your Exmoor epic fixed the lines
That lingered on by combe and tor,
And in the hollow vale of Oare
You found a matter for your muse!

The brigands' den, the prisoned bride,
The giant yeoman's hero mould,
Who fought and garrulously told
The Iliad of his country side:

You bade them live and last for us
And for our heirs, as caught erewhile
The Doric of his rocky isle
Lives in your loved Theocritus."

Selected Poems from the Works of the Hon. Roden Noel. With a Biographical and Critical Essay by Percy Addleshaw. (Elkin Mathews.)

"His great contemporaries—Tennyson and Browning—hailed him gladly," says Mr. Addleshaw; adding, "I, for one, am content to abide by their verdict, as Noel himself would have been." No doubt! Although the great world of small contemporaries did not hail Mr. Noel particularly gladly, those who read poetry (some call them the "fit and few") must agree that there was something of the poet in him. Moreover, he was sincere, and he loved nature, and he loved children. As with Tennyson, his best work flowered from a great grief. The death of his little son produced A Little Child's Monument, his most enduring claim to remembrance. This may not be immortal verse, but it touches:

"What is the grey world, darling,
What is the grey world
Where the worm is curled, darling,
The death worm is curled?
They tell me of the spring, dear!
Do I want the spring?
Will she waft upon her wing, dear,
The joy-pulse of her wing,
Thy songs, thy blossoming,
O my little child!

I am lying in the grave, love,
In thy little grave,
Yet I hear the wind rave, love,
And the wild wave!
I would lie asleep, darling,
With thee lie asleep,
Unhearing the world weep, darling,
Little children weep!
O my little child!"

Rhymes of Ironquill. Selected and Arranged by J. A. Hammerton. (George Redway.)

"IRONQUILL" is known to the postman as the Honourable Eugene F. Ware. His home is Topeka, Kansas; he is an attorney and politician; and in the words of Dr. John Clark Redpath, "as a publicist and man of affairs he is second to none" of the leaders of the American Commonwealth. In his leisure Mr. Ware writes serious and comic verse, a volume of which is now offered to English readers for the first time. Its straightforward vigour is its greatest recommendation. "Ironquill" knows his mind and expresses it as forcibly and concisely as he is able. He can be both dignified and familiar, sonorous and frolicsome. He can write thus:

"FEAR YE HIM.

I fear Him not, nor yet do I defy.
Much could He harm me, cared He but to try.

Much could He frighten me, much do me ill,
Much terrify me, but—He never will.

The soul of justice must itself be just;
Who trembles most betrays the most distrust.

So, plunging in life's current deep and broad,
I take my chances, ignorant—unawed."

And he can write thus:

"LOVELY WOMAN.

And as around our manly neck she throws
Her dimpled arms with artless unconcern,
And kisses us and asks us to be hern,
And pats us on the jaw, do you suppose
That we say 'No,' grow frightened on the spot,
And faint away? Well, we should reckon not.

Young man, come West! you've got a lot to learn."

Ironquill's verses are unequal, but the best are of sound workmanship, and have in an unusual degree qualities of good sense, sympathy, and dry humour.

Love's Fruition. By Alfred Gurney, M.A. (Longmans, Green & Co.)

IN a former book Mr. Gurney, vicar of S. Barnabas, Pimlico, attempted "to expound and glorify friendship." Here his theme is the "marriage mystery," its marvels and meanings. His verse is of excellent intention, and that is all. The vicar of S. Barnabas was happy in his marital relations; but he is no poet, and despite his slim search-light of song, the "marriage-mystery" remains for us unsolved; but he is modest, and if his muse does not arouse enthusiasm, it is a well-behaved muse. Here is a specimen:

"To love aright is to enhance Life's loveliest significance;
What shall the gathered harvest be
When hearts embrace eternally."

Ephemer. By J. M. Cobbett. (Oxford: Alden & Co.)

MR. COBBETT is one of those poets who are inspired by EVENTS and PROMINENT PERSONS. This is the opening of Mr. Cobbett's sonnet to the Czar:

"New God be with you, noble Czar. Our land
Thou leavest for a gayer.

And this the beginning of his address to Lord Rosebery:

"My lord, if but for thy most honest word,
True Englishmen will honour thee this day."

And this à propos "a certain London firm" who supplied the Transvaal with arms:

"Oh, England! Curse this hour, cover thy head!
Where is thine honour fled?"

But the poem by which Mr. Cobbett would no doubt prefer to be judged is that called simply "Passion." Here is an extract. We are sorry for the lady:

"Look upon my face,
Into the eyes that hunger to meet thine:
Eyes blazing with a brightness, not of wine,
But Love's fierce fire:

And note therein this sacred passion's trace
And mad desire!

The mad desire of a soul deep-stirr'd,
Who finds in thee his Heaven or his Hell,
And in thy slightest frown his funeral knell,
Making dry sobs

Choke, ere 'tis spoken, each tumultuous word
Thro' which Love throbs.

And having seen and heard, then, if thou canst,
Put calmly by a Love that sues in vain :
Vex'd by a little trick of scarce-felt pain
Turn and depart !
With this proud trophy be thy fame enhanced—
My murder'd heart !”

A Vision of England, and other Poems. By John Rickards Mozley. (R. Bentley & Son.)

MR. MOZLEY'S muse is patriotic. The Vision of England fills over twenty pages, and extends from the period when “our mother earth of yore did sink from fiery essence into sleep of stone” down to the time of Darwin. Here is an average specimen. Mr. Mozley is addressing England—

“How came it thou wast torn from Europe's strand
In ancient days? The Atlantic, surging strong
Between the mounts o'er which th' archangel's hand
Once held its mighty guard, as told in song,
In moon-persuaded currents swept along,
And smote on Beachy Head with gathering roar :
Then, straitened in his channel, piled the throng
Of waters high, and, like a lion, tore
The Dover isthmus through, and reached the German shore.”

The book is dedicated to the Queen. With the sentiment of the last two lines we heartily concur :

“May thou and thine go through the open door
And hear ‘Well done!’ and join the heavenly choir.”

Songs of Flying Hours. By Dr. E. W. Watson. (Philadelphia: H. T. Coates & Co.)

We can imagine this volume being welcome in a sick-room. Dr. Watson has wide sympathies, a list of subjects that range from the “Song of Brahma” to “Bacilli,” and a facility for melodious verse which is rather agreeable. A great poet? Oh, dear, no! But a minor poet upon whom we are disposed to smile. “I will go down to the Land of Sleeping” is pretty; and this, called “At Last,” may please some :

“I come, O heart so true,
At last to thee.
All others fail,
And, wan and pale
With the rude winds
The world has showered on me,
I come for rest to thee.

Down at thy feet
I lay the sins of years;
I claim no mercy
In my bitter psalm,
But thy blest tears,
Falling upon me like the gentle rain,
Free me from fears.

O heart that never tires,
O heart that never fails,
Ever forgives, nothing requires,
Tho' I have wronged thee sore,
My tired head I rest
Upon thy breast,
And roam no more.”

The Child of the Bondwoman, and Other Verses.
By Jean Carlyle Graham. (David Nutt.)

MRS. GRAHAM writes verse with some power; she has plenty of imagination, and plenty of words. But she is too ambitious. In her longest of these poems, “The Child of the Bondwoman,” she attacks the difficult theme of a girl's tumult of soul on discovering the shame of her birth. The result is a poem which is too exclamatory, too obviously wrought up. Two other poems, “A Dream of Death and Life,” and “In the Beginning was the Word,” are open to the same criticism. But we like Mrs. Graham's “Three Legends from the Pyrenees.” The first tells how Christ appeared, kneeling in prayer, to some goatherds. We quote the last four stanzas of this moving little ballad :

“With staves they beat His patient back,
With stones His flesh they tore,
With taunting words His ears they stung,
And then set on the more ;
They gave themselves no time to note
The amazing love His dear eyes wore.

Then God the Father from His throne
In might arose and frown'd.
A darkness spread. The sun sank, dead.
Jagg'd darts the mountain crown'd.
An icy breath of wrath sped forth
And wrapt the goatherds round.

Our Lord stretch'd out to them His hands—
The goatherds all dismay'd
Fell down upon their trembling knees
And cross'd their breasts and pray'd.
He raised them and He led them Home
In shining garments all array'd.

No more yon starlit village street
Their clanking goat-bells heard ;
No more the golden mestura
These homely goatherds stirr'd.
On Nethon 'neath the time-long snow
Their bones await God's Final Word.”

Rip Van Winkle. By William Akerman.
(Bell & Sons.)

THE title-poem is a dramatic version in rhyme of the old legend, well enough arranged to make a very entertaining play at a school breaking-up. It has, indeed, much spirit. The Poems and Lyrics that follow, though unimportant and not conspicuous for depth or novelty of thought, are pleasant too. This fragment of a “Viking's Song” is among the best of them :

“Now skall to the Vikings, the Vikings so bold,
So fearless in battle, so famous of old,
Sun-taun'd are our faces, our locks are of gold ;

Ahoi, my bold Vikings, Ahoi !

We plunder the noble, we plunder the priest,
We rob the fat abbot to furnish our feast,
There's no fare so fine as the convent-fed beast,

Ahoi, my bold Vikings, Ahoi !

So now slack the ropes, turn the sails to the wind,
And sweep o'er the swan's bath more fortunes
to find,

The world is before us, and nothing behind,
Ahoi, my bold Vikings, Ahoi !”

Drift Wood. By H. M. Burnside. (Hutchinson & Co.)

It may have been noticed by those that receive Christmas cards that Miss Burnside has succeeded the late Frances Ridley Havergal as the favourite poet for Christmas quotations. According to the little preface to this volume, Miss Burnside has been making songs for many years, and there is, doubtless, a large number of persons who will be glad of this collected edition of her kindly writings. That she cannot hear the music of her own songs adds, says Miss Carey, who introduces the volume, a deeper pathos to their rhythm. The poems are very gentle, slender little messages. We need not say more. This—“English Daisies”—is pretty and representative :

“We were drawing very near,
And the cliffs shone white and clear,
And the little boats rowed past us from the strand,
When a host of flowers sweet
Lighted softly at my feet,
Like a blessing and a welcome from the land.
English daisies—nothing more—
From some meadow—on the shore,
But I felt my eyes grow wet with happy tears.
I had seen rare flowers bloom
In the fragrant forest gloom,
Where the orient palm its plummy summit rears,
While I wandered far away,
For many a weary day,
From my cottage in a sunny English lane,
But those daisies fresh and sweet
Came my longing eyes to greet,
Like a blessing and a welcome home again.”

Lays and Legends of England. By M. C. Tyndall. (J. Baker & Son.)

MR. TYNDALL is a patriot, and he would have us all patriots too; which is an excellent ambition. Hence his songs and ballads of the glory of the Navy and the Army, and his joy in the West Country. There is no love of land like your West Countryman's. A Diamond Jubilee Ode very suitably opens the volume. But for technique we think that the hunting song from which the following stanzas are taken is more satisfactory than the patriotic verse. It has swing and spirit of its own; whereas the bulk of the book is laudable in intention, but not spontaneous or distinguished. Here is Mr. Tyndall, mounted on Pegasus, all ready for the chase :

“Not a cloud or a care on the spirit can lurk,
On a rattling good horse settling down to his work,
Who the stiffest of fences was ne'er known to shirk ;
’Tis the sport of all sports, I contend.
When the ruck has tailed off, to be in the first flight,
With the pick of the field, and the hounds
well in sight,
Sixty minutes with never a check going well,
And then, just as the pace is beginning to tell,
With a kill in the open to end !”

A Tale from Boccaccio. By Arthur Coles Armstrong. (Constable & Co.)

MR. ARMSTRONG is a correct, if not impassioned, practitioner in verse. The title-poem is the longest; but it is machine-made—an epithet which, indeed, applies to most of Mr. Armstrong's poetry. The machine, it is true, is well-oiled and accurate; but a machine none the less. We like the poet best in the following lyric :

“DEATH'S SLEEP.

“I know where violets live,
Ere yet they reach the sun ;
And who doth roses give
Ere summer is begun.
And when the shadows fall,
The silver stars I see ;
I have a name for all,
And all are known to me.

When leaves are dead and scree,
They fall upon my head,
And keep me dry and warm
Within my earthly bed.

I am so still and warm—
Laid in a quiet sleep;
Oh! wherefore dost thou cry?
And wherefore dost thou weep?"

A Window in Lincoln's Inn. By Addison M'Leod. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

MR. M'LEOD diversifies rather good sonnets with some of the worst blank verse we have ever seen. This is a specimen line:

"Higher than Watkin's Tower at Wembley Park;"

this is another:

"And No. 6 is always in arrears;"

and then one more:

"Only we spell it with a capital C."

Such remarks had best be put direct into prose. The book is the product of a critical mind that has observed and thought. It is not constructive; but the workmanship is left. Here is a fair sonnet:

Not in a dark cathedral, where the knees
Press velvet; and the lips from cups of gold
Drink precious wine; and endlessly o'er-told
One long dark stream of muttered mysteries
Sinks into ears half heeding Not from these Drink I God's Spirit, but where mountains bold

Rise in disdain; and tempests, wintry cold,
Cut out the heart of man's infirmities.
There, with a jut of rock for altar rail,
With bitter bread and rough and eager wine,

On peaks that only hardiest feet have trod,
Spirits that in the valley droop and fail,
Turn to their Maker, with a touch divine,
To take the Sacrament ordained of God."

Out Back by the Angels. By the Rev.
Frederick Langbridge. (Cassell & Co.)

We were minded to describe Mr. Langbridge in a phrase, we should call him the devotional Dagonet. His ballads have the same sentimental basis, but there is more of poetry en route. They are always homely, and often humorous and pathetic, the rhymes are simple and plentiful, and the metre is musical. Here is a part of "Doctor Dan's Secret":

"As they lounge at ease, and toast their knees,
The host, with a laugh, will say,
My kingdom's small, but over it all
I reign with a despot's sway.
No serious dame may freeze my joke
With a glance of her awful eye,
Nor cough rebuke from a cloud of smoke,
Nor put the decanter by.
Feel in my heart, says Doctor Dan,
For that poor white slave, the married man."

The Enchanted River. By Augustus Ralli.
Digby, Long & Co.)

MR. RALLI can be a bad poet. He can write this—

"Had a friend—a lady friend, I mean—
Whose taste for poetry was much developed"—

But certainly the piece from which these lines are taken is the worst in the book. In other lines he is a quiet and correct versifier, who, having little to say, says it as delicately as he can. He is at his best in the translation of Moschus' "Lament for Bion." Here are the closing lines:

"O! if I could, as Orpheus did of yore,
Odysseus too and Heracles before,
I also unto Pluto's home would go
To hear if thou art singing still below.
But now some sweet Sicilian music play,
Sing to Persephone some pastoral lay;
For she, too, was a fair Sicilian maid
And in the fertile fields of Enna played.
Full well of old she knew the Dorian strain,
Not unrewarded shall thy song remain;
And as to Orpheus, when he touched the lyre,
She gave Eurydice his sole desire,
So yet it may be granted unto thee
To seek once more thy native mountains free.
If in my pipe there lurked the magic power,
To Pluto would I sing this self-same hour."

Song and Thought. By Richard Yates
Sturges. (George Rodway.)

THERE is more song than thought in Mr. Sturges' twitterings. Garden lore and linnets, and falling leaves and broken notes, are the themes beloved of his correct but fragile muse. Here is a bit of Love's philosophy:

"Why is old love just like new love?
Because the only love is true love;
And though years may pass away,
Love has one sweet summer day.

Why is new love just like old love?
Because true love is still untold love;
And though time in love be sped,
All the best remains unsaid."

Pan: A Collection of Lyrical Poems. By Rose Haig Thomas. (Bliss, Sands & Co.)

MISS THOMAS has a gift; and she loves nature with a youthful and abounding love, not looking beyond, but revelling in all its manifestations—its primordial tumults and its finished daisy. In her first poem, "Nature," Miss Thomas tells in blank verse the story of evolution to the birth of human speech. Here is her picture of primitive man becoming articulate:

"The brute still dominant,
In silence yet he thought
While ages rolled.
Then his intelligence
Opened a spanless gulf
'Twixt him and other kind,
He struck a flint on flint,
Quick caught the spark,
And breathed it into flame!
Still silent, still no voice,
Save the wild cry of war,
Or wooing tones of love,
Until the dumb begat
A man articulate,
And from his Being sprung
A race of loosened tongues,
The silver sound of speech
Flooded a silent world."

At the Gates of Song: Sonnets. By Lloyd Mifflin. (Boston: Estes & Lauriat.)

THESE hundred and fifty sonnets have poetic feeling, and are technically good. Some weigh the large issues of life; others convey literary appreciations; not a few are gracefully trivial. Here is a sonnet inspired by "An old Venetian Wine Glass":

"Daughter of Venice, fairer than the moon!
From thy dark casement leaning, half divine,
And to the lutes of love that low repine
Across the midnight of the hushed lagoon
Listening with languour in a dreamful swoon—

On such a night as this thou didst entwine
Thy lily fingers round this glass of wine,
And clasped thy climbing lover—none too soon.

Thy lover left, but ere he left thy room
From this he drank, his warm lips at the brim;
Thou kissed it as he vanished in the gloom;
That kiss because of thy true love for him
Long, long ago when thou wast in thy bloom—
Hath left it ever rosy round the rim.

Songs of Liberty. By Robert Underwood
Johnson. (The Century Co.)

LIKE Tom Moore, Mr. Johnson sings by turn the love of country and the love of woman, and the regrets which attend both. His opening "Apostrophe to Greece," "begun on the steps of the Parthenon, and published in the New York Independent" (cause and effect!), is poetically conceived—but it is not thrilling. The brightest piece in the volume is "An Irish Love Song":

"In the years about twenty
(When kisses are plenty)
The love of an Irish lass fell to my fate—
So winsome and sightly,
So saucy and sprightly,
The priest was a prophet that christened her
Kate.

Poems. By Henry D. Muir. (Chicago.)

MR. MUIR'S book bears no publisher's name. The verses inside it are not, on the whole, such as would attract a publisher. They are full of the fine phrasings of the budding, imitative, and entirely unpromising singer. Mr. Muir is at his best in the one humorous piece we find in his volume. It is called "Literary Musings.":

"Corked up in Memory's bottle,
I've gems from Aristotle;
I have gone through Homer's epics and have stuck my nose in Plato;
I have formed a good idea
Of Euripides' 'Medea,' Aristophanes, Æschylus, and Smith on 'The Potato.'

Sappho, Ovid, Virgil, Horace,
And many a Grecian chorus,
Are jumbled up together with Josh Billings,
Twain, and Nye;
While Shakespeare, Scott, and Dickens,
And 'The Way to Raise Young Chickens,'
All mix within my head to form a literary pie.

But ne'er in verse or story,
Nor in the drama's glory,
Nor in the bright romantic tale, nor in the briny yarn,
Have I found that satisfaction
Which I drew in youth's abstraction
From the blood-and-thunder novel that I read behind the barn."

The Starless Crown, and Other Poems. By J. L. H. (Elliot Stock.)

VERSES entitled "Gone to Grandmamma's," disarm the critic. Nor is anything to be said either for or against lines such as these on a golden-crested wren's nest-building:

"Brisk as ever,
Quick and clever,
Nest is snug and tight;
Twelve wee beauties
Bring new duties,
Work from morn till night."

DECADENT, MYSTIC, CATHOLIC.

La Cathédrale. Par J. K. Huysmans.
(Paris: P. V. Stock.)

This long-expected book is out at last, and bids fair to attract as much attention as its predecessors. Although not published till the beginning of the present month, it is already in its seventh edition, and arrangements have been made for its appearance in English dress. It is, however, so unlike any ordinary novel in form and conception that it is hardly possible to appreciate it without some acquaintance with M. Huysmans' own career and with his earlier works.

Joris Karl Huysmans is one of a distinguished family of artists, for some generations domiciled in Paris, and a descendant of Huysman de Malines, whose works belong to the Flemish school of the seventeenth century. Born in the Bohemian life of the capital, he early preferred literature to design, and made his bow to the public at the age of twenty-six with a small volume of poems only too plainly inspired by Baudelaire's Fleurs du Mal. Later, he became a disciple of Zola, and published, in 1876, his first novel, Marthe, wherein he describes the life of a courtesan of the lower class with such pronounced realism that the book had to be published in Brussels. Then followed in quick succession Les Sœurs Vatar, the history of two factory girls; En Ménage, a study in divorce, and several other works of which it is only necessary to mention here A Rebours ("The Wrong Way"). In this, surely one of the most tedious books ever written, M. Huysmans describes with wearisome minuteness the vagaries of a debauchee of good family, who, worn out with excess at the age of thirty, buys with the sale of his ancestral property a house in the suburbs of Paris, and sets seriously to work to console himself, like Pope's Sporus, with the pleasures of taste. So exquisite is his sensibility that he secludes himself not only from society, but from Nature herself, and lives only by artificial light in rooms decorated in extraordinary colours, fitted instead of windows with aquariums filled with coloured water and clockwork fish, and perfumed by an apparatus on which he can compose "symphonies" of scent instead of sound. Had M. Huysmans ever shown a spark of humour in any of his writings, we might here suspect him of a satire after the fashion of The Colonel or Patience upon the aesthete of his time. But the book is inspired by a different motive, and when its hero is dragged back by his doctors to Paris with a digestion ruined by a dietary of liqueurs, strange teas and other nastinesses, he utters the cry:

"Lord, have pity on a Christian who doubts, on the sceptic who wishes to believe, on the convict for life embarking alone and in darkness under a sky which the cheering signal-lights of an ancient hope no longer lighten."

It is with the answer to this prayer that M. Huysmans concerns himself in the series of which La Cathédrale is the last example.

So far, M. Huysmans had made no more ambitious appeal to the public than the dozens of Parisian novelists whom the institution of the feuilleton enables to turn out romances as if by machinery for the delectation of the newspaper-reading public. His earlier critics, while giving him credit for a strength not apparent to English eyes, seem to have noted in him only two peculiarities—viz., a passion for trivial details and a tendency to dwell upon the revolting. Both these failings they attributed, perhaps with reason, to his Flemish extraction, while his excursion into the eccentric in A Rebours must have seemed to many to have been inspired by the love of cabotinage or play-acting for its own sake from which no Parisian is ever entirely free. But with Là-Bas, the opening volume of his new venture, M. Huysmans bounded clear of the ruck of his fellow-craftsmen and became at once, if his publishers' figures are in anyway to be trusted, one of the most popular writers in France. In this most daring book M. Huysmans shows us M. Durtal, a blasé man of letters, in whom some see the hero of A Rebours grown older, engaged in writing a history of the monster Gilles de Rais, once the brother-in-arms of Joan of Arc, whose many crimes are detailed by Mr. Baring Gould in his Book of Werewolves. Durtal, while chronicling the insane atrocities of this wretch, receives the advances of Mme. Chantelouve, a member of the upper middle class of Parisian Catholic society, but a secret adherent of the supposed sect of devil-worshippers. By her he is taken to a disused chapel in the heart of Paris, where Satan is formally invoked by an apostate priest, and a horrible parody of the mass is celebrated, followed by an orgy of hysterical lust. But all this disgusting machinery is, so to speak, but the drum beaten outside the booth to draw the crowd to the show inside; and the real purpose of the book is shown in certain conversations which take place round the dinner-table of Carhaix, a bell-ringer of St. Sulpice. Carhaix and his wife are both Bretons, pious with the piety of Catholics who have never known doubt, and Durtal's fellow-guests are a doctor who apparently represents the scientific negation of the supernatural, and an astrologer who exhibits in his own person the absurdity of an over-credulous belief in it. As may be guessed, the simple faith of Carhaix shines by the side of the doctor's cold scepticism and Durtal's mental unrest, and the book ends with his prophecy to the latter.

"Here below," he says, "all is decomposed, all is dead—but above! Oh, I admit that the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, the advent of the Divine Paraclete may be delayed! But the texts which announced it are inspired, and the future may be counted upon. The dawn will be clear."

M. Huysmans' next book, En Route, the only one which has yet been translated into English, unfolds another chapter in the history of Durtal's soul. Shocked by the sudden deaths of Carhaix and the doctor, he slips back rather than is reconverted to the religion of his youth, and spends a week in retreat at a Trappist monastery, where, after terrible mental struggles, he is fully reconciled to the Church, and returns to Paris a sincere and professing Catholic. And so we come at last to the volume before us, which is as simple in construction and as barren of incident as its forerunners. The scene is laid at Chartres, whose cathedral gives its title to the book. Hither come before the volume opens Durtal, the old priest under whose direction he took his first steps towards reconciliation, and a new character in the shape of a pious woman who acts as the priest's housekeeper. Here, too, these three meet a certain Abbé Plomb, an antiquarian canon of Chartres, and the four indulge in several exquisite discussions after the fashion of Carhaix and his guests, but this time on the symbolism of the cathedral and on sublime points of mysticism arising out of the lives of the saints. These discussions and Durtal's soliloquies take up the greater part of the book; but spiritual matters are not neglected. The religious ceremonies at which Durtal assists are described with much fervour and wealth of detail, and both the priests are represented as busying themselves with his state of mind and with the melancholy which perpetually besets him. Finally, they prevail upon him to undertake another retreat, this time to the Benedictine Abbey of Solesmes, and we leave him on the way thither; but this, though it ends the book, does not exhaust the series. Already two more volumes are in preparation, and from hints dropped in the former volumes we can pronounce one of them to be the life of St. Lydwine or Lidwine (M. Huysmans seems himself uncertain as to the spelling), who apparently played a considerable part in Durtal's conversion; while the other will deal with his reception in some Benedictine house as an "oblate"—i.e., a sort of lay monk, who is subject to the Rule, but does not take the irrevocable vows of the Order. We sincerely hope that M. Huysmans will leave his hero in peace when he gets him there. Five volumes on the history of one soul should satisfy even Mr. Arthur Balfour.

On the whole, we are a little disappointed with La Cathédrale. Durtal does not, indeed, improve on acquaintance. His struggles with the flesh at La Trappe, his terrible conflict with himself over his first confession, and his doubts and fears about receiving the Eucharist, were depicted for us in so lifelike a manner as to move the most thoughtless. It was impossible, in fact, to read En Route without feeling as one would at the sight of a man struggling with a rushing stream for his life. But with Durtal at Chartres it is much more difficult to sympathise. His conversion has brought him no peace of mind, and he goes through the process which Kingsley described as "fingering his spiritual muscles to see if they are growing," with the most irritating frequency. Moreover, though the superiority of the mystic over the ordinary believer is vaunted on almost every page, Durtal does not seem to be making progress towards the conscious union of the soul with the Deity, which is said by all mystics to be the goal at which they aim. Although we are told he has been set at La Trappe, on the road to the Mystic City, and even to have "perceived its confines on the horizon," he is in no hurry to continue his course. Instead, he devotes himself to much mauling about the symbolical meanings of certain colours, gems, and even beasts, birds, and plants, only worthy of a mediæval Cabalist or of the modern Parisian society of the Rose Croix. And with all this, he shows an asperity and an intolerance which says little for his charity. The thought of pious founders perpetuating their names on the churches they build fills him with horror, while some remarks on the use to be made of the Eucharist lead him to anticipate the outcry that they would provoke "in the gang of grocers of the Temple, and in the sacred band of devotees who have their luxurious prie-Dieus and reserved seats near the altar, like theatre stalls in the house of all." As for the literary world of Paris, he expresses himself about it in most vitriolic language.

"To see much of these subaltern scribblers and oneself remain clean is," he says, "impossible. One must choose between their company and that of honest folk, between speaking evil and holding one's tongue. For their speciality is to prune you of all charitable ideas, and to ease you of friendship in the twinkling of an eye."

It is, perhaps, fidelity to his art which makes M. Huysmans represent his hero as attacked by one of the most ordinary failings of religious people, but one cannot help feeling a wish to thump M. Durtal into a less Pharisaical frame of mind.

It appears, therefore, likely that M. Huysmans' reputation is still in the making, and that he must do better than in La Cathédrale if his future place in literature is to be as great as his present popularity. His contemporaries' judgment on his work is still abundantly justified, and it is its likeness to that of the Dutch painters whom he worships which is at once its strength and its weakness. As Teniers or Gerard Dow would expend the same painful care upon the presentment of a pot or a pan as upon the principal figure of the picture, so M. Huysmans must describe every unimportant detail with the same wealth of epithet and illustration in which he would set forth the main incidents of his story, did he condescend to incidents. Not content with telling us that the country folk who received the new bishop at Chartres wore old-fashioned clothes, he must needs describe them. Their coats, their hats, all pass under review, and we have to be told that they wore "white gloves cleaned with petroleum and rubbed with india-rubber and bread-crumbs." When he wishes to say that the wind was sweeping the streets of Chartres, he thus concludes a page of description:

"Some belated ecclesiastics hurried on, gasping with one hand their skirts, which rolled like balloons, squeezing on their hats with the other, and only letting go to recover their breviary slipping from under their arms, and their faces, pressing them upon their chests, and leaping forward to cleave the north wind with red ears and eyes blinded with tears, hanging on desperately the while to umbrellas which surged above their heads threatening to carry them away and shaking them all over."

Or is his grossness less marked than formerly. It follows him into his description of the cathedral, and while he twice goes out of his way to ment on that a prudish sacristan has decorated a statue of the infant Jesus with a paper apron, he dwells upon certain peculiarities of the furniture of the choir boys' dormitory not generally noticed. Yet this is nothing compared to the morbid delight which he feels in recalling loathsome images. As Wouwermans is said never to have painted a picture without introducing a man or an animal in some of the ignoble situations imposed upon us by our common nature, so M. Huysmans will make a nasty allusion if he can. He describes the walls of the Abbé Plomb's lodging as "suffering from the cutaneous disease of plaster gnawed with leprosy and damasked with pustules"; while he concludes his description of literary circles with this far-fetched simile:

"Yes! Imitating the homœopathic pharmacopœia which still makes use of horrible substances, the juice of woodlice, the poison of snakes, the pressings of cockchafers, the secretion of polecats, and the pus of small-pox, all coated with sugar of milk to conceal the smell and appearance, the world of letters, also, grinds down the most disgusting matters in the hope of getting them absorbed without retching. It is one incessant manipulation of neighbourly jealousies and the cackle of porters' lodges, the whole made into a globule with a treacherous coating of good manners to hide its odour and taste."

He even mentions a bad chromolithograph of the Sacred Heart, in which "Christ shows with an amiable air a heart badly cooked, bleeding into streams of yellow sauce."

Even these errors of taste, however, are venial compared with the manner in which M. Huysmans has succumbed in his latest book to his school's besetting sin, which is affectation. In him this takes the form of an eager search after the recondite and the unusual. Durtal, in the finicking spirit proper to the successor of the effeminate des Esseintes finds some churches so ugly that he cannot pray in them without shutting his eyes, and wears his hearers with passages from the lives of saints like St. Lydwine of Schiedam and Jeanne de Matel, their great merit in his eyes being, apparently, that their very names "remain unknown to the majority of Catholics." At other times he sweeps the libraries of scarce books of devotion, and delights in worshipping at the shrines of Madonnas abandoned by their devotees. And when M. Huysmans speaks in his own person he shows the same desperate straining after originality. His favourite poets are Baudelaire and Verlaine, his chosen romancer Edgar Allan Poe, and above all English artists he sets Hogarth and Rowlandson. In each case his choice seems to be largely due to the unpopularity or neglect of his favourite, and when he notices a living artist like "Wisthler"—it is thus that he inverts the letters of the immortal name—he thinks that he has bestowed the highest praise upon him by saying that his pictures remind him of opium dreams. That this is a studied affectation more than any unnatural perversion of taste is shown clearly enough by the extraordinary vocabulary which he has lately adopted, of which the main feature is its substitution of out-of-the-way technical terms for those in common use.

Thus for "in this fashion" he uses the words en ce gabarit, the last being the word used by shipbuilders for the models or patterns used in their trade; he speaks of the character of a penitent moulded by his director as being malaxé, a word used by chemists for the rolling of a pill; and he cannot speak of anything being put on one side, save as mise au rencart, a provincialism the derivation of which is unknown. His stock of ordinary technical words increases with each new book that he writes; and to the medical terms of Là-Bas and the cloister phrase of En-Route, he has now added the language of architecture. Unless he returns to common speech, it will soon be impossible to read him without a glossary.

These, then, are the faults which compel us to think that M. Huysmans' popularity rests as yet upon no assured basis; yet, having said this, it would be idle to deny that he presents some of the characteristics of a great artist. The term is used advisedly, for his subjective mode of treatment lends itself to word-painting, and few can bring before us a person or a scene more vividly or with firmer strokes of the brush.

We have space for but one more quotation. We wish we could give the long, but not too long, description of the new bishop's entry into Chartres, and his reception by the old-fashioned country folk and pensioners of the place, which is presented in the vivid and grotesque manner of Hogarth's "March of the Guards thro' Finchley." Let us take instead the scene where Durtal sees the dawn break over the cathedral, the great spear-shaped windows, with their central group of the black St. Anne surrounded by Jewish kings, appearing in the dim light like hiltless swords.

"And, when he looked to right and left, he saw, at immense heights on each side, a gigantic trophy hung on the walls of darkness and composed of a colossal shield covered with dents above five large swords without guards or hilts, with blades damascened in vague tracery and confused mello-work.

Gradually the groping wintry sun pierced through the mist, which became bluer and more vaporous; and first, the trophy hung on Durtal's left towards the north awoke to life. Red embers and spirituous flames took light within the hollows of the shield, while beneath on the middle blade arose in the steel spear-head the giant face of a negress clothed in a green robe and brown mantle; the head, wrapped in a blue kerchief, was surrounded by a golden aureole, and she gazed, hieratic and shy, straight before her with widely-opened eyes, all white.

And this sphinx-like black held on her knees a little negro whose eyeballs stood forth like balls of snow from a black face.

Around her slowly the other still shadowy swords grew clear, and blood trickled from their points reddened as with recent slaughter. And these purple streams disclosed the outlines of beings from the banks of some distant Ganges, on the one side a king playing on a harp of gold, and on the other a monarch raising a sceptre ending in the turquoise petals of a strange lily. . . ."

This is excellent work. It has lost much by translation, but in the original M. Huysmans' picture of the cathedral stands out with the force and delicacy of a nocturne by his friend Mr. Whistler.

HEROES—ANCIENT AND MODERN.

I. The Cid Campeador. By H. Butler Clarke. II. Robert E. Lee. By Henry A. White. "Heroes of the Nations" Series. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

"Cid" is supposed to be a Spanish corruption of the Arabic Sidy, "My Lord," though this is uncertain; and it is thought that the famous Spanish hero did not bear the title during his lifetime, though this again is uncertain. "Campeador" (meaning "Champion") was undoubtedly bestowed on him during his lifetime, on account of his numerous single combats. He is the Arthur of Spain; somewhat more historical than the British king, but, nevertheless, owing his conspicuous name to an accumulation of legends and ballads. What is historically certain about him is that he was the son of Diego Laynez, Lord of Bivar, a man of distinguished ancestry on both sides; and the Cid's own name was Rodrigo (by contraction Ruy) Diaz de Bivar. He was the renowned favourite of King Sancho of Castille and Leon; but on the accession of Sancho's brother Alfonso he soon fell into disgrace, and was banished. From that time he lived a lawless and predatory life, sometimes temporarily reconciled with the king, then again at enmity with him; and as the crowning achievement of his life he conquered the Moorish city of Valencia, so securing for himself a principality, only to die in no long time after. With his death his principality collapsed.

This story is told with great clearness and discrimination by Mr. Clarke, who is wise enough not to exclude the chivalrous and poetic legends, while at the same time he distinguishes between them and the more or less authoritative records. Inevitably it is a picturesque, an interesting book. The epic wealth of tradition clustering round the name of the Cid would alone make it so; and the genuine history, if smaller in quantity, is no less picturesque than the legend. It is in the character of the hero that the difference lies between the two sources of narrative. The Cid of legend is the perfect knight of Spanish conception; who may exhibit some doubtful behaviour according to our modern ideas, may cheat a Jew or display questionable principle, but still is spotlessly faithful to the mediæval Spanish idea of what a hero should be. Brave, loyal, courteous, religious, animated by the loftiest conceptions—such is the Cid of tradition; but the Ruy Diaz of history is a sorry kind of hero. That disposition to glorify the outlaw which has given us the Robin Hood and Rob Roy of romance is responsible for the ballads of the Cid. In cold fact, from the time of his first banishment he was nothing better than a great leader of Free Companions—for the thing existed then, though the name was of later invention. He fought for Moor against Christian, or Christian against Moor, just as it advantaged him in money or interest. He was crafty, perfidious—a Spanish Odysseus: grasping, cruel, able, daring, and successful. His religion sat very easily on him, and he was addicted to heathen auspices by means of birds' entrails and such like folly. An interesting book, a debatable hero.

By his side, General Robert Lee "sticks fiery off," indeed. What Spain fondly conceived Ruy Diaz to have been the plain authentic American general was, and a much greater leader into the bargain. Gallant, brilliant, pious, upright, unselfish, indomitable, Lee was a true hero, of whom America—North and South—and modern times may be proud. It is a brave and stirring story which Dr. White had to tell; and he has told it directly, vigorously, if occasionally with somewhat cheap colour of diction. He has erred only where all but a few military historians err: he fails to preface his detailed account of operations by a clear synopsis of the general strategical or tactical plan; wherefore his detail of campaigns or battles, accurate and sufficient in itself, becomes a painful tangle to the civilian reader. In just this perspicuous preliminary résumé, reinforced by after summing-up, the much-abused Alison is strong, and Carlyle, in his Friedrich, admirable.

Lee, surely, ranks high in the second order of generals. During four consecutive years, always against much superior numbers, he led an army which practically, it may be said, was not reinforced; which dwindled steadily, while all his enemies' losses were replenished by copious and incessantly renewed levies; yet he was never beaten in person, and only once (in the bloody Battle of Gettysburg) repulsed, until the final day when Grant broke through lines wasted by a year of terrible struggle and famine before Richmond. Twice he hurled back superior Northern armies from the Confederate States, and (in all probability) was only prevented by the timorous defensive policy of Jefferson Davis (who would not concentrate, who would try to defend a long line of States at all points) from closing the war by an advance on Washington.

Most glorious of all his exploits is his final tragic campaign against Grant: the enemy, immensely superior in numbers, drawing inexhaustible supplies, while his own war-worn and famine-worn army, wanting shoes, supplies, everything except inextinguishable valour, melted with every battle. It is worthy to rank with such historic struggles as those of Hannibal in Bruttium and Napoleon on the plains of Champagne; and, like them, it shows that the god of battles is with the big battalions. Alexander scattered Persians by myriads, Clive Bengalese by thousands with a little army; but they were Persians, they were Bengalese. Napoleon beat the Austrians in Italy, though they were much superior; but the Austrians divided their forces, and they were not overwhelmingly superior. Hannibal standing at bay, leonine, in Bruttium, Napoleon standing at bay, panther-like, in Champagne, the French standing at bay against swarming China at Langson, found that masses must win, if they were led with mediocre capacity, against a handful led with superb capacity.

Lee was not a Hannibal or a Napoleon, but he was incomparably the most brilliant general that America has produced. It breaks one's heart that he should have been finally conquered by brute numbers and brute Grant. Grant has been astonishingly over-rated. He would have been ignominiously beaten in war against a Germany and a Moltke.

That last heroic campaign of Lee can be told in a few words. Grant made a flanking march for Richmond. Lee attacked his flank, but the slowness of Longstreet prevented his inflicting on Grant utter rout. Though he destroyed the Northern General's army by thousands, he found the game too bloody for his own limited numbers, while Grant could lose any quantity of men, and relied on that fact alone for winning. Then he marched parallel with Grant, threw himself in front of him, and beat him back with frightful loss. Grant renewed his flank march; once more the two armies marched parallel, until Lee again threw himself in front, and again repulsed Grant with terrible slaughter. So it went on until the two armies reached Richmond. Grant always attacked along the whole line, ignoring or ignorant of all tactics, and always dashed his insensate head against an invincible wall. Richmond reached, Lee took up a permanent position in front of it; and Grant continued his dense-headed bull-rushes, without plan or knowledge, until his men were utterly cowed by the useless slaughter, and were beaten before they went into battle.

It was the very negation, the obstinate, ignorant refusal of all military art: and if Lee could have had reinforcements, or if there had been less inexhaustible resources of men behind Grant, the Northern General must have been driven to a deserved retreat. But no help came to Lee; and at last even Grant sulkily gave up direct attack, fortified himself, and turned the campaign into a siege, with formal approach by mines and trenches. He had lost sixty-five thousand men in the campaign, and had been beaten in every battle. But fifty-five thousand fresh troops joined him, while the doomed Lee received not a single man. Starvation set in among the Southerners; while, though every engagement was a victory, every engagement thinned their numbers, and the deadly losses they inflicted on the enemy mattered nothing to him with his endless supplies. Yet, even so, for eight months Lee held invincibly the lines in front of Richmond, with his famine-stricken and heroic skeleton of an army, hurling back every advance of the foe. At last the fated Southern force grew too thin to defend its extended lines. The Southerners broke through, and Lee, like Osman Pasha at Plevna, was overtaken and surrounded in his retreat. At Appomattox Court-House he gave up his sword; having lost a campaign more gloriously than most generals win one. No reader, when he reaches this conclusion of the Southern General's brilliant career, but must take off his hat to Robert Lee. He was never beaten till the game was over. And that is the spirit which Englishmen for ever love and honour.

MR. JUSTIN MCCARTHY'S "GLADSTONE."

The Story of Gladstone's Life. By Justin McCarthy. (A. & C. Black.)

IF Mr. Justin McCarthy has plenty of good anecdotal matter about Mr. Gladstone, he has not put it into this book. That is what readers expect to get in a "story" which does not profess to be serious biography, still less to be history. But they will not get even so much as that from Mr. McCarthy. He does not give them even his-story. So close and shrewd an observer cannot have sat in the same building, whether in the Reporters' Gallery or on the floor of the House, for an indefinite number of years, without forming his own impressions, a little varying, one supposes, from the purely conventional ones; and particularly in the case of a statesman with whom he had, as leader of the Irish Party at a crisis of its history, relations of a peculiarly sensitive kind. Of all this there is no hint. This pleasant enough piece of book-making begins by disclaimers of its author's "special knowledge," or of his recourse to "correspondence or documents which are not accessible to every student of political history." Even accessible documents Mr. McCarthy does not seem to have taken in all cases the trouble to set forth in his narrative, which has amazing gaps. Very scanty and partial, for instance, is the chapter recording that exceptionally important transition period when Mr. Gladstone first found himself in a Liberal administration. That was a time when, according to legend, some young bloods of the Carlton proposed in jest what Mr. McCarthy records in deadly earnest—to throw the seceder out of the window. The record of an after-dinner escapade seems out of place, any way, in pages that suggest the flavours of the afternoon tea-table rather than those of a more strenuous feast. Frankly, the figure is that of a bread-and-butter Gladstone. Mr. George Russell, also a eulogist and also a personal friend, has produced a biography of his former leader which, page by page, covers almost the same ground as Mr. McCarthy's; yet it has faced more successfully the difficulties of the position, and achieves throughout a virility of tone and treatment, difficult enough under the conditions, and absent, it must be owned, from the volume of Mr. McCarthy. As he had to do what six other hands had done before him, and had, therefore, to avoid the six most obvious ways of expressing rather common facts in rather common English, his task was not a particularly exhilarating one.

After making all allowances, the book is a disappointment. Not merely is the picture of Mr. Gladstone a chromolithographic affair where we had some right to expect the hand of an artist, but the casual sketches of contemporaries, who happened to be Mr. Gladstone's opponents or rivals, are defaced out of all candid recognition. Disraeli is the old sinister bogey-man of ancient history in liberal journals; one thought that that figure, as unreal as a Guy Fawkes dummy of straw, had long ago been "flung to the wind," to use Disraeli's phrase about his own "lyre." The statement about Disraeli's ignorance of the classics, and his incapacity to speak French, needs a good deal of revision. So, we are sure he will agree on second thoughts, does his attribution of vulgar motives of personal ambition to Disraeli, who, we are again assured, "began life as a Radical." Of course, he did nothing of the kind. To show his contempt for both parties, he had an election committee consisting of six Tories and six Radicals; and had he finally found it convenient to use the Liberal rather than the Tory organisation to forward his views he could have been accused of "beginning life as a Tory" with a quite equal plausibility. Robert Lowe—for the mere literary form of whose speeches, if for nothing else, a literary man might have allowed a line of recognition—makes as ill a figure as Disraeli under Mr. McCarthy's pen. The statement that "he had a contempt for the poor generally" is made twice within a few pages—"a perfect contempt" is the variant of the first phrase. The statement is as utterly without warrant as is another, that "the idea of a man being allowed to vote at an election who could not read Greek and Latin was revolting to his soul." A more preposterous statement was never made; and it is worth while to recall the odium Mr. Lowe incurred among pedants for his advocacy of a commercial rather than a classical education for the sons of the middle classes. These are but specimen blots, where no new lights are found by way of atonement. A writer of fiction becomes enamoured of his hero—all the other characters must be subordinates and foils. Mr. McCarthy has shown himself to be on this occasion a novelist first and a biographer afterwards. The political novel has its great defects and its great uses; but there seems nothing to say in favour of the political novel-biography, of which Mr. McCarthy has furnished us a perfect specimen.

CRAZY ARITHMETIC.

The Canon: an Exposition of the Pagan Mystery perpetuated in the Cabala. With a Preface by R. B. Cunninghame Grahame. (Elkin Mathews.)

PROBABLY the very silliest book published last year. Most people have heard of the Cabala (Anglicè, tradition), by which certain Jews, taking advantage of the fact that the Hebrew alphabet was used to denote numbers as well as letters, sought to extract a hidden meaning from the words of Scripture by substituting for them others having the same numerical value. It is on this principle that the Apocalypse of St. John alludes to Nero under cover of the number 666, that being the numerical value of the persecuting emperor's style and title, and other instances could be quoted from the Epistle of Barnabas and other early Christian writings. But the author of The Canon not only applies this to the Greek alphabet—which, indeed, lends itself quite as well to this sort of mystification as the Hebrew—but allows himself several liberties which would enable him to prove that nearly every word in any language means all the others. Without offering the slightest excuse for so doing, he assumes that "colel" or one can be added or subtracted at will, and when the word in question is a compound one, he adds or subtracts as many "colels" as the word has component parts. If he then fails to get a word of the meaning he wants, he mis-spells it, or imagines a square of which the number he is dealing with is the root, or a circle of which it is the diameter, or a "vesica" (or figure enclosed by the segments of two circles) of which it is the perimeter, or in some other way alters the rules of the game until he gets at the required result. The following is a specimen: "The circle assigned to Saturn has a diameter of 1,120, which is the height of a rood cross which crucifies a man contained in a square having a perimeter equal to the side of the Holy Oblation" mentioned in Ezekiel. Perhaps it has; but we do not see the importance of the statement.

To this nonsense, Mr. Cunninghame Grahame contributes a very amusing preface, wherein he tells us that "a rich barbarian, pale and dyspeptic, florid or flatulent, seated in a machine luxuriously upholstered and well heated, and yet the traveller's mind a blank, or only occupied with schemes to cheat his fellows and advance himself, is, in the abstract, no advance upon a citizen of Athens, in the time of Pericles, who never travelled faster than a bullock cart would take him in all his life."

But why not? The rich barbarian of Mr. Grahame's breathless sentence can certainly visit more places, and thus make his influence the more felt whether for good or evil. For the rest, how could the descendants of Pericles have escaped the Turks had they been restricted to the pace of the ancestral bullock cart?

BRIEFER MENTION.

A Year from a Correspondent's Note-Book. By Richard Harding Davis. (Harper.)

HAVING read Mr. Richard Harding Davis's Soldiers of Fortune we are quite ready to welcome anything else he may choose to write, even when the book he presents to us is nothing more than a reprint of articles he has contributed to various newspapers and magazines. For Mr. Davis is no ordinary journalist. He is an observer with a marvellously keen nose for trifles, a literary man who can use a trifle to light up a whole subject. Coming to view the Jubilee celebrations of last year he found that "the smell of soft coal, which is perhaps the first and most distinctive feature of London to greet the arriving American, was changed to that of green pine, so that the town smelt like a Western mining camp." Moreover, into the year which his notebook covers, Mr. Davis crammed all manner of interesting experiences. He witnessed the coronation of the Tsar, having the luck to gain admittance to the Cathedral of the Assumption, he was at Budapest for the millennial celebration, he visited Cuba during the rebellion, he followed the Greek army, saw the inauguration of the American President, and struggled through the crowds which blocked the London streets in June. And about each he has something fresh and vivid to say. Nothing better has been written about the Græco-Turkish war than his description of the sudden hail of Turkish bullets upon the entrenchments at Velestinos.

"If a man had raised his arm above his head his hand would have been torn off. It had come up so suddenly that it was like two dogs springing at each other's throats. . . . This lasted for five minutes or less, and then the death-grip seemed to relax; the volleys came brokenly, like a man panting for breath; the bullets ceased to sound with the hiss of escaping steam, and rustled aimlessly by; and from hill-top to hill-top the officers' whistles sounded as though a sportsman were calling off his dogs. The Turks withdrew into the coming night, and the Greeks lay back, panting and sweating, and stared open-eyed at one another like men who had looked for a moment into hell, and had come back to the world again."

The modest title of the book forbids us to regard it as more than a series of disjointed sketches. It has the inevitable defect of its origin, in that each of these notable events, described almost in the moment of their happening, is regarded as the greatest event the world has ever seen. But it is supremely good journalism, and well worth preserving.

Our English Minsters. By the Very Rev. A. P. Purey-Cust, and Others. (Isbister & Co.)

THE eight authors of this handsome book have produced a work interesting to the veriest layman who understands nothing of bosses, piscina, triforia, spandrels, and other mysteries of the architectural cult. Canon Newbolt's account of St. Paul's, with which the volume opens, contains a lively and feeling description of Sir Christopher Wren's masterpiece, and also of that Old St. Paul's which originally stood on the same site. The historical associations are cleverly, but briefly, emphasised, and, though one hardly looks for exciting incidents in such an article as this, the account of the painter Thornhill's rescue from certain death when painting the cupola, lends a human interest which the narrative would otherwise lack. One slip the author has made, which should be corrected in a later edition. He speaks of Sir Edgar Boehm as being "famous for the Jubilee coinage." Sir Edgar Boehm has left behind him so many good works that it seems a pity that his one acknowledged failure should be here chosen to designate him.

The account of the stately Minster of York is dignified, if perhaps slightly stilted in style. Among the many interesting details of the erection of the edifice itself is given an extract from the indenture (still extant) with a certain John Thornton for the glazing of the great east window. It runs as follows: he is to "complete it in three years, portray with his own hands the histories, images, and other things to be painted on the same. He is to provide glass and lead and workmen, and receive four shillings per week, five pounds at the end of each year, and, after the work is completed, ten pounds for his reward."

It was for such pay as this that men who delighted in their art for art's sake were content to work. Ely Cathedral, the great Minster of the Fens, is treated of by Canon Dickson, who gives an exhaustive description of the great octagonal lantern which, in the opinion of experts, has no equal in the world. The Very Rev. Dean of Norwich has devoted himself to a loving account of that fane, in which he relates the true explanation of the curious circular opening in the nave roof which has puzzled so many antiquarians. St. Alban's Abbey by Canon Liddell, Salisbury Cathedral by the Dean of Salisbury, Worcester Cathedral by Canon Shore, and Exeter Cathedral by Canon Edmonds, are each treated of in the same lively and interesting manner, and, taken as a whole, Our English Minsters is a work which fulfils a distinct purpose. Those who wish for long, learned, and detailed disquisitions on styles, periods, materials, interiors, elevations, and sections must seek more pretentious works, but to such as desire an admirably illustrated and entertaining account of our great churches, full of all these details most interesting to the uninitiated, Our English Minsters should give satisfaction.

The Trial of Lord Cochrane before Lord Ellenborough. By J. B. Atlay, M.A. With a Preface by Edward Downes Law. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

IF an Irishman had to describe the career of Thomas Cochrane, Tenth Earl of Dundonald, he might fairly say that he was only on terra firma when at sea, for on land he was always in hot water. His name still lives in the annals of four navies—those of Great Britain, Chili, Brazil, and Greece. His maritime exploits have obliterated in the public mind the memory of the fact that in 1814 he was convicted of circulating a false report of Napoleon's defeat and death, and thereby victimising the Stock Exchange. But his family have not forgotten it, and have made frequent efforts to cleanse his reputation of this stain. Unhappily their way of white-washing Lord Cochrane has been to blacken Lord Ellenborough, the Lord Chief Justice who tried him. They accuse him of having conducted the trial so that the defence did not have a fair chance, and of having misdirected the jury. Naturally the Ellenborough family could not stand this. Commander Law, grandson of the Lord Chief Justice, collected a mass of rebutting evidence, and handed it over to Mr. Atlay, who has reduced it to fairly reasonable limits in this volume of 500 pages. By any unprejudiced reader, we think, Mr. Atlay will be held to have made out his case, and we would fain hope that this view will commend itself to the other side. The spectacle of two noble families pelting one another with controversial tomes is one that if carried much further will provoke laughter rather than interest.

The People for whom Shakespeare Wrote. By Charles Dudley Warner. (Harper's.)

MR. WARNER writes in a pleasant and gossiping fashion of Elizabethan society and manners; you may learn from his pages how Shakespeare's contemporaries dressed, dined, drank, and amused themselves; what were their expenses, and what strangers, from Erasmus downwards, thought of them. There is no great learning in the book: Harrison's Description of England and Rye's Foreigners in England provide two-thirds of the material. Mr. Warner persistently writes the family name of the Earls of Essex as "Devereaux": he speaks of Shakespeare's brother "Charles," although he had not one; puts "Paris Gardens" for "Paris Garden," and the "Fashion" for the "Fortune" Theatre. Misprints, perhaps, but very slovenly. The most interesting thing in the book is a description of a county squire from Gilpin's Forest Scenery, new to us:

"His great hall was commonly strewn with marrow-bones, and full of hawks'-perches, of hounds, spaniels, and terriers. His oyster-table stood at one end of the room and oysters he ate at dinner and supper. At the upper end of the room stood a small table with a double desk, one side of which held a church Bible, the other Fox's Book of Martyrs. He drank a glass or two of wine at his meals, put syrup of gilly-flower in his sack, and always had a tun-glass of small beer standing by him, which he often stirred about with rosemary. After dinner, with a glass of ale by his side, he improved his mind by listening to the reading of a choice passage out of the Book of Martyrs."

These books accumulate. Mr. Fairman Ordish did one last June, Mr. W. J. Rolfe last October. Mr. Warner's is probably the least well-informed, but it is the best written of the three.

Catesby: a Tragedy. (Billing: Guildford.)

THIS venture is inspired, we suppose, by a recent controversy. The drama is Elizabethan, in prose and blank verse. To say that the anonymous author has not fathomed the mysteries of blank verse would be mild: he has not even grasped its normal rhythm. The historical introduction and notes show considerable research; which might have been utilised in a biography of Catesby. It is a pity how some people mistake their vocations.

The Ancient Use of Greek Accents. By G. T. Carruthers. (Bradbury, Agnew & Co.)

THIS is a curious and interesting little tract. In the first part Mr. Carruthers discusses the nature and meaning of the Greek accents, which we probably owe to the grammarians of Alexandria. Many think that their chief object is to complicate examinations; but Mr. Carruthers thinks that they really afford a guide to the pronunciation of Greek words. He gets over the difficulties in the way of this theory by supposing that in the case of the acute accent the stress was intended to be put not on the syllable which bore the accent, but on the following syllable. The accent was thus of the nature of a preliminary signal. The suggestion is ingenious, and deserves consideration. In the second part of the treatise Mr. Carruthers attempts, by means of this theory, to throw some light upon the difficult subject of Greek music. He gives some interesting transcripts of Greek melodies into modern notation.

THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

RIBSTONE PIPPINS.

BY MAXWELL GRAY.

A rustic idyll by the author of The Silence of Dean Maitland. The scene is the West of England, and the hero is a carter with large hazel eyes that shine with spiritual light. The people talk thus: "I mane the little chap wi' nar a mossel o' cloase, onny a pair o' goose-wings, and a bowanarrow in valentine pictures. They caas en Keewpid, and a shoots vokes' hearts droo and droo." The beginning of the book is chromolithographic and the end sad. All droo 'tis zentimental. (Harper and Brothers. 148 pp. 3s. 6d.)

MISS BETTY.

BY BRAM STOKER.

A pleasant love-story of Queen Anne and early Georgian days. The London life of the period is recalled, and there is a capital description of the race on the Thames for Doggett's Coat and Badge, in days when that function included a turnout of the royal boats manned by the King's watermen. A visit to Don Saltero's museum at Chelsea delights Betty, who, however, soon has more personal matters to attend to. As a desperate means to get money her lover takes to the road. How Betty saves him from perdition is the theme of this gallant tale. (C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd. 202 pp. 2s. 6d.)

POOR MAX.

BY "IOTA."

The author of A Yellow Aster here studies a modern marriage. On the one side is Judith, an Irish girl, frank and impulsive and a passionate fighter for truth; on the other Max, a reckless, joyous young author, with the artistic temperament. Gradually they drift apart, and another man fills Judith's thoughts, and Max blunders merrily along, never just and always generous, until his death, which comes of too nobly caring for a sick friend. A powerful book of deep interest. (Hutchinson & Co. 362 pp. 6s.)

PLAIN LIVING.

BY ROLF BOLDFREWOOD.

The plot of Rolf Boldrewood's latest story suggests that of the Vicar of Wakefield, inverted and transplanted to Australia. A squatter, who has long had a hard fight to make his "station" pay, suddenly comes in for a huge fortune. His delight is accompanied by a fear that his wealth may sap the strength of his children, and perhaps soil their innocence; and he therefore conceals his altered circumstances. The station begins mysteriously to pay, repairs are carried out, the live-stock increase beyond all experience, and love matches are made. Only in the fulness of time does this strong-minded squatter reveal himself to his family as a Cæsus. A hearty story, deriving charm from the odours of the bush, and the bleating of incalculable sheep. (Macmillan & Co. 316 pp. 6s.)

THE SPIRIT IS WILLING.

BY PERCIVAL PICKERING.

In this story of misplaced affections and unhappy marriages the characters confide their troubles with improbable freedom to improbable sympathisers, while Aunt Letitia, a prim, sharp-eyed old maid, holds a brief for her chivalrous but weak nephew, Daniel Hardwick. The action takes place on an undefined stretch of sea-coast, and the sea moans between the lines. (Bliss, Sands & Co. 19 pp. 6s.)

THE BROOM OF THE WAR-GOD.

BY H. N. BRAILSFORD.

A romance of the Greek and Turkish war just ended. But not a hurried effort thrown off to attract the interest of the moment; on the contrary, a piece of patient work. Mr. Brailsford brings together half a dozen picturesque adventurers—a saturnine Scotchman, an Englishman or two—Cockney and otherwise, a German, and free-lances of other nations. The Crown Prince also figures, and there is fighting. (W. Heinemann. 276 pp. 6s.)

THE GENERAL'S DOUBLE.

BY CAPTAIN CHARLES KING, U.S.A.

A story of the American Civil War, dramatic and moving, and more or less certain to find its way to the stage. (Lippincott. 446 pp. 6s.)

THE SPANISH WINE.

BY FRANK MATHEW.

A grim and gloomy romance of intrigue. Old Ireland is the background, and through the dusky pages flit lord and lady, lover and mistress, monk and dwarf, and other mysterious characters. Much of the story is retrospective, and all is vague and Gothic and eerie. (John Lane. 180 pp. 3s. 6d.)

DEAD MEN'S TALES.

BY CHARLES JUNOR.

In form, a yellow-back, with a picture on the cover representing a stockman finding two skeletons in the Bush. In character, a collection of those stories which Australia produces with remarkable ease, and the Sydney Bulletin is pleased to print. The author writes an introduction to show that certain of his yarns are founded on fact and to lay down the rules of the short story. He offers also criticism of some contemporary novelists. It is not acute. (Sonnenschein. 269 pp. 2s.)

TALES OF THE KLONDYKE.

BY T. MULLETT ELLIS.

The narrator of these episodes in the Klondyke diggings declares that he was a pure Cockney before he went out West. He tells how he and Dave Smith "diskivered" gold, and how he starved, and loved, and was raided by Indians; and his language throughout is a blend of ultra-Cockney and ultra-Yankee: "My ears got frost-bit, so I 'ad to be careful arterwards. It was jis' a caution to me. I wrapped wal up fer the res' o' the winter—you can pawn your shirt on that!" (Bliss, Sands & Co. 164 pp.)

MURRAY MURGATROYD, JOURNALIST.

BY CHARLES MORIER.

Murgatroyd's grasp of politics in the Pioneer is noted by Sir Richard Hanley, who sends for him and entrusts him with the task of obtaining for the Government certain documents relating to the Transalpine difficulty. These are in the possession of a wealthy Mr. Muller, who keeps them in his bedroom in a remote Devonshire village. Meanwhile, Sir Richard's daughter has been robbed of her watch in St. James's Park. Murgatroyd undertakes to find the documents and the watch. This story of his quest, and its rewards, is cleverly written. (Laurence & Bullen. 152 pp. 1s.)

A STORM-RENT SKY.

BY M. BETHAM-EDWARDS.

The French Revolution as it affected humble village life in the Champagne district is the theme of this series of episodes. The story attains its climax in Paris at the execution of Danton. (Hurst & Blackett. 354 pp. 6s.)

REVIEWS.

The Fourth Napoleon: a Romance. By Charles Benham.
(W. Heinemann.)

MR. BENHAM calls his story a romance, and the name fits. It is the tale of a new Buonapartist revolution in France, and the discovery of the lost Fourth Napoleon in a briefless barrister, formerly of Pimlico. We have no wish to reveal the highly original design; suffice it to say that the Emperor, when found, is an incapable dreamer, who passes from incapacity to infamy, till the farce plays itself out, and the poor puppet dies a coward's death, with his fine palace of cards tumbled about his ears. We may as well point out at once what seem to us the few blemishes in the work. It is immoderately long, and the stage is perhaps overcrowded with figures. Now, however careful the work, too great a length and too bewildering a company are apt to spoil any fictional effect. The emotional capacity of a climax is not so keenly felt when it is led up to through a maze of subtle half-portraits. The scheme, we repeat, seems to us brilliantly carried out; our only objection is that such a scheme is in some ways beyond fiction. Again, it is possible that the author uses his right to the fantastic almost to the verge of caricature. A slight tendency to overdo the Thackerayan method now and then perplexes the reader by casting a glamour of comedy over the tragic.

But the merits of the book are so real that one forgets little failures. The picture of the incapable, ambitious sentimentalist, attitudinising in his shabby London lodgings, attitudinising on the throne, and sinking into flabby senility, while still in his own eyes a hero, is far more than a successful piece of portraiture. It is a profound and moving allegory of life. When the monarch falls it is not the mere Walter Sadler who dies, but a part of all of us, which we acknowledge with terror. Surely to have produced such an effect is a high triumph of art. The other people—the girl Muriel, the Framlinghams, Brisson, de Morin, Carache—are all drawn with uncommon subtlety and vigour. Even when the author gives full rein to his freakishness, and riots in such oddities as Prince Felix and the Honourable Charles, there is a gift of epigram which covers much shrewd insight. Mr. Benham follows great models. He has learned much from Thackeray, and there is a strong hint of Balzac in the half-ironical swiftness of change from scene to scene, while the sinking character is the one thing that never varies. We have re-read the book with care and find no reason to modify our first opinion. It is a fine piece of work with enough wit and style and knowledge of life to set up half a dozen ordinary novels. Probably it is the author's first book, in which case it is one of the best first books we have read for a long time. Whether or not it will please the popular mind we cannot say. In an age when the world runs after sloppy domestic idylls, swashbuckling romances, and hysterical psychology, it may pass by the work of a man of intellect.

* * * *

David Lyall's Love-Story. By the Author of The Land of the Leal. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

MR. BARRIE'S literary mantle should be a voluminous one, judging by the number of Scots writer bodies whose deficiencies it must needs cover. In Sentimental Tommy, for the greater piquancy of the thing, Mr. Barrie brought his Scots to London, and to the author of David Lyall's Love-Story the same expedient has occurred. You would think that the London Scottish had their own quarter of the city, like any Jews of old their Ghetto, for whenever a new character is introduced—which is, at least, once in every chapter—straightway a "Hoots! mon" or a "Hech! laddie" bewrays his nationality. So, if you like undiluted Scots, and therewith an all-pervading optimism of vision, you will find David Lyall's Love-Story a readable thing: it is pleasantly and sympathetically told. But if you dislike the dialect, and rebel against optimism, leave it alone.

The structure of the book is episodic; two or three characters hold it together, but essentially a distinct episode or adventure constitutes each chapter. The central hero is David Lyall, a young journalist—Scots—who would venture his pen in London. He falls on his feet and joins the staff of a flourishing daily—with a Scots editor. To these come many other Scots in need of helping hands or brains, and none goes empty away. Thus in the chapter called "Stranded" you have the sad fate of a Scotch artist reduced to "screeving." David finds him at it:

"I did not see him anywhere, but observing a little throng of people on the other side I crossed over, and saw that they were taken up by a lot of pictures done in coloured chalks on the pavement of the street. It was something I had never seen or heard tell of, and I pressed forward to take them all in. Then a kind of 'dwm,' as my grandfather would have expressed it, came over me, for every one of the little landscapes, sharply outlined from each other, was a bit from Faulds. There was the auld brig with the burn below, fringed with the birks of Inneshall. And the village street, with Bawbie Windrum's shop window, and Peter Mitchell, the stalling, in his cage at the door. And last in the row was my own home, The Byres, with the courtyard and the old draw-well faithful to the life. Up against the railings stood the forlorn and shabby artist, out at elbows, down at heels, with his greasy hat drawn down over his brows, and a curious bitter smile on his mouth. One or two tossed a copper on the pavement ere they passed on, but he did not stoop to pick them up. Then I pressed through the throng and took him by the arm."

Needless to say, the "screever" is recovered from the pavement by the good David, to die in the odour of Scots sentimentality. We confess that we should like David and his editor better if they had one or two of those redeeming faults which journalists and even editors—other than Scots ones—do occasionally display. The "love-story," by the way, hangs about in the background while the crusades are going on, but ends happily at last.

* * * *
The Cedar Star. By Mary E. Mann.
(Hutchinson & Co.)

MRS. MANN'S new story is a clever study of wilful girlhood. In Betty, her heroine, she sets down a type not uncommon to-day: the spoilt, capricious child, so encouraged in her youth as to become selfish beyond all bounds, yet at heart capable of much that is good. We will not say anything of the plot, except this, that it shows how Betty progressed through suffering to self-repression and a more instant love of her fellow-beings. Mrs. Mann sees with sympathetic eyes, and writes well. Here is a description of a visit of Betty and her sister to Carleton (Billy), the curate, who is afterwards to play so large a part in her life:—

"We hate all women," said Betty; "men are nicer. I shall hate myself when I am a woman, only I shall be of a sensible kind. I shall never wear my petticoats longer than my calves, and I shall always keep my hair hanging down my back."

"Won't Betty look a darling?" inquired the ingratiating Jan. "Cousin Violet looked a darling till she stuck up her hair; now she's frightful."

"Billy's in love with Violet," said Emily, with her dove-like temerity: "I know, because Susan told me when she put me to bed."

"Susan's an ass," said Billy. "Your confounded Paulie is creeping down the back of my neck, Jan," he said. He had turned very red and cross, and no wonder, with the kitten in that position! "Now, be off, all of you, and leave me in peace. I've got my sermon to write."

"Don't do it," advised Betty, unmovedly keeping her ground; "don't preach one. Every one would be awfully glad. We can't go, Billy. You asked us to tea our first holiday. We've come."

"Tea isn't for hours."

"Tea could be."

"We'll wait till Caroline comes in."

"No, no. We don't want Caroline. Only you. Me to make the tea—and only you!"

"Betty to make the tea," said the others, "and only Billy!"

Of course they had their way. What could a young man, kind as a woman and simple as a child, do against the tyranny of the imperious woman-child and her satellites?"

There are stressful passages in the book which are handled with considerable power; but we prefer here to illustrate Mrs. Mann's lighter manner. The story is well worth reading.

* * * *

A Man with a Maid. By Mrs. Henry E. Dudeney.
(Heinemann.)

THIS is a story with an entirely conventional plot. Tabbie, a milliner's apprentice, meets Tom Prideaux, a "gentleman," by the bandstand on Brighton pier. Tom falls in love with her—as a "gentleman" falls in love with a shop-girl; Tabbie, being an extremely simple girl, and very fond of Tom, goes up to see him at his rooms in the Temple—and stays with him for three weeks. Tom has no notion of marrying Tabbie, for it is understood that he is to marry his cousin Constance's money. And circumstances point to the propriety of Tabbie's union with John Starkey, a prosperous young butcher. But just as Tom has married Constance, and Tabbie is about to marry the butcher, Tabbie's sin finds her out; and the story comes to the only possible conclusion. Hundreds of stories have been written around this plot; hundreds more will be written. That, however, does not detract from the undoubted merits of this tale. The oldest plot is new enough if the actors are real; and Mrs. Dudeney's picture of the Maielli dressmaking establishment at Brighton is enough of itself to make her book worth reading. Mrs. Day, the forewoman; "Mad Joel," the little Jewess; Clara Porter, the machinist;

Hortense Loriot and "Cockaninny," to say nothing of Mme. Maielli herself—all are distinct and vivid, resembling one another only in their foolishness, their pettiness, and the love of admiration that leads continually to moral disaster. The insipidity and dulness, too, of the lower middle-class life in Dissenting circles, where the chief delights are a hot Sunday dinner, an afternoon nap, and chapel in the evening, are drawn with a remorseless attention to detail of which Mr. George Gissing would not be ashamed. And the writer who can persuade, as Mrs. Dudeney persuades, that the actors are living, breathing people has small occasion to worry over a lack of originality in the plot.

It strikes us, however, that Mrs. Dudeney would have written an even more convincing book if she had devised it on a smaller scale. Nothing but long and arduous practice can teach the novelist the art of keeping a large number of characters moving without showing the strings. Mrs. Dudeney has let into her story more characters than she can manage, and some of them, such as Haybittle, the wealthy colonial, and Simpson, the artist, for lack of the attention which their creator has no time to give them, are too obviously mere lay figures. The lay figure is a common enough feature of the average novel; but this is something more than an average novel, and that we should notice its presence here by force of contrast with the live actors is in itself a tribute to Mrs. Dudeney's ability. A Man with a Maid is quite worthy of its place in the "Pioneer" series, a series which already contains such books as The Red Badge of Courage, A Street in Suburbia, and Mrs. Musgrave and her Husband.

ANTHOLOGIES IN LITTLE.

I.—MICHAEL DRAYTON.

THE repute of Michael Drayton has been the sport of time: half a dozen of his poems are on the lips of men; the bulk of them sleep undisturbed in the dust. His own prolix pen is no doubt largely to blame. The principal attempt at a modern reprint foundered on the terrible Harmony of the Church, to which even the scandal of episcopal censure can hardly give breath of life; and the bravest scholar might quail at tackling the mazes of that versified gazetteer, the Polyolbion, wherein, as Charles Lamb said, Drayton went over his native soil "with the fidelity of the herald and the painful love of a son." Yet even in the Polyolbion there is much excellent reading, fine gold in the ore for whose has the patience to extract it; while from the rest of Drayton's innumerable volumes you might easily gather an anthology—as Mr. Bullen indeed has done, if one can only find it—of considerable bulk and extraordinary merit. For Drayton was a real poet, a man of rich temper and strenuous ardours. Adversity drove him to hack-work—the journalism of verse—as it has driven so many good men to journalism before and since. It brought him even into bondage to that paving-stone tyrant of the theatre, Henslowe, who to so many of his letters doled out a grudging pittance. But ever and anon the unconquerable spirit asserted itself, and flamed forth in splendid ode, finely wrought sonnet, or delicate pastoral.

Drayton sprang from those leafy Warwickshire meadows to which so much of the best Elizabethan poetry owed its debt. He was of middle-class folk, the thews and sinews of England—was, in fact, the son of a butcher. He found wealthy patrons, among them Prince Henry, the much-wept Marcellus of the land, and the incomparable Lucy, Countess of Bedford, theme of so many songs that Ben Jonson well named her "the Muses' morning and their evening star." But Drayton seems to have been a man of independent soul, and apt to make patronage difficult. And he ruined his chances at court by offending one greater than Henry, even James himself. He committed the indiscretion of praising James with indecent haste before he had remembered the formality of mourning Elizabeth. Therefore he was in the hands of the booksellers all his life, and the "swarth and melancholy face" of his portraits bewray one who has gone through the furnace of affliction. "My soul," he writes to Prince Henry, "hath seen the extremity of Time and Fortune."

He had an individuality. Beginning his poetic career as a disciple of Spenser, he succeeded in throwing off the benumbing influence, and worked his way by himself to a truer and finer lyricism. He learnt to handle the pastoral more freely and with truer vision than any Spenserian: he learnt to draw from the Lyra Heroica a richer harmony than that of the "Faerie Queene." In the shaping of that characteristically English form of the sonnet, which culminated in Shakespeare, Drayton, too, played his part: his "Amours" to the mistress whom he names Idea, and whom recent scholarship has identified as Anne Goodere, served as an indisputable model for the greater man. The crowning feature of his work is surely its inexhaustible variety: he turns easily from the intensity of his most famous sonnet to the exultant march of the "Agincourt" poem or to the dainty fairy-world of the "Nymphidia." He often forces the note; he is often tedious, often flat and uninspired: but the poet is there behind it all, ready to thrill you, when the moment comes, with unexpected melody and rare intuition.

VALEDICTION.

Since there's no help, come let us kiss and part!
Nay, I have done, you get no more of me,
And I am glad, yea glad with all my heart,
That thus so cleanly I myself can free!
Shake hands for ever, cancel all our vows,
And, when we meet at any time again,
Be it not seen in either of our brows
That we one jot of former love retain.
Now at the last gasp of Love's latest breath,
When, his pulse failing, Passion speechless lies,
When Faith is kneeling by his bed of death,
And Innocence is closing up his eyes,
Now if thou wouldst, when all have given him over,
From death to life thou might'st him yet recover!

TO HIS COY LOVE.

A CANZONET.

I pray thee leave, love me no more,
Call home the heart you gave me,
I but in vain that saint adore
That can but will not save me.
These poor half kisses kill me quite;
Was ever man thus served?
Amidst an ocean of delight
For pleasure to be starved.

Show me no more those snowy breasts
With azure riverets branched,
Where whilst mine eye with plenty feasts,
Yet is my thirst not stanch'd.
O Tantalus, thy pains ne'er tell,
By me thou art prevented;
'Tis nothing to be plagued in Hell,
But thus in Heaven tormented.

Clip me no more in those dear arms,
Nor thy life's comfort call me;
O these are but too powerful charms
And do but more enthrall me.
But see how patient I am grown
In all this coil about thee;
Come, nice thing, let thy heart alone;
I cannot live without thee.

A SUMMER'S EVE.

Clear had the day been from the dawn.
All chequered was the sky,
Thin clouds, like scarfs of cobweb lawn,
Veiled heaven's most glorious eye.
The wind had no more strength than this,
That leisurely it blew,
To make one leaf the next to kiss,
That closely by it grew.
The rills, that on the pebbles played,
Might now be heard at will;
This world they only music made,
Else everything was still.
The flowers, like brave embroidered girls,
Looked as they most desired
To see whose head with orient pearls
Most curiously was tired.
And to itself the subtle air
Such sovereignty assumes,
That it received too large a share
From nature's rich perfumes.

DAFFODILL.

Batte. Gorbo, as thou camest this way
By yonder little hill,
Or as thou through the fields didst stray
Saw'st thou my daffodill?

She's in a frock of Lincoln green,
Which colour likes her sight,
And never hath her beauty seen
But through a veil of white.

Than roses richer to behold
That trim up lovers' bowers,
The pansy and the marigold,
Tho' Phoebus' paramours.

Gorbo. Thou well describest the daffodill!
It is not full an hour
Since by the spring near yonder hill
I saw that lovely flower.

Batte. Yet my fair flower thou didst not meet
Nor news of her didst bring,
And yet my daffodill's more sweet
Than that by yonder spring.

Gorbo. I saw a shepherd that doth keep,
In yonder field of lilies,
Was making (as he fed his sheep)
A wreath of daffodillies.

Batte. Yet, Gorbo, thou deludest me still;
My flower thou didst not see,
For, know, my pretty daffodill
Is worn of none but me.

To show itself but near her feet
No lily is so bold,
Except to shade her from the heat
Or keep her from the cold.

Gorbo. Through yonder vale as I did pass,
Descending from the hill,
I met a smirking bonny lass;
They call her Daffodill.

Whose presence as along she went
The pretty flowers did greet
As though their heads they downward bent
With homage to her feet.

And all the shepherds that were nigh,
From top of every hill
Unto the valleys loud did cry,
'There goes sweet Daffodill.'

Batte. Ay, gentle shepherd, now with joy
Thou all my flocks dost fill;
That's she alone, kind shepherd boy;
Let us to Daffodill.

CHATS WITH WALT WHITMAN.

UNDER this title Miss Grace Gilchrist prints in the February number of Temple Bar a series of interesting little talks with "the good grey poet." It was in the quiet Quaker city of Philadelphia, towards the close of the poet's life, these meetings were held. Walt Whitman lived in the somewhat dreary and ugly suburb of Camden, New Jersey, and he would, says Miss Gilchrist, on many a fine afternoon cross by the five o'clock ferry to Philadelphia, and taking the car, reach our house in time for tea-supper. After that was over, we would all take our chairs out, American fashion, beside the "stoop"—that is, on to the pavement, below the front steps of the house. The poet sat in our midst, in a large bamboo rocking-chair, and we listened as he talked, on many subjects—human and literary. Walt Whitman was at this time fifty-eight, but he looked seventy. His beard and hair were snow-white, his complexion a fine colour, and unwrinkled. He had still, though stricken in 1873 by paralysis, a most majestic presence. He was over six feet, but he walked lame, dragging the left leg, and leaning heavily on a stick. He was dressed always in a complete suit of grey clothes with a large and spotless white linen collar, his flowing white beard filling in the gap at his strong sunburnt throat.

The authors he talked most of were Homer, Shakespeare, Scott, George Sand, and Bulwer Lytton; Scott he loved even better than Shakespeare. One quaint method of reading which he indulged in would have driven the devout book-lover wild. He would tear a book to pieces—literally shed its leaves, putting the loose sheets into the breast pocket of his coat—that he might pursue his reading in less weighty fashion under the branches of his favourite trees at Timber Creek. Many have averred that they never heard him laugh—he laughed rarely, but when he did, it was a deep, hearty melodious laugh. He laughed at very simple things—homely jests, and episodes in daily life.

He was quite indifferent, however, to any form of persiflage, repartee, chaffing, or any form of "smart" talk—remaining always perfectly grave and silent amid that kind of by-play; or, as with an importunate questioner, generally withdrawing himself altogether from the group of talkers and finally leaving the room. In his large, serene, sane personality there was no room for trifling or the display of "intellectual fireworks"; with him existed no arrière pensée. His phraseology was direct and simple, free from all bookishness or studied grace of expression. He stuck to homely Yankee idioms, with a fair percentage of slang.

One evening in October, one of those lovely, warm, still evenings of the American fall, the conversation turned on beauty. Walt doubted if extreme beauty was well for a woman.

"But," queried one, "how could the Greeks have got on without it?"

"Now arises the almost terrific question," answered Walt: "is there not something artificial and fictitious in what we call beauty? Should we appreciate the severe beauty of the Greeks? The wholesome outdoor life of the Greeks begets something so different from ours, which is the result of books, picture galleries, and bred in the drawing-room." The grace of the Venus of Milo is here instanced. Another talker (a woman) suggests that her face lacks intellect. Walt rejoined energetically, "So much the better. Intellect is a fiend. It is a curse that all our American boys and girls are taught so much. There's a boy I take a great interest in; he is sent to a school in Camden, his people want him to be taught shorthand and three languages; why, it's like putting jewels on a person before he has got shoes."

Prof. Dowden was an English admirer whose letters Walt greatly prized. One passage in one of Prof. Dowden's essays especially appealed to him: "I was much moved—unspeakably so, by that quotation Dowden gives from Hugo—'Fine genius is like a promontory stretching out into the infinite.'"

He liked reading critiques on himself. In one of these chats by the creek, his friend asked him how he liked one which had appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine for that year (1877).

"I liked it," said Walt: "I was a good deal tickled by the title ('Walt Whitman the Poet of Joy')—the dashing off kind. I was so pleased with it that I wrote to the office of the Gentleman's Magazine for Clive's address, sending a portrait of myself, but received no answer." [The real name of the author of this appreciative article was Arthur O'Shaughnessy.]

"I sometimes wonder," he mused, "that I am not more ostracised than I am on account of my free opinions."

"Yes," replied his friend, "we are almost completely so. In Philadelphia the question is—What church do you go to?"

"Good, you don't know what you escape by it. It is well to go to church sometimes to see what people are like. For my part, I am so out of these things, that I am quite surprised, when I go, to find myself living in such a different world. The people round here have been warned by the school director of my poems, and that I am an improper person, and bad character for the young men and maidens to associate with. The time of my boyhood was a very restless and unhappy one; I did not know what to do."

Of the late Mr. Addington Symonds, Walt spoke with very warm regard, and of his literary admiration he was justly proud.

"What Mr. Symonds admires in my books is the comradeship; he says that he had often felt it, and wanted to express it, but dared not! He thinks that the Englishman has it in him, but puts on gruffness, and is ashamed to show it."

Walt Whitman was not a full or copious letter-writer; his letters were, in the main, more like telegraphic despatches than letters, the postcard being his favourite mode of written communication.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1898.

No. 1346, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .               | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. . . . .                | 0 15 3  | 0 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE proposal to found a Lewis Carroll cot at the Children's Hospital in Great Ormond-street has been taken up by the St. James's Gazette, and is supported by a strong committee. A sum of a thousand pounds is needed, and subscriptions may be sent to the hon. treasurer of the fund, Mr. J. T. Black, of the firm of Messrs. A. & C. Black, Soho-square, or to the editor of our contemporary. The following passage from Mrs. Meynell's article on the subject, printed in the St. James's Gazette, is much to the point: "A whole edition of Alice in Wonderland was given away by that generous hand to the children in hospital wards many years ago; and now that he is gone it is to this talk of his love of children that we turn for the inspiration of a lasting remembrance of him. While he lived it was most evident that he made the happy a little happier; since his death, and while his friends mourn for him, it becomes more appropriate that in his name we should try the other way and make the suffering a little happy. We have not to go far in quest of suffering, and the succour of the hospital is an accessible thing beyond all price."

ONE of the last things that Lewis Carroll wrote for children was an introduction to a little story just published, by Mrs. E. G. Wilcox, called The Lost Plum Cake: a Tale for Tiny Boys. In this introduction Lewis Carroll talks to parents very wisely about the dreadful times children have in church in sermon time—understanding so little, and being obliged to sit quite still. For their relief he makes a startling proposal:

"Would it be so very irreverent to let your child have a story-book to read during the sermon, to while away that tedious half-hour, and to make church-going a bright and happy memory, instead of rousing the thought, 'I'll never go to church no more'? I think not. For my part, I should love to see the experiment tried. I am quite sure it would be a success. My advice would be to keep some books for that special purpose—I would call such books 'Sunday-treats'—and your little boy or girl would soon learn to look forward with eager hope to that half-hour once so tedious. If I were the preacher, dealing with some subject too hard for the little ones, I should love to see them all enjoying their picture-books. And if this little book should ever come to be used as a 'Sunday-treat' for some sweet baby-reader, I don't think it could serve a better purpose."

Of one thing we are sure: Lewis Carroll's own books have long been the child's antidote to sermons. If they have not been taken to church, they have filled little minds in sermon time with visions of delight, and have been responsible for much stifled laughter.

A SLIGHT collection of Lewis Carroll's more serious verse, selected mainly from Phantasmagoria (1869), has just been issued by Messrs. Macmillan, under the title Three Sunsets, accompanied by twelve delicate and graceful pictures by Miss E. Gertrude Thomson, which have, however, small relation to the text. Lewis Carroll's grave poems are not of conspicuous merit. They are fluent, lucid, and tender; they do not haunt the caves of the mind. The "Lesson in Latin," reprinted from the private magazine of a Boston school, and "Puck Lost," here printed for the first time, are more welcome. This is a stanza of the "Lesson":

"Our Latin books, in motley row,
 Invite us to our task—
 Gay Horace, stately Cicero;
 Yet there's one verb when once we know,
 No higher skill we ask:
 This ranks all other lore above—
 We've learned 'Amare means to love.'"

And here is "Puck Lost":

"Puck has fled the haunts of men:
 Ridicule has made him wary;
 In the woods, and down the glen,
 No one meets a Fairy!
 'Cream!' the greedy goblin cries—
 Empties the deserted dairy—
 Steals the spoons, and off he flies.
 Still we seek our Fairy!
 Ah! What form is entering?
 Lovelit eyes and laughter airy!
 Is not this a better thing,
 Child, whose visit thus I sing,
 Even than a Fairy?"

A ROMAN correspondent states that the Eternal City has now quite a little circle of English and American literary people. Mr. Gissing, Mr. Hall Caine, and Mr. Hornung represent fiction; Lord Rosebery and Mr. Haweis, criticism; and Mr. Astor, patronage. The principal poet is Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, the author of the magnificent Battle Hymn of the Republic, who is staying with her daughter, Mrs. Elliott. Mrs. Howe, the other day, read a paper on "Pessimism and Optimism," which was listened to, among others, by Bjornsterne Bjornson.

ST. ANDREW'S UNIVERSITY has decided to confer upon Mr. Barrie the honorary degree of LL.D. This does not, we trust, mean that Mr. Barrie will be called Dr. Barrie. But that is impossible. It is hard to think of the author of My Lady Nicotine as a Doctor of Laws!

MR. ANTHONY HOPE has caught the infection. The author of The Prisoner of Zenda, who can convince us of the reality of imaginary kingdoms, must now fall back upon the kingdoms of history. This seems to us a pity. Simon Dale, his new novel, is of the period of Charles II. The Duke of Monmouth and Nell Gwynne are among the characters. It is told in the first person—thus: "I, Simon Dale, was born on the seventh day of the seventh month in the year of Our Lord sixteen-hundred-and-forty-seven." Mr. Anthony Hope has indeed caught the infection.

THOSE readers of Punch who in their minds credit Mr. Seaman with the text of "Animal Land" are mistaken. Both pictures and descriptions are the work of Mr. E. T. Reed. We congratulate Mr. Reed on his double gift.

THE Paris students who have been hooting and insulting M. Zola during his splendid campaign do not, we are glad to say, represent the opinion of all educated youths in that city. The editor of L'Œuvre—a "Revue polyglotte ouverte aux jeunes"—M. Jean Sévère, addresses to the novelist an ode of enthusiastic felicitation on his action, in the name of a group of students and young Frenchmen.

MR. R. W. CHAMBERS'S new romance, Lorraine, which has not yet reached this country, is spoken of well in America. Whatever its claims to serious notice may be, it cannot be denied that the author's prefatory poem has unusual charm and beauty:

"When Yesterday shall dawn again,
 And the long line athwart the hill
 Shall quicken with the bugle's thrill,
 Thine own shall come to thee, Lorraine!
 Then in each vineyard, vale, and plain,
 The quiet dead shall stir the earth
 And rise, reborn, in thy new birth—
 Thou holy martyr-maid, Lorraine!
 Is it in vain thy sweet tears stain
 Thy mother's breast? Her castled crest
 Is lifted now! God guide her quest!
 She seeks thine own for thee, Lorraine!
 So Yesterday shall live again,
 And the steel line along the Rhine
 Shall cuirass thee and all that's thine.
 France lives—thy France—divine Lorraine!"

A good French translation of this poem should run through France like wildfire.

MR. CHAMBERS, however, seems to have gone further than justice would have dictated in some of his verdicts on contemporary Frenchmen, many of whom figure in the pages of his novel. Thus: "There, too, was Hugo—often ridiculous in his terrible moods, egotistical, sloppy, roaring. The Empire pinched Hugo, and he roared; and let the rest of the world judge whether, under such circumstances, there was majesty in the roar."

MR. MEREDITH'S seventieth birthday was made the occasion of a very pretty compliment to the novelist. The following letter, signed by a number of men and women prominent in literary and public life, was sent to him :

"TO GEORGE MEREDITH :

Some comrades in letters who have long valued your work send you a cordial greeting upon your seventieth birthday.

You have attained the first rank in literature, after many years of inadequate recognition. From first to last you have been true to yourself, and have always aimed at the highest mark. We are rejoiced to know that merits once perceived by only a few are now appreciated by a wide and steadily growing circle. We wish you many years of life, during which you may continue to do good work, cheered by the consciousness of good work already achieved, and encouraged by the certainty of a hearty welcome from many sympathetic readers."

THE instigators were Mr. Leslie Stephen and Mr. Gosse, and the signatories were J. M. Barrie, Walter Besant, Augustine Birrell, James Bryce, Austin Dobson, Conan Doyle, Edmund Gosse, R. B. Haldane, Thomas Hardy, Frederic Harrison, "John Oliver Hobbes," Henry James, R. C. Jebb, Andrew Lang, Alfred Lyall, W. E. H. Lecky, M. Londin, F. W. Maitland, Alice Meynell, John Morley, F. W. H. Myers, James Payn, Frederick Pollock, Anne Thackeray Ritchie, Henry Sidgwick, Leslie Stephen, Algernon Charles Swinburne, Mary A. Ward, G. F. Watts, Theodore Watts-Dunton, Wolseley. The list does not, of course, include all prominent men of letters who have fought for Mr. Meredith's fame—we miss, for example, the names of Grant Allen, Frederick Greenwood and W. E. Henley—but it is complete enough to constitute firm testimony to Mr. Meredith's power and distinction.

At the same time several of the leading papers referred to Mr. Meredith's illustrious record in terms of eulogy. The Times had a particularly good article, from which we extract the following sentences :

"There are two elements in Mr. Meredith's work which have assured his victory. One is his delight, and his power of communicating delight, in humanity and its thousand activities; in men and women, in their health, their rapid movements, their loves, their antagonisms, their sorrows, and their joys. . . . And the second unapproachable gift of the author is his portrayal of women. It seems a strong thing to say, but it is a defensible position that the only English artist who has left the world a richer gallery of fair women than Mr. Meredith is . . . Shakespeare himself. Doubtless there is a certain conscious debt on the part of the modern writer: he has drawn much from 'Twelfth Night' and 'Much Ado,' from 'The Winter's Tale' and 'Cymbeline.' But it is a great achievement to learn well the Shakespearean lesson. To perform that task one must have some share of Shakespeare's qualities—something, at least, of his subtle insight and of his magical utterance."

The Daily News and the Chronicle, to name no others, had also generous and luminous estimates of Mr. Meredith's work.

On the other hand, the Standard offered its readers a most grudging estimate of Mr. Meredith's work, containing the following sentence—"Neither his men and women nor his plots possess, as a rule, much merit, though there are some exceptions in each case"—and ending with this odd comparison :

"Mr. Meredith has not much dramatic ability, but he is something of a philosopher; and the views of life which he conveys are often such as to merit attention—not always, indeed, for their truth, but rather for their originality. We should not rank him much below Charlotte Brontë, though the authoress of Jane Eyre leaped into a sudden popularity, which some might call nozzety, such as Mr. Meredith has never attained."

Truly is the Standard a Conservative organ. In its orthography, however, may be noticed a keen desire for change. Mr. Swinburne is docked of his final "e" and Richard Feverel comes out "Feveril."

BUT the Standard has lately gone curiously wrong in its spelling of proper names. One day this week its dramatic critic announced that at the Lyceum will shortly be seen a new comedy by Mr. H. D. Traill Hitchens—an amusing amalgamation of a well-known critic with a novelist.

A JAPANESE writer has been complaining, with some reason it will be admitted, of the poor pay of Japanese authors. The rate for the work of the best native novelists is between the maximum of one yen (equal to about one and elevenpence) and forty to fifty sen (a hundredth part of a yen) per page of 400 characters. We do not know what the merits of Japanese novelists are, but however poor their stories may be, they seem to need a Sir Walter Besant to fight for them.

THE poems of Jean Ingelow in one volume will be welcomed by many. This edition, which fills 831 pages, begins with "Divided" and ends with "Perdita." It is published by Messrs. Longmans, and a portrait of the author—somewhat of a pathetic figure this, with wistful eyes—is given as a frontispiece.

THE shuffling of magazines continues. Messrs. F. V. White & Co. have just purchased The Ludgate Monthly, which was bought a few years ago by Black and White from the original proprietor.

THE following curious advertisement appears in the Author's Circular :

"SENSATIONAL ARTICLE.

"SELLING A STATE SECRET," BEING

A circumstantial account of the manner in which a secret of the French Government was marketed in London. No names are given but the representations made by the vendor as to the genuineness of the thing; to whom applications were made; who wanted the secret; and how it was ultimately disposed of, with other particulars, are given in full. First firm offer will be accepted.—Apply, &c."

FROM the New York Critic we take the following advertisement, also in its way remarkable :

"Rudyard Kipling's 'Recessional'"

The most famous poem of recent years

ON DICKINSON HAND-MADE PAPER

Rubricated Title and Signature (in facsimile of autograph)

SHEET SIX BY EIGHT INCHES

Ten cents net per copy. One hundred copies, $7.50"

It is a little odd to see a poem which is notoriously out of print in the country for which it was written, being offered by hundreds in America.

WE have received the following request :

"On March 20 Henrik Ibsen will complete his seventieth year. This day will be celebrated with great festivals in the literary world of the North, as well in Norway, the poet's native land, as in Denmark, from which country the poet's works are sent out, and to which he is bound with so many and so strong ties. The principal book-publishers will send out commemorative writings, and the theatres are preparing series-performances of plays by Ibsen. The daily paper Politiken in Copenhagen, the greatest and most widely circulated daily paper of Denmark, intends to contribute to the celebration of the day by publishing a paper, to which we take the liberty of applying for your kind assistance. Through these lines we apply to the eminent writers of Europe and America. We beg you to communicate to the readers of our paper, in a few lines (we should prefer thirty as a maximum), some impression you have received from Henrik Ibsen, his works, his rank as a dramatist, or as a thinker, his influence, if he has had any, on the literature of your country, which of his works you know, which you value most, &c., &c. We beg you to give perfectly free utterance to your opinions, whichever they may be."

Our opinions are too complex to be uttered lightly; but we wish well to the Politiken's scheme.

Summer Moths, Mr. Heinemann's new play, which is published this week, was sent by the author, while still in MS., to a critic whose opinion he "especially valued." This gentleman, described by Mr. Heinemann as "peerless among those who sit to judge" (who can he have been?) "expressed astonishment at the relentless morality of the play." Such was not the view of the Licensor of Plays, who, for "acting purposes," at once proceeded to remove the "relentless morality": thus making Summer Moths, so Mr. Heinemann tells us, "if not positively immoral—unmoral, to say the least." The play is now printed as originally written.

IF a moral play be a play where the villain of the piece reaps in the fourth act what he sowed in the first, then Summer Moths is a moral play. We presume that Mr. Heinemann wrote it as a warning to young men that if they seduce the parlour-maid and the lady housekeeper disagreeable consequences are bound to ensue. In this case there is a kind of double or reflex moral, due to the modern rendering of an ancient command, which becomes "the sins of the children shall be visited upon the fathers." For Philip's father also suffers.

This unfortunate gentleman (he is a General and a K.C.B.), after having had the pleasure of calling his son a hound, and telling him to "go—go—to hell," is exiled. "I am driven out from the home of my ancestors, to spend an old age of disgrace and misery among strangers. Fact is, I am unfit now to think of again serving my Queen." At this juncture two American ladies are real kind to him :

"MRS. WATSON: 'Let us, in your great trouble, stand by you—be your friends, your comforters. Join us on our journey.'

MISS WATSON (very softly): 'Come with us—come with us!'

GENERAL: 'Ladies, I thank you. You are right; there is no place for me in England. (Taking both their extended hands.) Let us continue our journey.'

So ends the play.

MARK TWAIN, in the immortal legend of the fishwife, has offered a specimen of German as she is constructed and sexed. From a little leaflet of news issued by an English clergyman in a little German town, for the benefit of his parishioners, we take another specimen, consisting of a re-translation by himself (into Teutonised-English) of an English paragraph, describing the arrival of an elephant in London, which had been translated into German :

"Scarcely had the Overseers the Backs turned, when the colossal Thickskinnedone with a single Movement his Chains broke and quietly away-walked. Very cleverly made he himself his Way between all the betweenstanding Carriages and Loadcarts through, until he into the open Street succeeded. It was yet very early on the Morning and therefore yet rather foggy and manempty. Suddenly before a Bakers-showwindow Halt making, observed he for himself the fresh, outlaid, appetising White-loaves. A weak Push of the mighty Head sufficed in order the whole Window out to lift, and a single Wave of the Trunk swept the whole steaming Bakedwares on to the Street-pavement. In the midst between the steaming Bakery stood he now, and let himself one Bread after the other devour. There however neared the Bumbailiffs [Haescher: see Flügel] in Form of his Keeper and laid to the Burglar the Handkow. The Baker received as Damages the by him demanded Sum of 78 Shillings."

A VIENNESE sculptor, Ernest Hegenbarth, has completed a bust of Mark Twain, which is said to be an excellent likeness. The original belongs to the sitter, but no doubt casts will some day be procurable.

We have much pleasure in making it known that the good folks of Crofton-hill Ranch, Florence, New Mexico, are anxious to establish a circulating library and literary institute in their midst. One of their number is by way of being a poet, and he has sent in a volume entitled Alamo, and Other Verses, with the information that the proceeds of the sale of the volume will be applied to defraying the expense of supplying Crofton-hill Ranch, Florence, New Mexico, with the above luxuries. Such aith deserves reward.

MR. KIPLING, in "McAndrew's Prayer," makes the old engineer utter the plea :

"Lord, send a man like Robbie Burns to sing the song of steam!"

It seems that a poet, although not exactly a Robbie Burns, had already arisen to do so some years before. An American writer, named George W. Cutter, wrote the "Song of Steam" in the middle of the century; and a capital song it is, as the following extracts will show :

"How I laughed, as I lay concealed from sight
For many a countless hour,
At the childish boast of human might,
And the pride of human power.

When I saw an army upon the land,
A navy upon the seas,
Creeping along, a snail-like band,
Or waiting the wayward breeze ;
When I marked the peasant fairly reel
With the toil which he faintly bore,
As he feebly turned the tardy wheel,
Or tugged at the weary oar ;

When I measured the panting courser's speed,
The flight of the courier-dove,
As they bore the law a king decreed,
Or the lines of impatient love—

I could not but think how the world would feel,
As these were outstripped afar,
When I should be bound to the rushing wheel,
Or chained to the flying car!

Ha! ha! ha! they found me at last ;
They invited me forth at length,
And I rushed to my throne with a thunder-blast,
And laughed in my iron strength."

THE following pithy sentences are printed on the little book-marker which is distributed among the young members of the Library League, in connexion with the Cleveland Public Library, Ohio. They are sensible enough to be worth copying in children's libraries in this country :

"Please don't handle me with dirty hands. I should feel ashamed to be seen when the next little boy borrowed me.

Or leave me out in the rain. Books can catch cold as well as children.

Or make marks on me with your pen or pencil. It would spoil my looks.

Or lean your elbows on me when you are reading me. It hurts.

Or open me and lay me face down on the table. You wouldn't like to be treated so.

Or putting between my leaves a pencil or anything thicker than a single sheet of paper. It would strain my back.

Whenever you are through reading me, if you are afraid of losing your place, don't turn down the corner of one of my leaves, but have a neat little bookmark to put in where you stopped, and then close me and lay me down on my side, so that I can have a good, comfortable rest.

Remember that I want to visit a great many other little boys after you are through with me. Besides, I may meet you again some day, and you would be sorry to see me looking old and torn and soiled. Help me to keep fresh and clean and I will help you to be happy."

THE Duke of Devonshire will preside at the anniversary dinner of the Royal Literary Fund at the Whitehall Rooms on Tuesday, May 17.

A SUPPLEMENT to Dr. Spiers's French-English and English-French dictionary is in preparation. Prof. Victor Spiers requests that suggestions for additions and corrections may be sent to him at King's College London.

MISS ARABELLA KENEALY, the author of Dr. Janet of Harley Street, has written a new novel, entitled Woman and the Shadow. The heroine is a parvenu. The book will be published by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. early in March.

A HANDBOOK to the coming County Council Election will be issued immediately as a "Westminster Popular" from the office of the Westminster Gazette. Its title will be The Fight for the County Council: an Elector's Catechism; or, One-Hundred-and-One Reasons why every Loyal Londoner should Vote Progressive. It will deal in dialogue form with all important questions before the electors, and will be illustrated with cartoons and sketches by Mr. F. Carruthers Gould.

EARLY next month will be published a second series of The Law's Lumber Room, by Mr. Francis Watt. As in the first series, the essays deal with strange and picturesque parts of our old law. The subjects are fewer, but they have been discussed in greater detail. Among the articles are "Tyburn Tree," "Some Disused Roads to Matrimony," "The Border Laws," and "The Serjeant-at-Law."

A FEATURE of Mr. Budgett Meakin's Romance of Morocco, now preparing for the press, is the critical review of over two hundred volumes on that country in English, Spanish, French, Italian, German, Danish, Dutch and Arabic, the perusal of which has been a labour of years.

THE first number of a new periodical reaches us, in the shape of The Sculptor, an illustrated magazine for those interested in sculpture.

LIEUT. PEARY, the Arctic explorer, who will in June make a determined effort to reach the North Pole, has completed the narrative of his seven Arctic expeditions. The book, which is one of considerable length, will be published in April by Messrs. Methuen.

A PARODY of The War of the Worlds has been written, and will be published shortly in Arrowsmith's Bristol Library. The two authors, Messrs. C. L. Graves and E. V. Lucas, have agreed upon The War of the Wenuses as a title for their travosty.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. are about to publish a small volume on The Study of Children and their School Training, by Dr. Francis Warner, of the London Hospital. Though addressed chiefly to teachers, parents, and others in daily contact with children, it will contain also information that is likely to be of interest to those who are called upon to direct education, philanthropy, and other forms of social work, as well as those concerned with mental science.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE.

In editing a new edition of Religio Medici and Sir Thomas Browne's other essays (Smith, Elder & Co.) Dr. Morley Roberts has written an introduction which might serve as a model for similar undertakings. It is extremely convenient to have a brief and trustworthy memoir giving the salient facts of an author's life, and dealing as little as possible in mere opinion. This is the modest and sensible course pursued by Dr. Morley Roberts. He does not, however, leave us entirely without guidance. Effacing himself he reprints De Quincey's eloquent testimony, and a passage from Carlyle, so noble of itself, so worthy of its subject, that we cannot refrain from repeating it.

"The conclusion of the essay on urn burial is absolutely beautiful; a still elegiac mood, so soft, so deep, so solemn and tender, like the song of some departed saint flitting faint under the canopy of heaven; an echo of deepest meaning from the great and famous nations of the dead."

Carlyle undoubtedly selected for this eulogy the finest passage ever written by "the great and solemn master of Old English." Those who doubt it will do well to read it again from the paragraph beginning "But the iniquity of oblivion blindly scattereth her poppy." Significant, too, is the fact that the fullest appreciation of Browne comes from a mind of the nineteenth century. The intervening eighteenth—the century of Addison, Steel, Fielding, and Dr. Johnson—with its love of the positive, the lucid, the material, was out of sympathy with this prose dreamer and poet. Victorian England is more akin to that of Elizabeth and James than to the Restoration and post-Restoration period. Browne himself was a connecting link between the two last mentioned. He was born in 1605, a fortnight before the discovery of the Gunpowder Plot, the year in which Bacon published his Advancement of Learning, when Shakespeare had still eleven years to live, and Milton was not born. He died in 1682, so that he lived through a stirring epoch in national history. "The world to me is but a dream or mock-show," he said, "and we all but pantaloons and anticks."

Dr. Browne was a very skilful and observant physician. In the Letter to a Friend (which we are glad to see included in this volume) several proofs of this are given. Take the account of his first visit to the patient for whose demise this is an epistle of consolation. It has a peculiar interest for the student of literature:

"Upon my first visit I was bold to tell them who had not let fall all hope of his recovery that in my sad opinion he was not like to behold a grasshopper, much less to pluck another fig; and in no long time after seemed to discover that odd mortal symptom in him, not mentioned by Hippocrates, that is, to lose his own face, and look like some of his near relations; for he maintained not his proper countenance, but looked like his uncle, the lines of whose face lay deep and invisible in his healthy visage before; for as from our beginning we run through variety of looks, before we come to consistent and settled faces so before our end, by sick and languishing alterations, we put on new visages; and in our retreat to earth may fall upon such looks which from community of seminal originals were before latent in us."

Most of us who have been at a death-bed know something of this curious change, but to what effective purpose is it put in "In Memoriam"!

"As sometimes in a dead man's face,
To those who watch it more and more,
A likeness hardly seen before
Comes out—to some one of his race:
So, dearest, now thy brows are cold,
I see thee what thou art and know
Thy likeness to the wise below,
Thy kindred to the great of old."

Life to his sombre genius was almost wholly "a meditation on death." He looked forward to it with majestic calm during all the thinking part of a life of seventy-seven years, and he met it fearlessly at last. He seems to have carried on the processes of faith and doubt in separate compartments of his brain so that one never interfered with the other. Indeed, his scientifically trained mind found the oddest objections to inspiration, as, for instance, when in one of his most pious moods it suddenly occurs to him to ask how Moses reduced the golden calf to ashes, for "that mystical metal of gold, whose solary and celestial nature I admire, exposed unto the violence of fire grows only hot, and liquefies and consumeth not." Further on he recalls the assertion of the "chymicks" that at the last fire "all shall be crystallised and reverberated into glass." But these and a hundred other casually stated difficulties are dealt with wholly by the understanding; they do not influence his faith in the slightest. The man of science, as is seen over and over again in his "Vulgar Errors" can bring cold irrefragable logic to the demolition of beliefs he is out of sympathy with, but the same man on the other side of his nature is a religious poet—mystic, credulous, and steeped in superstition. He is a firm believer in witches and witchcraft, corresponds with alchemists and astrologers like Dr. Dee (misprinted Lee in this volume), and has a hankering after the Philosopher's Stone.

His great contemporary Milton has said that to write an epic you must live an epic, and Browne has left on record an obverse of this truth that puzzles his latest as it did his earlier editors.

"Now for my life," he says in the Religio, "it is a miracle of thirty years, which to relate were not an history but a piece of poetry, and would sound to common ears like a fable. For the world, I count it not an inn but an hospital, and a place not to live but to die in."

Upon this Dr. Morley Roberts, following Dr. Johnson, coldly remarks that "its actual incidents would justify no such description"; therein he reverts to the eighteenth century. What we have to remember is that Browne was literally cradled in mysticism. "His father," relates Mrs. Littleton, "used to open his breast when he was asleep and kiss it in prayers over him, as 'tis said of Origen's father, that the Holy Ghost would take possession there." The point is curious because it illustrates a vulgar misapprehension of romance. Had Browne, as a Cavalier or Roundhead, undergone perilous adventures and hair'sbreadth escapes, witnessed "battles, sieges, fortunes," and cut a striking figure in the Civil War, then if heart and brain had been as callous and unimpressionable as they usually are in the soldier type, to the common mind he would have been a hero of romance; his life would have been a poem. But true romance lies not in the action but in the spirit, and he whose imagination saw the air thronged with angels and night populous with devils and spectres, to whom all creation was a perpetual wonder and mystery, and death only the beginning of life, even in tranquil Norfolk, was, as Pater insists, a true romantic. "Every man is a microcosm," he says, "and carries the whole world about with him."

Unquestionably the best of his work is in the Urn Burial, where he had a theme peculiarly adapted to his genius. In the Religio there is a certain immaturity, emphasised to us by the fact that modern doubt and difficulties lie in a different atmosphere. The influence of Montaigne is also too fresh and vivid; inspiring him to write such paradoxes as the famous one laughed at so often since in the Ho-Eliañe letters and elsewhere. "I might be content to procreate like trees without conjunction," &c., a passage that reads singularly now we know that forty-one years of married life and twelve children were awaiting in the unseen future even as he wrote. Yet it contains some lovely examples of his style, such as the passage in which this occurs: "There is in the universe a stair or manifest scale of creatures, rising not disorderly or in confusion, but with a comely method and proportion."

Urn Burial was written in the full and mellow maturity of his power, although there is visible even here some of that jotting and note-making which give his compositions more the air of rude drafts than finished pictures. Often, too, one sees by the impotent conclusion of a paragraph that he likes to call up a succession of fine images merely for the pleasure of beholding them. A single quotation will illustrate this:

"Why the female ghosts appear unto Ulysses before the heroes and masculine spirits; why the psyche, or soul, of Tiresias is of the masculine gender, who being blind sees more than all the rest in hell; why the funeral suppers consisted of eggs, beans, smallage, and lettuce, since the dead are made to eat asphodels about the Elysian meadows; why, since there is no sacrifice acceptable nor any propitiation in the covenant of the grave, men set up the deity of Morta, and fruitlessly adored divinities without ears, it cannot escape some doubt."

It belonged to the character of his mind that he delighted to pose himself with unanswerable queries, such as "What songs the syrens sang," or "What name Achilles assumed when he hid himself among women." He died as he foretold—on his birthday; and "the tragical abomination" he dreaded was perpetrated on his bones, which were "knaved out of the grave," and his skull placed on exhibition at Norwich in 1840—three centuries after death.

WHAT THE PEOPLE READ.

X.—AN AMBASSADOR OF COMMERCE.

IN the course of a desultory conversation in the hotel smoking-room it came out that the big man with the iron-grey beard had just come back from Canada. Further enquiry elicited the information that once every year he made a business trip across the Atlantic, and that altogether he had crossed thirty-four times. I had noticed as I entered the room that he was reading a penny paper-covered novelette, which he laid down on the table by his side in order to join in the conversation. The circumstance impressed me. Bearded men are not often seen with novelettes, which are usually supposed to be the joy of housemaids.

"I should uncommonly like a couple of long voyages every year," I remarked. "It would give me time to read such a lot of books that I shall never be able to read otherwise. Now I suppose you get through a deal of reading between here and Quebec?"

"It's about the only time I do read," he replied, "and I always lay in a big stock for the voyage."

"And how do you select your books? I always find that the very books I leave behind me on a holiday are just the books I wish I had brought."

"I never have any difficulty about that," he said. "For the last twenty-five years—more than that, I should say—I have stuck to the same plan. Just before I start I send out and buy the whole year's numbers of the Family Herald, and all the monthly stories in the Family Herald Story Teller. And then I sit down with a pipe and read 'em all through. If I don't get through them before I'm back in England again, I finish 'em up at odd times. If they don't last out, I start afresh on them, and read some of them again."

"I didn't know they were read much by men."

"Oh, don't you make any mistake! I always lend them, when I've done with them, to other men on board, and they like 'em better than anything. They're the most popular things on the ship."

"And they interest you? I should have thought they were scarcely—well—meaty enough—milk for babes, you know. But I've never read any of them myself."

"Ah, I expect you go in for what they call literature!"

"Well, I skim most of the books that get themselves talked about. Don't you care for the ordinary novel?"

"I can't understand what people see in the novels that are so popular. Now, a man on board wanted me to read Phroso. He said it was exciting. Well, I tried; but I couldn't do it. I wanted to shy it into the sea. There was another book, too, called Many Cargoes. That was a bit better; but I'd far rather read a Family Herald story."

"But in what point is it superior—say, to Phroso?"

"Well, now you ask me more than I can tell you. You see, I don't want to know why I like a story. I know quite well when I do like it. And if I pick up one of these novels that people talk about I may like it or I may not. If I buy fifty-two Family Heralds I know that I shall enjoy reading them, every one of them. Some are better than others, of course. I'm told that a good many of them are written by really good writers; but I don't know anything about that. I only know that I've found out exactly the sort of reading that suits me, and I intend to stick to it. Ah, you may laugh."

"I'm not laughing. I'm rather envious of anyone who knows how to satisfy himself with such certainty."

"Well, you see, I don't ask for much. I only want a story that I can read easily while I'm smoking, and a story that will just take my mind and—put it to sleep, so to speak."

"Some people read to stimulate thought, you know."

"Well, I read to prevent myself thinking. That's the difference," he replied.

THE LONDON OF THE WRITERS.

VI.—THE COCKNEY SENTIMENT.

DR. JOHNSON would not have said with Sir Fopling Flutter: "Beyond Hyde Park all is a desert." But the sentiment was in his heart; and the Doctor's contempt for the country differed from Sir Fopling's only in being more discreet. For whereas Sir Fopling's arrows fell at Hyde Park-corner, the Doctor's flew from Fleet-street to Mull, and thence glanced off to Pekin. "What is Pekin?" one hears him exclaim. "Sir, ten thousand Londoners would drive all the people of Pekin; they would drive them like deer." In his writings Johnson showed himself no less London-proud. He snuggled within London, and declared that none but those who lived in it could conceive its happiness. Even when he defended the countryman from the gibes of the cockney—which he did once—the cockney was not so much cudgelled as the countryman was awed.

Dr. Johnson remains the typical exponent of the cockney sentiment. All the more is he that because he was a Londoner by adoption. There is no London-lover like the man who has fought for his footing in the metropolis, and would rather have gone under than have gone back. And Johnson, asserting the Fleet-street pavement, thrusting porters aside, but leading old women by the hand, ambling from tavern to tavern, and known as familiarly as Temple Bar, is the incarnation of the Londoner's joy in London.

The cockney sentiment has of course varied in nobility. In Johnson it was of the best workaday kind. It is not very noble in Lady Malapert: "O law!" exclaimed that lady, "what should I do in the country? There's no levées, no Mall, no plays, no tea at Siam's, no Hyde Park." It is no loftier in Shestone's lady of the ballad, who refuses a Lincolnshire squire's hand:

"To give up the opera, the park, and the ball,
For to view the stag's horns in an old country hall;
To have neither China nor Indian to see!
Nor a laceman to plague in the morning—not she!

To forsake the dear play-house, Quin, Garrick, and Clive,
Who by dint of mere humour had kept her alive;
To forego the full box for his lonesome abode,
O Heavens! she should faint, she should die on the road."

Thus a woman of fashion. The man of fashion's feeling is usually nearer to Johnson's. He feels what women do not—the charm of mere place. To be in London, to be in the "full tide of existence," to "take a walk down Fleet-street," to saunter in the "sweet shady side of Pall Mall"—these are the delights to which he would choose to give expression. To the true Londoner London gives a nameless relish to pleasures equally possible in the country. Tom Hood's cockney moralised correctly when tempted into the country by his cousin Giles:

"After all, an't there new-laid eggs to be had upon Holborn Hill?
And dairy-fed pork in Broad St. Giles's, and fresh butter wherever you will?
And a covered cart that brings cottage bread quite rustical-like and brown?
So one isn't so very uncountrified in the very heart of the town.
Howsoever my mind's made up, and although I'm sure cousin Giles will be vexed,
I mean to book me an inside place up to town upon Saturday next,
And if nothing happens, soon after ten, I shall be at the old Bell and Crown,
And perhaps I may come to the country again, when London is all burnt down."

Dr. Johnson would have grunted approval of this. But the cockney sentiment has been enlarged since Johnson's day. London is loved now for many things which affected him not. The Londoner has cultivated his eye. Johnson, indeed, saw men, and heard men talk, and had the news hot from the press. But such a genuine little poem as Henry S. Leigh's "A Cockney's Evening Song" reflects a mood which Johnson never knew.

"Fades the twilight in the last golden gleam
Thrown by the sunset on upland and stream;
Glints o'er the Serpentine—tips Notting Hill—
Dies on the summit of proud Pentonville.

Temples of Mammon are voiceless again—
Lonely policemen inherit Mark-lane—
Silent is Lothbury—quiet Cornhill—
Babel of Commerce, thine echoes are still.

Far to the South—where the wanderer strays,
Lost among graveyards and riverward ways,
Hardly a footfall and hardly a breath
Comes to dispute Laurence—Pountney with Death.

Westward the stream of Humanity glides;
'Busses are proud of their dozen insides.
Put up thy shutters, grim Care, for to-day—
Mirth and the lamplighter hurry this way.

Out on the glimmer weak Hesperus yields!
Gas for the cities and stars for the fields.
Daisies and buttercups, do as ye list;
I and my friends are for music and whist."

In our own day London pride is not maintained on jests at the expense of the country. The truest singers of London life have watched the west wind on corn, have inhaled the pinewoods, and laughed under the smiting of clean rain. But they say, or rather Mr. Selwyn Image has said:

"Yet are these souls of coarser grain,
Or else more flexible, who find
Strange, infinite allurements lurk,
Undreamed of by the simpler mind,
Along these streets, within these walls,
Of cafés, shops, and music-halls.

I'll call not these the best, nor those:

The country fashions, or the town:
On each descend heaven's bounteous rains,
On each the impartial sun looks down.
Why should we gird and argue friend;
Not follow, where our natures tend?

The secret's this: where'er our lot,
To read, mark, learn, digest them well,
The devious paths our mortals take,
To gain at length our heaven or hell:
Alike in some still rural scene
Or Regent-street and Bethnal Green."

Even this is cold and argumentative. Mr. Henley, Mr. Laurence Binyon, Mr. Davidson, and other London poets, go further. They obliterate the distinctions between town and country. They see the march of the seasons in Holborn, and for them the sunset in St. James's Park would not be improved if the sea instead of the duck-pond rolled in its light. Such sight was not given to Johnson; such poetry could not have come from Lamb. Lamb's love of London surpassed Johnson's in breadth, in humanity, in detailed sympathy; but it had not the multitude of tendrils with which Mr. Henley's or Mr. Binyon's is furnished. He could exult, indeed, in the press of the Strand; but these can do more, they exult on a higher plane.

Yet the classical expressions of the love of London are Elizabethan still. Herrick's cry, on his return to town, stands in that class:

"From the dull confines of the drooping west,
To see the day spring from the pregnant east,
Ravish'd in spirit, I come, nay more, I fly
To thee, blest place of my nativity!
Thus, thus, with hallow'd foot I touch the ground,
With thousand blessings by thy fortune
crown'd.

O fruitful Genius! that bestowest here
An everlasting plenty year by year;
O place! O people! manners! framed to please

All nations, customs, kindreds, languages!
I am a free-born Roman; suffer then
That I amongst you live a citizen.

London my home is; though by hard fate sent

Into a long and irksome banishment;
Yet since call'd back, henceforward let me be,
O native country, repossess'd by thee!
For, rather than I'll to the west return,
I'll beg of thee first here to have mine urn.

Weak I am grown, and must in short time fall;

Give thou my sacred relics burial!"

And it were strange if Shakespeare had not appealed to the cockney sentiment. Surely he did so in the great chorus passage on the return of Harry the Fifth from Agincourt. For who can doubt that the Bankside audience appropriated it in that sense, and by it were confirmed in their London self-consciousness?

"But now behold
In the quick forge and working-house of thought,

How London doth pour out her citizens.
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
Like to the senators of the antique Rome,
With the plebeians swarming at their heels,
Go forth and fetch their conquering Cæsar in."

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

THE question of literature in this present frenzied state of Paris is an idle one. At any other time two such notable books as La Cathédrale and Le Désastre, with their actual and historic importance, would have created a wide interest. Who reads them? Who talks of them? Who writes about them? First the affaire Dreyfus rolled a tidal wave of passion over Paris that threatened reason. It only subsided to burst in a menace of revolution in the affaire Esterhazy. Had Paris then possessed a man of any prestige or political power, she was ripe for a coup d'état. There was nobody, and one of the infinite psychological moments of her broken history passed in a gust of words and a few blows in the Chamber. The incident was useful to Forain and Caran d'Ache in the Figaro, and it produced considerable difficulties in social existence. In the dining-room, in the salon, in the smoking-room, the amenities of conversation are momentarily suspended. It has become positively dangerous to speak of anything but the weather to your dearest friend. And even the weather is sure, sooner or later, to bring us back to the dangerous latitude below the Equator, by the explosive mention of a certain island, and the eternal, inevitable question of Dreyfus's innocence or culpability. For there is no escape. As well have tried at the time of the war to ignore the existence of the Prussians. The fact demands the genius of a Goethe, and as we are all human and passionate and excitable here, we make no pretence to think of anything else.

The affaire Zola has at last landed us in full hysterics. Reason itself has flown. The city, from palace to basement, is divided into two camps. The army, with its despotic traditions, its inquisitorial pride on one side; Emile Zola, with his noble demand for justice to the individual on the other. Stevenson, in his delightful essay on Fontainebleau, noted two striking features in French and Anglo-Saxon character. The Anglo-Saxon is essentially dishonest; the French has no understanding of fair play. The lack of the most rudimentary conception of justice as an abstract right and virtue in the French mind is astounding. Sadder reading than that of the arguments of the anti-Semites, or the partisans of the army in this lamentable affair, could not well be conceived. That Dreyfus, innocent or guilty, has an equal claim upon justice is what they would willingly rend you limb from limb if they could for daring to admit. A couple of days ago Saint-Genest, in the front page of the Figaro, wrote a long article in the name of the outraged army to which he has the honour to belong. Will it be believed that the argument he brought forward against the Revision, the basis of his belief in the unfortunate exile's guilt, was the fact that Dreyfus, a Jew, was anti-pathetic to all his brother officers, Christians! And the iniquity of this reasoning of a prejudiced schoolboy in so grave a case, where the honour and happiness of an entire family are concerned, which involves far more even than the life of a fellow being, has not struck a single reader of the Figaro, has not elicited a word of protest from any quarter.

The French are an interesting, a sparkling, a delightful race; but if I ever decide upon committing a crime I shall betake myself to the shores of perfidious Albion. Whatever the faults of the English—and they are not more perfect than the French—at least they do not publicly advocate the despatching of a British subject to distant penal settlements for life on the ground that he is generally anti-pathetic. Indeed, the amiable Saint-Genest went a step further. With a candour we can never sufficiently commend, however much it may shock us, he admits, because of this antipathy, that if it had rested with him he would gladly have "suppressed" Dreyfus instead of sending him to the Ile du Diable. This is refreshing. One asks oneself in dismay, Can it really be possible that we are at the end of the nineteenth century? What is the measure of the progress of civilisation, after all, if it leaves Paris to-day not considerably removed from the fifteenth? "Death to the Jews!" "To the river with Zola!" These are cries to give us pause in pain. And the excited state of society is assuredly not more comforting. To say that at a dinner-table, in a drawing-room, not a soul may dare honestly express his mind without terror of raising a commotion hardly less unseemly than that of the Chamber. I was lately in a salon where an honest young fellow was making his début in the social arena. Fresh from the redoubtable quarter, laurelled and diploma-ed, he was foolish enough to fancy he could speak as freely here as there; so he said, in a frank and boyish way: "I only hope they won't kill Zola." Silence and consternation around him. There was a military officer present. To him our hostess turned with a superb smile, by which she won pardon for mention of the awful name, and said quite loudly, as a hint to the offender: "General, have you resumed your study of Wagner?" Mighty powers! How the atmosphere has changed! Once it was Wagner's name which fanned the breath of revolution, and the Parisians tore each other to pieces outside the Opera House because "Lohengrin" was being played inside. To-day Wagner is the sedative, and Zola's name provokes sedition.

To turn to a more cheerful theme, M. Jean Hess has written a pleasant volume on the soul of our coloured brethren. It is a stretch of imagination to call it L'Âme Nègre, for the soul, black or white, hardly enters into consideration. Something like a glimpse of it is seen in a cry from the "Nigger Bible":

"With the black, nothing, nothing but pain and hard labour, and also eternal desire. Why has the All-Powerful given us the envy and desire of ever more than we know, of ever more than we can hope to achieve? Why has He not given us force as well as desire? We are unfortunate."

For the rest, M. Hess paints them as content enough with their material resources. Here is an excellent portrait of one of their chiefs:

"Elado was a man of subtle mind, in great renown for his cleverness in finding out the truth in discussions (why not import him to Paris to preside over the affaire Zola, where, alas! such a chief is in terrible need). His eye was piercing. When he spoke to you he looked straight down to your heart. He discovered the colour of the words his ears imperfectly heard. The mouth of man is sometimes so full of traps that when the words come forth they have completely changed their garb. Elado heard with his eyes, he saw the words before wickedness or roguery had time to clothe them. In the councils it was said that to deceive him, and make him believe what was not true, it was necessary to make a special compact with the Spirit of Lies."

Decidedly, the Whites have gone further than the Blacks, and fared worse, since this subtlety and cleverness are not ours.

Un poète Egba is a tale with a touch of Kipling. Not so strong, or so dramatic, but with all Kipling's taste for raw, rude colours and strange words of remote and barbaric races. The same strain runs through Majogbé, but, though fresh and picturesque, it might with advantage be cut down half its present length, and gain thereby something of Stevenson's tense grasp and vitality. M. Hess has an agreeable style. He is a traveler and a sailor, like Pierre Loti, who brings us back rare scenes and characters, and names and traditions, and all this forms very bright reading. But to make it vivid and living to us, to give form and feature to these strange names, needs the exquisite freshness of Stevenson's style, the unapproachable charm of Loti's, and the incommunicable genius of the other.

H. L.

THE WEEK.

THE publications of the week are miscellaneous, but not unimportant; and the arrival of Dr. George Brandes's Study of Shakespeare is an event. A curious juxtaposition in our list is that of a history of Indian literature, beginning with the first Vedic bards, and a history of Australian literature starting from 1825!

DR. GEORGE BRANDES'S critical study of William Shakespeare comes in two volumes more than four hundred pages each. These are bound in green buckram, and the title is affixed on a label of vellum. The interest of the work can hardly be overstated. Dr. Brandes is an optimist on the questions of how far we do or may know Shakespeare. He concludes his second volume with these words:

"It is the author's opinion that, given the possession of forty-five important works by any man, it is entirely our own fault if we know nothing whatever about him. The poet has incorporated his whole individuality in these writings, and there, if we can read aright, we shall find him.

"The William Shakespeare who was born at Stratford-on-Avon in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, who lived and wrote in London during her reign and that of James, who ascended into heaven in his comedies and descended into hell in his tragedies, and died at the age of fifty-two in his native town, rises a wonderful personality in grand and distinct outlines, with all the vivid colouring of life from the pages of his books, before the eyes of all who read them with an open, receptive mind, with sanity of judgment and simple susceptibility to the power of genius."

PROF. MAX MÜLLER has published his recollections of men and things (some of which appeared in the Nineteenth Century) in volume form. Prof. Müller has this pleasant account to give of the inception of his book:

"What are you to do when you are sent away by your doctor for three or four weeks of perfect rest? . . . I found myself in small lodgings at an English watering-place with nothing to do all day long but to answer a number of accumulated letters and to read the Times, which always follows me. What was I to do? Doctors ought to know that to a man accustomed to work enforced rest is quite as irritating and depressing as travaux forcés. In self-defence I at last hit on a very simple expedient: I began to write what could be written without a single book, and taking paper, pen, and ink—these I had never forsworn—I jotted down some recollections of former years. . . . I know, from sad experience, that my memory is no longer what it was. All I can say is, that the positive copy, here published, is as true and as exact as the rays of the evening sun of life, falling on the negative in my memory, could make it."

MR. R. W. FRAZER, whose Literary History of India is before us, is lecturer in Telegu and Tamil at University College. He wrote the volume on British India in the "Story of the Nations" Series, and he is the author of a little book entitled Silent Gods and Sun-Steeped Lands, in which he treated Indian life and faiths in a popular manner. Those books, however, must have been trifling undertakings compared with this comprehensive critical survey of Indian literature. Mr. Frazer, of course, begins with the Aryan invasion. Thence he passes to the early Vedic bards, to Brahmanism, to Buddhism, to the great Epics and the Drama; and concludes with a consideration of "The Foreigner in the Land."

THE authors of The Development of Australian Literature, Mr. Henry Gyles Turner and Mr. Alexander Sutherland, write: "To Our Wives we Dedicate this Book; to the Reading Public we Commend It; to the Critics we Submit It with Becoming Defiance." An account of Australian literature is certainly no superfluous production. The writers say in their Preface:

"Australia has most assuredly produced no genius of the great, calm, healthful type. Her writers have, as a class, been ill-balanced in mind, and therefore have had more or less unhappy careers, or else they have bewailed at heart the woes of exile from the homes of early childhood, which, seen through the tenderly deceitful light of the dawn of memory, make the transplanted poet encourage a melancholy view of his new surroundings. Thus our literature has many sad notes in it, and not a few that are morbid. Still, we may claim that, such as it is, it now is gathering power to speak to the hearts of millions, and with the weight and importance it is thus acquiring there comes an increasing curiosity to know the story of its development, and the personal careers and characters of its chief writers."

It appears that the first book printed and published in Australia was a treatise On the Cultivation of the Vine, and the Art of Making Wine, by one James Busby. It was issued in 1825, and fell dead from the press.

MR. ANDREW LANG has written an Introduction to a little book, entitled The Highlands of Scotland in 1750. The basis of the book is an MS. which has long lain in the King's Library in the British Museum. Mr. Lang says that the author of the MS., which describes the Highlands in 1750, is unknown; but "it may be conjectured that the writer is a Mr. Bruce, an official under Government, who, in 1749, was employed to survey the forfeited and other estates in the Highlands."

MR. WALTER COPLAND PERRY dedicates his book, The Women of Homer, to the Queen, by permission. Mr. Perry has written his book for the general reader, packing his learning into Appendices for the benefit of Greek scholars. He writes:

"How lively and thorough may be the sense and understanding of classical antiquity in those who have little or no knowledge of the Greek language, is exemplified in very numerous instances. Who has portrayed Greek and Roman heroes so faithfully as Shakespeare, with his 'small Latin and less Greek'? Whose heart has been thrilled with greater rapture by the divine songs of Homer than those of Goethe and Schiller? Who has ever shown a more subtle instinct for Greek art and Greek poetry than Keats, in his 'Ode to a Grecian Urn,' his 'Psyche' and 'Endymion'? Yet none of these were classical scholars; they derived their knowledge of Greek literature chiefly from translations. The same may be predicated of many of our most popular modern artists, who delight to take their subjects from the two grand Epics of Homer."

Mr. Perry has chapters on "The Magic of Homer," "The Position of Women in the Iliad and Odyssey," "Marriage," and "The Dress of Women in Homer." The book is illustrated with photographs from ancient Greek and Roman statues. In these, says Mr. Perry, the dresses are archaeologically incorrect; but "pictorial and plastic remains of the Heroic age do not furnish sufficient examples of Homeric dress from which to derive satisfactory illustrations."

THE "Victorian Era" Series, published by Messrs. Blackie & Son, has just been enriched by a critical study of Charles Dickens by Mr. George Gissing. Mr. Gissing does not favour his reader with a preface; but his twelve chapter-headings indicate clearly enough the aim and scope of this book. We have "The Growth of Man and Writer," "The Story-Teller," "Art, Veracity, and Moral Purpose," "Satiric Portraiture," "Style," &c.

By a coincidence there comes with Mr. Gissing's book a volume made up of occasional writings of Charles Dickens, contributed to old periodicals, and never till now reprinted. Mr. F. G. Kitton has written an Introduction, in which he says:

"For English readers the entire contents of the present volume will possess the charm of novelty, for here Charles Dickens is somewhat unexpectedly revealed to them in the rôle of essayist, critic, and politician. The majority of these fugitive pieces were actually produced at a period subsequent to the time when the name of the author of Pickwick became a household word, and are, therefore, essentially characteristic of his well-known literary style."

The story which gives the volume its title, To be Red at Dusk, was written in 1852 for the Keepsake, in compliance with an earnest request from Miss Power, who had succeeded Lady Blessington as editor of the annual. From the essays and sketches in the volume the reader may gather once more Dickens's views on capital punishment, popular education, copyright, and other social questions.

MR. LAURENCE HOUSMAN has put forth a slim book of "Devotional Love Poems" entitled Spikenard. They have a deeply spiritual character, and the title of the poem is justified in the following lines printed at the end of the book:

"As one who came with ointments sweet,
Abettors to her fleshly guilt,
And brake and poured them at Thy feet,
And worshipped Thee with spikenard spilt:
So from a body full of blame,
And tongue too deeply versed in shame,
Do I pour speech upon Thy Name.
O Thou, if tongue may yet beseech,
Near to Thine awful Feet let reach
This broken spikenard of my speech."

THE BOOK MARKET.

"WHAT HAS DANTE TO DO WITH ST. PANCRAS?"

THERE are apparently three orders of poets: great poets, whose works sell widely; mediocre poets, whose works sell somewhat; and Mr. W. A. Eaton, whose works sell enormously. Mr. Eaton's "Popular Poems" are to be seen in the windows of small news-vendors. Their price is a penny each, and they have enjoyed popularity for nearly twenty years. "The Fireman's Wedding"—Mr. Eaton's masterpiece—is in its one hundred and twenty-fourth thousand; "The Wreck of the Princess Alice" is in its thirty-third thousand; "Bill Bowker's Wooring" is in its seventh thousand; and "The Rivals" and "The Theatre on Fire" are in their sixteenth thousands.

The secret of Mr. Eaton's success is not far to seek. He knows what the people like in the way of rhyme and sentiment, and he supplies it. His name is a household word in mean streets. He could probably answer Mr. John Morley's question, "What has Dante to do with St. Pancras?" more truthfully and pertinently than any man in London. To a great part of St. Pancras Mr. Eaton is Dante. By that or any other name he would be popular, because he is the people's poet, writing in their own language, and saying in rhyme what they are saying without rhyme. He is also an adept at bringing a lump into their throats; a luxury which the underfed working youth allows himself occasionally.

Here are the opening verses of "The Fireman's Wedding":

"What are we looking at, gov'nor?
Well, you see that carriage and pair?
It's a wedding—that's what it is, sir:
And arn't they a beautiful pair?"

They don't want no marrow-bone music,
There's the fireman's band come to play!
It's a fireman that's going to get married,
And you don't see such sights every day!

They're in the church now, and we're waiting
To give them a cheer as they come;
And the grumbler that wouldn't join in it
Deserves all his life to go dumb."

The story is told in a score of verses—

"And there was the face at the window,
With its blank look of haggard despair—
Her hands were clasped tight on her bosom,
And her white lips were moving in prayer."

Of course. And then we are back at the church door:

"And now, sir, they're going to get married—
I bet you she'll make a good wife;
And who has the most right to have her?
Why, the fellow that saved her young life.

A beauty! ah, sir, I believe you!
Stand back, lads! stand back! here they are;

We'll give them the cheer that we promised,
Now, lads, with a hip, hip, hurrah!"

But Mr. Eaton is not always pushing everyday life to its extreme incidents. Fires and firemen are of his stock-in-trade, and there must always be movement, but not every cry of "Police!" or "Murder!" in Mr. Eaton's verses means a tragedy. In "A Little Mistake" they are raised in the course of a comical game of cross purposes resulting from Timothy Prout's walking into the wrong house—a mistake for which the reader is prepared by the following little photographic picture:

"He was tired of the bricks and mortar and noise,
The dust and the traffic and impudent boys,
The smoke and the din of the dark city street,
So he thought he would seek a 'suburban retreat.'
At Peckham a snug little villa he found,
With a garden at back, quite a nice piece of ground;
But the houses in front were so much like each other,
It was like picking out one twin from his brother.

The doors were alike, and the windows as well,
Even down to the shape of the knocker and bell;
And, as if to make the resemblance complete,
One key would unlock every door in the street."

Mr. Eaton is always very much on the side of the angels. Some of his poems are Temperance tracts, but they are far too human to be resented as such. Again, in "All the Winners" the obvious lesson is brought home mercilessly.

"Home: he crept in like a culprit,
Stole like a thief through the door;
And he heard, like the voice of a demon,
'All the winners! Special!' once more.
Alone in his own little chamber,
A pistol pressed close to his head,
That form full of life in the morning,
At night lay all ghastly and dead.
Alas for the sweetheart and mother!
Alas for the deed that was done!
If he were one of the winners,
Now tell me, What had he won?"

"Gentleman Dick" is a plea for the Sunday-school, and "A Kiss for a Blow" wears its moral in its title. We notice, however, that the songs which have run into their thousands are not these, but pieces like "The Wreck of the Princess Alice," which has still a large sale. The narrator is a husband who saved his wife and child in that catastrophe, and his story contains such pictures as this—

"And there in the river were hundreds
Going down with a cry of despair,
The top of the water seemed covered
With faces and long floating hair."

In "The Theatre on Fire" (the piece was a pantomime) we read:

"Who can describe the horror of that scene?
Some call aloud for friends that cannot come;
Some stand as if they asked what it could mean,
Yet seem by abject terror stricken dumb.

Meanwhile the flames spread quickly and destroy
The painted grotto in the 'Bowers of Bliss,'

And round the mimic 'Fairy's Home of Joy'
They roar and flicker with defiant hiss.

Of course Mr. Eaton "did" the Jubilee. Here is the scene at St. Paul's:

"The eight cream coloured horses came proudly prancing by,
And the Queen was bowing, smiling; I saw some strong men cry;
It was the grandest sight I think the world has ever seen,
She's proud of her good people, and we're proud of such a Queen.

No doubt you read the papers, about the service there,
Upon St. Paul's Cathedral steps, the special hymn and prayer,
And how the good Archbishop, so dignified and grave, Cried 'Cheers for Queen Victoria!' So cheers the people gave."

"So runs the round of life from hour to hour" might be the motto on Mr. Eaton's collected works. But an alternative motto would be: "What has Dante to do with St. Pancras?"

D R A M A.

AFTER a period of commendable self-reliance, the English stage is again showing a disposition to lean upon adaptations from the French. Mr. Tree has commissioned an English version of M. Richepin's latest play, "Le Chemineau," which Mr. Parker is adapting under the title of "Ragged Robin"; and Sir Henry Irving is understood to have acquired the English rights of the most recent Parisian success, "Cyrano de Bergerac," a poetic and costume play by M. Rostand, a young author who has already forced the portals of the Comédie Française. So much activity in the importation of serious drama is unprecedented of recent years. Farce has always been a favourite article de Paris, and the disappearance from the bills of "Never Again," the successor to the highly popular Vaudeville piece, "A Night Out," has promptly been followed by the production at the Duke of York's Theatre of "The Dovecot," an English version of "Jalouse." "Cyrano de Bergerac" has added another to the many triumphs of M. Coquelin; but I must own to having some doubts as to the title-part being entirely suited to Sir Henry Irving. The hero of M. Rostand's play is a Gascon adventurer of the D'Artagnan type—a redoubtable swordsman, who is cursed with a nose of unsightly dimensions. This nose has its dramatic raison d'être in the fact that, despite his courage and gallantry, it alienates from its possessor the affections of the fair sex; so that Cyrano de Bergerac is compelled to woo his lady-love, Roxane, by deputy, a course which lands him in a series of romantic adventures recalling the days of chivalry. Such a piece naturally lends itself to romantic illustration, and, so far, would admirably fulfil the purposes of the Lyceum; but it is somewhat difficult to picture Sir Henry Irving in the part.

For the portrayal of such parts, requiring breadth, distinction and romance, M. Coquelin has a veritable genius. This sort of impersonation, to be sure, does not lie beyond the range of Sir Henry Irving's powers, which, as his Benedick has shown, comprise both gallantry and humour; but M. Rostand's hero is addicted to poetic tirades and declamatory speeches, which, though congenial to the French public, find little acceptance on the English stage, where the art of diction is so little cultivated. Moreover, the interest of the French play depends, to some extent, upon peculiarities of Gascon speech and character, which would necessarily disappear from an English adaptation. Nevertheless, Sir Henry Irving's early appearance as Cyrano de Bergerac appears to be ensured; and, after all, it may not prove a greater tour de force than his Napoleon in "Mme. Sans-êne," which, owing to the withdrawal of Peter the Great, has reappeared in the Lyceum programme.

"THE Dovecot" exhibits an ingenious version of the plot of ordinary French farce. It is not the husband who causes anxiety to the wife, but the wife who supposes quite unjustly all manner of wickedness on the part of the husband. In fact, the lady is the victim of unreasoning jealousy. Technically speaking, the action of the piece is innocence itself, but the atmosphere is charged with so much suggestiveness that I do not know that morality gains anything from the unwonted show of delicacy on the part of the authors. The wife's weakness is promptly turned to account by the servants, who have discovered that whenever they want to have a quiet evening they can obtain it by playing upon their mistress's suspicions, the invariable result being a conjugal scene which causes husband and wife to shut themselves up in their respective rooms. Soon after the rising of the curtain a favourable opportunity for practising this device presents itself.

As the husband returns, supposedly from his club, the housemaid besprinkles his coat with scent, and plants two incriminating yellow hairs on his shoulder. No more is needed to ensure a domestic explosion. The wife's keen nose and eyes detect the evidences of the husband's guilt, and the usual recriminations lead to an appeal to the lady's parents with a view to a separation. Here by an ingenious revirement the dramatists show us the more attractive side of the medal. The parents might have been candidates for the Dunmow Flitch many times over. For thirty years they have lived a life of unbroken happiness. But hearing of the contemplated visit of their daughter and son-in-law, whose marriage is a failure, they resolve upon a little mystification of their own, arguing illogically enough that if they are seen quarrelling the young people will be disgusted with the idea of conjugal dissension, and will make haste to fall into each other's arms. Accordingly, when the erring son and daughter arrive, the aged couple appear to be engaged in a violent altercation. Unfortunately, Darby and Joan have not reckoned with the mischievous powers of a suspicious woman like their daughter; for in a short time, thanks to this lady's interference, the pretended quarrel is changed into reality, and the flagging story receives a fresh fillip. In the end, needless to say, the housemaid confesses to her trick and the warring parties are reconciled.

I MUST confess to finding the humour of such a story somewhat thin. "The Dovecot" is one of those pieces which are made to look more amusing than they really are. The actors rush to and fro in a general hurry-scurry; excitement appears to reach a high pitch, and, nevertheless, the spectators' pulse remains unquicken. This is the result of artificially stretching out into three acts a story which ought comfortably to be presented in one. In various ways, too, some instability of purpose on the part of the adapters is evident. The French authors felt the necessity of binding the two sections of the piece more closely together than the above analysis would show. With this view they contrived an episodic character, that of a general whose daughter is engaged to a brother of the jealous wife's, and who is desirous of seeing what sort of family he is asked to link his fortunes with. As ill-luck would have it, the general visits both households while the domestic tension is at its greatest, whereupon in the French he calmly inquires of his intended son-in-law, "Vous n'avez pas d'autres parents à me montrer?" The mot is one of those happy thoughts in which Bisson's dialogue abounds. In the adaptation we find this episodic general, but for some reason he misses his effect. Again, the disturbing presence of a Spanish lady seems a far-fetched incident in a "village in the West of England," to which the adapters transplant their action, however natural it may be, is the original scene which, if I remember rightly, was Bordeaux, and generally there is a certain lack of consistency in the treatment of the story. This would seem to be explained by a letter from Mr. Brookfield, originally named as the adapter, in which he intimates that he has ceased to be responsible for the adaptation, by reason of his enforced collaboration with the "littérati of the Stock Exchange," whatever that may mean. Despite a few obvious shortcomings, however, the adaptation is, on the whole, cleverly done, though, in view of the great success of "A Night Out," with its French personnel, it seems a needless waste of energy to Anglicise such a story. The chief parts devolve upon Mr. Seymour Hicks and Miss Ellis Jeffreys, as the young couple; Mr. James Welch and Miss Carlotta, as their elders; and Mr. Sugden, Mr. Wyes, and others in incidental parts.

J. F. N.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"FOUNDER."

SIR,—“Foundered,” originally applied to lameness in horses, is a word not unknown in the secondhand bookmarket, where it denotes a maimed or halting copy—one which is the worse for wear and usage, and therefore unpresentable—in fact, the antithesis of a “tall” copy. Mr. Henley, no doubt, in his essay on Burns, uses the word in its active form in this connexion.—Your obedient servant,

ALFRED E. THISELTON.

Feb. 14.

A TAX ON PUBLISHERS.

SIR,—The grievance of publishers at being compelled to present to the privileged libraries five copies of every new book or new edition is of long standing, and the time has undoubtedly come, now that there is a rumour about a new Copyright Act, for the “Copyright Association” to bestir themselves.

The British Museum stands alone, and I am sure no publisher would grudge presenting that institution with a copy of all his books, provided he could obtain a certificate of copyright by so doing, the delivery of such book proving the date of publication beyond dispute, and thus doing away with the Stationers' Hall fee and formality for entering the copyright.

I would suggest to the responsible leaders of the "Copyright Association" that they avail themselves of the valuable hints contained in Cowtan's Memories of the British Museum, published as far back as 1872, a chapter of which is full of interesting matter concerning the Copyright Act, and would no doubt help them to a great extent in placing this grievance of publishers before the framers of the new Act.

By the way, I might mention that the waste of weary hours which had to be spent in searching for a title at Stationers' Hall is now done away with. The officials of the Company have at last compiled an alphabetical register, so that titles can be found in a few minutes, when formerly it meant possibly a few days' search. This new book would, of course, be turned over to the British Museum and kept up to date by an entry being made of all books delivered.—
Yours, &c., B. E. N.

PATHOS.

SIR,—May I venture to call attention to two lines in "King Lear" which to me never seem to lose their deep pathos? Of course, like the lines quoted in your last issue from the same play, they must be read with the whole burden of sadness borne in mind. But even apart from their context, they have a strange hold on the heart. These are the words, spoken by Kent:

"I have a journey, sir, shortly to go;
My Master calls me, I must not say no."

With these lines I cannot help comparing the following from that wonderful passage in Epictetus, wherein life is compared to a voyage:

"But if the Master call, run to the ship, forsaking all those things, and looking not behind. And if thou be in old age, go not far from the ship at any time, lest the Master should call, and thou be not ready."

The third reference is obvious.

Is there, may I ask, any reason why certain lines misquoted from "A Blot in the Scutcheon" should have been attributed to Dr. Berdoe? And, in any case, are not these lines, also from Act II. of Browning's tragedy, far more pathetic than those given?

"I say,
Each night ere I lie down, 'I was so young—
I had no mother, and I loved him so!'
And then God seems indulgent, and I dare Trust him my soul in sleep."

—Faithfully yours,

ERNEST E. SPEIGHT.

Temple House: Feb. 11.

[Dr. Berdoe's name, of course, appeared by an oversight; he was the sender (to the Pall Mall Gazette), not the author, of the lines in question.]

SIR,—In your admirable selection from those sent to the Pall Mall Gazette in January, 1894, I note that you have overlooked one of the last couplets sent in, but certainly one that, in my opinion, has the justest claim to the title. It comes from Rudyard Kipling's "Gentlemen Rankers":

"We have done with hope and honour, we are lost to love and truth,
We are dropping down the ladder rung by rung."

—Faithfully yours,

DE V. PAYEN-PAYNE.

7, Spenser Mansions.

"JULIUS CÆSAR" AT THE HAYMARKET.

At the moment of going to press we have received a letter from Mr. Beerbohm Tree, dealing with Mr. Hankin's letter, entitled "Some Remarks on Julius Cæsar," which we printed in our issue of February 5. We shall print Mr. Tree's letter next week.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

MR. W. L. COURTNEY, writing in the Daily Telegraph, says:

"There are certain characteristics which appear to cling obstinately to all Miss Brooke's workmanship. She does not care for the ordinary sympathetic figures of romance; so far as she is concerned, the pleasure aroused by a well-constructed story leaves her cold. She does her best to dig deep in the soil of psychology, to delineate personages of exceptional and eccentric traits; to shock us with strong emotions, and produce her effects not so much by her knowledge of literary technique as by sudden and violent appeals to melodramatic passions. And yet through all her work runs a strong and refreshing vein of originality both in her theme and its execution which arrests our attention sometimes against our will, and excites an interest in her tale which is often somewhat grudgingly and unwillingly bestowed. If we begin to read The Confession of Stephen Whapshare, the chances are that we shall not lay down the book before the closing page. Whether the final result of this perusal be a feeling of satisfaction or an uncontrollable impulse of repugnance depends on the temperament of the reader."

Mr. Courtney thinks the author

"will 'go far,' doubtless, for amongst other gifts she possesses a grave and cultured style; but for the present, at all events, she has not attained the summit of her literary ambition."

The Daily News critic also defines Miss Brooke's métier:

"Miss Emma Brooke unites to a strong sense of the claims of the passionate and sensuous sides of human nature a curious strain of mysticism. Her philosophy of life makes her see man so ill-adapted to the conditions of this world 'that he must sin.' And as he is tortured with the consciousness of sin, to which he is foreordained, he is driven by an imperative necessity to strive for perfection. Evil and good seem to her so closely allied, so interdependent, that it is impossible to separate the share each plays in the forming of the spirit to noble ends. Her new book, The Confession of Stephen Whapshare, is the story of a man vigorous of body and soul married to a woman who is a physical and spiritual valetudinarian. How her hero stumbles into the meshes of this monstrous marriage, how long he is held captive therein, and how he violently cuts asunder the toils that bind him, is told in a manner that is not always convincing, but that is arresting, and has in it much that is fine and subtle."

The Scotsman is very sarcastic on the author's gospel—

"the conspicuous feature of which is its complete divorce from common sense and healthy ways of thinking. . . . It is not worth while to try to expound the mystic gospel based on this narrative. We seem to reach the height or the depth of it in Stephen's great thought that Christ was really God, and that He came into the world to expiate not only the sins of His creatures, but His own supreme sin in making such a mess of their creation. Thus reconciliation becomes possible; the creatures forgive their Creator, who also forgives them; and so even the man who gets sick of his invalid wife and poisons her finds salvation and gets into beautiful harmony with the divine order of the universe."

THIS has been recognised as a clever story, though on different grounds by different critics. Literature denies the story originality, and says sharply: "One wonders how it is that novelists will not take the advice of a good critic, who advised them to secure at all hazards the palm of originality." The Speaker's critic, on the other hand, says: "Deborah is strikingly original, and all the more attractive because of her originality." But the review in Literature is pithy, and the writer takes the book as a text for some sound criticism of the modern novel. He writes:

"In these sorry days of machine-made fiction one is glad to find a novel which shows the smallest traces of design. The utter incapacity of modern novelists is not, perhaps, generally recognised; we make allowances, and talk of 'good dialogue' and 'bright pages' without expecting to find traces of a plan, of an artist's design deliberately worked out. To put the matter in the briefest form, we do not regard or criticise the novel as a work of art. If we find a sufficiency of amusing chatter, and if the incidents are not absolutely absurd, we close our book in a complacent humour, and say we have read a good novel."

Mrs. de la Pasture is, therefore, to be praised in that she has had an ideal before her in the writing of her book. The scheme is trite, and the execution, though skilful and competent in its way, is far from brilliant, and from the first page to the last one may search in vain for admirable or ringing phrases. Yet a certain effect has been produced, and, in spite of the rich red earth, luxuriant vegetation, and emerald pastures of Devonshire, in spite of such ancient consecrated epithets, the author does contrive to give us an impression of the lonely farm upon the lonely hills, of the sea of the crimson ploughlands, and of the dew-blossoming orchards. And the contrasts of the book are thoroughly realised; we feel with Deborah when she breathes the faint and musky air of the London house, remembering the breezy winds of Devonshire; the country life is bare and indicated, and yet, with Deborah, we long for the people on the hills, amidst the fatuities and ineptitudes of men and women who wish to be 'smart.' It is a book of considerable promise, and, if the author would study the great secret of style, she might do excellent work."

The Daily Telegraph says: "Deborah of To-day's is the not very attractive title of a really clever and interesting book." We are not sure that Deborah of To-day's is an unattractive title. It is distinctive, and arouses some curiosity. It also fits the book.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Week ending Thursday, February 17.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

INTERPRETATIONS OF LIFE AND RELIGION. By Walton W. Battershall, D.D. Hodder &amp; Stoughton.

APOSTOLICAL SUCCESSION IN THE LIGHT OF HISTORY AND FACT. By John Brown, B.A., D.D. Congregational Union.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

RENAISSANCE IN ITALY. By John Addington Symonds. New editions: Parts I. and II. Smith, Elder &amp; Co. 15s.

THE BATTLE OF SHERIFFMUIR: RELATED FROM ORIGINAL SOURCES. By an F.S.A. (Scot.). Eneas Mackay (Stirling).

THE HIGHLANDS OF SCOTLAND IN 1750. With an Introduction by Andrew Lang. Blackwood &amp; Sons.

AULD LANG SYNE. By the Rt. Hon. Prof. F. Max Müller. Longmans, Green &amp; Co. 10s. 6d.

AUSTRALIA'S FIRST PREACHER: THE REV. RICHARD JOHNSON. By James Bonwick, F.R.G.S. Sampson Low.

THE CENTURY SCIENCE SERIES: PASTEUR. By Percy Frankland and Mrs. Percy Frankland. Cassell &amp; Co. 3s. 6d.

MEMOIRS OF A HIGHLAND LADY. Edited by Lady Strachey. John Murray. 10s. 6d.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF AUSTRALIAN LITERATURE. By Henry Gyles Turner and Alexander Sutherland. Longmans, Green &amp; Co. 5s.

TO BE READ AT DUSK, AND OTHER STORIES, SKETCHES, AND ESSAYS. By Charles Dickens. Now first collected. George Redway. 6s.

A LITERARY HISTORY OF INDIA. By R. W. Frazer, LL.B. T. Fisher Unwin. 16s.

THE PRINCESS AND THE BUTTERFLY AND THE FANTASTICS: A COMEDY. By Arthur W. Pinero. William Heinemann.

THE WOMEN OF HOMER. By Walter Copland Perry. William Heinemann.

SPIKENARD: A BOOK OF DEVOTIONAL LOVE-POEMS. By Laurence Housman. Grant Richards. 3s. 6d.

CHARLES DICKENS: A CRITICAL STUDY. By George Gissing. Blackie &amp; Son. 2s. 6d.

THE TEMPLE WAVERLEY NOVELS: THE BLACK DWARF. By Sir Walter Scott, Bart. J. M. Dent &amp; Co. 1s. 6d.

ALAMO, AND OTHER VERSES. Anonymous. Edward McQ. Gray (Florence, New Mexico).

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

THE KINGDOM OF THE YELLOW ROBE: BEING SKETCHES OF THE DOMESTIC AND RELIGIOUS RITES AND CEREMONIES OF THE SIAMESE. By Ernest Young. Archibald Constable &amp; Co. 15s.

STORM AND SUNSHINE IN THE DALES. By P. H. Lockwood. With a Preface by H. G. Hart. Elliot Stock. 3s.

THE ADVENTURE SERIES.

MEMOIRS OF THE EXTRAORDINARY MILITARY CAREER OF JOHN SHIPP, LATE LIEUTENANT IN HIS MAJESTY'S 87TH REGIMENT. Written by Himself. Third edition. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.

THE LOG OF A JACK TAR; OR, THE LIFE OF JAMES CHOYCE, MASTER MARINER. Popular edition. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.

THE BUCCANEERS AND MAROONERS OF AMERICA. Edited by Howard Pyle. Popular edition. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.

MADAGASCAR; OR, ROBERT DRURY'S JOURNAL DURING FIFTEEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY ON THAT ISLAND. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by Capt. Pashfield Oliver, R.A. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.

THE VOYAGES AND ADVENTURES OF FERDINAND MENDEZ PINTO, THE PORTUGUESE. Translated by Henry Cogan. Introduction by Arminius Vambéry. Popular edition. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.

ADVENTURES OF A YOUNGER SON. By Edward John Trelawny. Popular edition. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

THE LOST PLUM CAKE: A TALE FOR TINY BOYS. By E. G. Wilcox. Macmillan &amp; Co.

EDUCATIONAL.

PARAPHRASING, ANALYSIS, AND CORRECTION OF SENTENCES. By D. M. J. James, M.A. LOWER GERMAN READING. By Louis Lubovius. HIGHER LATIN UNSEENS. By H. W. Auden. GREEK VERSE UNSEENS. By T. R. Mills. Wm. Blackwood &amp; Sons.

ENGLISH GRAMMAR, PAST AND PRESENT. By J. C. Nesfield. Macmillan &amp; Co. 4s. 6d.

Fourth Edition now ready, largely Revised.

POEMS.

With which is Incorporated "Christ in Hades."

By STEPHEN PHILLIPS.

Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

THE BOOK OF THE YEAR 1897.

To Mr. Stephen Phillips has been awarded by the Proprietor of "The Academy" a premium of One Hundred Guineas, in accordance with his previously proclaimed intention of making that gift to the writer of the book which should be adjudged worthy to be "crowned" as the most important contribution to the literature of 1897.

"The accent here is unmistakable, it is the accent of a new and a true poet. These poems are marked by simplicity, sincerity, and spontaneity. A poet of whom this may be said with truth has passed the line which divides talent from genius, the true singer from the accomplished artist or imitator. He has taken his place, wherever that place may be, among authentic poets. It may be safely said that no poet has made his début with a volume which is at once of such extraordinary merit and so rich in promise."

Mr. J. CHURTON COLLINS, in Pall Mall Gazette.

"Mr. Phillips is a poet, one of the half-dozen men of the younger generation whose writings contain the indefinable quality which makes for permanence."

Times.

"The man who, with a few graphic touches, can call up for us images like these, in such decisive and masterly fashion, is not one to be rated with the common herd, but rather as a man from whom we have the right to expect hereafter some of the great things which will endure."

Mr. W. L. COURTNEY, in Daily Telegraph.

"In his new volume Mr. Stephen Phillips more than fulfils the promise made by his 'Christ in Hades'; here is real poetic achievement—the veritable gold of song."—Spectator.

JOHN LANE, The Bodley Head, Vigo Street, London, W.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

On February 21st will be published ANTHONY HOPE'S new Historical Novel, "SIMON DALE," with 8 Illustrations, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE FIRST EDITION OF "THE VINTAGE" HAVING BEEN EXHAUSTED, A SECOND EDITION IS IN THE PRESS.

THE VINTAGE. By E. F. Benson, Author of "Dodo." Illustrated by G. P. Jacomb-Hood. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The leading characters stand out, and the love story is told with charm and delicacy."—Westminster Gazette.

"An excellent piece of romantic literature: a very graceful and moving story. We are struck with the close observation of life in Greece."

Saturday Review.

"A sound historical novel: Mr. Benson is to be heartily congratulated."

Glasgow Herald.

"The book is full of vivid detail, and everywhere adorned with bright patches of local colour."—Daily Telegraph.

"A work of marked ability."—Scotsman.

A VOYAGE OF CONSOLATION.

By SARA JEANETTE DUNCAN, Author of "An American Girl in London." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

[Feb. 25.]

METHUEN &amp; CO., 36, Essex Street, W.C.

IMPORTANT.

All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, should subscribe to the

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND

BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

ESTABLISHED 1837.

Among the many attractions of its columns the following may be mentioned:—

Literary articles (including leader on some prominent topic of the moment) announcements of forthcoming volumes, notes on current events in connection with the publishing world, reviews (often illustrated) of new books and magazines, correspondences, &c., &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of

NEW BOOKS OF THE WEEK

(the most complete list issued) giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number upwards of a thousand

OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS

are advertised for, thus affording readers an excellent opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and attention is particularly drawn to the fact that annual subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamp to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money-payments should be made.

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland ... ..         | 8s. 6d.  |
| „ Six Months ditto ditto .....  | 4s. 6d.  |
| „ Three Months ditto ditto .....  | 2s. 6d.  |
| To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage ... .. | 11s. 0d. |

NOW READY.*BOOKS of the YEAR 1897.

SIXTY-FIRST YEAR OF ISSUE OF ANNUAL CATALOGUE.

THE

ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS

FOR THE YEAR 1897.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 224, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

It contains a much longer List of Works than last year's Catalogue, including an addition of some 1,400 more Titles, but the price remains the same, viz., 5s. net, cloth limp; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

“The English Catalogue” is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast field of modern publications.”—Daily News.

“Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day.”—Athenæum.

“We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume.”—Daily Telegraph.

“The English Catalogue of Books” is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome.”—Scotsman.

“To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records..... The entire work is, indeed, a precious record.”—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

NEW BOOK BY PROFESSOR MAX MÜLLER.

AULD LANG SYNE.

By the Right Hon. F. MAX MÜLLER.

With Portrait, 8vo, 10s. 6d.

CONTENTS: Musical Recollections—Literary Recollections—Recollections of Royalties—Beggars.

NEW EDITION OF MISS INGELOW'S POEMS.

P O E M S.

By JEAN INGELOW.

In One Volume, with Photogravure Portraits, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

This Edition is reprinted from “Poems,” 2 vols., 1893, and “Poems,” Third Series, 1888.

NEW BOOK BY MR. STANLEY WEYMAN.

S H R E W S B U R Y. A Romance.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN, Author of “A Gentleman of France,” &amp;c.

With 24 Illustrations by CLAUDE A. SHEPPERSON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SACRED ALLEGORIES BY DEAN FARRAR.

ALLEGORIES.

By the Rev. FREDERIC W. FARRAR, D.D., Dean of Canterbury. With 25 Illustrations by Amelia Baserl. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Contents:—The Life Story of Auer—The Choice—The Fortunes of a Royal House—The Basilisk and the Leopard.

PROGRESS in WOMEN'S EDUCATION in the BRITISH EMPIRE:

Being the Report of the Education Section, Victorian Era Exhibition, 1897. Edited by the COUNTESS WARWICK. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE WORKS of HORACE, Rendered into English Prose.

With Life, Introduction, and Notes. By WILLIAM COUTTS, M.A., Senior Classical Master, George Watson College, Edinburgh, formerly Assistant Professor of Humanity in the University of Aberdeen. Crown 8vo, 5s. 6d.

THE DEVELOPMENT of AUSTRALIAN LITERATURE.

By HENRY GYLES TURNER and ALEXANDER SUTHERLAND. With 1 Illustration and 5 Portraits. Crown 8vo, 6s.

RUBAIYAT of DOC SIFERS.

By JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY, Author of “Old-Fashioned Roses,” &amp;c. With 43 Illustrations by C. M. Rely. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE ORIGIN and GROWTH of PLATO'S LOGIC.

With an Account of Plato's Style and of the Chronology of his Writings. By WINCENTY LUTOSLAWSKI. 8vo, 21s.

“The study of Plato is so often made a matter of mere metaphysical moonshine, that a book so scientific in method, so free from obscurity, and so closely reasoned as Mr. Wincenty Lutoslawski's treatise cannot fail to serve as a mental tonic to men relaxed by over-indulgence in transcendentalisms.”—Scotsman.

NEW BOOK BY GEORGE MAC DONALD, LL.D.

RAMPOLLI: Growths from a Long-Planted Root.

Being Translations (mainly in Verse), New and Old, chiefly from the German; along with a YEAR'S DIALECT OF AN OLD SOUL. By GEORGE MAC DONALD, LL.D. Crown 8vo, 6s.

“The book is a real pleasure, and an impressive manifestation of Dr. Mac Donald's spiritual genius.”—*British WeekHISTORY of the ROMAN BREVIARY.

By PIERRE BATIFFOL, Litt.D. Translated by ATWELL M. Y. BAYLAY, M.A., Vicar of Thurgarton, No. With a New Preface by the Author. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THIRD EDITION.

IVA KILDARE: a Matrimonial Problem.

By L. B. WALFORD, Author of “Mr. Smith,” &amp;c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

“There is something delightfully audacious, and at the same time ideal and idyllic, about Mrs. Walford now novel.”—Daily Graphic.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE SILVER LIBRARY.

THE LIFE of LUTHER.

By JULIUS KOSTLIN. With 62 Illustrations and 4 Facsimiles of MSS. Translated from the German. 1st Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE MOON: her Motions, Aspect, Scenery, and Physical Condition.

By R. A. PROCTOR. With many Plates and Charts, Wood Engravings, and 2 Lunar Photographs. 1st Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LONGMANS &amp; CO., London, New York, and Bombay.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1347.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

POTTER'S CATALOGUE of New and Second-hand BOOKS (No. 119, for FEBRUARY) at reduced prices, post free. Sport and Travel a Speciality.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, BELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing Illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conjoined. Telephone 62121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

FOR THE AUTOGRAPH COLLECTOR—A NEW MANUAL by Dr. Scott, is, post free, 37, Crouace Road, Fulham. Autographs purchased; a large variety for sale; lists free.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. English, 10d p c; 1,000 Words. French and German in Roman characters, 1s. 3d. per 1,000. French Translated. Samples and references.—Miss E. M., 15, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS OF ART and BELLES LETTRES—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, independent to Students of English Literature throughout the civilised world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs. Steadman & Van Fraaigh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

FRENCH IN THREE MONTHS.—FRENCH in THREE MONTHS.—DAMIEN'S NEW SYSTEM. Privately or by post. Any age. Success certain. Commended by the Press.—19, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS. Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS, For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application. Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

BOOKS FOR SALE.

Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.

FOR SALE—The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, from 1842 to 1897 well bound.—Towans, North Farm, King's Lynn

BRITISH MUSEUM.

The READING ROOMS will be CLOSED from TUESDAY, MARCH 1st, to FRIDAY, MARCH 4th, inclusive. E. MAUNDE THOMPSON, Principal Librarian and Secretary. British Museum, 22nd February, 1898.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.

NOTICE TO ARTISTS. The DAYS for RECEIVING PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, &c., are FRIDAY, SATURDAY, and MONDAY, March 25th, 26th, and 28th, and for SCULPTURE, TUESDAY, March 29th. Forms and labels can be obtained from the Academy during the month of March on receipt of a stamped and directed envelope.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.

SIR JOHN MILLAIS' WORKS. EXHIBITION NOW OPEN, From 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN,

Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W. THURSDAY (NEXT), March 3rd, at 3 o'clock.—Professor J. A. FLEMING, M.A., D.Sc. F.R.S., Professor of Electrical Engineering in University College, London.—FIRST OF FIVE LECTURES on "RECENT RESEARCHES IN MAGNETISM and DIAMAGNETISM." Subscription to this Course, One Guinea. SATURDAY, March 5th, at 3 o'clock.—Professor WALTER RALEIGH, M.A., Professor of Modern Literature in University College, Liverpool.—FIRST OF THREE LECTURES on "ENGLISH LETTER-WRITERS." Half-a-Guinea. Subscription to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.—ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS in SEPTEMBER, 1898.—SIX OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS, Three (£150, £200, and £50) in Science and Three (£100, £50, and £30) in Arts.—Particulars, and copies of Examination Papers, on application to the DEAN, Guy's Hospital, London Bridge, S.E.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.—PRELIMINARY SCIENTIFIC (M.B. Lond.) CLASSES are held throughout the year. Special Instruction is given for the July Examination. Fee, 16 Guineas.

THE HARLEIAN SOCIETY, instituted in 1869 for the Publication of Inedited Manuscripts relating to Genealogy, Family History, and Heraldry. President: The Most Honourable the MARQUESS of BUTE, K.T. Entrance Fee, 10s. 6d. Annual Subscription, £1 1s. Prospectuses and full particulars of Publications already issued (65 Volumes), and Forms of Application for Membership, may be obtained on application to the Publishers, Messrs. MITCHELL & HUGHES, 140, Wardour Street, W., or to one of the Honorary Secretaries, GEORGE J. AARVITAE, F.S.A., Clifton Woodhead, Brighouse, and J. P. RYLANDS, F.S.A., 2, Charlesville, Birkenhead.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE,

COOPER'S HILL, STAINES. The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch F. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways. For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

THE SONS of Dr. SPIERS are about to Publish a SUPPLEMENT to Dr. SPIERS' "FRENCH-ENGLISH and ENGLISH-FRENCH DICTIONARY." They would be very grateful for suggested ADDITIONS and CORRECTIONS.—Please address to Professor VICTOR SPIERS, King's College, London.

A large Publishing Firm REQUIRES SERIAL and SHORT STORIES. Authors are invited to send MSS. to G. R., 38, St. John's Wood Park, London, N.W.

ESTABLISHED 1851. BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand. TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT. For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY. HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY. HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum. LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum. COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum. N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms. Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address. The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited, 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY.

REPRODUCTIONS IN PERMANENT CARBON OF FAMOUS WORKS OF ART FROM PUBLIC AND PRIVATE COLLECTIONS.

RECENT ADDITIONS. DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI. A New Series of Autotypes of Notable Works by this Painter, including many new on Exhibition at the New Gallery.

The Collection includes— ROSSETTI'S OWN PORTRAITS. Sept. 20, 1855, and October, 1861. PROSERPINE. LADY ELIOTH. STUDY FOR FOUND. ROSA TRIPLEX. THE LOVING CUP. THE BLESSED DAMOZEL. VENUS VERTICORDIA. A VISION OF FIAMETTA. PORTRAIT OF ROBERT BROWNING. SILENCE. PERILASCURA. LA PIA. THE LAMP OF MEMORY. LA GIBRIANATA. BEATA BEATRIX. THE ANNUNCIATION.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL OF PAINTING. Now ready, a Series of Reproductions of Works by JOHN CROME. J. S. COTMAN. J. J. COTMAN. M. T. COTMAN. J. SPARK. R. LADBROOKE. E. T. DANIELL. T. LOUND. R. LEAMAN. J. MIDDLETON. H. BRIGHT. J. W. WALKER.

Complete Prospectus on application.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE. Now ready, New Edition of 160 pages. With upwards of One Hundred Miniature Photographs of Notable Autotypes, and Two-hundred Tint Block Illustrations. For convenience of Reference the Publications are arranged Alphabetically under Artists' Names. Post free, ONE SHILLING.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE. (Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 45, Chancery Lane, London.

IMPORTANT.

All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, should subscribe to the

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND

BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

ESTABLISHED 1837.

Among the many attractions of its columns the following may be mentioned:—

Literary articles (including leader on some prominent topic of the moment) announcements of forthcoming volumes, notes on current events in connection with the publishing world, reviews (often illustrated) of new books and magazines, correspondence, &c., &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of

NEW BOOKS OF THE WEEK

(the most complete list issued) giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number upwards of a thousand

OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS

are advertised for, thus affording readers an excellent opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and attention is particularly drawn to the fact that annual subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money-payments should be made.

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland ... ..         | 8s. 6d.  |
| „ Six Months ditto ditto ... ..   | 4s. 6d.  |
| „ Three Months ditto ditto ... ..   | 2s. 6d.  |
| To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage ... .. | 11s. 0d. |

NOW READY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1897.

SIXTY-FIRST YEAR OF ISSUE OF ANNUAL CATALOGUE.

THE

ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS

FOR THE YEAR 1897.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 224, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 8s. 6d. net.

It contains a much longer List of Works than last year's Catalogue, including an addition of some 1,400 more Titles, but the price remains the same, viz., 5s. net, cloth limp; or half-roan limp, 8s. 6d. net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

“The English Catalogue” is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications.”—Daily News.

“Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day.”—Athenæum.

“We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume.”—Daily Telegraph.

“The English Catalogue of Books” is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome.”—Scotsman.

“To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.... The entire work is, indeed, a precious record.”—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

Williams & Norgate's Announcements

PUBLISHED TO DAY. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

SEMITIC INFLUENCE IN HELLENIC MYTHOLOGY.

With Special Reference to the Recent Mythological Works of Professor Max Müller and Mr. Andrew Lang.

By ROBERT BROWN, Junior, F.S.A., M.R.A.S.

Now ready, price 4s.

PROBLEMS of NATURE. By Gustav

JAEGER, M.D. Selected, Edited, and Translated by H. G. SCHLICHTER, D.Sc., with a Facsimile of a Letter from CHARLES DARWIN to the Author.

The following are some of the Subjects treated:—

THE ORIGIN and DEVELOPMENT of the FIRST ORGANISMS.

SEXUAL SELECTION.

INFLUENCE of FORCE of GRAVITATION on DEVELOPMENT of the ANIMAL KINGDOM.

SOURCE of the VITAL FORCES.

DOCTRINE of INFECTION.

DEVELOPMENT of INFANTS.

ORIGIN of the HUMAN LANGUAGE.

DARWINISM and RELIGION.

Literary Guide, June 1, 1897.—“Dr. Jaeger has given us the best and ablest treatise we have ever met with on ‘The Origin of the Human Language.’”

The Zoologist, June 15, 1897.—“Brimful of original suggestions and fresh points for consideration.”

Westminster Gazette, July 20, 1897.—“One of the most interesting chapters to scientific readers is that dealing with the influence of the force of gravitation on the development of the animal kingdom.”

Pall Mall Gazette, August 18, 1897.—“His speculations contain much very sound sense, and a great deal of highly original thought.”

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

THREE CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

Large cr. 8vo, nearly 800 pp., cloth, 8s., postfree.

HISTORY

OF THE

FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1351.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1391,

By CHARLES S. MIALL.

“A monument of painstaking and skilful work, which no one probably could have undertaken with so many advantages as Mr. Miall, or have accomplished with greater success.”—Literary World.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Fumival St., London, E.C

A. & C. BLACK'S LIST.

NOW READY.

WHO'S WHO, 1898:

An Annual Biographical Dictionary.

Fiftieth Year of Issue—Second Year of New Issue. Contains nearly 7,000 Biographies—mostly Autobiographies—(1,143 more than last year) of the Leading Men and Women of the Day, besides being a Complete Peerage, Baronetage, and Knighthood, &c. In crown 8vo, 864 pages, bound in cloth, gilt, with gilt edges and rounded corners, price 3s. 6d. net.

NOW READY.

THE VITALITY OF CHRISTIAN DOGMAS AND THEIR POWER OF EVOLUTION.

A Study in Religious Philosophy.

By A. SABATIER, D.D., Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris. Translated by Mrs. EMMANUEL CHRISTEN. With a Preface by the Very Reverend the Hon. W. H. FREMANTLE, D.D., Dean of Ripon. Crown 8vo, cloth, price, 1s. 6d. net.

Price 7s. 6d.

THE STORY of GLADSTONE'S LIFE.

By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P.

In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Containing 45 Illustrations, mostly Page Portraits, representing Mr. Gladstone at different periods.

NOW READY, SECOND EDITION.

THROUGH FINLAND IN CARTS.

By Mrs. ALEC TWEEDIE.

Demy 8vo, cloth, containing Map and 18 Full-Page Illustrations, price 15s.

VOL. I. TO BE PUBLISHED IN OCTOBER.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA BIBLICA:

A Dictionary of the Bible.

Edited by the T. K. CHEYNE, M.A., D.D., Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture at Oxford, and formerly Fellow of Balliol College, Canon of Rochester; and J. SUTHERLAND BLACK, M.A., LL.D., Assistant Editor of the “Encyclopædia Britannica.”

To be published in Four Quarterly Volumes, commencing October, super-royal 8vo, cloth, price 16s. each.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

EPPS'S COCOA.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE ON ‘FOODS AND THEIR VALUES,’ BY DR. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., &c.—“If any motives—first, of due regard for health, and second, of getting full food-value for money expended—can be said to weigh with us in choosing our foods, then I say that Cocoa (Epps's being the most nutritious) should be made to replace tea and coffee without hesitation. Cocoa is a food; tea and coffee are not foods. This is the whole science of the matter in a nutshell, and he who runs may read the obvious moral of the story.”

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS TO “THE ACADEMY.”

The following have appeared, and the numbers containing them can still be obtained:—

|                               | 1896.       |   |          |
|-------------------------------|-------------|---|----------|
| BEN JONSON ... ..             | November 14 | WILKIE COLLINS ... ..                   | March 20 |
| JOHN KEATS ... ..             | „ 21        | JOHN MILTON ... ..                      | „ 27     |
| SIR JOHN SUCKLING ... ..      | „ 28        | WILLIAM COWPER ... ..                   | April 3  |
| TOM HOOD ... ..               | December 5  | CHARLES DARWIN ... ..                   | „ 10     |
| THOMAS GRAY ... ..            | „ 12        | ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON ... ..            | „ 17     |
| ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON ... .. | „ 19        | HENRY WADSWORTH LONG-FELLOW ... ..  | „ 24     |
| SIR WALTER SCOTT ... ..       | „ 26        | ANDREW MARVELL ... ..                   | May 1    |
|                               | 1897.       | ROBERT BROWNING ... ..                  | „ 8      |
| SAMUEL RICHARDSON ... ..      | January 2   | THOMAS CARLYLE ... ..                   | „ 15     |
| THOMAS DE QUINCEY ... ..      | „ 9         | PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ... ..             | „ 22     |
| LEIGH HUNT ... ..             | „ 16        | CHARLES DICKENS ... ..                  | „ 29     |
| LORD MACAULAY ... ..          | „ 23        | JONATHAN SWIFT ... ..                   | June 5   |
| ROBERT SOUTHEY ... ..         | „ 30        | WILLIAM MAKEPEACE }THACKERAY ... .. | „ 12     |
| S. T. COLERIDGE ... ..        | February 6  | WILLIAM BLAKE ... ..                    | „ 19     |
| CHARLES LAMB ... ..           | „ 13        | SIR RICHARD STEELE ... ..               | „ 26     |
| MICHAEL DRAYTON ... ..        | „ 20        | ALEXANDER POPE ... ..                   | July 3   |
| WALTER SVAYES LANDOR ... ..   | „ 27        | DOUGLAS JERROLD ... ..                  | „ 10     |
| SAMUEL PEPYS ... ..           | March 6     | FRANCIS BACON ... ..                    | „ 17     |
| EDMUND WALLER ... ..          | „ 13        |   |          |

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

A NEW WORK BY MR. HAVELOCK ELLIS.
Demy 8vo, cloth, price 6s.
AFFIRMATIONS. By Havelock Ellis, Author of "Man and Woman," "The Criminal," "The New Spirit," &c.
"Even where we agree and approve least we recognise the vigour, the suggestiveness, the stimulating qualities of his work."—Athenæum.
"The author of 'Affirmations,' at all times an eminently readable writer, reveals himself as an acute and sagacious critic and a thinker of no little speculative power."
Literature.
"A very generous and very rousing indicator of the many paths of truth to-day. His [Mr. Havelock Ellis's] 'Affirmations' will win him a hundred quarrels, no doubt, but not one lethargic reader."—Sketch.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.
FOUR IMPORTANT NEW VOLUMES.

Just issued, and First Large Edition nearly exhausted.
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., with Diagrams.
SLEEP: its Physiology, Pathology, Hygiene, and Psychology. By Dr. MARIE DE MANACEINE (St. Petersburg).
The Lancet says: "Written in a truly scientific spirit." The Daily Chronicle says: "It is full of most useful hints concerning the cure of insomnia, and sufferers therefrom would do well to try the simple expedients there suggested before resorting to the use of any of the so-called hypnotics."
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

HALLUCINATIONS and ILLUSIONS:
A Study of the Fallacies of Perception. By EDMUND PARISH.

"This remarkable little volume."—Daily News.
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. 124 Illustrations.
THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY. By E. W. SCRIPTURE, Ph.D. (Leipzig).
"We have at present no work in English which gives in so compact a form so comprehensive a view of the subject."
Liverpool Post.
"A brilliantly clever and interesting volume."
Pall Mall Gazette.

The PSYCHOLOGY of the EMOTIONS.

By Prof. T. H. RIBOT.
"Prof. Ribot's treatment is careful, modern, and adequate."—Academy.
"A work remarkable both for the extent and the minuteness of the psychological study which it devotes to matters hitherto too much neglected, and for the light it throws upon a scientific understanding of these matters by considering them from a new point of view."—Scotsman.
"The revived interest in psychology, the distinct advance made in recent years by investigators, is visible in M. Ribot's volume."—Times.

A NEW BOOK ABOUT INDIA.
Demy 8vo, gilt top, art linen, with 14 Full-Page Illustrations, price 6s.

SUNNY MEMORIES of an INDIAN WINTER. By Mrs. ARCHIBALD DUNN, Author of "The World's Highway."
"This record of travel is written with insight and knowledge. There are many illustrations in the volume, and some of them—notably views of the interiors of mosques and temples—are of more than passing interest."—Speaker.

THE SCOTT LIBRARY.
Crown 8vo, gilt top, cloth elegant, price 1s. 6d.
THREE NEW VOLUMES.

RENAN'S LIFE of JESUS. Translated, with an Introduction, by WILLIAM G. HUTCHISON.

ESSAYS of SCHOPENHAUER. Translated by Mrs. RUDOLF DROKS. With an Introduction.

CRITICISMS, REFLECTIONS, and MAXIMS of GOETHE. Translated, with an Introduction and Biographical Note, by W. B. RONNFELDT.

A NEW AND INVALUABLE HANDBOOK.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.; half-roan, 3s. 6d.

HANDBOOK of HOUSEKEEPING for SMALL INCOMES. By FLORENCE STACPOOLE, Diplomèe of the London Obstetrical Society, Lecturer to the National Health Society, and for the Councils.
"Comprehensive, practical, and clear."—Athenæum.
"Of the greatest value to young housewives."
Literary World.
"A perfect treasure-trove of household hints."
North British Daily Mail.
"A book which every mother would do well to provide her daughter with on her marriage."—Birmingham Gazette.

London: WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS

BRITISH EAST AFRICA:
TRAVELS in the COAST LANDS of BRITISH EAST AFRICA and the ISLANDS of ZANZIBAR and PEMBA. By W. W. A. FITZGERALD, F.R.G.S., F.R.C.I. With Maps, Illustrations, and Appendices.
Demy 8vo, 28s.

NEW WORK ON BRITISH COLUMBIA.
BRITISH COLUMBIA for SETTLERS.
By FRANCIS MACNAB, Author of "On Veldt and Farm." With 3 Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s. [This day].

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.
EDITED BY W. L. COURTNEY.

MARCH.
CONTRADICTIONS of MODERN FRANCE: The Military Paradox. By Baron PIERRE DE COUBERTIN.
REMINISCENCES of JUDAH PHILIP BENJAMIN. By the late Baron POLLOCK.
THE FRENCH on the NILE (with Map). By F. A. EDWARDS, F.R.G.S.
"MARRIAGE QUESTIONS in FICTION." By Madame SARAH GRAND.
THE TIRAH CAMPAIGN (with Map). By AN EYEWITNESS.
AN ELYSIAN CONVERSATION. By CH. BASTIEN.
THE END of the NEW UNIONISM. By LOUIS GARVIN.
METHODS of VOTING: an Electoral Revolution. By W. H. HOWE.
TRAGEDY and MR. STEPHEN PHILLIPS. By WILLIAM WATSON.
SIDE-LIGHTS of the REVANCHE IDEA. By ALBERT D. VANDEAM.
HUNTING and its FUTURE. By H. A. BRYDEN.
RECENT ATTEMPTS at COPYRIGHT LEGISLATION. By G. H. THURGO.
PAUL KRUGER: an Apology and a Defence. By F. REGINALD STATHAM.
THE WESTMINSTER "IMPROVEMENT" SCHEME (with Map). By E. P. WARREN.
ENGLAND and JAPAN. By H. W. WILSON.

Sir Walter Besant's New Novel, "THE CHANGELING," COMMENCES IN

CHAPMAN'S MAGAZINE
FOR MARCH.—PRICE SIXPENCE.
Which also contains
SEVEN COMPLETE STORIES,
By EVELYN SHARP, ALAN OSCAR, BEATRICE HERON-MAXWELL and others.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LTD., LONDON.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.
No. 999.—MARCH, 1898.—2s. 6d.

